0 2007 0541652 3
California State Library

S RY.
CA 2117

Accession No._____ Received_____

Class QC051 C15
S V.1-8
1925-26

49562 1-27 5M

CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND

GRINNELL GLACIER, GLACIER NATIONAL PARK, MONTANA. A PAINTING BY KATHRYN WOODMAN LEIGHTON, HUNG IN THE BILTMORE SALON.

A CLEARING HOUSE FOR CRAFTS UNDERTAKEN BY THE ASSISTANCE LEAGUE OF SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA. SOCIETY :: ART AND ARCHITECTURE :: HOW TO JUDGE A HORSE AT THE COMING SHOW :: SPORTS OF CALIFORNIA

No. 61 JANUARY, 1925 25 Cents

CALIFORNIA STATE LIBRARY

ALLIED ARCHITECTS ASSOCIATION OF LOS ANGELES

DESIGNERS OF

PATRIOTIC HALL

ADDITIONS TO THE MUSEUM OF HISTORY SCIENCE AND ART

EXTERIOR DESIGN OF THE HALL OF JUSTICE

ARCHITECTURAL TREATMENT OF VIADUCTS AND BRIDGES OF THE CITY OF LOS ANGELES

ADMINISTRATION CENTER FOR THE CITY AND COUNTY OF LOS ANGELES

AN ASSOCIATION FOR FURNISHING ARCHITECTURAL SERVICE FOR PUBLIC STRUCTURES ONLY

Choose your own architect from the representative styles shown in "California Homes" by California Architects. Price $1.00.
Address: ELLEN LEECH,
544 So. El Molino Avenue Pasadena, Calif.

NO. 121—TALMAGE VASE

Beautiful Garden Pieces
in
Sculptured Terra Cotta

Italian Terra Cotta Co.
W. H. Robison
1149 MISSION ROAD
Opposite County Hospital
Phone Lincoln 1057 Los Angeles

THE BATCHELDER TILES

We produce Tile for Fireplaces, Fountains, Pavements, Garden Pots---anything that is appropriately made from clay. :: :: :: :: ::

LOS ANGELES, CALIFORNIA

PAINTINGS OF THE WEST
STENDAHL GALLERIES
OF THE PACIFIC COAST
The Ambassador Hotel—Los Angeles Hotel del Coronado—San Diego

Clarence P. Day Corporation

Engineers—Contractors

35 N. RAYMOND AVE. PHONE COLO. 1006
PASADENA, CALIFORNIA

STATE LIBRARY

SAMARKAND HILLS

"Completely Improved and Carefully Restricted"

IN BEAUTIFUL SANTA BARBARA

THE MOUNTAIN VIEW FROM SAMARKAND HILLS. THERE IS ALSO A FINE OCEAN VIEW

Buy for a Home

Before you consider purchasing your homesite elsewhere, compare beautiful SAMARKAND HILLS with any other residential section in Santa Barbara—bar none. That is all we ask. We will gladly abide by your decision.

Buy for Investment

Before you consider any city lot as an investment, ask yourself these questions:

1st. Is it completely improved? Or will I be heavily assessed for improvements later?

2nd. Is it carefully restricted? Or can a gas station, or a family living in their garage, be placed next to my property?

"Round the Horizon View"

Think of having a home from which your eyes sweep the horizon!

From SAMARKAND HILLS you see Mission Canyon, with its live oaks; Mission Ridge and the Old Mission; The City, with its quaint Spanish roofs; the beach line, with Rincon in the distance; the blue Pacific, edged by Anacapa and Santa Cruz islands; a sunset view ten miles up the Goleta valley; and, towering over all, the ever-changing and always-beautiful mountains, with La Cumbre the nearest peak.

Improvements

1.—City Water
2.—City Sewer
3.—Cement Curbs
4.—Cement Gutters
5.—Cement Sidewalks
6.—Gas
7.—Telephones
8.—Electricity
9.—Paving from One Gutter to the other

Few subdivisions offer as much!
No subdivision offers more!

Prices

From $1,285 for a 60 x 150 foot lot and up.
No 50 foot lots—many from 75 to 120 feet.

Terms

20% down; 2% per month.
7% on deferred payments.

HOLLISTER ESTATE COMPANY, OWNER

EARLE OVINGTON

Sales Representative

THE FIRST NATIONAL BANK OF SANTA BARBARA, TRUSTEE

911 CHAPALA STREET—PHONE 407 SANTA BARBARA, CALIFORNIA

"IF YOU LIKE CALIFORNIA, YOU WILL LOVE SANTA BARBARA"

SOUTHLAND CALENDAR

Announcements of exhibitions, fetes, concerts, club entertainments, etc., for the calendar pages are free of charge and should be received in the office of CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND, Pasadena, at least two weeks previous to date of issue, the 10th. No corrections can be guaranteed if they are received later than that date. California Southland is published monthly at Pasadena, California. One dollar and twenty cents for six issues, two fifty per year. Addresses will be changed as many times as desired if notice is given before the first of the month for which the change is made.

Entered as second class matter, July 28, 1919 at the Post Office at Pasadena, California, under act of March 3, 1879.

Clubs

VALLEY HUNT CLUB:
During January the announcements are: Bridge and Mah Jongg, Monday, Jan. 5-12-19-26, afternoons. Evening Bridge and Mah Jongg. Sunday evening suppers at seven o'clock with interesting programs.

ANNANDALE GOLF CLUB:
The afternoon bridge, Mah Jongg and tea parties have been resumed for the season. Tea will be served as requested and tables for cards are always available.
The second Friday of each month is open day at the club.
The usual Wednesday and Saturday sweepstakes each month.

FLINTRIDGE COUNTRY CLUB:
Tuesday is Ladies' Day and a special luncheon is served. In the afternoons informal bridge parties may be arranged followed by tea.

LOS ANGELES COUNTRY CLUB:
Ladies' Days, second Monday of each month.
Music during dinner, followed by dancing, every Saturday evening during the month.
Luncheon served from 11:30 to 2 p. m. on Saturdays.
Sunday night concerts during month. Tea served as requested and tables for cards always available.

WILSHIRE COUNTRY CLUB:
Ladies' Days, third Monday of each month.
Dancing every second and fourth Saturdays during the month.
A musical is arranged for each Sunday night in the month.

MIDWICK COUNTRY CLUB:
Ladies' Days, fourth Monday in each month.
Tea and informal bridge every afternoon.
Polo, Wednesday and Saturday of each week.
Dancing every Saturday night.
Buffet luncheon served every Sunday. Match polo games every Sunday, preceded by luncheon parties, followed by teas, during season.

LOS ANGELES ATHLETIC CLUB:
Dinner dances, Tuesday and Friday nights of every week. Tuesday night informal; Friday night semi-formal. Plunge open to the ladies Tuesday and Friday of every week.

SAN GABRIEL VALLEY COUNTRY CLUB:
A dinner dance is arranged for the third Thursday of each month.
On Friday of each week a special luncheon is served, with bridge in the afternoons.
Ladies play every day starting after ten a.m., and not before two p.m.

MONTECITO COUNTRY CLUB:
Provides an 18 hole golf course, two concrete and two dirt courts for tennis, bowls and croquet.
Tea is served and informal bridge parties arranged as desired.
A buffet supper is served every Sunday night.

LA CUMBRE GOLF AND COUNTRY CLUB:
Offers a course of eighteen holes, rivaling any in hazard and beauty. A recent purchase of additional acreage will provide an extended and even more interesting course.
Luncheon is served every day, and tea may be arranged as desired.

NEWPORT HARBOR YACHT CLUB:
Officers elected at the annual meeting, Dec. 6th, are as follows: William C. Warmington, Commodore; Joseph Allen Beek, Vice Commodore; B. H. Cass, Rear Commodore; Leon S. Heseman, Secretary and Treasurer. Directors are: John E. Jardine, James Webster, Richard Tubbs, and William M. Cummings.

REDLANDS COUNTRY CLUB:
Golf tournament for men is held every Saturday. Monday the course is reserved for the women and a special luncheon served. Those who do not play golf or who have had a round in the morning, devote the afternoon to bridge or mah jongg. Every Saturday afternoon tea is served and the men from their golf and the women from their bridge and mah jongg tables join, with one of the women members as hostess for a social cup.

The two-piece dress of jewel-toned kasha. After the manner of Chanel and Lanvin. The smartest dress of spring.

Bullock's
Broadway—Hill and—Seventh
Los Angeles

"One . . . O'Clock . . . . Saturdays"

"TWO GIRLS" By Loren Barton

Loren Barton Water Color Exhibition, January 2 to 15 Inclusive

Cannell & Chaffin, Inc.

Paintings :: Period Furniture :: Antiques

MARYLAND HOTEL
PASADENA

720 W. SEVENTH ST.
LOS ANGELES

Art

LOS ANGELES Museum, Exposition Park: Jan. 1 to Jan. 30, The Fourth International Water Color Exhibition. The Fourth Annual Exhibition California Water Color Society. The Museum is open daily from 10 to 4, except Wednesday afternoons. Open Sunday, 2 to 5 p. m. Admission free.

SOUTHWEST Museum, Marmion Way and Avenue 46, Los Angeles; Third Annual Exhibit of Pictorial Photography of the Southern California Camera Club of the Southwest Museum will be held during January. The second Annual Exhibit of Landscape Architecture will be held during the month of February, under the auspices of the Pacific Coast Chapter of the American Society of Landscape Architects. Those desiring to exhibit will notify Mrs. M. Barbara Dacier, Southwest Museum Extension, 440 Bradbury Bldg., Los Angeles, stating classification under which they will exhibit, and giving size of drawing to be included.

BILTMORE Salon exhibitions for January include: Dewitt Parshall, N.A., Dec. 29 to Jan. 10. Etchings by Chauncey Ryder. Arthur Hazard, Jan. 10 to 24. During the last half of January the California Society of Miniature Painters will hold an exhibition.

CHANNELL and Chaffin will show in their Los Angeles galleries, Jan 1-15, etchings and water colors by Loren Barton. Miss Barton has recently returned from a successful exhibition in the Ainslie Galleries in New York. She also showed, by special invitation from the Brooklyn Museum, a collection of her etchings. Miss Barton's exhibition will go to the Cannell and Chaffin Pasadena Gallery, in the Maryland Hotel, Jan. 17 to 31.

THE Painters' and Sculptors' Club held a very successful show at Stendahl's throughout December, and for future shows have arranged to use the exhibition rooms of the Art Center. They will show here throughout the year, hanging new pictures and placing new pieces of sculpture at intervals.

THE California Art Institute held the first of a series of exhibitions in December, showing the originals of illustrations made by Dean Cornwell, one of the foremost illustrators of the day and president of the American Society of Illustrators. The primary object of this exhibition and of others to follow, is to advance the understanding of the illnstrator's art, as an aid to the work of the students, since paintings done for reproduction must be treated in a different manner than those for exhibition purposes.

FRANK GARITZ had three recent etchings in the show of the International Print Makers held in Brooklyn, N. Y. last month.

CANNELL and Chaffin announce an exhibition of the work of the Painters' and Sculptors' Club in their Pasadena Gallery, Maryland Hotel, Jan 1-15, and the same exhibition in their Los Angeles galleries, Jan 17-31.

IN the group of women sculptors who exhibited at the Friday Morning Club, Los Angeles, in December were Velma Adams, Ella Buchanan, Maud Daggett, Louise Everett, Jessie Herron, Helen Howell, Kathleen Ingles, Grace Wells Parkinson, Beatrice Rosenhouse, Laura Woodhead Steere, Katherine Beecher Stetson, Melba Wilson and Julia Bracken Wendt.

JOHN FROST'S landscape, "Down to the Desert" was awarded the gold medal; Joseph Kleitsch's figure study, "Jose Juan," the silver medal; and Leland Curtis' landscape, "End of a Desert Day," the bronze medal, given by the management of the Ambassador Hotel for award to members of the Painters' and Sculptors' Club exhibiting last month at the Stendahl galleries in the hotel.

BESSIE HAZEN will show blockprints and monotints in the art and music department of the Public Library, Los Angeles, January 1.

JOHN W. COTTON is now established in his new studio home, 331 El Bonita Avenue, Glendale, near Central Avenue, south of San Fernando Road.

FROM the Joseph Pennell exhibition last month at the Los Angeles Museum, Exposition Park, Mr. and Mrs. Preston Harrison bought twelve for presentation to the museum.

UNIVERSITY of California Extension Division offers an unusually fine course of study in the history and appreciation of art. Two classes in this course will open Jan. 3 and Jan. 7. Nellie Huntington Gere is the instructor.

THE awards made at the close of the second exhibition of the Painters of the West are as follows: Jack Wilkinson Smith, "The Jade Surf," first, gold medal; Douglass Parshall, "Boy's Swimming Pool," second, silver medal; and Maynard Dixon, "Desert Shepherdess," third, bronze medal.

STENDAHL GALLERIES in the Ambassador Hotel announce a bidding sale of pictures, opening January 5th, continuing for one week. The paintings are the work of Western men, are fine examples, and none are larger than 20 by 24.

Music

PHILHARMONIC Orchestra of Los Angeles, Walter Henry Rothwell, conductor, will give the monthly Friday afternoon Symphony Concerts at 3:00, January 2-16-30; the Saturday evening concerts at 8:30, January 3-17-31; and the popular Sunday afternoon concert at 3:00, January 11-25. All concerts are given in the Philharmonic Auditorium, Fifth and Olive.

PASADENA Music and Art Association announce the 1925 Artists Series will open Thursday evening, January 8, with the St. Olaf Choir, in the Pasadena High School Auditorium.

ALICE COLEMAN BATCHELDER, pianist, announces the fourth concert of the series of eight chamber music concerts for Thursday evening, 8:15, January 22, in the Music Auditorium of the Institute of Technology, Pasadena. The assisting artists are The Maquarre Ensemble.

LOS ANGELES Chamber Music Society will give the third concert of the series of six, January 9, in the Music Room of the Los Angeles Biltmore, at 3:00 p. m. These concerts alternate with the Friday afternoon concerts of the Philharmonic Orchestra.

L. E. BEHYMER presents in the Philharmonic Artist Course series, Ruth St. Denis and Ted Shawn Company, Dec. 30-Jan. 6. in the Thursday series, Mme. Schumann-Heink, Jan. 15 and Erna Rubinstein, Hungarian violinist, Jan. 29; in the Tuesday series, Maier and Pattison, pianists, Jan. 27.

THE Woman's Orchestra of Los Angeles announces the first concert of the season for February 4, with Frederick Huttmann as soloist.

CAULDRON Singers will give two concerts in Pasadena this season, the first to be Tuesday, Jan. 13, in the Shakespeare Club's new auditorium.

THE third concert of the series of six given in Pasadena by the Los Angeles Philharmonic Orchestra, Walter Henry Rothwell, conductor, is announced for Monday, Jan. 12, 8:15. The Raymond Theatre.

ALFRED MIROVITCH, the distinguished pianist, plays a recital at the Philharmonic Auditorium, the evening of January 26, under the auspices of the Italian Club, by arrangement with Merle Armitage Mirovitch is one of the best pianists of the day, and his program contains many works never before heard here.

LOS ANGELES Trio will appear in the third concert of their series of six at the Ebell Auditorium, Thursday evening, January 22.

SPINET Club of Redlands will continue the winter programs with the Ruth St. Denis and Ted Shawn Company in January, followed by the pianists, Maier and Pattison.

AUDITORIUM Artists Series, (George Leslie Smith, manager), will present Jascha Heifetz, Friday, Jan. 23.

THE Zoellner Quartet will give the Monday evening concerts at the Biltmore Hotel, January 26 and Feb. 2.

THE Donner String Quartet will give its first Pasadena concert the middle of January.

L. E. BEHYMER will present the St. Olaf Choir, January 9-12, Philharmonic Auditorium, Los Angeles.

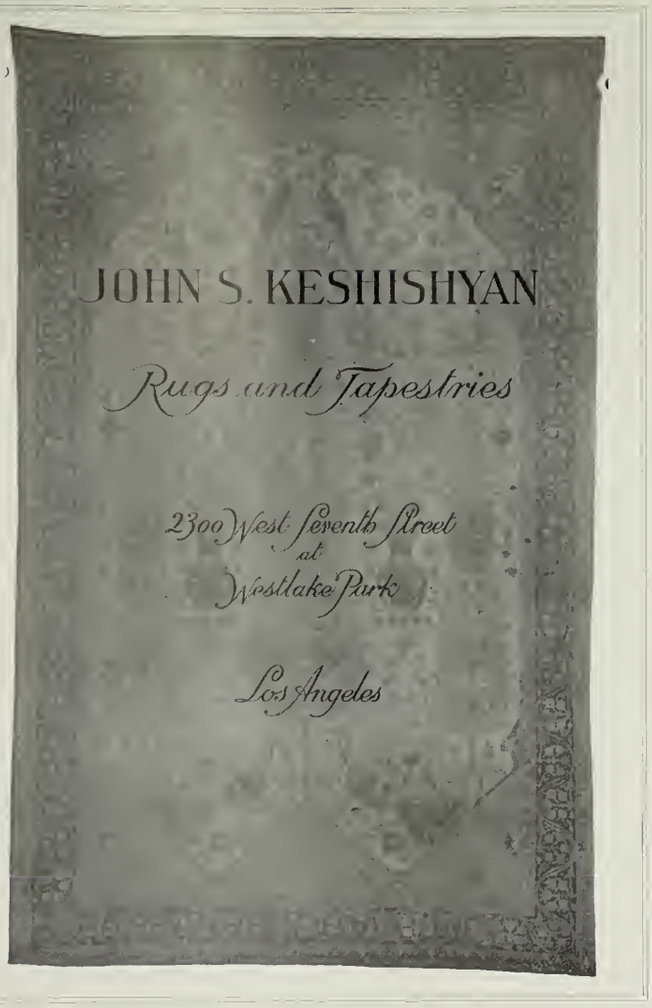
MUSIC and Drama Course of Pomona College includes an organ recital in January, and the appearance of Alberto Salvi, harpist, February 6.

MRS. EDWARD A. MacDOWELL, widow of the composer, has been awarded the prize of $5,000, offered by the "Pictorial Review" to the American woman chosen as having made the most valuable contribution to human welfare in 1923. The basis of the award to her was in her development of the MacDowell colony, founded by Mr. MacDowell, at Peterboro, N. H., to provide ideal conditions under which creative artists may work to the best advantage. Under the management of Mrs MacDowell the colony has been extended from one hundred to five hundred acres.

Announcements

PASADENA Community Players will present, opening Dec. 29, "Kempy," by J. C. and Elliott Nugent, father and son. The leading role will be taken by Bertram Hancock. Followed by a new play by Marion Craig Wentworth, "If everybody had a window in his house like this," January 18.

L'ALLIANCE Francaise de Pasadena held the December meeting in the studio of Mrs. A. de Forest Merwin. The president, Mrs. W. Kennon Jewett, and the honorary president, Captain Paul Perigord, introduced the artists. Mme. Marie de Mare Stein was the speaker.



ALINE BARRETT GREENWOOD presents her current reviews, January 21, 11:00 a. m., Shakespeare Clubhouse, Pasadena.

MARGARET CARHART is reviewing contemporary books at the Playbox, Pasadena, alternate Thursdays.

THE Playbox, Pasadena, announces productions will be given during the season, until May, under the direction of Gilmor Brown.

SOROPTIMIST CLUB, Los Angeles, presented entertaining programs at their luncheon meetings throughout December: The meeting December 23 was a Christmas tree party, and at the suggestion of the president, Mrs. Gertrude Maynard, a New Year's slogan was adopted, "Make every day a Christmas day of service." A living Christmas tree held gifts for the members, but particularly for the poor, including the Plaza Community Settlement, the Salvation Army Christmas tree fund, and especially the Children of the Day Nursery under the charge of the City Mothers. An extra hundred dollars was voted for this latter charity.

THE first section of the Pomona College campaign for $3,000,000 has just been completed with the obtaining of the $400,000 conditional gift of the General Education Board. The $800,000 needed to meet the condition was passed before the evening of December 1. In addition, President James A. Blaisdell announced a gift to the College of the Margaret Burton Harwood Hospital, given in memory of Mrs. Harwood by Mr. A. P. Harwood and his children.

B B Bell & Company

Lighting Fixtures

Fireplace Fittings

Lamps

Console-tables and Mirrors

Hope's Casements

2302 West Seventh Street

at

Westlake Park

Los Angeles

Santa Barbara

COMMUNITY Arts Association of Santa Barbara. Calendar for January, 1925:

Jan. 3, Saturday afternoon, 3 o'clock. 936 Santa Barbara St. First of series of talks on Music by Arthur Bliss for the pupils of the School of the Arts. Tea served. No charge.

Jan. 6. Tuesday afternoon. 4:00 o'clock. Recreation Center. Informal meeting and tea for all Community Arts Association Committee members.

Jan. 6. Tuesday. 9 o'clock. Reopening of School of the Arts after Christmas holidays.

Jan. 9. Friday. Closing date for Poster Contest conducted by La Cumbre Golf and Country Club for students of School of the Arts.

Jan. 9. Friday afternoon. 2:00 o'clock. School of the Arts, 936 Santa Barbara St. Lecture by Frank Morley Fletcher. Subject: Sculpture. Moving pictures. Admission by ticket, free on application to the Secretary.

Jan. 10. Saturday afternoon. 3 o'clock. Recreation Center. Children's concert under direction of Arthur Bliss. Free for children under 15 years. 25c to adults.

Jan. 17, Saturday afternoon, 3 o'clock. Lobero Theatre. Lecture by Arthur Bliss. Subject. Program of Philharmonic Concert to be given at Granada Theatre. Free to members of Community Arts Association and Subscribers to Civic Music Concerts.

Jan. 18. Sunday afternoon 3:00 o'clock. Lobero theatre. Pop Concert under direction of Arthur Bliss. Prices 35c and 75c.

Jan. 22, 23, 24. Thursday, Friday and Saturday evenings at 8:30. Saturday matinee. 2:30. Lobero theatre. Community Arts Players in "Liliom," by Franz Molnar. Mail orders now. Tickets $2.00, $1.50, $1.00, 50c.

Jan. 23. Friday afternoon 2 o'clock. School of the Arts. 936 Santa Barbara St. Lecture by Frank Morley Fletcher. Subject: Sculpture (II) Moving pictures. Admission by ticket, free on application to the Secretary.

Jan. 29. Thursday evening, 8:30. Members' meeting and entertainment. Lobero Theatre. One-act play presented by Green Room Club. Music-Dances. Admission by membership card only.

February:

Feb. 6, Friday afternoon, 2 o'clock, School of the Arts. 936 Santa Barbara St., lecture by Frank Morley Fletcher. Subject: Architecture. Moving Pictures. Tickets free on application to Secretary.

Feb. 7, Saturday evening. 8:30 o'clock, Lobero theatre. Melodrama written by Colin Campbell Cooper. Popular prices.

UNDER the auspices of the Civic music committee the Los Angeles Philharmonic Orchestra will give three concerts at the Granada Theatre, Santa Barbara on January 5, February 2 and March 2. The committee is also arranging for two other concerts to be held at the Lobero theatre. On February 10 Albert Spaulding, well-known violinist will play, and on April 4 the Flonzaley Quartet will be heard.

THE La Cumbre Golf and Country Club, Santa Barbara, has offered three cash prizes for posters done by students of the School of the Arts. A student may submit as many posters as he wishes and Mr. Fletcher and Mr. Paine will choose all of the posters which in their judgment have merit. The Greens Committee of the La Cumbre Golf and Country Club will then select the three which best suit their purposes. The Club will purchase any remaining posters wheih please them. Before the choice is made the posters will be on exhibit at the School of the Arts and also at the La Cumbre Country Club.

JOHN GAMBLE, celebrated landscape painter has been elected secretary and treasurer of the Santa Barbara Art Club.

PASADENA HOUSEHOLDER'S REFERENCE PAGE

La Solana

A quiet, well-appointed small hotel on the West Side near Orange Grove Avenue.

Expert Service

Each menu is carefully planned and prepared every day.

Grand Ave. and Lockhaven St. Pasadena

Tel. Colorado 632
Reweaving—Repairing
Oriental Rug Cleaning Co.
MODERN FIREPROOF PLANT
22 N. Roosevelt Avenue
N. E. Cor. Roosevelt & Colorado
Pasadena, California
Edgar Round, Mgr.

The Gearharts
ETCHINGS AND BLOCK PRINTS
611 So. Fair Oaks Ave.
Pasadena

The Mary-Isbel Shop
Nestle Lanoil Permanent Waving, Marcelling, Manicuring and Scalp Treatment.
20 South Los Robles Pasadena
Phone Fair Oaks 916
Pasadena's Most Exclusive Shop

BUICK
OUR NEW BUICK SIX IS A WONDER
See It Today
HOWARD MOTOR CO.
C. S. Bokaw, Res. Mgr.
267 W. Colorado St. Pasadena
Colorado 397

Permutit Soft Water Saves Clothes
TROY LAUNDRY
In Business for Twenty Years
Pasadena, Cal. Phone C. 146
Alhambra 243-J

LAUNDERERS DRY CLEANERS
Royal Laundry Co.
461 So Raymond Colo. 67
Pasadena, Calif.

Books ... Toys
Gulck Stationery Co.
173 E. COLO. ST., Pasadena
Fair Oaks 39
Picture Framing, Artist's Supplies

QUALITY SERVICE
THE ELITE
DRY CLEANERS AND DYERS
Plant: 797 So. Fair Oaks Ave.
Colo. 1349 Pasadena, Cal.

The Rose Tree Tea House
Luncheon, Afternoon Tea, Evening Dinner
CLOSED SUNDAY
ITALIAN LINENS, POTTERIES AND VARIOUS GIFTS SUITABLE FOR CHRISTMAS
ROSE TREE GIFT SHOP
167 North Orange Grove Avenue
PASADENA, CALIFORNIA
Telephone Colorado 5523

Decorating and Finishing Exclusive Furniture
W. G. Pesenecker
Interior and Exterior Painting
34 North Broadway
Phone Col. 5656 Pasadena, Calif.

Phone Fair Oaks 389

Complete Stock of Spalding and Wright & Ditson's Athletic Goods
Toys of All Kinds for Xmas
Golf, Tennis, Baseball, Football, Basketball and Handball Equipment. Guns, Ammunition, Bicycles and Everything on Wheels for Children.
We Re-string Tennis Racquets and Repair Bicycles
THE SPORT SHOP
28 West Colorado St., Pasadena

WE offer for investment of Personal or Trust Funds sound Securities returning highest rates consistent with safety.
WILLIAM R. STAATS COMPANY
Established 1887
Government, Municipal and Corporation Bonds
311 East Colorado St.
PASADENA, CALIF.
Los Angeles San Diego San Francisco

OHRMUND BROS.
Unit System of Heating
sets the Standard of the World
with
Superior and Distinctive Features
A Comfortable Home Must Be Properly Heated
PASADENA GAS APPLIANCE CO., INC.
901-3 East Colorado Street Fair Oaks 93

Alice Coleman Batchelder, Pianist, Presents the 1924-1925 Series of Eight
Coleman Chamber Concerts
In the Music Auditorium of The Pasadena Institute of Technology
Course Ticket for Eight Concerts $15.00
Agnes E. Lownsbery, Secy.
Telephone, Colo. 3414
695 Calaveras St., Altadena

JAMES CINI & COMPANY
of Italy
Antique and Foreign Jewelry
Iatlian and French Novelties
390 E. Walnut St. Pasadena, Calif.
Fair Oaks 5583

The Assembly Tea Room
Luncheon, Tea and Dinner
Special Sunday Dinner 5 to 8
644 South Flower St.
Los Angeles
Phone 827-177

MARGARET CRAIG
ARCHITECTURAL PHOTOGRAPHY
Portraits by Appointment
Official Photographer for California Southland
610 So. Western Ave., Los Angeles
Telephone 56254

MONCURE DEARDORF
Dealer and Expert in Chinese Works of Art
Studio 24, de la Guerra Studios
15 East de la Guerra Street
Santa Barbara

LEE ELEANOR GRAHAM
Interior Decorator
de la Guerra Studios
23 East de la Guerra Street
Santa Barbara

MARINA FLINT
Kimonos, Chinese Suits, Bed Sacks
Suite 114, de la Guerra Studios
21 East de la Guerra Street
Santa Barbara

MARY E. HAUAN
Hazen J. Titus Fruit Cake Company
Studio 26, de la Guerra Studios
15 East de la Guerra Street
Santa Barbara

EL PASEO SPORT SHOP
MRS. CHARLES O'DONNELL LEE, JR.
Sport Clothes, Hats, Evening Gowns
Children's Clothes
Studio 30, de la Guerra Studios
21 East de la Guerra Street
Santa Barbara

DE LA GUERRA STUDIOS
SANTA BARBARA

THE LOVELY SHOPPING STREET IN SPAIN

In the Court of the de la Guerra Studios

A Charming Shopping Center of Santa Barbara

LA MANTILLA
Costume Designing and Remodeling
Studio 31, de la Guerra Studios
21 East de la Guerra Street
Santa Barbara

DORIS OVERMAN
Designer
Shades, Trays, Decorative Panels,
Aztec Pottery and Lamps
Studio 27, de la Guerra Studios
15 East de la Guerra Street

Pacific Mutual Life Insurance Co.
Santa Barbara Branch
101 El Paseo de la Guerra

ELEANOR JOHNSON
Studio for the Voice
Suite 103, de la Guerra Studios
21 East de la Guerra Street
Santa Barbara

THE POLK STUDIOS
MUSIC, DRAMA, DANCE
Gertrude Jeanette Polk
Artist Teacher of Vocal and Physical Expression
Henry Polk
Teacher of Piano, Voice and Pipe Organ
Suite 110, de la Guerra Studios
21 East de la Guerra Street
Santa Barbara

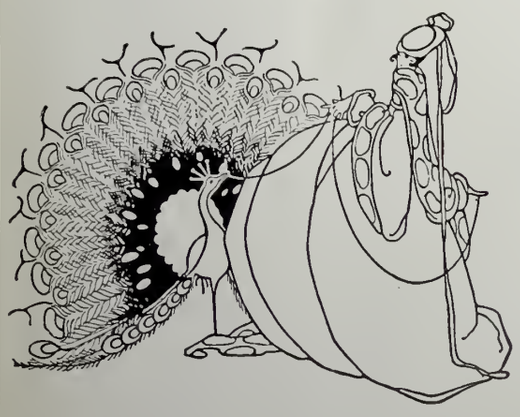
SANTA BARBARA ART CLUB
No. 15 E. de la Guerra Street
Free Exhibition of Paintings and Etchings
Open Daily 1 to 5 p. m.
Paintings and Etchings for sale

B. CROFTON ATKINS
Pipe and Tobacco Shop
Studio 29, de la Guerra Studios
21 East de la Guerra Street
Santa Barbara

NOTARY PUBLIC METROPOLITAN 5270

MISS MARJORIE FYFE
MISS ELLA GILBERT
PUBLIC STENOGRAPHERS
MULTIGRAPHING AND MIMEOGRAPHING

929 LOEW'S STATE BLDG. LOS ANGELES



We also do Remodeling Repairing

ALLAH FUR CO.
FURS EXCLUSIVE
Phone 1517

As well as Dyeing Storage

SANTA BARBARA G. E. ANAPAMU

Lenz HAT Studio

643-645 East Colorado St.
Pasadena, Cal.
Phone Fair Oaks 573

Distinctive Hats to Suit the Lines of Figure and Face

MARTHA

WATSON-KERBY
Exclusive Fashions for Women

GOWNS WRAPS SPORTS CLOTHING

2224 WEST SEVENTH STREET
LOS ANGELES

WESTLAKE SQUARE PHONE FITZROY 0823

MT. LOWE RESORT
America's Greatest Mountain Scenic Trolley Trip

5 TRAINS DAILY from MAIN ST. STATION
8.9.10 AM 130.4 PM.
Round Trip Fare $2.50
For Literature and Information Address

A Most Delightful Journey.
Supplemented by Refreshment, Comfort and Ease at
Mt. Lowe Tavern.
The Beautiful Mountain Inn.
An Ideal Vacation Place for a Day, Week or Month Where One May Enjoy Rest and Recreation
Hiking · Riding · Dancing · Tennis
and other amusements

PACIFIC ELECTRIC RAILWAY
O·A·SMITH Passenger Traffic Manager
LOS ANGELES

HOTEL GREEN
A well ordered Residential and Tourist Hotel of peculiar excellence. Open all year. Moderate rates. Apartments by the month.
The Green Tea Pot Reopened October 15
CHARLES B. HERVEY, Proprietor

PASADENA LEATHER GOODS COMPANY
Suit Cases, Purses, Bags, Puttees for Men, Women and Children
Everything in Leather Goods
Insured and Guaranteed Trunks
742 E. Colorado St., Pasadena
Fair Oaks 354

Superior Rental Service
HOMES, APARTMENTS, BUNGALOWS
In Pasadena's Exclusive Sections
MRS. MORRIS (Rentals Exclusively)
THE J. W. WRIGHT CO.
312 E. COLORADO ST., PASADENA

California Southland

M. URMY SEARES - - - - - Editor and Publisher
ELLEN LEECH - - - - - - - Managing Editor

NO. 61, VOL. VII. JANUARY, 1925

CONTENTS

	PAGE
LAKE JOSEPHINE AND THE GRINNELL GLACIER.....Cover Design (A Painting by Kathryn Leighton)
SOUTHLAND CALENDAR	4 and 5
A CLEARING HOUSE FOR CRAFTS	9
THE ARTS AND CRAFTS SOCIETY.....Marion Hugus Clark	11
A VOYAGE AMONG THE BOOKS.....Louise Morgrage	12
ART AT THE BILTMORE SALON.....M. Urmy Seares	13
FOUR DEPARTMENTS IN ART AT SANTA BARBARA	14, 15
MOTION PICTURE MAKING.....George Drumgold	16
QUALITIES OF THE FIVE GAITED HORSE.....P. M. F.	17
SOUTHLAND OPINION .....Paul Perigord	18-19
SOUTHLAND SPORTS .....Ellen Leech	20-21
A LITTLE GARDEN IN SANTA BARBARA	22
A BANK BY CURLETT AND BEELMAN.....Mary Beaton	23
THE WORK OF THE ALLIED ARCHITECTS ASSOCIATION	26
A SCHOOL OF GARDENING.....Judith Walrond-Skinner	27
THE PIERPONT MORGAN CARPET.....Frank L. Loftus	28
THE ARCHITECTURAL BULLETIN.....H. O. S.	30
THE ASSISTANCE LEAGUE BULLETIN....Mrs. Hancock Banning	32
THE SOROPTOMIST CLUB.....Bertha M. Just	34

Official Organ of the Architectural Club of Los Angeles, California
Official Organ of the ASSISTANCE LEAGUE of SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA,
5604 De Longpre Ave., Hollywood, California

CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND is published monthly at Pasadena, Cal.
Copyrighted, 1924, by M. Urmy Seares
Advertising: CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND, Pasadena, Col. 916. Los Angeles, MEtropolitan 5270. Subscription price for 1925, $2.50 per year. Arrangements made with the Community Arts Assn. of Santa Barbara to articulate with that organization through its 1800 members.

J. W. Robinson Co.
Seventh and Grand

Permanent Waving

A Permanent wave will give one fresh beauty and self assurance. Particularly if secured at Robinson's—where the service is reliable, the results satisfying, the charge moderate.

Other services of hairdressing, manicuring, massage and facial treatments will repair one's sense of good grooming.

For appointments telephone
BRoadway 4701

Santa Barbara

Pasea de la Guerra
SPUNWOVEN
"The Gypsy Shop"
Hand Fabrics
Imported Hand Tweeds
BETH & IAN M. WOLFE
Old-time arts in an old-world setting

El Pasea Patia

Lunch Out of Doors or Dine
at
"EL PASEO"
23 E. de la Guerra St.
Santa Barbara

Maria Kedrina

Studios of Russian Ballet
EASTERN STUDIO
33 Commonwealth Avenue
Boston, Mass.
WESTERN STUDIO
130 E. Arrellaga St.
Santa Barbara, California
Circular sent upon request

CLAUDE D. FISH
AUDITOR-ACCOUNTANT
INCOME TAX SERVICE
EISENBERG BUILDING
SANTA BARBARA, CALIFORNIA
PHONE 541

CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND
AN ILLUSTRATED MAGAZINE OF NATIONAL INTEREST

A CLEARING HOUSE FOR CRAFTS IN CALIFORNIA

FROM every state in the Union, from every nation of the Orient and the Pacific islands, there have come to California men and women bearing gifts of talent or tradition, native skill or inherited art standards of the race. Sometimes these traditions are blurred by being handed down through several generations of American pioneers who have conquered nature but forgotten art. Sometimes the highly developed art of the subtle Orient has been sacrificed—has been lost in the commercial blindness that caters to ignorance because ignorance of art seems more universal than knowledge of its basic principles. But however covered with the debris of uneducated merchandising, however set aside by the exigencies of the fervid moment when food and shelter, transportation and subdivision, heat and light and water for the million are overwhelming the best men in our midst with incessant problems, these elements of art, these skilled hands and educated eyes, are here if only in the memory of ancient arts and racial crafts.

Even the pioneers who crossed in covered wagons the dangerous deserts and towering mountains of our continent and left behind or scattered on the plain their homemade looms and handmade hickory chairs are reviving in this out-door clime and leisure the skillful service of their hands and memory.

As Los Angeles settles down to the status of a city and finds herself in civic centers, circling boulevards and organized commercial sections, those who have chosen the Southland of California for their homes reach back into their past for occupations fitted to the hour and place: for no man or woman who has tasted of the joys of creative work can ever set aside the longing for another leisurely attempt to try again. Men who have worked in textile factories on the Atlantic Coast and made their pile have come to California as tourists and are now renewing youth and interest in the realization of a dream of perfect conditions in a new era factory. Women who on dusty prairie have stolen a few moments from the drudgery of life to poke brght colored rags through burlap in their effort to make the home more gay, have here an opportunity to dream a pattern long ago forgotten and embroider it with California's oranges and poppies into a brilliant tapestry of cloth of gold.

Photographs by Courtesy of the Los Angeles Times

THE ASSISTANCE LEAGUE AT THE ALEXANDRIA BALLROOM, WHERE THE CRAFTS CONTEST EXHIBITION WAS HELD IN DECEMBER. LEFT TO RIGHT: MRS. E. P. WERNER, MRS. JAMES REED, MRS. B. H. TERRILL, MRS. LE BERTTION, MRS. ELEANOR CASSINI, MRS. BETHA DAVIS, MRS. CHESTER T. HOAG, MRS. IDA SPERRY

MRS. DANIEL J. SULLY, GENERAL CHAIRMAN CONTEST OF CRAFTSMEN

There is something in the air of the Pacific that inspires to action in artistic numbers. The materials are here, the will to do, the effort finds expression in all sorts of objects, good, indifferent, and worse than poor.

What is lacking is a standard; for in this general democracy, every man's opinion on religion, politics or art is considered just as good and just as worthy of respect as that of every other man!

With women, however, the matter of standards is not so democratic, comparison continually urges to better things. This tendancy has been noticably catered to in women's magazines but it has remained for the Assistance League of Southern California to lay all the cards upon the table and let every craftsman and women see what every other one is doing and then to discard inferior work ruthlessly while finding a market for the good.

Here are the women who know what is good. Here are the customers who buy the best for their own homes. They have set themselves the high task of examining the work of every needlewoman, every famous cook, every artist and craftsman who is willing to help in the work of raising our standards to one hundred per cent in workmanship and one hundred per cent in design.

As the official organ of this group of leading public spirited women, CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND has constituted itself a clearing house for crafts and will in the future devote most of its Los Angeles space to further the interests of workers in California handicrafts and products just as it does and has done for six years for the men who set standards in art and architecture.

In all problems of community work the smaller city has the advantage, as is seen in Santa Barbara's model Community Arts Association and in Pasadena's Community Play House Center. These same problems in Los Angeles are so huge as to be wellnigh hopeless of solution. Many centers are forming, many kind hearts and wise heads are organizing neighborhood interests and work.

The Assistance League of Southern California is incorporated to assist all such enterprises, and to put into workable shape the multitudinous proposals which its hundreds of workers offer for the good of the communities of what is still called "Southern California" by its occupants but which is rather a state of mind than a definite territory. Sojourners in this state of mind have not yet burned their sentimental bridges behind them and made themselves a part of the State of California. They still say "back East" as though they expect to be buried there. Denoting as it does a transient population not yet settled in its work, this name of "Southern California" is an appropriate part of the Assistance League's title and indicates the tenor of its ways. Formed immediately after the close of the war work for women, it gathered up the energy and interest dropped at that time and concentrated into a working unit the army of Red Cross leaders and war workers in Los Angeles.

A new name should be invented for those women who, inheriting from a long line of illustrious ancestors the power and skill of statescraft, apply it to woman's organized work in a community as large as Los Angeles. Statesman is none too dignified a name for them, but to feminize it lessens its dignity. Yet it needed just those statesmanlike qualities we respect in our more notable leaders at Washington to hold together and to keep the loyalty of the remarkable group of women which Mrs. Hancock Banning, its founder, has welded into the Assistance League of Southern California. From its Community House in Hollywood goes forth that fine charity and trained service which gives to those who need just what they need and no more. The Children's Day Nursery, whose inauguration day was Saturday, December 20, is but one of the League's avenues for helping where highly specialized and intelligent help is imperative at this moment. "The Contest of Craftsmen" is so different that one would hardly expect it to be mothered by the same Head; and yet it grew out of the need of that other movement which originated with Southern women after the other war,—the Woman's Exchange. At the Community House these women from the old South had, of course, a woman's exchange whereby to sell the articles made by warstricken women in their homes. These articles were so varied in quality and price, so often done by California's untrained artists, that the very high standards found in the old South after the war were entirely lost and in order to sell the articles in our woman's exchange at the Community House shops, a new standard of workmanship had to be established and new designs made. Mrs. Daniel J. Sully, whose experience in New York and whose inheritance from workers in exquisite altar embroideries of the organized guilds—under Phillipps Brooks in Boston—has fitted her to lead in ideals and standards, was given opportunity to carry out her ideas for this important department. In her Contest for Crafts, whose exhibition was held at the Alexandria Hotel early in December, she set a high standard and planted it in every Chamber of Commerce in the seven counties. Certificates of efficiency given to those whose work is passed by experts as judges, carry a gold seal of The League, and inform the commercial Secretary of any town to which the journeyman artist or needle woman may go, how he may recommend the worker and help to establish a clientele for her.

An interview with Mrs. Sully, granted since the exhibits have been brought back to Community House or returned to their authors, brings us the following letter:

MRS. WALDRON, VICE CHAIRMAN, ON THE STEPS OF 5604 DE LONGPRE AVENUE, AFTER THE DOLLS AND OTHER EXHIBITS HAD BEEN JUDGED AND TICKETED AND RETURNED TO COMMUNITY HOUSE

"Hollywood, California, December 17, 1924.

"Mrs. Frederick H. Seares, Pasadena, California.

"My Dear Mrs. Seares: I wish some new word might be coined to register all I would like to express to you and what your encouragement and faith in the 'Contest of Craftsmen' has meant.

"In trying to construct a department in our organization for greater usefulness and understanding with women and men, our Exchange became a part, as you know, of our Community House activities, and for two years we have discussed with our President ways and means. The Chairman of the Contest feels as confident at the close as at the beginning of the necessity of the contest. Its need marked co-operation as the only straight road to the end we looked for, and our disappointment is keen that the Society of Arts and Crafts did not send their best, for we gave them ours, and every ounce of energy in all lines needed. Success comes by every hand on the line at once. How pathetic so few are big enough to feel they can afford a place beside them as they climb and entirely lose sight of the fact that strength is gained by contact, rainbows grow beautiful by watchers, and impetus to carry on to perfection, by faith in your work.

"The response to our invitation to contest was most gratifying, but the need being great, we had a great storage of courage to give, and feel our first constructive step was solid, and we may place our ambitions on the credit side. Perhaps few realize how much talent Southern California holds. We are trying to be faithful to our service flag and burn into our mind the picture of dreams that must come true; we need the public now to purchase the beautiful things our consignors are offering, to continue what we have organized—a real Exchange. We have registered people who need us, we need the public to help us help them; we are an open door, all the world is welcome.

"Few Exchanges have such efficiency as we can boast in our chairman, Mrs. Kimble, highly constructive, keen to all needs, in absolute tune with our consignors. They know her just and her judgment spells results. Together in these months of hard work, we have constructed a splendid policy for the Exchange, its methods most simple, as this department carries only gratuitous service.

"I wish I had time to go into details of the exhibit, but I will enclose a list of gold seal holders. A few sent most exquisite displays from San Diego of filet lace and cut work—'Our Boys' from Camp Kearney, San Diego, beautiful examples of work, all gold seal holders; wonderful hand carved bride's treasure box carved in design of orange blossoms, especially made for our contest; hand loom work (very interesting), hooked rugs, old-fashed quilts, hand-patched and quilted; examples of beautiful knitting, and crochet work in every style from baby booties all the way up to sport dresses, most elaborate cut work with lace inserts, lace work, embroidery, simple and exquisite work of more kinds than you can fancy, needle point, bead work, wax work and wax flowers, wood carvers that would surprise you, and inlay in miniature full-rigged ships; silver, brass, copper, pewter in all sorts of things such as desk sets, candlesticks, flower-holders and book-ends; leather goods; china and lustre paintings in exquisite offerings; lamp and candle shades; shell work; a curio set made of pine cones to represent things of the woods, wee animals, etc.; baskets and flower holders made of pine needles from Arrowhead; children clothes, baby's knitted, crocheted and hand-made articles; satin creations for the wee tots; crib and carriage covers; shawls, from crochet to Spanish; cut work curtains, sport hats with scarfs to match, work and shopping bags, dolls, dolls, dolls—rag to 'mammy's'—and some most beautifully dressed with several changes, (a young woman will dress dolls to order)—soft toys and dolls you wanted to stop and play with, different animals, also doll furniture—too adorable—from Dolly Varden shop; one could almost hear Santa Claus over Radio ordering our entire stock. Our faithful Friday unit had many lovely offerings in yellow bowls, pitchers and trays. Our Sewing unit gave us lovely offerings

(Continued on Page 30)

THE ARTS AND CRAFTS SOCIETY

By MARION HUGUS CLARK

IN ST. PAUL, MINNESOTA, THE CATHEDRAL IS LINED WITH BATCHELDER TILES FROM LOS ANGELES AND THE GREAT CHOIR SCREEN IS OF PERFORATED BATCHELDER TILE

THE Arts and Crafts Society of Southern California organized in May, exccuted their first bow at the Holly-Fiesta in June, strengthened their organization at a supper given at the Otis Art Institute in July, put their sign over the large window at 2508 West Seventh Street in August.

Our purpose in organizing was to stimulate the love for the Crafts, to increase the number of Craft workers and to provide a place in which to exhibit and sell Craft-work. The third object has been accomplished as the beautiful quarters testify.

In the early days of our society, there was a certain dark period when the rent money loomed ahead like a cloud. Mr. Douglas Donaldson ,our first Vice-President, lifted our spirits by offering to conduct a class at his own studios, the proceeds of which would pay two months rent. The offer was accepted and the crisis passed. We propose at the beginning of the year to conduct various classes that will meet the needs of aspiring craftsmen, not to pay rent entirely, though it may help, but to do for us all that the craft teachers in New York, and in Europe, in all the Art Centres where our officers and members learned their craft did for them. The first class will be conducted by Mr. Donaldson at the place on Seventh Street. Other courses will be announced later.

And now about the meeting held on the 20th of November.

It was announced that Mr. Ralph Helm Johannot and Mr. William G. Purcell would address us. Mr. Johannot is said by Craftsmen to be one of the three greatest Craft teachers in the United States today. Mr. Purcell is an architect. We were unable to get a full report of Mr. Johannot's address. It was helpful in showing the results observed by him in the New York, Boston, and the Detroit societies. We hope to have Mr. Johannot's address for our next report.

Mr. Purcell said in part:—

Making beautiful things and making them well is today only the common starting point in the widely different activities of the Arts and Crafts movement throughout the world. After thirty years of earnest study, exploration of materials and processes, of color, pattern, texture, form, a real tradition of activity has been built up.

With this base of idealism and sound technique the Arts and Crafts movement has three very necessary functions to perform, that is to say, to train Artists and Craftsmen in the production of useful things in such a way that the making of these things will be a continuous re-education of the Artists and Craftsmen themselves; to educate an active and enthusiastic group of Friends of Art and of Workmanship through whom good news about beautiful things will be spread throughout the community; and equally important with this the building up of a conscious group of Art Lovers, to spread throughout these American States and round the world a myriad of really beautiful things at a price that any owner of a Ford automobile could afford to buy.

There has been in the past among the well wishers of the Arts and Crafts movement a tendency to create beautiful objects upon an exclusive base that would be enjoyed to some extent because no one else could possibly have a duplicate, but the outstanding success of the Kalo Shop in Chicago for an example, or of the personally produced Flat Silver of the three generations of the Blanchard family of Massachusetts, whose living representative is the President of this Los Angeles Arts and Crafts Society, has made it clear that beautiful things can be made in great quantities so as to compete with the unbeautiful and not well made things of the department stores and profit-shops.

The Arts and Crafts movement throughout the world, never more dynamic and productive than today, has demonstrated that "Made by Hand," which was so eagerly siezed upon by the profit-takers as a star bait for battered machine products made in fancied imitation of the work of Genuine Craftsmen, is a phrase that is automatically replaced in the world of Honest Artists by the more significant phrase "Made by Heart."

In beautiful creations of metal, glass, or fabrics it matters not whether their production was powered by steam and electricity or by Campbell's Soup and Shredded Wheat, whether the machine was of wood and steel parts or of the bone and flesh of the human arm and fingers; what does matter and the only thing that matters is the idealism behind the fingers of steel or of men.

The "Hand Made" thesis which was the foundation of the Arts and Crafts movement from the beginning still has its full validity in so far as it concerns the wholesome reaction upon the training and education of the Craftsman who is doing the work, and upon the creation of models and specimens which have unquestioned integrity of design and authoritative tectonics, but the new spirit in Arts and Crafts is asking that in the face of so great a need for filling a profit-eaten world with beautiful utilities that the brilliant and skillful maker of things shall replace his own single efforts with the many multiplied production of ingenius machines together with the organized efforts of other persons eager to be shown how to work together for the farther spread of profit-free utilities.

We can replace the single skillful hand with a hundred trained minds controlling ten thousand fingers of steel, but the minute we fail to put behind the machine the imagination, intuition, integrity, and idealism of a living Soul whose own industrious fingers have assisted in refining its own Characteristics and Intentions, then at once the machine product becomes an empty shell, an annoyance and impertinence, the common spoils of business barter and unthinking purchase.

The Voice of the Machine today is a call for Masters who can meet manifold needs, of material, and of processes with a message of beauty that will unfold from within the thing and its making, as a flower grows from its seed, but these Master Artists and Craftsmen must also show us how to spread self-beautiful things across this land as poppies or apples are flung across the hills and valleys, for all freely to enjoy who will, or who may become able to do so.

FOUNTAIN OF THE SEASONS, AN EXAMPLE OF THE BEAUTIFUL WORK OF OUR LEADER IN CRAFTSMANSHIP AND DESIGN, ERNEST A. BATCHELDER, FOUNDER OF THE BATCHELDER-WILSON TILE COMPANY OF LOS ANGELES

WESTERN ARTISTS AT THE BILTMORE SALON

THE Los Angeles Biltmore, situated as it is in the center of the city has already done much to crystalize the city's character. It was built just at the time when Los Angeles changed over night from a tourist town into a real all-the-year-round city, and is the exponent of that change. No effort of any one man or any group of men brought about that subtle change. The city as an entity filled up to capacity and overflowed into surrounding territory. Its public utilities, its traffic problems, its supply of food, shelter and modern conveniences reached a limit where financiers and the leaders of big business corporations could no longer carry their burdens and live. Exploitation of the living land available for settlement became little more than a medium for gambling and the goose of natural beauty which had laid the golden egg of tourist travel was dead.

But that beauty which was driven away from the southland of California by the growth of ugly paved streets, towering oil derricks and sky-scrapers, butchered hills and desecrated shore still lives in the hearts of those who have been in California longest and has returned to the city of Los Angeles through this subtle, hidden door of the love of art.

The business men of Los Angeles out of their own needs have built three beautiful buildings in the heart of the city. First, the University Club by Allison and Allison, next the Biltmore Hotel by its eastern architect and third, St. Paul's Cathedral by Johnson, Kaufmann and Coate.

The architects of Los Angeles out of the desperate need of the city have formed the Allied Architect's Association and are giving of the combined talent of seventy leading, public-spirited professional men to the end that Los Angeles may have a beautiful civic center and the best architecture of the century in her public buildings and parks. So unusual is this sacrifice of personal interest in a free gift from all the architects of a growing metropolis to their city that it can hardly be comprehended by meager minds which through their own selfishness ascribe ulterior motives to every good cause. Yet it is a fact, and the University Club, the Cathedral and the Biltmore are but forerunners of an architectural city whose future is assured as notable by the combined effort of all our architects organized into a working business unit by the genius of their President, Mr. Edwin Bergstrom, the most vital representative on this coast of the American Institute of Architects and its exemplar to the younger generation following in its pleasant paths.

What wonder then that the love of beauty hidden in the hearts of our hard working capitalists and corporation managers (for theirs is the burden of work in this age) should find solace in the art of painters and etchers, sculptors and craftsmen as it adorns the necessary structures which commerce and the life of a city demand.

In the Biltmore Hotel, the management has instituted a salon for paintings, and like the old French salons in literature, this galleria real and its accompanying little galleries have become the criteria of art in the Southwest.

The exhibition now hanging on its tapestried walls and in the well lighted sales rooms off of the great corridor is a selected, representative group of paintings from the studios of the members and guests of the Association of Western Painters. Its purpose is to show to Los Angeles and its guests, typical paintings of California by Californians. And while few of any of these painters were born in this state and none of them trained here in its southern section, yet they are the best type of painters we can boast, and they paint California.

The painting used this month on our cover is reproduced in colors here in Los Angeles from a painting which hung on the walls of the Biltmore Salon before the present show was placed.

It is the work of Mrs E. E. Leighton who has been indefatigable in bringing an appreciation of art into the woman's clubs and the homes of this city. While this particular painting represents the high mountains and glaciers of Montana, much of Kathryn Leighton's painting is the expression of her keen insight into California's varied landscape possibilities and her power to put that beauty on canvas that it may live.

AT THE BILTMORE SALON, MAX WIECZOREK HAS HAD A ONE MAN SHOW STRIKINGLY WELL HUNG BY THE NEW MANAGEMENT. THIS CHARMING FIGURE OF "PORTIA" IS REPRESENTATIVE OF THIS ARTIST'S DISTINGUISHED PORTRAIT WORK

All of the men and women who founded the Biltmore Salon had this in mind when they secured a gallery downtown. California must henceforth be represented to all men through the eyes of her artists and not through the tiresome ravings of her enthusiastic fans. If there is beauty here the artist will find it, and California would do better to raise artists fit to cope with her wonderful art opportunities, than to raise the voice of her newly acquired population in unlettered acclaim.

This list of exhibitors does not exhaust the roster of painters who have given fame to California's beauty and color. Others are showing at the Stendahl galleries where California is always strong. Others are in the downtown show rooms of Cannell and Chaffin leaders in setting our highest standard of art. The Museum of Art at Exposition Park has the two big shows of the year for The California Art Club and the Print Makers, and many one man shows; and the Southwest Museum while making its most original effort along the line of its present Landscape Architect's show, has often shown paintings of California.

So many paintings of the southern portion of the state have been painted and sold to enthusiastic lovers of color and landscape that our "pink hills" have lately been declined by Macbeth in New York as no longer in demand. Maurice Braun, who sell through Macbeth's Gallery, is spending part of the year in New England or New York. This San Diego painter has recently sent west some lovely bits of color, paintings of autumn's pageant of tree forms and meadows that make one happy just to look at them and fill the room they grace with joy. So we must realize that landscape alone will not represent California any longer; we must paint an historical pageant. We must present our romantic history with the landscape for its background and leave to amateurs the pink hills and sweet stretches of desert or opalescent sea.

At the exhibition by the Painters of the West just closing, it is interesting to study the canvas of each well known painter with this thought in mind.

Carl Oscar Borg gives us often the life of the Desert against his finely handled mesa backgrounds. Charles Austin carries out in a most satisfactory manner the alluring subject which Friezeke and Richard Miller have made so beautiful, a girl among flowers, or with a background of garden intimate and serene.

Max Wieczorek gives us the striking handsome figure of Ruth St. Denis in his inimitable way. But his backgrounds are universal as is his subject and might have been painted anywhere.

Alson Clark has painted his model on the edge of the arroyo near his studio, and Macbeth may always depend upon him to paint California scenes or Mexican cities in a unique way. His compositions could never become tiresome and when he paints an historic picture it will be classic as well as Californian.

John Frost is now painting fine pictures full of this human interest but decidedly typical of the country we all love.

His "Dust Storm on the Desert" hung in the show under discussion is an excellent example of what I mean. Here are the mountains still blue as a Jack Frost only can paint them;—here are men fighting with the elements so typical of western life. But the whole is so blended into a picture, so exquisite in color and withal so true in a painters sense of that word! We recognize instantly the dust-beclouded sun and the feeling of driving sand-laden wind, while we enjoy the spot of color and its harmony of line.

Armin Hansen and Maynard Dixon have for years sent out from California pictures of men in boats and men on desert trails, the life of the sea and the life of the aborigine; but they belong to the older, San Francisco school, and have never painted "pink hills."

Jean Mannheim has gone in for landscapes within the last few years and when he combines his splendid powers of figure work with the scenery of his California we shall have his best work. Already his "Cut in the Arroyo" shows what he can do in this line.

One little picture hidden away in a corner of the exhibition gave me more encouragement in my theory than any other one thing which has happened in fifteen years of study in the Southland. John Rich has painted what to me is the outstanding picture of the year. Perfectly set in a background of an inhabited hill in California, he has painted one of his excellent interiors which he grasps as a member of the Boston school of painters and in which he excels.

Combining with this an exquisite nude figure Mr. Rich has done what I doubt if another southland painter could do or would even attempt. He has blended outdoors and indoors in a true Californian way. M. U. S.

A VOYAGE OF DISCOVERY AMONG THE BOOKS

By LOUISE MORGRAGE

BOOKS sent to SOUTHLAND for review have accumulated to such an extent that it is simply impossible to give each one the attention it deserves. We shall have to act in the capacity of an official taster and, after nibbling, try to tell a discriminating public whether the book is worth a full meal.

An original idea has occurred to the publishers, D. Appleton & Co., George H. Doran Co., and Little, Brown & Co., who have combined in putting forth a book written by Grant Overton called "Cargoes for Crusoes" and sold for less than cost. It gives interesting discussions of the leading authors of the past year, with the books they have written and contains much useful as well as delightful information.

We mention fiction first because the books of that kind received by us are more numerous than those on other subjects. As a rule these novels are uniformly excellent and entertaining, but for the most part we cannot apply to them any particularly distinctive qualities of style, or thought, or characterization.

From the publishers, Houghton, Mifflin & Co., we have the following list: "The Ship of Destiny," by Marshall N. Goold, is a fairly exciting sea-yarn with good descriptions of life on a tramp steamer. The author evidently knows and loves the ocean. Richard Pryce, in "Romance and Jane Weston," writes with a subtle technique and insight almost feminine in feeling. The scenes of this novel are laid in London and Wales, making these places very attractive. There is, of course, no end to the historical romances of Rafael Sabatini, who simply has this habit. "St. Martin's Summer," like those preceding, is full of color and swift action, having little regard for historical accuracy; only, as the name of Marie de Medici is mentioned, we assume the adventures related take place during her regency. Another romance of the past is "Citadel," by Joseph Husband, who takes the war of 1812 for his time and San Domingo for his place. Of course, we find the distressed damsel motive. If only some genius could invent a different way to distress a damsel! Mr. Husband has not done it differently, but he has done it hard. "Safety First," by Margot Neville, while nothing but froth, is extremely amusing and will certainly get a laugh out of any old grouch. In "The Majestic Mystery," by Denis Mackail, two young journalists go for a week-end to a resort near London and get entangled in an affair that necessitates some clever amateur detective work, distinctly diverting. The ending is rather original, strangely enough. We do not feel that "Bed Rock," by Jack Bethea, is up to the average novel issued by this publishing house. The scenes are laid in an Alabama mining town. If this is a first trial, we advise the author to essay a second one, for he has talent.

From the publishing house of D. Appleton & Co., we have received "A White Stone," by Lucy Comfort Mitchell. This book impresses us as niee, sweet and sentimental, extremely well done, full of patter we call clever. Moreover, it will interest many Californians because of its descriptions of San Franeisco and Los Gatos.

In "Stephen, the Well Beloved," Harold E. Scarborough has written about Europe in 1920. His outline is always able and vigorous, but for some reason he fails to fill in his sketch satisfactorily. In this book, however, his satirieal treatment of the new republics of Europe is worthy of attention because as a newspaper correspondent, he surely had opportunity to judge concerning conditions in these new states.

Short stories previously published in magazines go to make up "Walker of the Secret Serviee," by Melville Davisson Post. Walker is a man who began his career as a train robber and ended in the secret service department of the government, so that this lively narration of his adventures in both capacities is far more entertaining than the average detective story. A collection of short stories, dealing mostly with the supernatural is "23 Stories," by Twenty and Three Authors. Edith Wharton, Robert Hitchens, John Masefield and A. Conan Doyle are some of the authors.

E. P. Dutton & Co. publish "Queen Calafia," another novel in a numerous company, written by Vicente Blasco Ibanez. In this the heroine is a woman brought up in California, thus giving the author an opportunity to interpolate a brief account of the former history of California from the Spanish viewpoint.

ROBERT E. McCLURE, OF PASADENA, THE AUTHOR OF THE NEW NOVEL, "DOMINANT BLOOD."

Doubleday, Page & Co. are the publishers of "The Dominant Blood," a significant first novel of much promise by Robert E. McClure. This young author gives us a realistic description of American family life, at times absorbing and always interesting because of his skill in choosing incidents. Throughout the book he reveals a feeling for taste and beauty, likewise a perception of the inscrutable undercurrents of life, especially in his most successful character, a figure human and appealing, the foreshadowing of whose fate is done with artistic effect in a most dramatie scene. The book impresses us as sane and sincere, and full of qualities which, with improving craftsmanship, will lead the author to success.

Among books on other subjects we have "Getting a Laugh," by Charles H. Grandgent, published by the Harvard University Press. The author is the eminent authority on Dante, with whom, however, this book has nothing to do. It is mostly light and easy chat which will mean something to persons acquainted with the environs of Boston and Cambridge.

Enthusiastic mountain climbers will like to read "Tales of a Western Mountaineer," by C. E. Rusk, published by Houghton Mifflin & Co. It is mainly an account of various expeditions made by the author to the lofty summits of peaks in the state of Washington.

Two well written volumes of travel, intended primarily for guide books, are "The Hill of Athena" and "Egypt," by H. H. Powers, president of the Bureau of University Travel. People who in youth missed the glamour of these two great civilizations may grasp a little of their enchantment by reading these novel attempts to present ancient history. The Macmillan Company is the publisher.

D. Appleton & Co. publish "Gardening in Sunny Lands," by Mrs. Philip Martineau, with a foreword by Edith Wharton. It is a discussion, practical and artistic, of making gardens in the Riviera, with constant allusions to California, for it seems the same conditions apply to both places only more favorably to this region. It is, of course, a book for enthusiasts on the subject, but the casual reader also will enjoy it, tending as it does to help toward making a fine art out of living.

Decidedly unusual is "Isvor, the Country of Willows," by Princess Bibesco, published by Frederick A. Stokes Co. This lady is a Roumanian princess who happens to be a connection by marriage of ex-Premier Asquith's daughter. She takes great interest in the peasantry of her country and in "Isvor" has given a picture of their ways and superstions. The translator, Hamish Miles, has apparently caught the poetic tinge of the original which he has conveyed to the English language with some degree of success.

Once upon a time, people were accustomed to spend hours writing to their friends. From many of these we have received our most valuable impressions of historical events, the lives of famous people of all kinds and they often make the most delightful books. Something of this sort has been done by Joseph H. Odell, in "Unmailed Letters," published by E. P. Dutton & Co. The letters in question are leisurely, quiet and show a catholic taste devoted to many subjects, especially religion.

The Four Seas Company of Boston has sent us two slender paper-covered pamphlets containing two playlets, one being called "The Next Step On," by Walton Butterfield, and the other "A Victim of Rest," by Livingston Welch. Both of these plays contain the germ of originality, particularly the former, which has dramatic possibilities and has been produced in the 47 Workshop at Cambridge.

A very attractive little book of verses inspired by the California missions is issued by the J. F. Rowny Press in Los Angeles. In writing these poems, Leetha Journey Probst has given expression to our romantic past, while her husband, Thorwald Probst, has included some charming drawings. The book has also a well written introduction by Francis Grierson. "My Sagebrush Garden," by Sarah Bixby-Smith, issued by the Torch Press of Cedar Rapids, Iowa, is another little volume of verses with considerable poetic inspiration written about California. We undoubtedly owe encouragement to all endeavoring to call attention to the beauty of this region without thought of commercial benefit.

An unusual book comes from the press of the D. Appleton Company, called "The Most Famous Beauty of China," written in English by a Chinese woman, Shu-Chiung, who is the wife of the specialist, Doctor Wu Lien-fei. It is a lively account of a celebrated beauty, whose influence at court was all-powerful, during the reign of Ming Huang, one of the emperors of the Tang dynasty (A. D. 618-905). She is called the Cleopatra of the East, whom she resembled in the allurement of her charms.

An article on architecture to appear in a later number of the SOUTHLAND, will contain a featured review of "American Homes of Today," an important publication just issued by the Macmillan Company. Augusta Owen Patterson, the well known magazine editor, is the author of this volume, in which she presents the aesthetic reasons for the type of our present-day domestic architecture.

THE FOUR DEPARTMENTS OF THE COMMUNITY

DAVID IMBODEN, TECHNICAL DIRECTOR OF THE COMMUNITY ARTS PLAYERS

THE Community Arts Players of Santa Barbara put on "Fanny's First Play" by Bernard Shaw for their December production at the Lobero Theatre under the direction of Nina Moise. It was most fortunately cast, went off with professional finish, and was received with the familiar praise, "I believe this is the best thing you've done."

The Prologue and Epilogue were staged against a black velvet curtain with two Venetian chairs, and a tall candlestick on either side. Ian Wolfe, one of the most versatile of the Santa Barbara group, who plays equally well a very old man or a debonair young prince, took the part of Count O'Dowda with perfect ease and distinction in his blue velvet court dress, lace ruffles and white wig. Helen Hyde played his daughter Fanny with girlish grace, and was lovely in a full skirted brocade. The Critics were well taken, their lines sufficiently cut to keep the fun and escape the tedious discussions. They descended to the first box after the prologue and became part of the real audience, an amusing feature of the production.

David Imboden, the technical director, who can be depended on for interesting and characteristic sets, put the play itself on an inner stage slightly raised as if arranged in the end of Count O'Dowda's salon. Mr. and Mrs. Gilbey were taken by T. H. Leavitt and Mrs. Barr; Mr. and Mrs. Knox by J. D. Lewis and Mrs. Morley Fletcher. No one missed any of the satire or pathos of his part, and the laughter of Shaw is apt to be bitter in the mouth. You smile but you pity. Paula Gates, one of the bright particular stars of the Santa Barbara group, was inimitable as Darling Dora. But the Gilbeys were not to be blamed for not wanting her for a daughter-in-law. A street walker would be a bitter pill for any family, and Shaw's wit can't gild it. Very likely the point of it was, if you are a family like the Knoxes, narrow, limited and sterile, with no outside interests, you can expect your son to break loose. But the inference from Shaw is that freedom means only license, and he appears to despise the fact that degradation, vice, and hospitals are just as miserable realities at one end of the scale, as evangelical religiosity, hypocrisy, fear and a timid negation of life are at the other.

Margaret Knox was played with vitality and vivid characterization by Edna James, who is Mrs. Chapelle in private life. She is a new comer to Santa Barbara, and a great accession to the ranks of the Players.

The butler, Juggins, was one of the hits of the production as interpreted by Eric Wilkinson, and won applause for all his scenes. Harvey Genung as Duvallet, and Herbert Guild as Bobby well rounded out the exceptional cast.

S. M. ILSLEY,
Chairman of Drama Branch.

NINA MOISE, DIRECTOR OF THE COMMUNITY ARTS PLAYERS, SANTA BARBARA

THE School of the Arts was founded by a group of public-spirited artists and friends of the arts, who recognized the need in Santa Barbara for a school that would place instruction in music, drama and pictorial art within the reach of all the members of the community whose talent or inclination led them in that direction. From small and modest beginnings, often with classes taught by volunteers of high reputation—such as Albert Herter with the Life class and Marion Craig Wentworth with the drama class—the school has progressed to its present state of healthy development.

A faculty of twenty-one under the experienced and tactful direction of Frank Morley Fletcher, teaches painting from life, general drawing, outdoor painting and sketching, design, woodblock printing, tapestry weaving, piano, voice, pipe organ, violin, 'cello, harmony, ensemble playing, expressive and social dancing, and French. Dramatic classes have had a place in the school and will be re-established when the season is opportune. Recitals, exhibitions and parties add zest to the work of the continuously growing student body.

From term to term the increased numbers have brought improved quality also. Where in the beginning there were a very few talented pupils doing serious work, there are now a number who intend to make one or another of the arts their profession, and who give promise of being able to do so creditably.

FRANK MORLEY FLETCHER, DIRECTOR OF THE SCHOOL OF THE ARTS

ARTHUR BLISS, DIRECTOR OF THE MUSIC DEPARTMENT, COMMUNITY ARTS

Through a plan of whole and partial scholarships, the school is able to help several gifted children and young men and women toward a livelihood in their chosen fields. The scholarship fund, although necessarily limited, is applied with such careful judgment as to accomplish the greatest possible good.

The School of the Arts purposes not only to equip students for professional careers, but also to train community leaders in its various branches; and to enrich many lives, and enhance their appreciation and joy in the wonders of a new world unfolded.

JEANNE AUGE,
Secretary of the School of the Arts.

THE aim of the Music Branch of the Comunity Arts can be stated in very few words—it is to inspire and foster a love of good music in Santa Barbara by as varied a means as is possible. This sounds simple, but it actually is a task of great difficulty. There are no artistic standards here as there are in Europe, no inborn enthusiasm for art, no subsidized professional orchestra, chorus, opera or chamber music ready to hand, and withal we have the insidious climatic conditions that make a sustained effort of long duration in any art a seemingly arduous operation. In spite of the drawbacks great progress in music is continually being made. "Catch 'em young" is a wise saw, and with that end in view we have started community singing in seven of the public schools, and have a plan in operation to handle the training of young instrumentalists. The ambition is not to organize music as though it were a patent food saleable to all, but to give as many children as are keen the opportunity of getting into contact with good music. The committee also supports an adult chorus of over one hundred, who have been singing madrigals a capella, and hopes that this will eventually develop into a much larger group.

We have also started a series of popular chamber concerts, in which the best professionals in the town take part, and the object of which is to give the public the finest music of the chamber type played under pleasant conditions. In order to woo a public, smoking is allowed and tea and refreshments served, and they are held, weather permitting, in the ideal setting of El Paseo.

Another project in the near future is the production of an Operetta.

To reiterate, Santa Barbara is musically a child. It has had in the past several talented nurses to rock its melodic cradle.

All we can do at present is to ram home the power of fine music wherever an opportunity is discovered, and that battering down of Philistine apathy is proceeding apace. No amount of talking does any good in music—it is only in performance that this art justifies its glory.

ARTHUR BLISS, Director of Music Branch.

ARTS ASSOCIATION—SANTA BARBARA

PLANS AND PLANTING BRANCH

THE Plans and Planting Committee has as its objective the development of a more beautiful city with more attractive homes and gardens. The Plans division is concerned with the architectural end, the Planting committee with the landscape end. A brief synopsis of the work of the Planting Committee for the past year (Oct. 1923-Sept. 1924) is here outlined by the chairman, Miss Sophie Baylor.

"The Planting Committee has just ended a year of activity and accomplishment—340 children's gardens were supervised with comparatively few failures. Seeds, bulbs and plants were distributed among these gardens. Some plants were donated, but most of them grown by Robert Morrison, garden supervisor, in a lath house built for that purpose. The result obtained by this work among the children is very satisfactory. One sees everywhere the gay little gardens, and at the Flower Shows the children's sections are always a delight, and blue ribbons are plentiful.

There were also 61 entrants in "The Home Gardens" Contest, when small cash prizes and "Honor Certificates" were distributed. The members of the committee who acted as judges for this contest were surprised and delighted at the originality and charm of these little gardens. Twenty-six "landscape jobs" were also planned and executed, and eighty detailed sketches furnished. The committee feels this to be a distinct contribution to the "Better Homes" movement, and the effort to help beautify the city.

In October, 1923, the first Community Flower Show was given at the Paseo de la Guerra. This was truly a community affair, the Garden Club co-operating and helping in every way, and many members of the Horticultural Society also sending exhibits. It was a very beautiful and successful show, and so picturesque, with the Spanish background and atmosphere, that it was decided to make it an annual event. In April we co-operated with the Horticultural Society in their spring flower show and in August the children had a really lovely Zinnia Show of their own. There have been two large parties given during the year for the children's group, where they were given prizes of books and garden tools and ribbons were pinned on the proud little gardeners. Ice cream cones were enjoyed and they were made to feel that they were really members of a club. The children are now having a course of free story hours, given at Recreation Center. The stories are told by Mrs. Maud Morley Fletcher, and are illustrated by moving pictures. In this course Recreation Center and the Wolf Cubs are co-operating with the Plans and Planting Committee.

It is impossible in a short sketch to give more than an outline of what this Committee is trying to do—one must read between the lines and try to see the amount of Social Service that has gone into the work of the past year."

THE OLD LOBERO THEATRE, BUILT OF ADOBE AND WOOD AND NOW REPLACED BY THE NEW

THE BEAUTIFUL COLUMNS OF THE NEW LOBERO, GEORGE WASHINGTON SMITH, ARCHITECT, SANTA BARBARA, CALIFORNIA

THE Lobero Theatre of Santa Barbara as well as the Community Arts Association is a natural product of the growth of the community spirit in California. It stands on the site of an old thick-walled adobe theatre, built over sixty years ago by a wandering musician, tavern keeper and figure of romance, Jose Lobero. Lobero had drifted into Santa Barbara and opened a saloon on the corner of State and Canon Perdido streets. Into this tavern rode the boisterous vacqueros, and from it went prospectors for gold, lured by tales of their host, who would have the hills back of the village rich with the precious metal.

The only place of amusement in those days was a little open plaza off State street, where dances were held on fiesta days and where strolling players stopping for a week or two gave their variety shows under the open sky.

Lobero dreamed of a real theatre, a grandiose vision for the proud little town far off from a railway,—in fact it was years before there was a rail laid in California. He acquired a building called the Sebastapol, at one time used as a school, and which was said to be the largest adobe hall in California. It is amusing what an aura of romance hangs over these primitive walls of sun-dried mud of the Spanish settlements, that will never inhere to perdurable brick, hollow tile or concrete. To his adobe hall Lobero added a generous stage at one end, and at the other a pretentious foyer of frame structure the interior of which was never finished. The little theatre had an old world charm with its tiny proscenium boxes from which only a glimpse of the stage could be had, and its horseshoe balcony with pew-like benches. It was opened by a truly community performance, an opera written by Lobero himself, the scenery prepared by him and his friends, played by an all Santa Barbara cast, the music provided by a Santa Barbara orchestra. A grand opening to which folk gathered from far and near. But it was a pretentious enterprise for the little city, and Lobero was never able to pay for it and it slipped through his hands. But known after a while as the Santa Barbara Opera House, it became the center of the social life of the community, where many fine amateur plays were given, brilliant balls and elaborate bazaars, as well as an occasional worthy road show,—or more frequently a barnstorming company took possession of it for a few nights at a time. When it was outmoded by the larger Potter theatre, and fell into dusty desuetude, the haunt of bats and rats, its charming proportions and old world flavor, and wealth of happy associations were mourned by the older residents, and the first suggestion to revive the old building met with enthusiastic response.

But the building was found too far gone for repairs, and on its site the community built the new Lobero. This is in the Spanish style, white plastered with red tile roofs, and a towering stage house

(Continued on Page 31)

MOTION PICTURE MAKING—PART TWO

By GEORGE DROMGOLD

IN the December number of this magazine I promised, or rather threatened you with another article dealing with the manufacture of that necessary evil, the motion picture. So I take my megaphone in hand and continue with this bally-ho tour of the studio. (With apologies to Thomas Cook and his son.) Please do not annoy or feed the actors as we pass through the big stage.

The large building just ahead of us, which resembles a great warehouse, is the largest inclosed motion picture stage in the world. It is 300 feet in length and 120 feet in width, containing 36,000 square feet of stage space which will accommodate from fifteen to twenty average size settings "sets." You will notice the absence of windows and skylights. The six massive sliding doors which are now closed, render the interior totally dark. This type of dark stage has been universally adopted, as all of the interior "sets" in our modern pictures are photographed by artificial light.

During the early days of motion picture making, the stage was an open air affair and photography was at the mercy of old Sol at all times. A soft, even light was obtained on the stage by a system of overhead diffusing. This consisted of a series of muslin diffusers or strips of muslin four feet wide, overlapping at the edges and forming a canopy over the entire stage. Each strip operated on separate wires, so that by pulling certain ropes from the stage, the cameraman could slide them back and forth to a proper adjustment of light upon the set below.

A PORTION OF OUR LARGEST MOTION PICTURE DARK STAGE NOW COME INTO ITS OWN

The faces of the actors were lighted by portable reflectors. These These reflectors when placed at a certain agle in the sun, reflected light into the scenes. At times this light was so blinding to the actors, they were forced to squint their eyes during the filming of a scene.

This recalls to mind a cute little trick employed by some of our well known cinema stars of a few years ago. If a director called upon them to shed a few crocodile tears in a scene, and they did not possesses that sobbing temperament, they would slyly turn and stare into the full glare of a reflector for a few moments, then suddenly face the camera and tears the size of moth balls would cascade down their cheeks. The world would proclaim them great emotional artists while their optometrists fitted them to reading glasses.

A few years later artificial light began to work into the scheme of motion picture photography. The open stage was thrown into the discard and glass stages were built, equipped with heavy curtains overhead and along the side walls. These curtains were light proof, so by regulating them for a certain amount of sunlight, and with artificial light used in conjunction, better effects were obtained. This combination of sunlight and artificial remained popular for several years.

Only within recent years has the use of sunlight on the stage been discontinued, and the dark stage come into its own. With the wonderful present day electrical equipment, there is no lighting effect too difficult to cope with.

We pass through a small door at one end of this great stage and find ourselves in a new world, a world of fakirs, where snow is salt and champagne is apple juice. It is quite wierd, here and there a dim light is burning, while farther down the big stage great blotches of light reflect against the ladders and runways overhead. The air is filled with strange sounds, the soft whirring of many cameras in action, and the low humming of red hot carbons in the big spotlights overhead, flooding the scenes below with their powerful rays. The sing song drone of many voices blends in, and above all this the sweet strains of a stringed orchestra hidden away in the maze of sets before you.

Music has become a permanent fixture on the studio stage, and there are few, if any of the better directors who do not require the services of a stringed quartette, to play during the filming of scenes. This is a potent stimulant to the sensitive temperament of the artist appearing before the camera, as the musical score is arranged to harmonize perfectly with the tempo of the scene being played.

You feel like a small boy at a six ring circus, there is so much to see and hear going on about you.

Suddenly a shrill whistle pierces the air close by, followed by a a blaze of light from all directions centered upon a gorgeous ball room set, with three hundred smartly dressed men and women standing on the floor, awaiting word from the director. A large orchestra in brilliant uniform stands at attention by the grand staircase in the background.

There are six cameras located at various angles around this set. Some are on the stage, while others are mounted on high parallels overlooking the colorful scene below. The cameramen call out instructions to the electricians who make certain changes in the lighting, and after several minutes of lining up the set through their cameras, they call out their O. K.s to the director. The director walks out into the center of the set and gives instructions to the dancers and musicians. This is to be a rehearsal. The chief electrician or "gaffer" as they are called, once more blows his whistle, the lights flash on and off a few times. This is to make sure they will burn steadily, as one lamp with a defective carbon may flicker and ruin the scene. The director is seated between two cameras on the foreground, he signals to the orchestra leader, the music starts, three hundred people are dancing, laughing and apparently having the gayest time of their lives. The cameramen are watching the scene through their comeras and making certain last minute adjustments. Again the whistle blows, the lights go out, the dancing stops.

The director once more takes the floor, makes certain changes in the action and gives final instructions to his two assistants. This time they will photograph, "take", the scene. The director picks up a small megaphone, everyone is at attention watching him closely. 'Ready,' 'Music,' 'Action,' 'Camera,' and the scene of gaiety is once more at its height. The music and laughter of the dancers drowns out the whir of the cameras. The director and his two assistants are watching the scene closely. The set stenographer or "script girl" is making rapid notes of the action in shorthand. These notes are very valuable to the director in cutting the picture, as they contain certain changes and added scenes which are not in the original continuity. Three short whistles, the music and dancers stop, the lights go out and the scene is over.

The accompanying photograph shows this scene in action.

Suddenly a great roaring fills our ears, this sound seems to come

(Continued on Page 34)

DAUGHERTY DARE, (CHESTNUT MARE) CHAMPION FIVE GAITED SADDLE HORSE, OWNED BY BENJAMIN C. MEYER

KING SPORT, AMERICAN SADDLE HORSE OWNED BY CLARA PECK, WINGANEEK FARM, SHREWSBURY, NEW JERSEY

CONFIRMATION AND QUALITIES OF THE FIVE-GAITED HORSE

By P. M. F.

THE most popular saddle horse for show purposes in America had his origin in Kentucky and is now known as the American gaited or Saddler. He may either be three five but it is my intention here to discuss the five gaited show horse, his conformation and qualities, for we are to have an opportunity of seeing some of the finest and most sensational of his kind at the Los Angeles Horse Show which starts the evening of February the Sixteenth at the Ambassador arena.

In the South bad roads and a warm climate have made riding the most practical way of getting about, therefore a saddle horse was needed which possessed such easy gaits and such an equable disposition that he would not tire nor overheat his rider. The Kentuckyans have always been great lovers of the horse and their experience with trotters and racers had taught them that to get a horse for a certain purpose they must breed for that purpose. As a result of many years of careful selection, breeding and inbreeding we have a distinct type, the American saddler.

About sixty years ago there was imported into the blue grass state a fine thoroughbred stallion, Denmark. He was bred to some Canadian mares, natural pacers, and it was soon discovered that his get were unusually easy gaited and handsome. One mare known as the Stevenson mare produced Gains Denmark, the most distinguished of five gaited progenitors.

The gaited horse is very stylish in his action, spirited though gentle and when not abused, possesses great endurance. He is so showy that he seems preeminently to be a show or park hack, but he also makes a delightful road hack for he has a great deal of intelligence, a sweet temper, a light mouth and the smoothest of gaits.

In the show ring he is judged by his "conformation, substance, finish, style, beauty, manners, and way of going; must be shown without artificial appliances. All horses required to show five distinct gaits, viz: free open walk, square trot, easy canter, rack and running walk, stepping pace or fox trot."

First let us consider conformation. The gaited horse should have a small head, large intelligent eyes, fairly small ears with good width between them, a deep oblique shoulder, high withers, well back, that the saddle may be over the center of gravity. A round barrel carried back to the hips, a short top line in proportion to a longer bottom line, slender hard straight legs with pasterns medium in length and oblique, not upright; feet high and wide at the heels. The tail should be set on high and carried away from the body in a graceful arch, never on one side. Other things being equal, a chestnut or bay will win over a grey or black in any saddle class. There are reasons for this seemingly unwarranted prejudice. A black clips out badly. Grey hairs are evident upon one's habit, in the shedding season, and a grey turns white as he ages. White is very undesirable, as it is conspicuous and rarely found in a purebred horse. In the hunting classes the prejudice against a grey does not exist, for a grey horse sets off a red coat to perfection. There are many greys and blacks which are consistent winners all over the country, and it would be ridiculous to assume that such a slight deficiency should have more than a slight influence on the placing of the ribbons.

EASTER STAR, FIVE GAITED HORSE RECENTLY BOUGHT BY MARCO D. HELLMANN—AND TO BE SHOWN FOR THE FIRST TIME ON THIS COAST IN THE LOS ANGELES SHOW

Substance, that which underlies all outward manifestations, is of course, bone and muscle. Finish, style, and beauty need no explanation. And then there is this matter of quality which we hear so much about, like that intangible asset, charm; it is difficult to describe and yet, to win in strong company, a horse must possess it. A fine silky coat, a skin well veined, a fine throttle, a lean head, big nostrils, the carriage of the ears, an expression in the eye, fire, courage, these are some of the components of quality.

A gaited horse is expected to go with his hocks well under him, to carry a high head with the face at all times perpendicular to the ground. He should never point his nose like a trotter and if a horse be shown which does so, it is due to lack of training or to poor horsemanship on the part of his rider. Showing these horses is no simple art and is usually beyond the power of an amateur, no matter how well he or she may ride.

The walk must be free and open and at a speed of three or four miles an hour. The trot should be regular, brilliant, true in line, and at a speed of from twelve to fourteen miles an hour. The canter should be slow and rythmical. In the slow gait or stepping pace, a horse should cover six miles an hour. This is the most spirited and graceful of all the gaits. In the rack, or fast gait, the feet move independently of each other and are placed on the ground with the same time elapsing between footfalls. The rack should be smooth and even, and have no pacing motion. This is the fastest gait and a horse should rack at least twenty miles an hour.

Gaited horses are so pleasing to the eye that it is not necessary to know much about them to enjoy their classes. At the Los Angeles Show this year the two thousand dollar stake class should bring out about fifteen champions and blue ribbon winners, as well as several new horses never before seen in the west, but said to be brilliant goers.

SOUTHLAND

The Christmas Gift of France

BUT a few months ago it was the fashion to decry the militarism of France. The Gallic nation was becoming a menace to world peace, her imperialism was alarming, she was selfishly holding back the recovery of Europe, she seemed about to play the part in which Germany had conspicuously failed. Germans, Italians, English and Americans were united in a bitter campaign of denunciation against obstinate France. Only here and there an influential newspaper would uphold French policies and endeavor to show that they sprang simply from a most legitimate sentiment, the desire for self-preservation.

Behold that now France has at last unmistakably revealed her true self. While her military strength and the firmness of Premier Poincaré may have lent a semblance of truth to the charges leveled against her, she has never been militaristic. Possessed of a clear grasp of political realities she had early discovered two serious dangers threatening our civilization: the red tide of Bolshevism with its concomittant devastation, tyranny and economic wreckage and the reaction of Prussianism intent upon despoiling the Allies of their victory. Thereupon with that same tenacity she had shown at the gates of Verdun she insisted upon her right to maintain her army on a high level of efficiency.

History will not fail to register the gratitude, belated but sincere, of the whole world for the vision and firmness of France between 1918 and 1924. On the one hand, she spared us the destructive and contaminating Bolshevistic invasion of Western Europe and, on the other, she saved the newly liberated democracies of Central Europe from a revengeful return of their Germanic oppressors.

One of the most significant declarations of the Dawes Committee was its justification of the main lines of French policy. General Dawes himself assures us that but for the determination of France to secure justice or be ruined in the attempt, Germany would have probably evaded her obligations and shrewdly shifted the burden of war losses to our shoulders.

France has not only shown rare firmness and foresight but the Herriot Government has given lately a striking example of generosity and of constructive statesmanship. First of all, although quite sceptical regarding the productivity of the Dawes plan, the French Government has surrendered the guarantees of payment in its possession in order to give the new settlement the best possible chances of success. Judges of international affairs as impartial and as objective as Dr. Millikan and Mr. Henry Robinson testify that no nation has in the last few months contributed to world peace more signally than has France.

But France has gone farther still. She not only has held out to Germany the hand of co-operation but she has taken the lead in outlining and advocating an international understanding which is to be ranked amongst the most significant declarations of modern times. She heads the nations in a vigorous protest against war, she emphatically declares that war is a crime, that it must be outlawed and she is willing to stake her all upon the acceptance of that great moral principle which will open the way to a new era in international relations.

In her attachment to peace France is no way actuated by fear. She is now the strongest power on the continent; her position is made secure by a system of alliances which loyally gather around her the younger democracies of Europe. She works toward peace earnestly and sincerely because she knows that there is only one possible alternative today and that is the eventual destruction of our civilization.

France may well look about her with genuine satisfaction and ask wistfully "Where are my critics of yesterday? Where are those who loved peace enough to sacrifice to it France's most vital interests but evidently not quite enough to imperil their own?"

In 1924 it is France that has made the world its greatest Christmas gift.

PAUL PERIGORD.

International Statesmanship

HENRY ROBINSON is in our midst again. He has now become like Hoover, Hughes, Dawes, an international figure. During the peace conference at the close of the World's War he had already won the confidence and respect of European powers when with Samuel Gompers he represented the United States in the difficult task of establishing the now well known International Labor Organization. In 1924 he visited Europe twice on two missions of exceptional importance. The first time for the drawing up of a plan for the settlement of the critical problem of Reparations and the second time to put this plan in operation. Both missions have been crowned with a success which has exceeded the hopes of the most optimistic statesmen.

It has been interesting to witness, during the past month, the pride and enthusiasm with which Californians have welcomed home their fellow-citizen. Everyone is elated over the fact that our State should have had the privilege of making through Henry Robinson such valuable contributions to world peace and stability.

While Mr. Robinson, after his first visit, had refrained from making any official declarations regarding his activity abroad in order to avoid giving embarrassment to European governments during a period of delicate negotiations between the various political parties of the nations concerned, he has been gracious enough lately to share much of his experience with clubs and organizations interested in world affairs.

Few addresses could be more captivating than those in which Mr. Robinson gives an illuminating exposé of the Dawes plan, which has so happily dissipated an acute international crisis. Naturally every item of the plan developed by one of its principal authors assumes a vividness and a cogency which the mere reading of the document can not possibly convey.

We have already referred in these pages to this imposing monument in international statesmanship and we have endeavored particularly to bring out two of its most striking characteristics, a profound psychology in dealing with the European peoples and their governments and an exceptional technical skill in handling the material problems involved. In his recent address Mr. Robinson has given us additional demonstration of these two dominant features of the settlement.

First of all it was indispensable to enlist the good will of the German people as, without it, any plan, no matter how wise, would inevitably fail. Hence the Germans were reminded that the Allies had really at heart the recovery of their country, that they would not be called upon to pay heavier taxes than were born by the citizens of the Allied Nations, that their economic and political independence would be respected. This scrupulous regard for the feelings of the German people, in order to open the road to a hearty co-operation, was interestingly illustrated by the following incident, related by Mr. Robinson:

The notes issued by the new bank, made possible by the 200 million dollar loan subscribed by the Allies, were to be strictly controlled to prevent any future inflation of the currency. It was at first proposed to identify each one by means of a conspicuous red seal. The American delegation finally obtained that a hardly perceptible stamp be used, so that the German people would not be reminded, at every step, of a foreign control and gradually see in their money a badge of servitude. That spirit which presided over the arrangement of details directed as well the other provisions of the settlement, and undoubtedly made its early acceptance possible by disarming the German Nationalists.

Regarding the technical provisions of the plan several serious objections have been raised. Not the least of them deals with the contemplated payments in goods, particularly in the form of manufactured articles. It is feared that such deliveries in kind would cause a business depression in the countries which would receive them and would be seriously opposed both by industrialists and working men. In this connection, Mr. Robinson offers a suggestion rich in unsuspected possibilities.

OPINION

It is proposed that new outlets for German materials and products be found in the development of new countries such as Morocco or other promising sections of Asia or Africa. That development in the form of harbors, railways, mines could absorb a large percentage of German goods purchased with such funds as will be credited to France, for example, in the new Reichsbank. These goods when used in the building up of such productive enterprises could in turn offer the basis of a loan the proceeds of which might be used to buy on the French market, thus stimulating French industry instead of hampering it. And finally the entire undertaking would become itself an important source of revenue.

These are but two instances of the many points of interest raised by Mr. Robinson. Many other suggestions of a more general character could be recalled with profit. We shall seize the first favorable opportunity to do so. Meanwhile we may continue to take pride in Henry Robinson as one of the principal architects of a plan which is likely to put an end to the most serious economic, financial and political deadlock of our generation.

A Preventorium

CALIFORNIA has risen to a new place in the estimation of those who know what is being done here to solve problems inherent in the progress of the race. Just as the United States has been a refuge for the oppressed and unsatisfied peoples of Europe, Asia and Africa, so California has been the refuge of restless pioneers, driven West by the close crowding of cities; and later of restless tourists and dissatisfied householders seeking health, wealth or an easy existence under sunny skies.

This conglomerate citizenry has gradually settled down to solve problems it brought with it. Leisure and new ideals born of a salubrious climate have given opportunity for new solutions. A mobile community is more easily molded than those in which tradition has become law.

We are free in California to try every new idea that occurs to us; and we do! This gives our friends a chance to poke fun at us and makes our list of new laws a logical laughing stock. But behind it all there are some sensible people who also feel the impulse to make the world better in this spot where life is free and children grow up out-of-doors the year 'round. Our open school rooms, our outdoor exercises, our sleeping porches and patios, our livable gardens, all speak emphatically of the fact that the intensive work of our superb medical profession is bearing fruit in the lives of little children and in the changed ideals of the older folk.

We still have, to be sure, fool laws on our statute books, for most of the people are still in ignorance as to what is a doctor or where he may be found. Who is responsible for instance, for a law which says we need not be vaccinated unless we have already been exposed to smallpox? What sense is there in that law? Who wants to wait until he is exposed to gun-fire before he draws first on his enemy? California, sired by the intrepid forty-niner, should be ashamed of that law and wipe it off the slate at once. Better far to examine every entrant into the state from those middle eastern towns where typhoid is cultivated and smallpox patients openly walk the streets, where their clothes are saved each winter to infect new patients yearly, and where pseudo doctors breed like an army of ants.

If California is to become the preventorium of the country, we must have protection from freaks and be allowed to work out our philanthropic plans. Here is a clean, new country! It has no diseases naturally. The clear winds of the Pacific blow across it daily and keep it healthful. The strong sunshine kills the germs that are brought here from older centers of civilization, and nature has done her best for us. Nevertheless, we have serious problems peculiar to a refuge and we are working them out quietly in such thoroughgoing and scientific ways as is shown in the Children's Preventorium of Pasadena, pictured on another page in this issue, and supplementing our fine hospital and Free Clinic in the southern part of town.

The Assistance League of Southern California, with its scientific study of conditions and Day Nursery requirements has set the pace in this welfare work by opening in Hollywood near the motion picture studios a nursery as exquisite in its simple furnishings as their own nurseries were at home. This is placed in Hollywood as is the Community House of this organized charity, because Hollywood has its peculiarly situated refugees and suffering people of pride. Its work however is as broad and as far reaching as the city of Los Angeles and its organization is built up to meet that city's multitudinous and perplexing conditions.

The chief burden, however, in this refuge falls on the medical profession. Unless we have wise physicians self-sacrificing and devoted, we can never win in this great war against disease and carelessness. It is time that this long suffering profession be placed on a pedestal, and its praises sung. It is time that the public educate itself to the point of knowing a doctor when it sees one, and in taking advice about health straight from the source of all knowledge on health; rather than trying to employ cheap substitutes such as patent medicines or patent practitioners. Scores of young men seeking a livelihood have helped themselves to a few ideas from the medical profession's splendid store and patenting these ideas into a method of practice have imposed themselves upon the public by politics and pushing methods which shame our public's good sense.

A close up view of these types may fill the whole picture, and with thousands of half educated people it does. Expert medical men of all lines are classed with these pseudo doctors in the minds of most people and few there are who know the difference between orthopedic surgeons and osteopathic massage. A little learning is a dangerous thing for all concerned and a few big words can throw much dust in the public's face. It is difficult for busy doctors to do any educating of the public in general; their efforts are limited to their fortunate patients. There are, however, a few real teachers in our midst. They are more interested in the health of the community than in individual cases.

They have retired from active practice and can think for the multitude. In a coming series of articles, this magazine will try to do its bit by gathering up the knowledge these men have obtained through years of study and experience and present a few cold facts, as to the organization of the medical profession and its contribution to modern practice in the art of keeping well.

The Meaning of Christmas

CHRISTMAS seems to mean more to me, the longer that I live. I gaze with bewilderment on that stupendous mystery of love—the very God entering into and raising our human nature. My whole conception of the meaning, the possibilities of our common human nature is transformed, as I see that it can become a perfect reflection and manifestation of the Divine nature. "The Word became flesh, and lodged in us." The manger at Bethlehem reverses all our human conceptions of dignity and greatness. "The folly of God is wiser than men." It is to the humble—to babes—that God can reveal Himself. In them He can find His home.

O, Father, touch the East and light
The light that shone when Hope was born.

It is in Christmas that Tennyson found the birth of Hope. It is Christmas that, as life goes on, bids us never despair—of our own or of human nature around us.

—Forbes Robinson.

TOWN AND COUNTRY CLUBS AND FUNCTIONS

SAILS REEFED FOR THE WINTER AT NEWPORT HARBOR YACHT CLUB.

THE POWER BOATS REFUSE TO RECOGNIZE A SEASON, COMING AND GOING AT ALL HOURS.

A GROUP OF MASQUERADERS AT THE HALLOWE'EN PARTY OF THE NEWPORT HARBOR YACHT CLUB. GUESTS OF MR. LEON S. HESEMAN.

IN trying to announce seasonal sports in California, particularly in the southern half of the state, you encounter snags at once; voices from every direction importune you to be advised that golf, tennis, riding, swimming, and boating may be enjoyed every month in the year. Yet, it is true, some few sports just naturally attune and accoutre themselves under the warm summer sun, and in this class yachting really belongs. But for all that there is a tremendous gradation of temperaments under the classification of yachtsmen.

In the first place the majority of members of the various yacht clubs in southern California do not own boats, never sailed a boat, and rarely accompany a boat-owning member on a cruise. And this not because of the inhospitality of the boat owning member either, for a sailor man is always the soul of hospitality. In fact he couldn't be otherwise, he feels the broad sweep of the ocean all around him, half the world and more lies before him, how can he be niggardly in extending the deck of the ship for a little excursion which may prove a great adventure? You may trace this back through all the ages even unto Noah, who may not have had a speedy craft but who extended his hospitality to an unbounded multitude of non-boat-owning members.

On the other hand a real yachtsman, a boat owner, is deeply dyed with this love of the sea and cannot be kept ashore many months of the year. If you know anything about laundering, —and who doesn't in these days,—you will recall that every experienced person tells the novice that to retain delicate colors the fabric should be soaked in salt water, and just so this same salt water has impregnated these yachtsmen with the true blue until it won't come off.

There is another distinguishing thing too, to a yachtsman a yacht is never anything but the boat or a ship except when in really technical company or when a landlubber asks for information, then he is delighted to explain the difference between a schooner, a ketch, a yawl, and a sloop.

And to him it is always an infinite jest to hear some rocking-chair member say to his guests, "See that schooner lying off to the right, pretty sight!", when ten chances to one it isn't a schooner at all, but his friends are impressed and doubly delighted with the nautical air this imparts to their luncheon or dinner.

Los Angeles and vicinity could scarcely boast three thriving, growing yacht clubs, however, if only boat owners maintained them. The men who sit on the clubhouse porch, sniffing the salt air, listening to the gossip of

WILLIAM C. WARMINGTON, NEWLY ELECTED COMMODORE OF THE NEWPORT HARBOR YACHT CLUB, WITH MRS. WARMINGTON.

TOWN AND COUNTRY CLUBS AND FUNCTIONS

THE PRACTICE GAMES AT MIDWICK CONTINUE TO DRAW CROWDS OF SPECTATORS, WHO DELGIHT IN THE SKILL OF THE MEN AND PERFECT ACCORD OF THE PONIES.

HOBART BOSWORTH IS AN ENTHIASTIC HORSEMAN, AND IS EXPECTED AMONG OTHER CELEBRITES TO TAKE PART IN THE EAGERLY ANTICIPATED FIRST ANNUAL BEVERLY HILLS OPEN AIR EQUESTRIAN SHOW ON JANUARY 10

the land as well as the sea, are regarded as highly as the sea-going members, the only element entering into the situation is the real pity these dogs of the sea (sea-hounds) feel for a friend who has never felt the urge to buck the waves and handle his ship against all the forces of old Neptune.

A real yachtsman shows scant interest in other sports, but frequently he is an ardent admirer and an enthusiast as to polo, not with any intention of entering the lists but because he can see and senses the close alliance between the handling of the horse by the poloist and his own manipulation of his ship. Just as he takes advantage of every puff of wind, reefs his sails, and adjusts the weight of his body to the keel of the ship, so the polo player guides his pony in relation to the ball and the other players, accounting also for the effect of the wind on the ball and the springiness of the turf under his mount.

A born yatchsman,—and there is no other kind, one was never made in the world,—feels no physical ill or disability when his boat needs his strength, he is not hungry, thirsty or tired while the cruise is on or during his watch at any rate, and he will subsist for days on dry beans and water and feel well repaid if his boat makes a record, or if not he is perfectly content to have had the cruise, no matter whether he made especially fast time or not. He simply feels no real disappointment at anything that may happen when at sea so long as he and the ship are sea worthy.

YACHTS UNDER FULL SAIL OFF THE COAST OF PALOS VERDES AT THE HEIGHT OF THE SEASON.

Hartsook, Photographer

JOHN DUNCAN DUNN OF THE SEPULVEDA COUNTRY CLUB, INTERNATIONALLY KNOWN GOLF EXPERT, AND AUTHOR OF SEVERAL BOOKS ON THE SUBJECT.

ELEANOR FERTIG, DAUGHTER OF MRS. S. C. FERTIG, OF PASADENA, A YOUNG MEMBER OF THE FLINTRIDGE RIDING CLUB, INTENSELY INTERESTED IN THE CHILDREN'S HORSE SHOW. JANUARY 17.

Hiller, Photographer

A JUNIOR MEMBER OF THE VALLEY HUNT CLUB, AN ENTRANT IN THE TENNIS TOURNAMENT HELD DURING THE PAST SUMMER.

A LITTLE GARDEN IN SANTA BARBARA

LOCKWOOD
de FOREST; Jr.
Landscape Architect

WE entered by a little path along the south side of the house and stood on the small back porch to view this garden. Behind it to the west the neighbor's trees form a delightful background and in the center is this simple fountain and pool.

That so many differing views could be taken of the same little plot of the smallest of Santa Barbara's city lots speaks well for the general treefulness of the town. Beyond the fountain is one large bed full of shrubs and foreground plants which are arranged to lead up to the background of tall eucalyptus and other trees on adjoining lots. At each side of this half circle bed paths lead off to shady corners, and the paths are set with flagstones with daisies in their open spaces. Other stone plants like lobelia peep through between the stones and all the ways are edged with flowers intimate and sweet.

Along the narrow strip no wider than a driveway between the south line and the house there is a riot of color and room for many beloved flowering plants and the sunshine beams down on the whole space because this garden has no large trees of its own. Very successful indeed is this delightful little garden by Lockwood de Forest Jr.—a landscape architect and a lover of California's own native plants and natural environment. Some day he will tell us of his own garden where every native plant is reserved and treasured in the midst of the thickly lettled sections of the city of Santa Barbara.

The pool is the center of attraction in every view of this charming garden, but there is infinite variety in the planting on all sides of its simple curves. And what could be more happy than the rock plants springing up between the flags!

A Master Landscape Architect Has Planned This Little Garden So That It Looks Much Bigger Than It Is.

A NEW BANK BUILDING BY CURLETT & BEELMAN

By MARY BEATON

THAT the new bank of Pasadena is not only an unique architectural achievement, but a realized ideal for something beautiful with a homelike atmosphere, where a feeling of welcome and good will prevails, interests me tremendously.

I had seen in various parts of the country, many beautiful banks, but in some way they all had the same austere appearance and made me feel lost and quite unnecessary.

I guess the best way to describe the feeling is that they appeared to be cold.

I had heard so much about this new bank and the spirit of warmth and real friendliness that seems to prevail throughout it, that I decided to try to see for myself where its peculiar charm lay.

I also decided to learn something about the workers who in results had evidently accomplished something different from what one ordinarily expects in a building of this character.

The building, with a style largely influenced by the early Rennaissance, is a great credit to Pasadena. Its lines are simple, and yet compelling. Its ten stories of completed expert work make a landmark distinguishable from every point of vantage in the city.

When I learned that the Los Angeles Pressed Brick Company supplied the face brick used for constructing the building I knew it was significant in many ways. This company the largest concern of its kind on the coast, has been an extremely important factor in the development of the new commercial southwest. While I did not know so much about pressed face brick, I understood the generally conceded fact that its quality of durability far outreaches and exceeds any other kind of brick. With such evidence of the possibilities in beauty that pressed brick give to a structure, as the Biltmore Hotel and this new bank, one need not go farther.

The facade of arches at the entrance are the first striking and unusual note. Through enquiries I learned that these were constructed of terra-cotta. The colors and design were so beautiful, so striking, that I could readily see why Pasadena, with all its beautiful homes and buildings, is so proud of this new member of its family. The terra-cotta came from the Tropico Potteries Company of Glendale, one of the largest and most important terra-cotta works in the West. An interesting fact about the arches is that the warm granite texture color is identical with pink granite, while the total absence of sheen lends admirably to bringing out the finer details of the molded features. I am glad arches were chosen to be the entrance to the bank for there is something especially appealing about arches to Californians.

THE FACADE-ARCHES FORM A BEAUTIFUL AND UNIQUE ENTRANCE TO THE NEW PACIFIC SOUTHWEST BANK

As I entered the bank and gazed around me I could not help an involuntary gasp of surprise and delight at the beauty, one might almost say daring, of it all. What I saw is certainly a big step forward in architectural design. The lobby is a new departure in attractiveness and design for a banking room; and it seems that finally some far seeing persons have realized that in appearance and surroundings it is of advantage to have one feel at home in a bank, not overawed and uncomfortable. I believe that the building of this bank home, with all its comforts and cheerfulness of design throughout, marks an epoch in bank buildings; and what Curlett and Beelman, the architects who designed the building have accomplished in this structure, will in the next few years be followed until the old formidable and forbidding structures for banks will disappear. It is fitting that this innovation should come from this firm, in a measure pioneers on the West Coast, who in their splendid achievements have not felt themselves tied down to traditions of the past and have through their genius done so much for the artistic and substantial development of this section. It seems to me the highest compliment that I can pay them is that they are true artists—not merely designers. For to me art is the attainment of a perfection that is not noticeable but subtle.

I fully realized that such a work could not be accomplished except through the combined efforts of many others, who it is obvious in this undertaking have put a little something more of themselves, into their work than perhaps a straight commercial job would call for.

In this structure, the well known Scofield Engineering Construction Company, who I learned were the builders, seem to me to have reached a climax in a notably successful career of building.

But I am letting my enthusiasm run away with me, and I want to tell you about some of the striking and unusual interior features.

I learned that the design of the banking room was inspired by certain designs of famous rooms in Florence, and I believe, this is one of the few banking rooms that is not done chiefly in bronze, marble and ornamental plaster.

In the center of the room are writing desks and benches. The money cages are on each side and so arranged as to add to the general attractiveness of the room. Everywhere is color, and yet all of it in a quiet unobtrusive manner. Here we find that even in such a simple thing as an iron cage there may be an art. All this may seem stereotype, but not so when you see it yourself.

To the right of the entrance, screened off from the rest of the bank are offices for the president, vice-president and other executive officers.

To the left of the entrance is the information desk, with a kindly gray haired lady in charge, who makes one feel at ease and that all one's questions are not foolish.

Just beside the information desk is a real innovation — a writing room for women. Here a woman can find a quiet comfortable corner, a part of the bank and still away from the busy rush of the banks general business and transactions.

My eyes were irresistably drawn to the ceiling, and at first arrested by the most exquisite and beautifully made chandelier I have ever seen. While from where I stood I could see many other beautiful chandeliers, all of antique Florentine design, this particular one, made of hand forged iron in the natural finish, to me had a charm all its own. The chandeliers are all made from raw iron by the Meyberg Electrical Corporation of Los Angeles which is a home industry to be proud of. These chandeliers have unusual designs, many colorings, and are one of the notable artistic features of the new bank.

A GLIMPSE INTO THE BANKING ROOM, SHOWING MANY OF ITS MOST NOTICEABLE FEATURES. THERE IS A SECTION OF THE UNUSUALLY DECORATED SKYLIGHT VISIBLE

The ceiling of the banking room cannot fail to cause an exclamation of genuine admiration even from persons accustomed to beautiful things.

It is lighted by four large sky-lights, enriched with light stained glass which is divided into geometircal patterns with gilded metal spindles and bars.

The remainder of the ceiling is enriched with painted Florentine decorations. The exquisite colorings gained by John Smeraldi, one of, if not the foremost, decorators of the west, completely relieves the room of the last feeling of coldness and formidableness.

I went over to the central stairway, which is so beautiful and artistic in its great simplicity, it is almost breath taking. I stood in silent admiration and amazement at the beauty of it. Wide simple arches—a lovely window facing at the top—the whole effect is one of detachment and beauty rarely found in a business house.

MacGruer and Simpson, ornamental stone and plasterers, who constructed this gem, truly realized that in simplicity lies the greatest beauty.

Turning to the right at the top of this stairway, I entered the Escrow and Trust Department of the bank.

Continuing down the hall I entered the private offices of John Willis Baer the vice-president. First a waiting room, next the secretary's room, and then the private office or directors room. This suite of rooms is absolutely sound proof. Immediately upon crossing the threshold one seems to gain a feeling of peace and quiet. The exquisite furnishings of the main room of this executive suite are particularly worthy of mention.

A long Italian table for the directors is finished in soft old tones of antique walnut. The chairs, extremely handsome and appropriate in design, are covered with antique leather. At the end of the room is a fireplace of great beauty and simplicity, with hand forged andirons of a special Florentine design.

THE BUILDING AS SEEN FROM THE STREET SHOWING IT TO BE AN EMBLEM OF STRENGTH AND DURABILITY

Over the fireplace hangs a painting by Manheim of Pasadena, entitled "The Spirit of the Desert."

The draperies of the windows of the room are of striped Italian velvet, of Italian red and blue. A huge divan of imported friezette is in a corner. In another corner is the personal desk of Dr. Baer.

Everything is the very height of extreme good taste making it a spot of retreat for work or quiet—the symbolization of a quiet luxurious home.

The room, a masterpiece, is the work of Cheeswright Inc. of Pasadena, interior decorators whose studios are fast becoming a synonym for artistic furnishings.

Some one reminded me that I had not yet been down stairs, and while elevators may be beautiful they seem to be generally the same, I decided to walk, more than anything else, however, I think, to enjoy going down "the stairway of my dreams" as I had secretly named it.

This took me down through the banking room, and the remaining flight of stairs.

Here I found a rest-room for women, as restful as the name implies. This room is exquisitely furnished, with all the conveniences and necessities for 'mi lady's comfort. It has a luxurious divan, easy chairs, a cheval mirror, and other helpful articles that a woman enjoys. This beautiful room is decorated in the style of Robert Adam. A striking note is a wood fireplace, carved and enriched with decorations after the style of Piramesi.

From outside this room I looked down the corridor to the safe deposit vaults. All through here the ceilings are of the same colorful design of early Florentine, which does much to make what might be a dreary spot, a most cheerful one.

The office for the vaults is on one side of the corridor, where the ornamental grill entrance to the vaults and coupon rooms is electrically controlled.

The coupon rooms are sensibly furnished, with every convenience; a desk and two chairs in each room; a light above the table, and one below in case anything of value should be dropped. A red light indicating that the room is occupied.

There are more than six thousand safety deposit boxes of the most modern type and design, with storage vaults for trunks and boxes. The money vaults are the last word in safety.

A GEM OF A STAIRWAY. IN SIMPLICITY LIES GREAT BEAUTY

A GLIMPSE OF PERFECTION—THE SAME STAIRWAY LOOKING DOWN

AN ARCHWAY

While I was down in the basement I visited the boiler room which was a revelation. The word warmth used in describing the building and everything in it, is not merely descriptive, but a reality. The boilers are truly immense, and it was amazing to learn the amount of heat they are capable of producing.

In talking with Mr. Foss of the Foss-Jones Company of Pasadena, the concern that installed the heating plant, I learned a number of very interesting facts concerning the heating of such a structure.

The entire building is heated by a vacuum steam heating system, the most scientific and efficient method for such a purpose.

I was astounded to learn that the huge boilers each weigh 31,000 pounds. Fires are fed by an immense tank sunk in the ground with capacity for 35,000 gallons of oil. With these two boilers, it only requires one hour to heat thoroughly this ten story building.

After going back upstairs and before leaving the bank I had a most interesting talk with one of the bank officers. He told me a number of facts about the bank itself, which I am sure will interest you.

The history of this remarkable bank reads like a story book. To go a long way back, the site where the bank now stands, was once traded for a second-hand piano. Perhaps this is not as amusing to us as the trading of Long Island for a few strings of glass beads and some colored cloth, but considering that the piano was worth about three hundred dollars, it is certainly something not possible today.

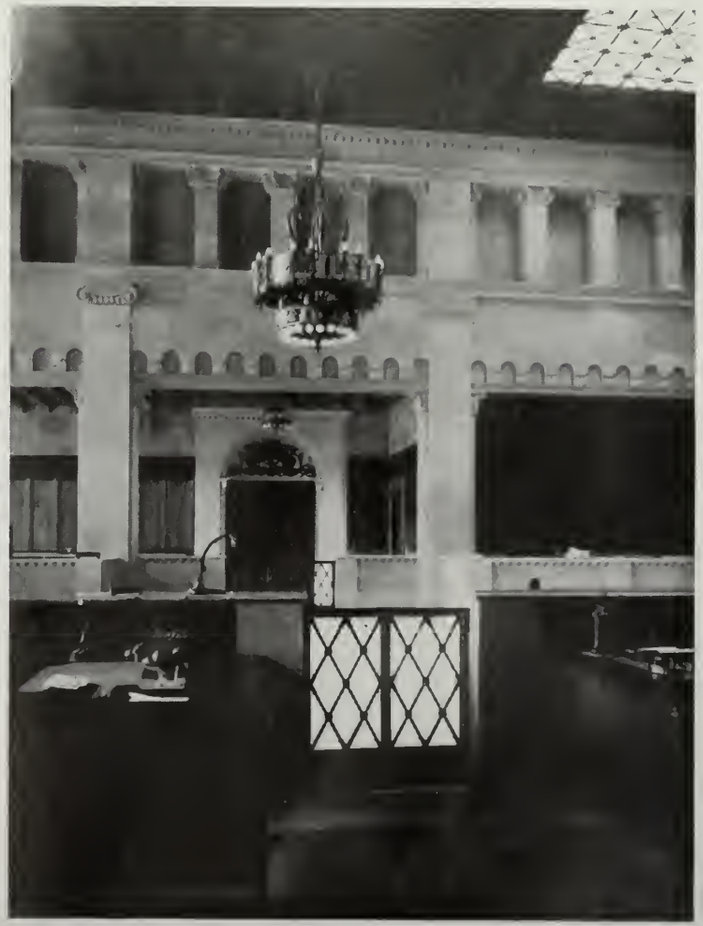
The tremendous rise of value of the land from that to two hundred and ninety-two thousand dollars paid by the bank for finally purchasing the site, clearly shows the growth of Pasadena.

In 1895, Colonel Eason and his son opened the first savings bank in Pasadena, and called it, "The Union Savings Bank." The Easons accepted a proposition from B. F. Ball, giving him and his associates control of the bank. The bank prospered, and the name was changed to "Union Trust & Savings Bank of Pasadena." The Union National Bank of Pasadena was organized to have charge of the commercial business.

After a period of twenty-six years the two banks headed by Dr. John Willis Baer as president were merged with the First National Bank of Los Angeles, of which Henry M. Robinson was president. The name, "Los Angeles Trust & Savings Banks," seemed inappropriate for the larger institution and as a result the name was changed to "Pacific-Southwest Trust & Savings Bank." Later on because of the growth of the bank various branches were opened.

That is the remarkable history of the "Pacific-Southwest Bank" of Pasadena, which clearly shows how through fairness and friendliness the bank has grown to what it is today.

I guess the best cause for the prospering of the bank is that it not only established excellent policies but that it lived up to them. The bank has proceeded on a policy of partnership, co-operation and equality. I do believe that only by resolving to be the greatest possible service to the community, and to be fair in all its dealings, that the Pacific-Southwest Bank could prosper in the manner it has.



I have not yet told you how the transfer was made from the old home of the bank to the new one. It was most efficiently and quickly accomplished. One of the biggest tasks in connection with the transfer to the new quarters was the moving of the bank's money. This was accomplished by armored cars, which were flanked by guards carrying sawed-off shotguns. The money was then placed in the new massive safe, where a network of intricate electrical wires protect it against any conceivable attempts of theft.

A RESTFUL SPOT—THE VICE-PRESIDENT'S OFFICE

A GLIMPSE OF THE VAULTS, WHICH SHOWS THE ENTRANCE CORRIDOR AND ORNAMENTAL GRILL

ANOTHER VIEW OF THE INTERIOR, SHOWING A BEAUTIFUL CHANDELIER AND A PORTION OF THE CEILING

Of course I realize, as you must, that it is not by any chance that the bank has grown to what it is today, or not through the work of any individual, but by the earnest efforts of the entire personnel of the bank, the employees as well as the officers. There are many outstanding characters among the bank officers, but it is only with the co-operation of the staffs employed, their earnest efforts, their constant courtesy and continued helpfulness that the bank has prospered to such a remarkable extent.

I learned that in order to develop a broader acquaintance among its members, and to further the development of the spirit of co-operation, the "Pacific-Southwest Bank Club" was organized. This club is comprised of the officers and employees of the Pasadena branches of the Pacific-Southwest Trust and Savings Bank. On the roof of their new home the bank has erected a suite of spacious club-rooms for the use of the members of the bank club. This is but another manner in which the bank proves its spirit of friendliness and helpfulness for those connected with it.

THE BANK UNDER CONSTRUCTION. THIS VIEW SHOWS THREE STAGES OF THE WORK

After visiting everything having to do with the bank itself, I could not but marvel at the extent and completeness of the organization required for all the different parts and details to construct such a building. In addition to the army of workmen required, it must be backed and directed by real executives of exceptional ability. One might almost say generals and not executives, as we think of the immense organization, reaching out into various branches of industry they have to marshal and control. Each small section and part of the building must be ready and done on schedule time to clear the way for the next part of construction. This is the only way that the whole work may be completed in schedule time, but each piece of work must be perfectly done. When I thought of this I realized to some extent the bigness of such an undertaking.

It required more than a year for the Schofield Engineering-Construction Company, who acted as agents for the bank in all the work done, to complete the building; but with it completed, they have accomplished something and erected another monument to be justly proud of.

The Biltmore Hotel and Theater, and numerous other buildings completed and engineered and built under their supervision, have put them in the position of one of the leading construction engineers in this line in the southwest. In this new building they have achieved something which is not a type, but which stands alone.

I had heard of this company and of the remarkable work they did during the war for the government. They are truly, keeping apace with and going ahead of their notable record of that period.

Upstairs again with a last look around that fascinating bank room and surroundings, I had a feeling of deep and genuine thankfulness that such a work of real art had been accomplished.

Out of it all certain outstanding facts came to me and I think I know where the charm of it all lies.

It is that everyone connected with and interested in building this new Pasadena home for the Pacific-Southwest Trust and Savings Bank, from the president of the bank, the architects, the builders, the contractors and the entire list of workers, put the best they had into the work.

To have accomplished what they did in the construction of this beautiful, and in many respects unique, bank building, they must put into it their whole hearts and their best creative powers. There seem to be engrained in every part of the building a dominating spirit. seems to be engrained in every part of the building a dominating spirit of welcome and good will.

I congratulate them all on their realized achievement,—an emblem of great beauty and vast usefulness. May it live long and prosper.

ADMINISTRATION CENTER FOR THE CITY OF LOS ANGELES

ALLIED ARCHITECTS ASSOCIATION OF LOS ANGELES

ALL Southern California will benefit by the new Administration Center being planned for the County and City of Los Angeles. It is more than a center for the grouping of the public buildings of the city, county and state, it is a link in the development of the aesthetic growth of the community and a focus from which will radiate park systems, boulevards and highways connecting the cities and towns of the Southland. Hitherto little thought has been given to the necessity for city planning. Our towns have been too busy growing, expanding and acquiring; and now that southern California has reached maturity, it finds its public works, its parks and its communications unequal to the needs of its inhabitants and visitors.

The first serious step in the solution of this problem was a three-cornered contract between the County of Los Angeles, the City of Los Angeles and the Allied Architects Association of Los Angeles whereby the sixty-nine architects of this organization will present on January 1, 1925, a complete plan and report for the Administration Center. The compensation for this service will be $1.00. It is a problem appropriate for such a group of architects who represent many interests and many points of view. For there are many factors involved—Federal, State, County and City Governments, Real Estate, Traffic, Public Utilities and Commerce—all share in the work.

The many angles to be considered were focused by a long series of luncheons presided over by the Board of Directors of the Association and including as guests public officials, members of the Association and all persons who might contribute construction advice to the work. A canvass was made of all public departments and organizations for technical data, reports and suggestions. By this means certain elements became fixed and certain buildings, streets, public reservations and groups were defined. From these few facts the sixty-nine members of the Association began their individual study. Some members made sketches in their own offices, others developed the plans being drawn in the Production Department of the Association. Many general meetings of the Association were called, some limited to members and others open to public officials. In this process of evolution over 100 large scale finished plans were made.

When the final drawing is submitted to the County and the City on the first of the year, it will show an area of over four hundred acres laid out in the shape of a key. The bit of the key is a lower plaza devoted to buildings which are essentially for municipal business; the stem of the key is a long mall flanked by semi-public and secondary public buildings and the handle of the key a large court on which the City Public Library is now being built and around which other improvements are contemplated. The mall stretches over the hills of the city adapting itself to the topographical conditions and enhancing the one dominant note of natural beauty of the city. This long, sweeping park terminates at the highest point in a monument.

The beautification of the existing hills, ample provision for future requirements, coordination of existing points of interest, absorption of poorly developed areas and improvement of traffic conditions are the most important essentials of this project. Around this area the flow of traffic of the major highways is accelerated, and through it, by means of tunnels and readjusted grades, penetrate the important streets, with a resulting improvement to the conditions of vehicular and electric transit. Most of all, this plan will dominate the growth of the County. Its foresight will afford opportunity for a higher grade of public works for generations to come, and the magnitude of its inception will pave the way to a coordination and improvement of park systems and highways throughout California.

CALIFORNIA HOMES AND GARDENING MANUAL

Above—Pruning the Dwarf Wistaria. Right—The California School of Gardening. Below—Working in the Vegetable Garden.

Training Climbers, California School of Gardening for Women, Hayward, Alameda County, California.

THE CALIFORNIA SCHOOL OF GARDENING

By JUDITH WALROND-SKINNER, N. D. HORT, F. R. H. S.

TWO years ago I came out from England to Hayward, California, to lay out a garden of twelve acres. It was at once apparent to me that one of the difficulties in garden development in this state was the lack of skilled gardeners. With its ideal climate, soil, and growing conditions generally, the possibilities for beautiful gardens are endless. People too, are showing an increasing interest in gardening, but the shortage of experienced gardeners makes it difficult to obtain satisfactory results. The gardeners here are usually British or Italian, and with the immigration restrictions, it seems unlikely their numbers will increase. In establishing the California School of Gardening one object is to train women that they may fill this need and to stimulate an interest in gardening. Our course is designed to give practical and theoretical instruction to women who either wish to take up gardening as a profession, or to equip themselves for the making and working of their home gardens. While the course will cover fruits and vegetables, particular stress will be laid on the ornamental and flower gardens, including special types of gardens and color schemes.

The fact that we are using the original garden that I had partly laid out, gives students the additional advantage of seeing the working of a private estate; while in developing it further they will gain experience in constructive work. The garden, although not fully laid out, has many charming features and brings to mind the old-world gardens of England. The estate is picturesquely situated, with a creek, in some parts eighty feet wide running through one side of the property. On the east of this creek we have high ground of adobe soil which as yet is little developed; on the west the ground is rather flat and of good rich alluvial soil.

When I came here there were already established a small apricot orchard, a pear orchard interplanted with raspberries, currants and bulbs, peaches, figs, apples, cherries, blackberries, loganberries. Some old sycamore, bay trees and shrubbery along the creek give us a little background. There was also a small much neglected Japanese garden which as yet we have left untouched. We have fitted the new garden in with what was already established and although this meant more work in the beginning, I think it has made a more interesting garden. Back of the Japanese garden, I have made a small iris garden, the iris edging a tiny pool, and flagged paths between the irregular beds.

The house itself has a very attractive patio with a circular pond in the center. This affords an opportunity for color schemes, and the grouping of pot-plants. From the patio-door we have made a wide path of bricks, bordered on either side by herbaceous plants arranged as mixed borders, leading to a small formal garden surrounded by a yew-hedge. We have made a small old-fashioned garden full of sweet-smelling flowers, a flagged rose-garden, an English wild garden of spring bulbs, and a blue garden. The vegetable garden will be large enough for students to learn how to grow a sufficient supply for home use and will teach a succession and rotation of crops. We are opening the school in January and are only able to take a limited number of students, which means that they will be able to receive individual attention. The school is non-resident and students will be able to board in the village which is five minutes distant from the school. The full course of instruction extends over two years, and includes practical work in the garden including green-house work, and lectures in all branches of gardening, soils and fertilizers, applied Botany, and business methods. With the increased demand for gardens, and the wave of enthusiasm for gardening, students with a two years' training should find increasing posts open for them; and with the knowledge and experience which they have gained, they will be able to raise the standard of gardens, and interest others in the love of gardening.

S. M. Wershow
LADIES TAILOR
Riding Habits, Coats and Suits
Furs Stored and Repaired
7066 Hollywood Boulevard
Hollywood
GRanit 4254

Please mention California Southland to its advertisers when you can.

R·K·EARLE
CONSULTING ENGINEER
LANDSCAPE ARCHITECTURE
PRIVATE ESTATES·GOLF COURSES
1308 PERSHING SQUARE BLDG.
LOS ANGELES
VANDIKE 3681

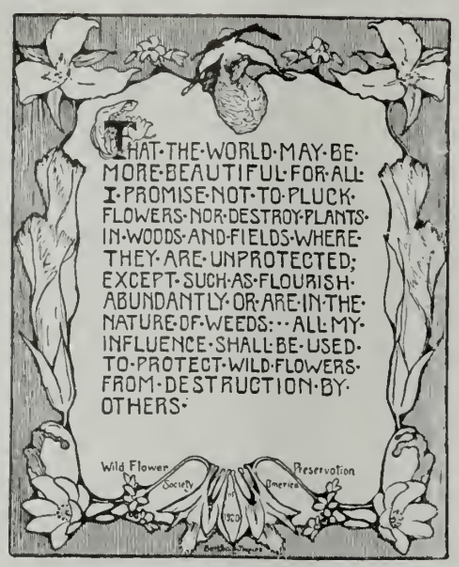
THE CALIFORNIA SCHOOL OF GARDENING FOR WOMEN

Offers a two years course in practical gardening, including the propagation and care of flowers, shrubs, fruit and vegetables, the laying out and management of small gardens as well as large estates. At Hayward, California (one hour by train or motor from San Francisco). Principal: Miss J. Walrond-Skinner, N.D., Hort., F.R.H.S. Tuition $250 per annum. Term begins Jan. 15, 1925. Only six students will be taken the first year. Write for information and make application now to the Principal, Hayward, California.

FLOWERS FOR THE HARDY BORDER

By ALLISON WOODMAN, 1147 Fresno Ave., Berkeley

THERE are many hundreds of flowering plants which may be employed successfully in the perennial or hardy border, all possessing some special merit. But there are a few perennials that should be included in every border because of certain outstanding qualities.



Chief among these is the Delphinium, or Perennial Larkspur, forming a splendid background with its tall spikes of blue and iridescent flowers and handsome foliage for flowers of lower stature. A fit complement to the Delphinium, and a flower, too, which harmonizes well with most other flowers, is the Columbine (Aquilegia), with long or short-spurred blooms, coming in shades of blue, white, yellow and red.

The old-fashioned Hollyhock fits into almost any type of garden. There are both single and double flowered strains of this flower. It is very effective as a background against walls of houses, along garages, walls, fences. The rust which forms on the leaves is a serious detriment, but a quick growth and spraying young plants with copper sulphate solution will partially control this pest.

Foxgloves, suitable for growing in half-shade, are very striking with their tall spikes covered with bell-like flowers in shades of rose, white, purple, yellow, and the broad, dark green leaves. They may form a background, or may act as accent points in flower borders.

Nearly everybody is fond of the old-fashioned Canterbury Bells which require considerable room for their proper development. It is not generally known that there are many other members of the same family, more perennial in habit. One of the best perennial species is the Peach Bell (Campanula persicifolia. Other good species include: C. rotundifolia, or the Hare Bell; the very tall Chimney Bellflower (C. pyramidalis; C. muralis, a dwarf form, suitable for an edging border.

A very unique and comparatively new flower to this country is Thalictrum dipterocarpum, erroneously called Meadow Rue. It has exquisite, fern-like foliage, and abundance of diminutive, violet-mauve flowers, arranged in loose racemes.

Groups of yellow flowers should be found in every kower border. The golden-yellow of the Coreopsis combines well with the rich blues of Delphinium, Larkspur and Cornflowers. The Gaillardia, coming in rich shades of red, yellow, brown, orange, crimson, is another garden favorite. Other yellow flowers, which require considerable room for their proper development, are the Cone Flower (Rudbeckia), Hardy Sunflower (Helianthus), and Golden Rod (Solidago).

Perennial Phlox are very fine flowers for the permanent flower border, but losses are apt to occur if the ground is not kept thoroughly soaked in summer and a surface mulch of manure is not provided. It is not generally known that Peonies, such a great favorite in the East, will do quite well in California if given the proper treatment, and after they have become well-established.

Sweet William comes in a variety of rich shades of pink, maroon, red, white, crimson, and appears to advantage when planted in masses in the foreground. A very dependable flower for the hardy border is Pentstemon, blooming in California throughout most of the year. Improved forms of Scabiosa (Pin-Cushion) can be associated with Pentstemon.

The vast tribe of Michaelmas Daisies or Perennial Asters, coming in shades of blue, purple, mauve, pink, white, rose, lavender and violet should be employed. Anchusa italica, Dropmere Variety, is splendid for obtaining big, bold effects in shrubbery borders, and for planting in the background of large flower borders; the ultra-marine-colored flowers are very vivid and striking. Other effective blue flowers ,but of much lower stature, are several species of Speedwell (Herbaceous Veronica), and Scabiosa caucasica (Blue Bonnet.

For fall effects nothing can be excelled by the garden forms of Chrysanthemum. The more showy florist forms can be grown, but the Single, Pompom, Anemone, Spider, and Button forms are hardier, are more prolific in bloom, and last longer in the season. The secret of growing "Mums" is to give them abundance of water during the growing season, and a liberal dose of fertilizer, preferably manures, providing a mulch on top of the ground all summer. The flowers exhibit a rich array of yellows, browns, reds, purple, white, pinks, bronze.

White flowers are important sometimes in relieving too vivid masses of color and in separating groups of flowers which do not blend. Among these are the well-known Shasta Daisy, Achillea Ptarmica, The Pearl, the medium-sized Babys Breath (Gypsophila paniculata), White Pentstemon, and others.

Myron Hunt, Architect

The Pasadena Preventorium—H. O. Clarke, Contractor

By ETHEL A. FISHER

Another dream come true. After years of planning, after surmounting many obstacles, there stands on the eastern bank of the Arroyo, the beautiful new Pasadena Preventorium or Fresh Air School.

This humanitarian project was planned by the members of the Pasadena Tuberculosis Committee as an ideal way to prevent tuberculosis and other diseases to which the under-nourished child is so often a victim.

The funds for the building were obtained by the sale of Christmas Seals, supplemented by generous donations, and an ideal place is now provided where under-nourished children may be built up and given their rightful heritage of health.

The structure, of hollow concrete, is Spanish in design and is located on a beautiful four-acre tract which is to be laid out in garden plots and playgrounds for the children.

The building contains all the essential features necessary to provide an attractive home for these unfortunate tots, many of whom have lost father or mother from the great white plague in the east.

The rooms and dormitories have been furnished by generous friends and are gay with bright hangings and painted furniture. The living room is spacious and sunny and all that a living room should be. It has a big, deep fireplace, flanked by book-shelves, comfortable chairs and davenports, a radio and phonograph, individual toy compartments under the window seats, and out of the many windows an incomparable view of valley and hills.

Opposite the living room, across a wide hallway, is a sunny school room—which room has been equipped by the Board of Education. While this phase of the child's regime is necessarily secondary to his physical well-being, it is by no means neglected, for the school sessions are under the direction of a teacher from the public schools, who is experienced in this type of work.

A rigid daily program is observed—no time is left for undirected energy. From the rising bell at seven to the bed-time story at six-thirty, every minute is wisely planned for: sufficient rest peroids between school sessions, play time, the teaching of proper health and food habits, all to the end that none of the strength and energy of the child shall be wasted, but be directed toward his normal development.

The present unit accommodates only boys, but the committee hopes in the near future to provide like quarters for girls.

While no limit has been set as to length of residence in the school and the immediate aim is the upbuilding of the under-nourished child, it is the hope of those in charge that a demonstration may be made to the parents or guardians of the children of the value of simple, wholesome daily living, and that the children in the school will learn so well these essentials that they will return to their homes and the community, convincing messengers of health.

THE ARCHITECTURAL CLUB OF LOS ANGELES

MONTHLY BULLETIN

OFFICERS

FOR 1925

J. E. Garnsey, President
Roy H. Kelley, Vice-President
H. O. Sexsmith, Secretary

DIRECTORS

Paul W. Penland, Treasurer
J. E. Stanton, Director
H. C. Chambers, Director

THE ATELIER

Eleven men are completing problems for the next rendu and all working diligently to arrive on time. Cries for help are going out, but unfortunately it will be too late by the time we are off the press.

Fitch Haskell and Jess Stanton are acting as critics and have been a great inspiration to the men.

Four are completing the Class "B" project, the subject of which is "An Iron Worker's Establishment." Six men are working on the analytique and one will complete the Class "A" problem.

All drawings are due on Saturday, January 10.

LEE FULLER

The charming house shown on this page was designed by our genial Lee Fuller. Each month the Southland has offered to publish for us the work of a club member. The work of Lee Fuller is the first of the series. Will those who know of beautifully designed work which has come from the hands of our younger men get in touch with the club secretary so that he may reach the designer? We regard this feature of the club page as not only a means of publicity for good architecture, but another opportunity for us to get better acquainted with each other.

Let us say that this doesn't begin to tap the resources of our friend Lee. We find a new and beautiful drawing from his hand every time we visit him at the Allied Drafting Room. At our last visit he was busily designing some decorations for a publication to be issued soon by the Allied Architects. He has the right idea for success as a designer, that is, draw, draw, and draw some more.

DECEMBER MEETING

The first meeting of the Architectural Club to be held under the guidance of our new president, Julian Garnsey, took place in the Assembly Room of the Allied Architects' quarters at 420 South Spring Street. It was the first to be held at this location and those present declared it an admirable place for club assemblies. The meeting was a small one, there being only about twenty-five or thirty present. Sumner Spaulding was the speaker, or it might better be said, he led the discussion. He introduced the evening's subject with a most absorbing talk on the relation of architecture to the life of man. His announced subject was the "Philosophy of Architecture," but that was scarcely comprehensive enough. The discussion soon lead the group through some fields seldom explored by the average architect and it was refreshing indeed to have our brains reset and readjusted like run down clocks by having them turned loose in paths long since overgrown with the brambles of disuse. Astronomy was the key to this region and after floundering around mentally, trying to comprehend the extensiveness of space and the relative size of planets and their distances from us, our own ego had sufficiently approximated negative infinity for the safety of our clients for another year.

We are glad that Sumner Spaulding was wise enough not to give us a menu of architecture as our first meal under the new regime. We need to be jarred loose from our smug self-sufficiency at times and be made to see that we are only one minute step in a great eternal scheme of progress.

Let's have more of the same. H. O. S.

MONTHLY EXHIBITIONS

Many of the club members have just sent out to their friends, especially designed Christmas cards. It has occurred to the slavey who writes this page that a little informal exhibition of these cards would be an interesting thing to look at. If the club members think so, too, we will take the means to see it through. If you have designed a Christmas card, mail a copy of it to the Secretary of the Club, 415 Bank of Italy Building, care of Witmer and Watson. If you have one of more ancient vintage than 1924, send it along, too. Get them in before next club meeting and we will see that they are placed on exhibition at the meeting.

The Allied Architects have provided excellent meeting place for us with ample wall space for hanging drawings and sketches. We are wondering if a small exhibition of the work of club members could not be brought together each month for our enjoyment. We know of several of our men who have some splendid things stored away in dusty portfolios where they are doing no one any good. Then, too, there are the returned drawings of the Atelier. Except the patrons and the men working in the Atelier, the club knows nothing of the work this group is doing. An exhibition of Atelier work would certainly add much to the enjoyment of a club meeting.

It seems that one of our sorest needs as an organization is a more intimate personal contact with each other. The informal exhibition we have in mind would help greatly to provide such contact. The new secretary of the club has agreed to attempt to provide such an exhibit for the February meeting. It is hoped that the Christmas card fans will respond in sufficient numbers to give us something to look at at the January meeting.

There should be a paragraph appearing right here which gives an account of the activities of the Atelier. The Massier has been urged most fervently "to come through" with some news, but he claims that he is much better with a ruling pen than a Spencerian, so we are using this mild form of blackmail to try to pry something loose from him for the next bulletin. Will some of you men in the Atelier please work on him, too.

THIS residence for Mr. and Mrs. G. L. Sterling of Beverly Hills was designed by Lee F. Fuller in the offices of Marshall P. Wilkinson. Built of frame and stucco construction during 1922 at a cost of about $27,000, it has a U-shapel plan, one story ,on a lot approximately 120 by 200 feet, thus allowing for a beautiful garden development in the rear. On the front exposure there is the master's suite, entry hall, living and dining room. The north wing contains the kitchen aand service quarters, while the south wing has three bedrooms and two baths, as well as ample dressing closet accommodations.

Directly behind the living room is a delightful sun room with large French doors opening onto the garden.

The exterior is cement gun-textured finished plaster, a buff color, with heavy shingle roof laid irregularly and stained a warm brown. Casement type windows, with leaded glass, are the keynote of the fenestration.

The interiors are quite simple in finish with textured walls, heavy oak floors, and a unique hand-made tile mantel.

The owner has furnished the house in excellent taste and is to be given great credit for his far-sightedness in allowing the architect so much freedom in designing.

THE PIERPONT MORGAN CARPET

By FRANK L. LOFTUS

THIS Imperial antique Chinese carpet has a most interesting history. It was shown at the Universal Exhibition in Paris during the year 1878, and was there purchased by Mr. Elbridge Torrey of Messrs. Torrey Bright & Capen, Boston, Mass. Immediately thercafter it was sold by Mr. Torrey to the late Oliver Ames, ex-governor of Massachusetts.

Mr. Keshishyan, in later years, in business in New York, induced Mr. J. Pierpont Morgan, the elder, to purchase this remarkable carpet, the most valuable Chinese carpet in existence. With Mr. Morgans knowledge and appreciation of antique art, he realized that such a rare specimen properly belonged to the nation and graciously presented it to the Metropolitan Museum of New York City.

The carpet measures 24 feet in height and 28 feet in width. It has a glowing golden yellow ground, the other harmonious shades being deep royal blue, old ivory and touches of sage green and turquoise blue. A number of most interesting Imperial Chinese designs are incorporated in the field; viz., the five-claw dragon guarding the Chin or sacred pearl-emblem of purity. The base of the carpet shows the waves and sacred mountains. The carpet is perfectly balanced throughout with Chinese cloud band forms. The simple Chinese fret design in the border frames the carpet perfectly.

Every student of Oriental art owes to Mr. Keshishyan a large measure of gratitude for his help in having this remarkable specimen placed where all may enjoy it.

The Imperial Antique Chinese Carpet Sold by John Keshishyan to Mr. Pierpont Morgan, the Elder

A CLEARING HOUSE FOR CRAFTS

(Continued from Page 10)

in lingerie; Countess Caracciolo presented exquisite hand-made creations to tempt us.

"One of our consignors gave the public a treat in musical toys—dolls and animals played you a tune. 'Movie Doll Land' was made possible by our friends who always help with their goodness to us, our motion picture stars' dolls were donated by them and dressed in their favorite role. This feature was to help swell the funds for our 'Tiny Jim,' you remember that it is our dream to raise enough money to endow a free bed in some Los Angeles hospital for a child.

"I never saw lovelier examples of flowsr arrangements from our leading flower shops, all gold seal holders—Miss Eleanor Cole and Miss Cornelia McLaughlin exhibited their exquisite scarfs and dress patterns in new designs and weer gold seal carriers.

"James Howard McCarthy, a junior friend of the Assistance League, the Chairman wishes him to know how much his devotion means to our cause, he always has some service to render us, this year he made and sold Christmas boxes; we wish more of our young friends would catch this spirit, for we must look to them to profit by our mistakes and lead the League on to future victories.

"I want to call attention to our good friends, the Florine Shop of Pasadena. The Contest Chairman wishes to emphasize that this exhibit is an example of what her contention has been placed on, 100 per cent; it shows that average is not too high a standard, that you can reach it if you will, is a fact; these women did it. It took hard work, untiring patience and courtesy, long study for results to develop, finding the needs of their public and having it to deliver; but they marched on bravely and registered success. The same road is open to all.

"Mrs. Daniel J. Sully, General Chairman; Mrs. Richard Waldron, Vice-Chairman; Mrs. E. Avery McCarthy, Chairman of Entertainment; Mrs. Hancock Banning, Mrs. James Reed, Mrs. E. Avery McCarthy, Chairmen of Publicity; Mrs. William G. McAdoo, Mrs. Erwin P. Werner, Chairmen of Arrangements of Ballroom; Mrs. Isaac Hampshur-Jones, Chairman of Refreshments; Mrs. Charles Jeffras, Mrs. Thomas Buchanan, Chairmen of Music; Miss E. H. Terrill, Chairman of Arrangement of Exhibition; Miss Eleanor Cole, Miss Cornelia McLaughlin, Chairmen of Decorations; Mrs. J. Warren Tatum, Chairman of Finances; Mrs. Frederic W. Kimble, Chairman of Women's Exchange Exhibit; Mrs. J. W. Montgomery, Chairman of Food Sales; Mrs. John Dunlop, Mrs. Robert L. Rohne, Mrs. Tilden, Chairmen of Package Department.

"Artists who entertained during the show were Mr. Ordonez, Mr. Karrow and Mlle. Eada Guerin.

"The Alexandria Hotel! Words fail to express all we could say of their devotion to us—the gift of ballroom December 4th and 5th, their entire staff at hand both days with every service for our comfort; we are most fortunate in our friends, and I mean the word friends.

"All the papers in Los Angeles worked for us and with us, gave us their best, sent us from their staff their best representatives, not once but all through our hard working weeks. God bless them! The Pacific Electric lines carried us a month in their time table and for a week our banners on different car lines. The Brunswick Drug Company loaned us showcases that were of great value in safeguarding our materials. Hollywood Storage packed and moved us to and from, our thanks to them for their courtesy and splendid staff of men sent, so helpful and careful.

"A wonderful offer came to us that took great courage to fail to accept, such generosity was from Mr. Robert Rohne, manager Reo Car Company, Seventh Street, offering us their show rooms free for a week, but our workers weer too worn out, and to ask more of their devotion was not just; so we had to decline.

"Some days it took more courage than we could seem to master to go on. My faithful Vice-Chairman, Mrs. Waldron, never missed a day, I only wish the Chairman might place a gold seal on this service, and the rest of my faithful day by day committee. The house and office staff never flinched and I stood faithfully by their guns, and it was very hard for them, as I had to ask so much of their time. I feel I cannot say too much for the assistance given me by Mrs. Paine, the League's resident Secretary; her interest in each new entry of the work, received prompt attention, without her help the system which I wished carried out would never have registered and it was a vital issue.

"I am keeping my last word for our President, officers of the Board, members of the Executive Board and Directors; where am I to find words to express all my heart would have me utter? Their faith in me gave me strength to try and give my best. I pray the New Year is to be rich in blessings to you all, and the greatest ambitions of our work realized, that each department in our present organization and the new added strength so soon to open a new field in our work, shall be rich in service, and God's blessing be with you all.

"Faithfully,

"EMA FRANCIS SULLY."

Hotel Raymond
and
Golf Course

Season: Dec. 27th to Late April

The only hotel in Pasadena having a golf course on its immediate property

WALTER RAYMOND
Proprietor

THE GREENROOM OF THE NEW LOBERO THEATRE, SANTA BARBARA.

LOBERO THEATRE—Continued

visible from all over the valley. George Washington Smith was the architect. It is practically fireproof, and seats without a balcony 630 persons. The walls of the auditorium are tinted a warm buff, the ceiling richly decorated in strong color in the Spanish style, reds, greens and gold. The stage is 75 feet long by 35 deep and 60 high. Its lighting equipment and scenic apparatus are of the latest design, equal to the most elaborate productions. There are ample dressing room accommodations and a pretty greenroom where the actors can gather.

At the entrance are offices, for Miss Nina Moise, the director of the players, for the Community Arts Association, and for the Manager of the theatre.

The Lobero is not a branch of the Community Arts Association, but is owned and controlled by the stockholders of the Lobero Theatre Company. It is a real community institution, the money for which, over $200,000, has been raised by donations and subscriptions to stock by a large number of persons. Many friends have presented their shares to the Community Arts Association thus making it the largest stockholder.

The theatre is used not only by the Community Arts Players for their monthly productions, but is also used by the Woman's Club for weekly meetings, and for concerts and entertainments by other groups. It is altogether an institution of which Santa Barbara has reason to be proud.

THE BILTMORE SALON
LOS ANGELES BILTMORE
PAINTINGS ETCHINGS BRONZES

Angelus Lighting Fixture Co., Inc.
Designers and Craftsmen of
Lighting Fixtures, Lamps, Fire Tools, Console-Tables and Mirrors
746 So. Figueroa St., Los Angeles
VAndike 2296

OAK
BEECH
—
Furnished Scraped

H. G. BENNETT
HARDWOOD FLOORS EXCLUSIVELY
524-26 SO. RAYMOND AVE,
COLO. 178 - PASADENA, CALIF.
Estimates Cheerfully Given
Old Floors Resanded and Polished

MAPLE
BIRCH
—
Laid Finished

Brock and Company

"Five Floors of Service"

Brock and Company Building, occupied exclusively by this firm.

SOCIAL life was never more brilliant, varied and sumptuous than it is today. That very fact sets a standard for your jewelry.

The gems must be of the finest quality in mountings that are distinctive and exclusive, as well as artistic.

For jewelry of this character, in extensive and carefully selected assortments, Brock and Company holds a widespread reputation.

Visitors Welcome

Brock and Company
In consolidation with
S. Nordlinger & Sons
515 West Seventh Street
~ Between Olive and Grand ~
LOS ANGELES

The House of Perfect Diamonds

ASSISTANCE LEAGUE OF SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

MONTHLY BULLETIN

"All for Service—And Service for All

OFFICERS:

MRS. HANCOCK BANNING, President
MRS. EDWARDS LAUGHLIN, First Vice President
MRS. WILLIAM GIBBS MCADOO, See. Vice-Pres.
MRS. ERWIN P. WERNER, Third Vice-President
MRS. E. AVERY MCCARTHY, Fourth Viee-Pres.
MRS. JAMES REED, Seeretary
MRS. J. WARREN TATUM, Treas.
MR. D. C. MACWATTERS, Auditor

OUR year of work is drawing to its close and being happily celebrated by the advent of this much loved, longed for child of the Assistance League, the Day Nursery of Hollywood. Those of us whose arms are empty can again have the joy of mothering a little brood, and find the road to laughter land in the association with these little messengers from heaven, the children of our nursery.

A little of the background of this our newest child will necessitate a bit of repetition on my part, for which please forgive me. I have mentioned the Assistance League as mother of this extremely healthy and enterprising child. I must tell of the grandfather, the old Assistance League which eame into being at the time of the San Francisco earthquake. Mrs. Walter Newhall, now Mrs. Harlow, assisted me in organizing the first Assistance League, and accomplished a splendid work during the year of her presidency. Other members of this group were Mrs. Randolph Huntington Minor, who succeeded her as president and did most efficient work during her regime. She was assisted by Mrs. George J. Denis, Mrs. LeMoyne Wills, Mrs. Mary Longstreet, Mrs. James C. Drake, Mrs. Frank Hicks, Mrs. Dean Mason, Mrs. Granville McGowan, Mrs. William Dunn and many others. They did a splendid work in Los Angeles for some seven years.

Now, I must speak of the grandfather, the Red Cross Shop which did its bit during the stress of the great World War and by its labors accumulated some $200,000 which was used by our local chapter in alleviating the distress among our returned War Veterans and their families. Many of these women with whom I had the pleasure of being associated are continuing in this present work of ours, and together with those who have since joined us, they comprise what I consider one of the finest groups of women with whom I have had the privilege of being associated.

It is my earnest prayer that this golden chain, reaching back into the past, will be carried on by our children and children's children that they, too, may find the joy "that passeth understanding" in disinterested service, and in the realization that in giving they receive far more than they can ever give. "What I saved I lost; what I spent I had; what I gave I have." When the fact comes home to us of the tremendous responsibility that every human being bears to the whole, we realize that nothing can happen anywhere without sending repercussions around the globe. Then it is that our little world beeomes illumined and we know "our little world" is, after all, the big world, and beyond the little struggle of today, lies the larger struggle of the centuries.

In founding the Assistance League our feeling has ever been that it would serve as a temple of service where the talents of every human being wishing to serve could be dedicated to the service of the many. Our motto, "All for service and service for all," we hope to make a reality. There is no refuge from suffering and pain like giving oneself in toil and service for the benefit of our little world. Those who have suffered know this truth. This material world today needs more than ever before workers in our Father's Vineyard.

How happy we are to announce that our Day Nursery just next door stands ready for occupancy and that thirty children are booked for entranee after the first. As I stated before this, I am a firm believer in fairies and magicians. It was a big-hearted magician who came riding to us on a magical carpet, who heard our whispered dream, and assured us that this dream would become a reality. Mr. Raphael Herman, this big-hearted philanthropist, who has been such a tremendous factor in all upbuilding and forward movements toward world betterment, and who before coming here gave so generously to the Children's Clinics of Detroit, Michigan, gave the Assistance League the initial payment of $5000 toward the purchase of the adjoining property. Mrs. E. P. Werner and her efficient committee have accomplished a brilliant piece of work in the raising of funds to complete the payment necessary for the opening and conducting the affairs of the nursery. Then the Community Chest made it possible for us to operate by providing us with the necessary amount to pay for the running expenses. God bless them all! Mr. Herman, Mrs. Werner, the Committee and the Community Chest.

The annual Christmas tree and dinner for some one hundred and forty little children taken from the tenement district of our big city, was given on Christmas eve, Mr. Herman, as usual, acting as the good Santa Claus in providing this bounteous feast for these little ones. The League and their friends furnished the toys and Christmas tree. Under the efficient management of Mrs. R. D. Shepperd, who was chairman of the day, the whole affair proved a huge sueeess.

PHOTOGRAPH OF THE STAR'S DOLLS BY M. CRAIG

On January 20 we are to have our yearly election of offieers and owing to the fact that the activities of the League are growing so materially in all its branches, workers are greatly needed. We are asking each member of the board to give us more of her time and interest in the coming year. Heretofore this arduous work of conducting our League's activities has fallen on the shoulders of a few, who have accomplished a superhuman task. It will not be humanly possible for this small group to continue carrying this great work, and it is vitally neeessary to distribute the work more generally with the members of our board. Dear Fellow Board Member, we need you, if not your actual personal service, which some are not in a position to give, at least your interest and co-operation. The lack of this interest in many of our board members has made our work particularly arduous.

Just a little thought on your part, and understanding of what we are trying to aecomplish, would do so much toward furthering the interest of our big eause. For instance, your house, ranch, gardens, or the properties of your friends, listed with our Location Department, not only helps you in the realization of sharing your blessings with those less fortunate, but it will bring joy to those who dwell in the shadows and slums, in that they ean live in imagination and enjoy the beauties that you are so fortunate to be surrounded with, also by using your beautiful garden and home the gospel of the beauties of our Southland will travel to the far confines of the earth, and, most important, the money accruing, goes to alleviate the suffering and needy in your community. Then join the League and ask your friends to join, and become a part of our big work. We need your used garments, discarded articles of every description, anything and everything is needed in the Thrift Shop. Our chairman of the Veterans' Helping Hand is in great need of men's clothes to be given to our ex-soldier boys—those boys who in 1917 were called: "Our gallant young defenders of Democracy. In 1918 our heroes of the Marne and Argonne. In 1919 our brave and vietorious lads. In 1920 veterans and ex-service men. In 1925 the returned soldier element."

They are still with us, and will continue to be one of our problems through this generation. The old suits you gave away to the well paid elevator man in your building, or chauffeur, to be sold usually to the second-hand dealers for a pittance, might be the means of seeuring a position for some of these men, who have laid down their lives for you In defending your country in our recent World War.

The little old gentlewoman who has come so many times in the late evening, so that no one could observe her, searching for wearing apparel in order that she may secure a position as an extra in a local Film Company in Hollywood, has had to go away many times empty-handed. We have made inquiries regarding her, and have found that she comes of old Colonial stock, the purest blood flows in her poor old veins, that she was raised in luxury and Victorian helplessness, as far as earning her living goes. Life's merciless waters have swept from her her family, her friends, her all. She has come from afar, having had just enough to pay her way to Hollywood, where young and old come in such hordes, dreaming that it is there they will find the pot of gold. Like the many others, she finds the pot of gold non-existent. She has been forced to part with her belongings in order to pay her room rent, and meagre living, and now a position is offered should she possess certain clothes required in the picture. I know that you, like all of us, have people to give your clothes to, but spare from your bounty a few for the Thrift Shop, so that the many who come may not go away empty-handed. This old gentlewoman is only one of many who eome from every strata of life. They come from every part of the world. This is not a local problem. Hollywood belongs, to Pasadena, to Los Angeles, to Long Beach, and to the world, and all should feel it is their problem. I ask just the thought and time to fetch your bundle to the Assistance League. If you cannot send your bundle, call Hempstead 5133, and we will call for it. What you do not need, others need sorely —remember this.

Then there is our Woman's Exchange, under Mr. Kimble's experienced management, with its many articles of exquisite beauty. Children's clothing, negligees, embroidery of all kinds, laces, hand-wrought silver, pictures, toys and dolls. These articles are made by worthy men and women, help them to become self-supporting by making your purchases at the Community House. Come and see for yourself, and then tell others of the attractions of our little gift shop. This is an opportunity to purchase your gifts, wedding presents, etc., at reasonable prices and at the same time do mueh good by extending us your patronage. The wan little woman bringing her family heirlooms to pay her sick mother's hospital bill, eagerly waiting a purchaser in order that she may meet her obligations, the articles themselves of rare beauty, which would be a joy to possess, and you may be assured that the purchase is twiee blessed—blessing both the purehaser, and the one who needs your aid.

HEWSON HAND CRAFT STUDIOS
Handwoven One Piece Dresses, Coats and Scarfs, Canadian and Candlewick Bedspreads
Dutch and East Indian Brass, Beads, Fine Pendants and Objects of Art in Great Variety
F. O. 6555 — 602 E. Colorado St. — Pasadena
DUnkirk 4909 — 2508½ W. 7th St. — Los Angeles

"Amymay"
For your home—Hangings, Curtains, and Lamp Shades specially designed. Pattern dyed luncheon sets that launder.
O'Dee Toys o' San Francisco
Special Hand Wrought Metal Work from Harry Dixon's Studio
527 California Terrace — Pasadena
Phone Colo. 3655

Hand-wrought Silver and Pewter by
PORTER BLANCHARD
Shown at
Arts & Crafts, 2508½ W. 7th St., L. A.
Hewson Studios, 602 E. Colorado, Pasadena
Assistance League, 5604 DeLongpre, Hollywood
The Attic, 4th at Wilshire, Santa Monica
Exceptional for Gifts

An Ideal School for Young Women
Cumnock School
COLLEGE WORK IN THE FOLLOWING COURSES:
Vocal Interpretation of Literature
Literary Appreciation — Story Telling Public Speaking — Journalism
Dramatics — Short-Story
Voice and Diction — Dancing
French — Psychology
Art and Art Appreciation
An accredited High School and Junior School under same management
HELEN A. BROOKS, Director
5353 West Third Street — Los Angeles
TELEPHONES
GRanit 3253 — GRanit 3353

GEORGE · D · MAIGHT
159 · NO · MEREDITH · AVE ·
PASADENA · CALIFORNIA
TELEPHONE F · O · 3133
ELY · CATHEDRAL
ARCHITECTURAL · PHOTOGRAPHS

TO THE NURSERY—OUR CAUSE

TO Thee, Our Cause Beloved
Thou splendid, masterful, great cause!
Oh, sweet, maternal thought
Unchanged by all ages, peoples, lands—
A Mother's love transcends all else beside.
Protecting Thee, eternal principle of power
We consecrate our effort.
Eternal miracle, through sacrifice, strife, everything—
Around the theme of Mother Love, the World revolves.
In all the turbid, restless sway of life
Surviving all, surmounting all, stands Mother Love triumphant;
To Thee Our Cause,
We dedicate this Home,
Which mothers MOTHER LOVE.

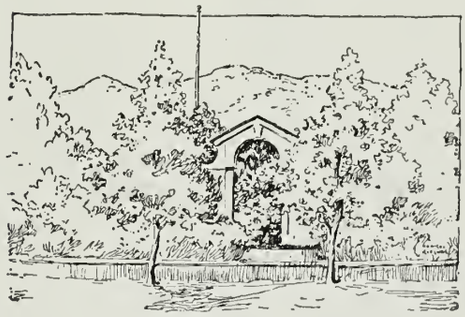
—INEZ HOWARD,
(Mrs. Oscar R. Howard)

MRS. SAUL MORRIS, HEAD OF THE SHUT-INS DEPARTMENT, AND SOME HAND-MADE RUGS.

The dainty, hand-made maid's aprons, made by a little crippled Shut-In, who so sorely needs the wherewithal to meet her meager wants. Why not, when replenishing your maid's aprons, remember the League and make your purchases here.

Send us books for our Circulating Library. Come to the Community House and entertain your friends in the Studio Tea Room. Volunteer your services as a community worker or saleswoman for the Exchange or Thrift Shop. Enroll in the sewing units or start a home sewing unit to sew for the day nursery or for the benefit of the Tiny Tim fund. The Tiny Tim Endowment Fund is for the establishment of a child's bed in perpetuity in a Los Angeles Hospital. Send us your old gold and silver for the Tiny Tim melting pot.

Come and join our art units under the direction of Miss Leta Horlocker, who gives her services on Friday afternoons (1 to 5 p. m.) each week. This department has made a number of unusually beautiful articles, which are sold in the exchange for the purpose of accumulating funds to buy materials for the disabled and shut-ins. There is no expense attached to joing this class, but it is an opportunity to receive lessons from one of the best artists in the city.



Remember, dear friends, that "happiness pursued is seldom realized, as it is only in the giving of ourselves that we find peace."

We pass through this world but once. Any kindness or service we can render, let us do it now; we shall not pass this way again."

T. W. Mather Co. Inc.
PASADENA, CAL.
Dry Goods
Women's & Children's Wearing Apparel
Colorado Street at Marengo

Kinsey & Elliott
PLATINUM JEWELERS
Diamonds and Precious Stones
Hamilton Watches
Remount Her Diamonds in Platinum
Jewelry Manufacturing — 303-4 Jewelers Bldg.
Diamond Setting — 747 So. Hill St.
Phone VAndike 1604

MRS. CHARLES C. BELL
Orchard Homes and Villas
Mountainside Acreage
Rentals Near Good Board
SARATOGA - - CALIFORNIA

HILLER'S STUDIO
OFFICIAL PHOTOGRAPHER FOR CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND
49 EAST COLORADO STREET
PASADENA, CALIFORNIA
ALBERT HILLER — Phone, Fair Oaks 155

French and Italian Arts
Imported by
ELEANOR AND HOLLINGSWORTH BEACH
Florentine Christmas Cards — Antiques
Galenga Gowns — Potteries
Embroidered Linens — Old Prints
French Faience — Italian Majolicas
Desk Sets in Florentine Tooled Leather
630 E. Colorado Street, Pasadena, California
Fair Oaks 6028

THIS boat was built by a fifteen year old boy with only saw, knife, small plane and gimlet for tools.

The rigging is made from small scrap parts of aluminum and brass. The pullies are buttons. The figurehead and rampant lion on stern are made of plasticine. The bottle lantern on stern is made from an acorn cup, some wire mesh and the transparent window of an envelope.

The swivel gun and saluting gun on quarter-deck are modeled from plasticine. The other guns are whittled from wood.

GERTRUDE C. MAYNARD, President

THE SOROPTIMIST CLUB OF LOS ANGELES

By BERTHA M. JUST, Chairman, Publicity Committee

THE first Soroptimist Club in the United States began its existence in Oakland, California, a little over three years ago with a membership of 80. About five months later a second club was started in San Francisco with a membership of 107, and within another five months The Soroptimist Club of Los Angeles was organized with the largest charter membership of any previous club, having 113 members.

The clubs were christened "Soroptimist," meaning "Sister Optimists," by Stuart Morrow, who organized the Rotary Club in the British Isles and it was Mr. Morrow who helped to launch these clubs for business women on the business world. The fame of these clubs has spread so far that Mr. Morrow was invited to organize a Soroptimist Club in London and now a movement is on to form clubs in all the leading cities. It seems wonderful to think that the idea for all these clubs originated in California a little over three years ago.

At the present time the Soroptimist Club of Los Angeles has a membership of nearly 150. These members are composed of business and professional women who have attained success in their particular work, for only women who own their own business or act as an executive of some business firm are eligible to membership, besides only one classification for any line of business or profession is allowed in the club. While these requirements and rules may restrict the club membership, they provide a wide range for ideas and talent, which is displayed every Tuesday noon at the Biltmore Hotel when some member provides a program and entertains in her own individual way. Some of the programs are most original and unique, as our guests will tell you and guests are permitted at any meeting except a business one.

One remarkable thing about the club is that nearly every member serves the club in some capacity or other. If they are not directors or officers they are appointed to serve on committees; they are made to feel it is their club and also their duty to help carry on the purposes of the club, which supports all worthy patriotic, civil, moral and social movements.

The first president was Oda Faulconer, a prominent attorney and clubwoman. She is a woman of striking personality with a background of successful years in her profession, but she still remains unassuming and gracious in her manner and retains the affection of all the club. Her popularity was evidenced by the warm greetings she received upon her return rfom London, where she went last July to attend the convention of the American Bar Association.

The second president was Mrs. Harry G. Henley, known to her club as Mary Jean Henley. She is a member of the Harry G. Henley Company, Realtors. Mrs. Henley was county superintendent of schools in Missouri for six years, also vice-president of the State Teachers' Association. She is also a Past Grand Matron and Past Grand Secretary of the Order of the Eastern Star. She is a woman of rare wit and charm with a genius for making friends, and winning their loyalty.

The third and present president is Gertrude C. Maynard, part owner of one of the largest book stores in the city. She acts as vice-president and treasurer of her company. Mrs. Maynard was almost unanimously chosen president last fall. She is a native daughter of California. A slender little woman with a winning personality, she has a wonderful capacity for accomplishing things. The members of the club are devoted to her and feel confident their club will have wonderful success under her leadership.

MOTION PICTURES CONTINUED FROM PAGE 16

from a distant corner of the stage. We start off in that direction, weaving our way in and out among the sets, tripping over stage braces and electric cables, groping our way through dark passages only to step out into a glare equally blinding. We find it hard to pass by so many interesting sets. Instead of the filmsy scenery of the theater, you find hard wood paneling, plaster, cement, heavy beams, etc. Everything seems so solid and practical that you catch yourself thinking how well you would like to live in one of these exquisitely furnished dream rooms.

It seems almost like turning the pages of an album of views from many lands, as we pass along, pausing for a second in front of a bazaar in Algiers, while only a few steps away is an exact replica of a gambling palace at Monte Carlo. On we go past beautiful drawing rooms, exotic boudoirs, greasy kitchens, bar rooms, attics filled with cobwebs and dusty furniture, a freight car on a short section of practical track, etc., etc.

The roaring grows louder as we approach; suddenly a most interesting scene greets our eyes. The roaring was not a "movie lion" or a director in a fit of temper (temperament), as we expected, but two large wind machines running at full speed. These wind machines are responsible for those terrifying storm scenes you have so often seen on the screen. They consist of a very large aeroplane propeller operated by a high speed gasoline motor. Both motor and propeller are surrounded by guard rails to prevent accidents.

The set is a log cabin partly buried in deep snow (salt) drifts; in the background a dark forest of pines heavily laden with snow. The blizzard continues to rage, snow and sleet furiously lashing at the cabin. The property man "props" from his scaffold over the wind machine, releases more snow (small flakes of asbestos), which is picked up by the big propeller below and hurled into the scene. Suddenly a dim figure on snow shoes staggers from the trees in the background and fights his way to the door of the cabin. He throws his weight against the door; it is locked. He pounds furiously upon it, then collapses in a lifeless heap, the snow drifting over his body.

Once again we hear that shrill whistle, the wind machines are shut off, the lights go out (with the exception of one or two working lights) and the lifeless form in the snow drift springs to his feet, whips off his heavy fur coat and cap, wipes the perspiration from his face and rushes outside the stage to cool off. The lights are then turned on again for a moment to photograph the scene number, which is chalked on a slate and held up in front of the camera by the assistant cameraman. At the end of each scene the numbered slate is photographed. These numbers correspond with the scene numbers in the story continuity, and are very necessary both to the laboratory and film cutters, as it would be practitcally impossible to assemble a picture without them.

Every scene is photographed by two cameras, thus giving the producer two negatives, one for America and the other for Europe.

We will now leave the great stage and step out into some California sunshine, where we can join the actor from the snow scene in a few deep breaths of fresh ozone.

In the February number of California Southland we will visit the film laboratory and cutting rooms.

TOURNAMENT OF ROSES

By Mary Beaton

The spectacle of the Tournament of Roses parade this year was a fitting commemoration of the anniversary of Pasadena's Jubilee year, which is in order to celebrate her half century birthday. The streets were ablaze with many colorful and striking decorations.

The cream of Southland's cities paid homage at Pasadena's feast of flowers. Numerous bands sounded martial airs and gay melodies making a fit accompaniment for the many noted entries. The American Legion played a prominent part in the success of the pageant. Their mass of regiment colors was the beauty spot of the parade. Masses of roses, poinsettias, marigolds, carnations, and numerous other flowers were used. Feathery Scotch heather was made into a background for many of the floats. The keen inter-community rivalry as well as inter-sectional rivalry for the most striking floats, caused the pageant to be the achievement of rare beauty it was.

The second event of New Year's day that was of national interest was the great East-West football game. The two representative teams met in the Tournament of Roses bowl. The stadium was alive with color and the spectators formed a solid mass, making it impossible to see a vacant seat. The crowd was estimated at sixty thousand persons.

It seemed as if from the very first luck was against Stanford, for Notre Dame had all the breaks of which she never failed to take advantage. The statistics of the game showed that Stanford far outplayed Notre Dame, making more yardage, completing more forward passes and in every way was superior, except punting, and holding yards gained. Captain Jim Lawson played a remarkable game of football, seconded perhaps only by Ernie Nevers, next year captain-elect of the fighting Stanford aggregation.

The game was certainly a revelation to football fans that such plays could be made. Notre Dame has a team of which she can well be proud. The team has been named the "perfect football team." Notre Dame's "Four Horsemen."

Stanford's rooting section was marvelous, and added a great deal of color to the scene. It was a great game, great spirit, a great crowd, and a score of Notre Dame 27—Stanford 10.

THE PASADENA LECTURE COURSE 1925

THE Pasadena Lecture Course on Current Topics given for the past five seasons will be continued during that of 1925. The lectures will be held at the California Institute of Technology in Culbertson Hall, corner of Wilson Avenue and California Street, on Tuesdays at 4:00 p. m. (Note the advance in time.) The object of the lectures will remain the same, to encourage the intelligent discussion of puhlic affairs.

Arrangements, which are necessarily subject to change, have been made as follows:

January 6—Dr. Robert A. Millikan, California Institute of Technology—"The Astronomy of the Atom."

January 13—William Morris Davis, Professor of Geology, Emeritus, Harvard—"The Colorado Canyon and Fundamentalism." (Illustrated).

January 20—Joseph K. Hart, Editor of "The Survey"—"The Escape From Mediaevalism in Education."

January 27—Alexander Meiklejohn, Former President of Amherst—"Thinking in a Democracy."

February 3—Charles Breasted—"Tut-Ankh-Amen." (Illustrated).

February 10—Sarah Wambaugh, Formerly of the Secretariat of the League of Nations—"The League of Nations at Work."

February 17—Dr. James A. B. Scherer, Former President of California Institute of Technology—"China Today."

March 3—John Collier—"Our Oldest and Youngest Civilizations."

March 12, Thursday Evening, at 8:15—Lothrop Stoddard, Author and Traveler—"The New World of Islam."

March 17—Dr. Alexander Kaun, University of California—"Russia in the Crucible."

March 24—E. Douglas Adams, Stanford University—(Subject to be announced).

March 31—Dr. Maurice Parmelee, Fellow of the American Association for the Advancement of Science—"The Abolition of Poverty."

Additional lectures may be announced.

Under the auspices of:

Mr. and Mrs. Frank Gates Allen, Mrs. Harold O. Ayer, Mr. and Mrs. Edward C. Barrett, Mr. and Mrs. James R. Brehm, Mr. and Mrs. Frank F. Carpenter, Mrs. M. Ringen Drummond, Mr. Arthur Fleming, Mr. and Mrs. Tod Ford, Mr. and Mrs. Stanton W. Forsman, Dr. and Mrs. George E. Hale, Mr. and Mrs. A. Stevens Halsted, Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Hixon, Mr. and Mrs. William K. Jewett, Rt. Rev. and Mrs. Joseph H. Johnson, Mr. and Mrs. John McWilliams, Jr., Dr. and Mrs. James McBride, Miss Mary B. McDougall, Mrs. A. Moss Merwin, Dr. and Mrs. Robert A. Millikan, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Pitcairn, Mr. and Mrs. Henry M. Robinson, Mr. and Mrs. George D. Rumsey, Mr. and Mrs. Francis Stevens, Mr. and Mrs. Frank H. Sellers, Mrs. Katherine Watson.

Executive Committee—Mrs. Harold O. Ayer, Mrs. Frank F. Carpenter, Miss Teresa Cloud, Mrs. George E. Hale, Miss Mary B. McDougall, Mrs. Robert Pitcairn. Treasurer, Mr. Frank F. Carpenter, 310 Slavin Building.

Course tickets, $10; single tickets, $1. No war tax.

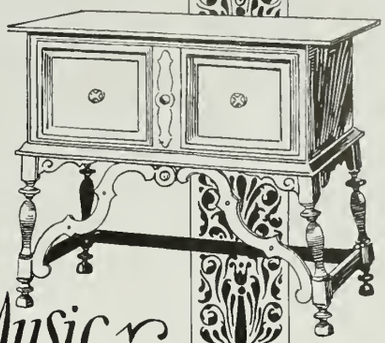
Those desiring course tickets are requested to send name and check to the Treasurer.

Checks should be made payable to Frank F. Carpenter, Treasurer.

THOMAS FRANKLIN POWER
ARCHITECT
AND
ARCHITECTURAL ENGINEER
DUNKIRK 1442
2615 W. SEVENTH ST.
LOS ANGELES

Everything Worthwhile in Radio
The Radio Store of Paul Franklin Johnson
Phone F.O. 3281
560-562 E. Colorado St.
PASADENA, CALIFORNIA

The Georgian Dining Room



The Serendipity Antique Shop

BRADFORD PERIN, Proprietor

26-30 South Los Robles Avenue Pasadena, California

Fair Oaks 7111

VICTROLAS — VICTOR RECORDS

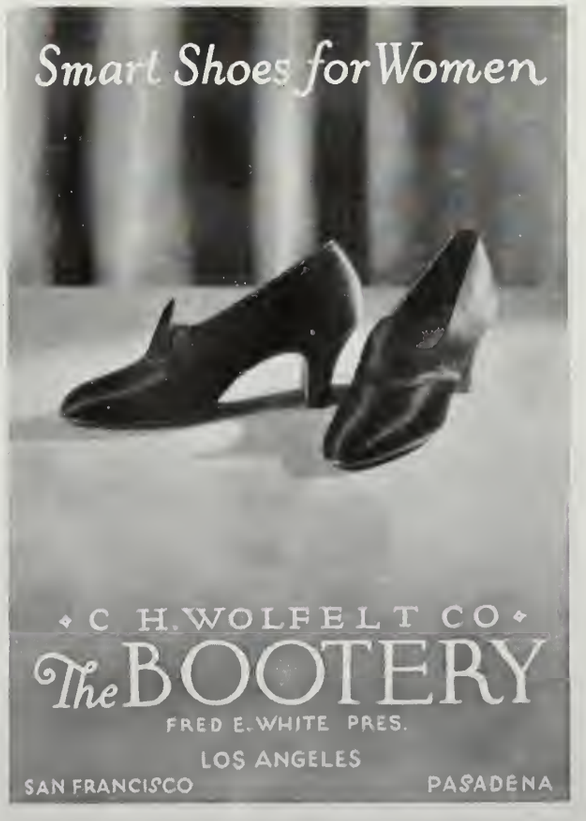
A Symphony of Art and Music

. . . With keen perception and appreciation of artistic excellence, especially of the finer qualities of art in human productions, The Music Lover's Shop has designed and imported many unusual Art Cabinets.

. . . These creations, enclosing phonographs and radio sets harmonize with the furnishings of the finest homes — they afford a symphony of Art and Music.

RICHARDSON'S INC
The Music Lovers' Shop
NOW ~ at 730 West Seventh St.

PIANOS WITH THE AMPICO



MILNOR INC. IMPORTERS

HEADQUARTERS
BILTMORE HOTEL
LOS ANGELES

ANY Milnor shop is an Ali Baba's cave of wonders. Here you will find in rich profusion the very finest Oriental wares—priced so low as to make them doubly alluring.

Beverly Hills Hotel
Hotel Virginia Hotel Maryland
Long Beach Pasadena
1206 Orange Ave. Hotel Moana
Coronado Honolulu, T. H.
Hotel Arlington
Santa Barbara

"SEASIDE GOLF"

A Magnificent 18-Hole Golf Links Dedicated to the Health and Happiness of the People of Palos Verdes

PUT yourself in this picture—on the most wonderful links in all California—each hazard a new experience—each hole a new delight. With the salty tang of the Pacific giving added zest to your game and more power to your shots—truly Golf at its best!

Palos Verdes, among all other courses in the West has been praised by leading critics as a "masterpiece of golf course construction." Nature designed it as a natural golf links and it has been developed according to the best traditions of the ancient game.

It all belongs to you—if you choose to live in the New City. So does the $60,000 Club House, the last word in golf club equipment and furnishings. So also do the many other exclusive features of community development in which this wonderful City by the Sea abounds.

Think well before you decide to live elsewhere. Palos Verdes is the finest piece of individualized development work of its kind in America. The nation's leading architects and planners, engineers and landscape designers have combined to build the ideal City Beautiful—and it is ready for you, today.

Homesites are $2000 to $6000 and up.

PALOS VERDES

The New City - where Home Estates cost but $2000 and up

GENERAL SALES OFFICE, LANE MORTGAGE BUILDING, 8TH AND SPRING STREETS, LOS ANGELES

HENRY CLARKE, Director of Sales JAY LAWYER, Gen. Mgr. BANK OF AMERICA, Trustee

CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND

CALIFORNIA STATE LIBRARY

Lucretia Bori, of the Metropolitan Opera House, New York. From a Painting by Lulo de Blaas
Engraved by Bryan-Brandenburg Co., Inc., Los Angeles, California.

No. 62 FEBRUARY, 1925 25 Cents

MARY E. HAUAN
Partly-Worked Needlepoint Tapestry
Studio 26, de la Guerra Studios
15 East de la Guerra Street
Santa Barbara

EL PASEO SPORT SHOP
MRS. CHARLES O'DONNELL LEE, JR.
Sport Clothes, Hats, Evening Gowns
Children's Clothes
Studio 30, de la Guerra Studios
21 East de la Guerra Street
Santa Barbara

DORIS OVERMAN
Designer
Shades, Trays, Decorative Panels,
Aztec Pottery and Lamps
Studio 27, de la Guerra Studios
15 East de la Guerra Street

MONCURE DEARDORF
Important Collection of Chinese Jewelry
Dealer and Expert in Chinese Works of Art
Studio 24, de la Guerra Studios
15 East de la Guerra Street
Santa Barbara

PACIFIC MUTUAL LIFE INSURANCE CO.
SANTA BARBARA BRANCH
101 EL PASEO DE LA GUERRA

El Paseo Patio

Lunch Out of Doors or Dine
at
"EL PASEO"
23 E. de la Guerra St.
Santa Barbara

CLAUDE D. FISH
AUDITOR-ACCOUNTANT
INCOME TAX SERVICE
EISENBERG BUILDING
SANTA BARBARA, CALIFORNIA
PHONE 541

DE LA GUERRA STUDIOS
SANTA BARBARA

THE LOVELY SHOPPING STREET IN SPAIN

SPUNWOVEN
"THE GYPSY SHOP"
Hand Fabrics
BETH AND IAN M. WOLFE

BROWN CALDWELL
MODERN ETCHINGS
Studio 102

GEORGE M. MILLARD (of Pasadena)
RARE IMPORTED BOOKS
Santa Barbara Associates
MR. EVERARD MEYNELL MRS. E. M. GROSSMANN
STUDIO 25, EL PASEO
15 EAST DE LA GUERRA STREET

MARINA FLINT
Kimonos, Chinese Suits, Bed Sacks
Suite 114, de la Guerra Studios
21 East de la Guerra Street
Santa Barbara

ELEANOR JOHNSON
Studio for the Voice
Suite 103, de la Guerra Studios
21 East de la Guerra Street
Santa Barbara

SANTA BARBARA COMMUNITY ARTS ASSOCIATION
FRANK MORLEY FLETCHER, Director
SCHOOL OF THE ARTS
Announcement: Term, February 2—May 16
Graphic and Decorative Arts, Drama, Music, Dancing, French
For further information address the Secretary, Mrs. Jeanne Augé, 936 Santa Barbara St. Santa Barbara, California

We also do Remodeling Repairing
ALLAH FUR CO.
FURS EXCLUSIVE
Phone 1517
As well well as Dyeing Storage
SANTA BARBARA 9 E. ANAPAMU

CHEER COLOR COMPANY
409 So. WESTERN AVE., LOS ANGELES, CALIFORNIA
PHONE 567-892
American designs for American homes of the finest Chinese silks and embroideries
Unusual small gifts for Bridge and Mah Jongg

B. CROFTON ATKINS
Pipe and Tobacco Shop
And Men's Imported Clothing
Studio 29, de la Guerra Studios
21 East de la Guerra Street
Santa Barbara

LEE ELEANOR GRAHAM
Interior Decorator
de la Guerra Studios
23 East de la Guerra Street
Santa Barbara

THE POLK STUDIOS
MUSIC, DRAMA, DANCE
Gertrude Jeanette Polk
Artist Teacher of Vocal and Physical Expression
Henry Polk
Teacher of Piano, Voice and Pipe Organ
Suite 110, de la Guerra Studios
21 East de la Guerra Street
Santa Barbara

LA MANTILLA
Costume Designing and Remodeling
Studio 31, de la Guerra Studios
21 East de la Guerra Street
Santa Barbara

SANTA BARBARA ART CLUB
No. 15 E. de la Guerra Street
Free Exhibition of Paintings and Etchings
Open Daily 1 to 5 p. m.
Paintings and Etchings for sale

Lobero Theatre
SANTA BARBARA
February 20th ..... 8:30 P. M.
February 21st ..... 2:30 P. M.

LYDIA AND MARIA KEDRINA
Vocal and Choreographic Interpretations of Russian, Spanish, French and Modern Music, in Costumes

TICKETS (Including War Tax)
Evening Performance:
2.00-1.50-1.00-75
Matinee: 1.00-75-50
On Sale at the Theatre Box Office
Mail Orders Accepted

SAMARKAND HILLS

"Completely Improved and Carefully Restricted"

IN BEAUTIFUL SANTA BARBARA

THE MOUNTAIN VIEW FROM SAMARKAND HILLS. THERE IS ALSO A FINE OCEAN VIEW

Buy for a Home

Before you consider purchasing your homesite elsewhere, compare beautiful SAMARKAND HILLS with any other residential section in Santa Barbara—bar none. That is all we ask. We will gladly abide by your decision.

Buy for Investment

Before you consider any city lot as an investment, ask yourself these questions:

1st. Is it completely improved? Or will I be heavily assessed for improvements later?

2nd. Is it carefully restricted? Or can a gas station, or a family living in their garage, be placed next to my property?

"Round the Horizon View"

Think of having a home from which your eyes sweep the horizon!

From SAMARKAND HILLS you see Mission Canyon, with its live oaks; Mission Ridge and the Old Mission; The City, with its quaint Spanish roofs; the beach line, with Rincon in the distance; the blue Pacific, edged by Anacapa and Santa Cruz islands; a sunset view ten miles up the Goleta valley; and, towering over all, the ever-changing and always-beautiful mountains, with La Cumbre the nearest peak.

Improvements

1.—City Water
2.—City Sewer
3.—Cement Curbs
4.—Cement Gutters
5.—Cement Sidewalks
6.—Gas
7.—Telephones
8.—Electricity
9.—Paving from One Gutter to the other

Few subdivisions offer as much!
No subdivision offers more!

Prices

From $1,285 for a 60 x 150 foot lot and up.
No 50 foot lots—many from 75 to 120 feet.

Terms

20% down; 2% per month.
7% on deferred payments.

HOLLISTER ESTATE COMPANY, OWNER

EARLE OVINGTON

Sales Representative

THE FIRST NATIONAL BANK OF SANTA BARBARA, TRUSTEE

911 CHAPALA STREET—PHONE 407 SANTA BARBARA, CALIFORNIA

"IF YOU LIKE CALIFORNIA, YOU WILL LOVE SANTA BARBARA"

SOUTHLAND CALENDAR

Announcements of exhibitions, fetes, concerts, club entertoinments, etc., for the colendar pages ore free of chorge and should be received in the office of CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND, Posodena, ot leost two weeks previous to date of issue, the 10th. No corrections can be guaranteed if they are received loter than thot dote. California Southland is published monthly ot Pasodena, California. One dollar ond twenty cents for six issues, two fifty per year. Addresses will be chonged os mony times os desired if notice is given before the first of the month for which the chonge is mode.

Entered as second closs matter, July 28, 1919 at the Post Office ot Pasadeno, Californio, under oct of Morch 3, 1879.

Clubs

VALLEY HUNT CLUB:
The February announcements include the usual Monday afternoon bridge and mah jongg parties, with evening bridge and mah jongg, Friday, Feb. 20. On Friday evening, Feb. 13, there will be a Valentine dinner dance. The programs for the Sunday evening suppers, at seven o'clock, include a talk by Dr. Robert A. Millikan on "Educational Problems in Greece," Feb. 1; a song recital by Maurice La Vove, Russian baritone, with Mrs. Guy Bush as accompanist: the postponed lecture on "Chile" with stereoptican views, by Dr. Walter P. Manton, Feb. 15; and on Feb. 22, Mrs. Miriam Sellender, soprano, accompanied by Mrs. Sarah Bragdon will be heard in song recital.

ANNANDALE GOLF CLUB:
George Washington Dinner Dance, Saturday, Feb. 21st. Mr. Josef Rosenfeld and his ensemble of Russian artists will give a musicale, Feb. 25.
The afternoon bridge, Mah Jongg and tea parties have been resumed for the season. Tea will be served as requested and tables for cards are always available.
The second Friday of each month is open day at the club.
The usual Wednesday and Saturday sweepstakes each month.

FLINTRIDGE COUNTRY CLUB:
Tuesday is Ladies' Day and a special luncheon is served. In the afternoons informal bridge parties may be arranged followed by tea.

LOS ANGELES COUNTRY CLUB:
Ladies' Days, second Monday of each month.
Music during dinner, followed by dancing, every Saturday evening during the month.
Luncheon served from 11:30 to 2 p. m. on Saturdays.
Sunday night concerts during month.
Tea served as requested and tables for cards always available.

WILSHIRE COUNTRY CLUB:
Ladies' Days, third Monday of each month.
Dancing every second and fourth Saturdays during the month.
A musical is arranged for each Sunday night in the month.

MIDWICK COUNTRY CLUB:
Ladies' Days, fourth Monday in each month.
Tea and informal bridge every afternoon.
Polo, Wednesday and Saturday of each week.
Dancing every Saturday night.
Buffet luncheon served every Sunday.
Match polo games every Sunday, preceded by luncheon parties, followed by teas, during season.

LOS ANGELES ATHLETIC CLUB:
Dinner dances, Tuesday and Friday nights of every week. Tuesday night informal; Friday night semi-formal. Plunge open to the ladies Tuesday and Friday of every week.

SAN GABRIEL COUNTRY CLUB:
The dates for the San Gabriel Country Cluh Invitation Tournament have been fixed for Feb. 24, 25, 26, 27 and 28, 1925. The qualifying rounds will be held on February 24th and 25th. The usual fee of $3.00 will be charged entrants.
A dinner dance is arranged for the third Thursday of each month.
On Friday of each week a special luncheon is served, with bridge in the afternoons.
Ladies play every day starting after ten a.m., and not before two p.m.

MONTECITO COUNTRY CLUB:
Provides an 18 hole golf course, two concrete and two dirt courts for tennis, bowls and croquet.
Tea is served and informal bridge parties arranged as desired.
A buffet supper is served every Sunday night.

"EUCALYPTUS" By Maurice Braun

Maurice Braun Exhibition, February 16 to 28

Cannell & Chaffin, Inc.

Paintings :: Period Furniture :: Antiques

MARYLAND HOTEL
PASADENA

720 W. SEVENTH ST.
LOS ANGELES

LA CUMBRE GOLF AND COUNTRY CLUB:
Offers a course of eighteen holes, rivaling any in hazard and beauty. A recent purchase of additional acreage will provide an extended and even more interesting course.
Luncheon is served every day, and tea may be arranged as desired.

NEWPORT HARBOR YACHT CLUB:
Officers elected at the annual meeting, Dec. 6th, are as follows: William C. Warmington, Commodore; Joseph Allen Beek, Vice Commodore; B. H. Cass, Rear Commodore; Leon S. Heseman, Secretary and Treasurer. Directors are: John E. Jardine, James Webster, Richard Tubbs, and William M. Cummings.

REDLANDS COUNTRY CLUB:
Golf tournament for men is held every Saturday. Monday the course is reserved for the women and a special luncheon served. Those who do not play golf or who have had a round in the morning, devote the afternoon to bridge or mah jongg. Every Saturday afternoon tea is served and the men from their golf and the women from their bridge and mah jongg tables join, with one of the women members as hostess for a social cup.

Art

LOS ANGELES Museum of History, Science and Art, Exposition Park, announces for February an Architectural Exhibition, and Viennese Children's Exhibition. The Museum has recently acquired by purchase two paintings: "Monarch of the Malibu," by Hanson Puthuff, and "Grandma" a water color by Karl Yens. The Museum is open daily from 10 to 4, except Wednesday afternoons. Open Sunday, 2 to 5 p. m. Admission free.

SOUTHWEST MUSEUM, Marmion Way and Avenue 46, Los Angeles, announces the Second Annual Exhibit of Landscape Architecture, under the auspices of the Pacific Coast Chapter of the American Society of Landscape Architects, for the month of February. The Jury of Awards consists of five members, two being landscape architects; one an architect, and two others in allied professions. Sixteen awards will be made in various classes and divisions.

CANNELL and Chaffin will show in their Los Angeles Galleries, 720 West Seventh Street: Feb. 2nd to 7th—Portraits by Lulo DeBlaas. Feb. 2nd to 7th—Bronze figures and portraits in ivory by Ettore Cadorin. Both are Venetian artists. Feb. 2nd to 14th—Etching Room, sketches by Karl Yens and sculpture by Harold Swartz. Feb. 16th to 28th—Exhibition by Hosep Pushman. Feb. 16th to 28th—Exhibition by Maurice Braun. Feb. 16th to March 3rd—Brainard Lemon Collection of Antique English Silver and Rare Old Sheffield Plate.

CALIFORNIA Society of Miniature Painters at the annual meeting last month elected the following officers for the coming year: Laura M. D. Mitchell, president; Martha Wheeler Baxter, first vice president; Marie Marguerite Frechette, second vice president; Gertrude Little, secretary; Ella Shepherd Bush, treasurer. The annual exhibition will be held in the Biltmore Salon, Jan. 31 to Feb. 15. From there the exhibition will go to the gallery of the Friday Morning Club.

WEST COAST ARTS, INC., is compiling a list of good art lectures by artists, which may be obtained through Nell Booker Mayhew, Chairman of Art Education in the West Coast Arts. New names are constantly added and the list is not confined by any means to the membership of the West Coast Arts. The plan is that the speaker shall charge $25.00 and expenses, and give $5.00 to the building fund of the organization. Various free talks will be given, however, where the applying club is poor but in need of art knowledge.

CANNELL and Chaffin announce exhibitions in the Pasadena Gallery, Maryland Hotel, as follows: Feb. 9th to 14th—Portraits by Lulo De Blaas and bronze figures and portraits in ivory by Ettore Cadorin. Feb. 2nd to 14th—Exhibition Paintings by De Witt Parshall. Mar. 2nd to 14th—Exhibition Paintings by Hosep Pushman.

BENJAMIN BROWN has contributed in many ways toward the art education of the West, and has recently sold several paintings to schools and libraries at a reduced rate. In this way the Hollywood High School Graduating Class of 1924 was able to purchase "Clouds on the Mojave Desert"; and the Helena, Arkansaw, Public Library now owns "Sunrise in the Sierras." The Kansas State Teachers College, Emporia, Kansas, bought "Sunlight and Shadow, Iligh Sierras," which will be hung in the library of the college.

LOUIS HOVEY SHARP exhibited a series of twelve paintings of the Grand Canyon of the Colorado, both from the rim, the plateau, and the river level, in the Cannell and Chaffin galleries in the Maryland Hotel during the last half of January.

STENDAHL-HATFIELD galleries, Ambassador Hotel, will present an exhibition of the work of Joseph Kleitsch through the entire month. This will be followed in March by an exhibition of the work of Paul Lauritz.

ARTHUR MILLIER and Frank Geritz held an interesting joint show at the Cannell and Chaffin galleries, Los Angeles, the last half of January.

BILTMORE SALON exhibitions include
Arthur Hill Gilbert to Feb. 8.
California Society of Miniature Painters, Feb. 1-14.
Exhibition of American Illustrators, Feb. 1-20.
Frank Brangwyn, etchings to Feb. 8.
Western Painters, (General Exhibition) in Galleria Real. Maynard Dixon, opens Feb. 22, for two weeks.
Jack Wilkinson Smith, opens Feb. 23, for two weeks.

PAINTERS of the West are holding an exhibition, through February, at the Montecito Country Club, Santa Barbara, under the auspices of the Biltmore Salon.

E. HODGSON SMART, English portrait painter, will exhibit at the Ebell Club during February, under the auspices of the Biltmore Salon.

NORMAN ROCKWELL is a distinguished visitor in Los Angeles, the guest of Clyde Forsythe.

KANST'S Hollywoodland, the new gallery at 6182 Mulholland Highway, opened last month with an exhibition of new landscapes by Elmer Wachtel and by Martella Lane.

GUY ROSE is showing selected paintings at the Stendahl-Hatfield galleries, Ambassador Hotel.

ANITA DELANO was awarded the prize of $250, offered by the Los Angeles Museum for the best water color in the exhibition of the California Water Color Society, for her "Madonna of the Red Rocks." Honorable mention was given William Watts of San Francisco for his study from Chinatown, "A Rich Man's Funeral."

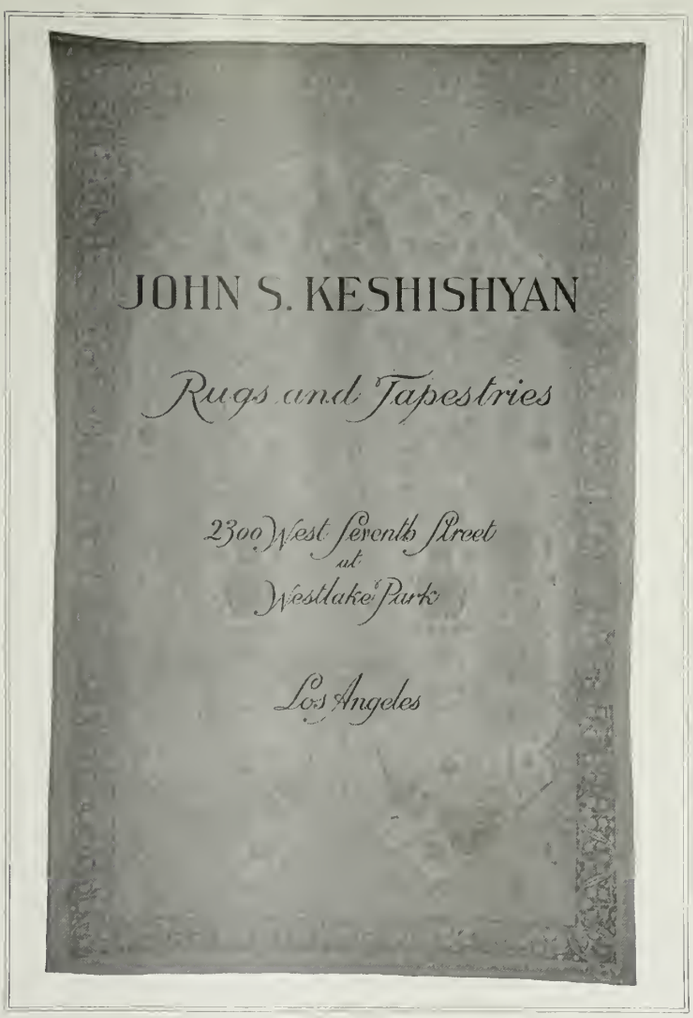
THE Little Gallery, 1830 Fourth Street, San Diego, is introducing a new idea to California: This is a library of paintings to circulate into homes just as books do. The artists lend their work for this purpose in order to give the art of painting the same chance for appreciation in the home that is shared by music and literature.

DR. LLOYD L. KREBS held his first public exhibition at the Woman's Club House, Sierra Madre, the last half of January. Fourteen canvases were shown, including California, Arizona and Eastern studies.

ARTS and Crafts Society of Los Angeles are exhibiting at the Friday Morning Club.

CARL OSCAR BORG is showing sketches in water colors, pen and pencil, at the Los Angeles Public Library.

THE San Diego Academy of Art held an exhibition at the La Jolla Art Gallery last month. It was the work of students of talent and revealed well trained ability.



DAVID ANTHONY TAUSKY is in New York for a stay of several months, where he is doing portraits of well known Eastern people.

AQUATINTS and drypoints by French etchers will be found in the gallery at Barker Bros. during the month.

MAURICE BRAUN showed a collection of sketches, which he brought with him from his autumn painting in the East, at the Little Gallery in San Diego in January.

SIXTH International Print Makers Exhibition—1925, under the auspices of The Print Makers Society of California, will be held in the Gallery of Fine and Applied Arts, Los Angeles Museum, Exposition Park, Los Angeles, California, U. S. A., from March 1st to 31st, 1925. The gallery will be open daily, free to the public. All workers in any kind of etching, lithography, block printing and engraving are cordially invited to contribute. All work submitted to the Jury of Selection will be carefully and impartially considered, but no picture which has been previously exhibited publicly in Los Angeles will be eligible. Address all correspondence and requests for entry blanks to Howell C. Brown, Secretary, 120 N. El Molino Ave., Pasadena, California, U. S. A. But send prints to the Los Angeles Museum, Exposition Park, Los Angeles. The Museum building is fireproof, and special care will be taken of all exhibits, but responsibility for loss or damage will not be assumed by the Society or Museum. A competent attendant is always present. Jury of Selection: Benjamin C. Brown, Howell C. Brown, Frances H. Gearhart, Carl Oscar Borg and Arthur H. Millier. Last day for receiving prints, February 7, 1925.

UNIVERSITY of California, Southern Branch, is the recipient, through friends of the University of California, of the Olschki collection of Florentine masters, a collection of finely executed reproductions of drawings, which has been annually exhibited in the Louvre. This collection will be exhibited through the month in the art gallery of the university, open every day to the public.

B B Bell & Company
Lighting Fixtures
Fireplace Fittings
Lamps
Console-tables and Mirrors
Hope's Casements
2302 West Seventh Street
at
Westlake Park
Los Angeles

JACK FROST is sketching in the Palm Springs country, where he always finds delightful material.

Music

PHILHARMONIC ORCHESTRA of Los Angeles, Walter Henry Rothwell, conductor, will give the monthly Friday afternoon Symphony Concerts at 3:00, February 13-27; Saturday evening concerts at 8:30, February 14-28; and the popular Sunday afternoon concerts at 3:00, February 8-22. All concerts are given in the Philharmonic Auditorium, Fifth and Olive, Los Angeles.

PASADENA Music and Art Association, in the 1925 Artists Series, will present Sergei Rachmaninoff, Friday evening, February 6, in the Pasadena High School Auditorium.

ALICE COLEMAN BATCHELDER, pianist, announces the fifth concert of the series of eight chamber music concerts for Thursday afternoon, 3:30, February 19, in the Music Auditorium of the Institute of Technology, Pasadena. The Russian Quartet are the assisting artists.

L. E. BEHYMER presents in the Philharmonic Artist Course Series, Tuesday Series, Alberto Salvi, Feb. 3, and Florence Easton, Feb. 17; Thursday Series, De-Reszke Singers, Feb. 12 and Claudia Muzio, Feb. 19.

AUDITORIUM Artist Series, (George Leslie Smith, Manager), will present Albert Spaulding, violinist, Feb. 9, and Roland Hayes, negro tenor, Feb. 16.

LOS ANGELES Chamber Music Society will give the fourth concert of the series of six, February 20, in the Music Room of the Los Angeles Biltmore at 3:00 p. m. These concerts alternate with the Friday afternoon concerts of the Philharmonic Orchestra.

THE fourth concert of the series of six given in Pasadena by the Los Angeles Philharmonic Orchestra, Walter Henry Rothwell, conductor, is announced for Feb. 9, 8:15, Raymond Theater.

LOS ANGELES TRIO will appear in the fourth concert of their series of six at the Ebell Auditorium, Los Angeles, Feb. 11.

WOMAN'S LYRIC CLUB, under the direction of J. B. Poulin, will give the second concert of the season, Feb. 10. Alberto Salvi, harpist, is announced as the soloist.

THE Zoellner Quartet will give the Monday evening concerts at the Biltmore Hotel, Feb. 2 and 18.

PAUL WHITEMAN and his famous Jazz Orchestra will be heard, in the L. E. Behymer series, February 13-14-15 and 18. In the same series Florence Easton of the Metropolitan will appear in recital, Feb. 17, and Claudia Muzio of the Chicago Opera, Feb. 19.

THE San Carlo Opera Company will appear at the Philharmonic Auditorium, Los Angeles, for two weeks, Feb. 23-Mar. 7: The operas to be given are as follows: Feb. 23, Evening, Tosca; Feb. 24, Matinee, Martha; Feb. 24, Evening, Butterfly; Feb. 25, Evening, Aida; Feb. 26, Matinee, Faust; Feb. 26, Evening, Rigoletto; Feb. 27, Evening, Cavalleria Rusticana, Pagliacci; Feb. 28, Matinee, Carmen; Mar. 2, Evening, Boheme; Mar. 3, Evening, Carmen; Mar. 4, Matinee, Tales of Hoffman; Mar. 4, Evening, Aida; Mar. 5, Evening, Lucia di Lammermoor; Mar. 6, Evening, Andrea Chenier; Mar. 7, Matinee, Butterfly; Mar. 7, Evening, Il Trovatore.

ARTHUR K. WYATT, president Pasadena Light Opera Association, has selected Bohemian Girl as the forthcoming opera.

LOS ANGELES Woman's Symphony Orchestra, Henry Schoenefeld, director, will give the first concert of this season, Feb. 4, at the Philharmonic Auditorium. Frederic Huttman, dramatic tenor, is the soloist.

THE Spinet Club of Redlands will present Albert Spaulding, violinist, in February.

MUSIC and Drama Course of Pomona College includes this month a recital by Alberto Salvi, harpist, and a concert by Florence Easton of the Metropolitan Opera Company.

CIVIC Music Committee of Santa Barbara presents the Philharmonic Orchestra of Los Angeles at the Granada Theater Feb. 2, 8:30 p. m. The soloist is Helena Marsh, contralto.

MISS THERESA CLOUD presents Roland Hayes, negro tenor, at Pasadena High School Auditorium, Thursday evening, February 19, at 8:15.

COLLEGE of Music, University of Southern California, offers a course in Church Music for church choir directors and singers, conducted by Alexander Stewart. The class will meet once each week for eighteen weeks, commencing February 11, 3 to 4:30 o'clock.

Announcements

THE Drama League announces the second of the series of three programs will be a lecture, "Vogues and Vanities," by Zoe Aitken, Feb. 25, at 3 o'clock, in the auditorium of the Shakespeare Club, Pasadena.

PASADENA Community Players announce "The Intimate Strangers" by Booth Tarkington Feb. 5-14, and the "Enchanted Cottage" by Arthur Pinero, Feb. 19-28. Members of the Dramatists' Guild of the Authors' League of America have been invited to submit plays to be considered for production at the opening of the new Pasadena Community Playhouse with most gratifying results. More than fifty recognized dramatists have forwarded plays.

THE Dobinson Players continue to give excellent performances in the Club Playhouse of the Woman's Club of Glendale. Each play is staged for twelve performances, Wednesday, Thursday, Friday, and Saturday nights, Wednesday and Saturday matinees.

JOHN STEVEN McGROARTY announces the re-appearance of R. D. MacLean as "Fray Junipero Serra" in the Mission Play at San Gabriel Play House, beginning Saturday, February 1, 1925, at 2:15 p. m.

PASADENA lecture Course includes for the month: Feb. 3, Charles Breasted, "Tut-Ankh-Amen" (Illustrated). Feb. 10, Sarah Wambaugh, "The League of Nations Work." Feb. 17, Dr. James A. B. Scherer, "China Today."

MRS. ROGER STERRETT and Mrs. Frederick Williams announce The Explorers will meet at the Jones Book Store, Los Angeles, Wednesday mornings from 10:30 to 11:30, beginning Feb. 4.

MR. CHARLES B. HERVEY announces the formal opening of the Hotel Green, Pasadena all year European plan. January 24. Through the courtesy of Miss Ruth St. Denis and Mr. Ted Shawn the Denishawn Dancers appeared in the Palm Room immediately following the de luxe dinner.

LOS ANGELES Alumnae of Kappa Alpha Theta announce a program of Russian Ballet followed by a dance, Hollywood Woman's Club, Feb. 13.

THE California Development Association is forming a Central Committee to be composed of prominent women interested in the progress of California. The object of the organization will be to unify California women in the effort to accomplish a few outstanding objectives adding to the material and cultural growth of the state.

SOROPTIMIST CLUB program at the weekly luncheon, Tuesday, Feb. 3, at the Biltmore, Los Angeles, will include an address by Dr. Walter F. Dexter, President of Whittier College. Miss Ruth Kenworthy, accompanied by Miss Helen Hunt, will sing, "A Lesson with a Fan."

MISS KATHERINE NELSON will give a book review, "A Resume of English Fiction of 1924," on Wednesday morning, February 11, at ten thirty and on Thursday evening, February 26, at eight o'clock, at the Bookland Circulating Library, 701 E. Mariposa Street, Altadena.

AMERICAN Institute of Architects, Southern California Chapter, will exhibit work of members at Los Angeles Museum, Exposition Park, Feb. 3-27. Nomination of Honor Awards for 1924. These will be presented during the exhibition. The Second Traveling Exhibition of the Western Chapters of the A. I. A. The subject is School Houses. Contributions from Southern California, San Francisco and Colorado. Special exhibition of tapestries and rugs, pottery. Interior decoration.

THE American Library of the University of Strasbourg was founded for the purpose of cementing further the bond of interest and sympathy between France and the United States of America. Honorable Calvin Coolidge, President of the United States of America, has sent the Founder an autographed copy of his book, "The Price of Freedom," for this collection. His Excellency Monsieur Jusserand, the French Ambassador at Washington, gave the first volume, inscribed by an author to the American Library, his book "With Americans of Past and Present Days." The aim of the Committees is to give the students and scholars of Alsace-Lorraine fuller knowledge of the life, science, literature and spirit of the American people. A special room will be assigned to this collection of books, by exclusively AMERICAN authors, in the Faculty of Letters, which is under the direction of Dean Christian Pfister. An appeal is being made for contributions, either of books or of money to purchase books. Books of philosophy, science or art and works of sociology, literature or history, are requested. The volumes should be NEW; however, used volumes of special value or those out of print will be accepted. Books contributed should be sent to Mrs. Channon, Hotel Vista del Arroyo, Pasadena. This is essential in order that certain clerical records be made to keep the volumes intact for the American Library in Strasbourg. Funds contributed should be sent to the Treasurer, William Burry, 108 South La Salle Street, Chicago. A Perpetual Fellowship, in the American Library, will be awarded to donors of $100, or the equivalent in books.

Santa Barbara

WITH the announcement by Mme. Lydia and Maria Kedrina of their Vocal and Choreographic interpretations to be given at the Lobero Theatre, Feb. 20th, evening and Feb. 21st, afternoon, Santa Barbara will be brought face to face with a hit of Old World artistry. Never in Santa Barbara and but few times in the Americas has an entertainment of this kind been presented. The program is divided into five groups of songs and dances. The first two groups present themes from the Russian peasant folk lore, depicting the heights of cheerfullness and tantalizing coquetry to which the Russian peasant is capable in their moments of recreation and also the pathos of the lower depth of despair in his hours of thought. It is said that the American can not understand these things by Tschaikowsky, and it is doubtful if any but a born Russian artist can give this understandingly. The Mmes. Kedrina believe Americans can understand and they are presenting this group against the advice of American impressarios. A group of English and American composers depict the coquetery of the time of 1840. This is followed by the passionate appeal of the Spanish, so close to the heart and life of Santa Barbara. The last is from the French of the 18th century and include those dainty, irresistible Bargerettes arranged by Wekerlin. The finale will be a Minuet de Martini in which the singer sings and the dance is performed in the elegance and fragility of that period.

THE next exhibition at the Art Club galleries, opening Feb. 1, will be that of Colin Campbell Cooper's paintings which have lately been shown in San Diego.

A. Schmidt & Son

For Fifty-six Years

Importers of Antique and Modern Silver and Sheffield Plate, Fine China and Glass.

2320 W. Seventh St., Los Angeles.
391 E. Colorado St., Pasadena.

Boston New York Washington

Now There's Nothing On My Mind But —saddlery

At last I'm clear of all my other interests and free to ride my life-long hobby—Saddlery!

From now on I can put all my time and energy into the marketing of saddles, bridles, martingales and other riding and driving equipment.

Mr. A. J. Bradley, formerly of Martin & Martine and the Whippy-Steigel Co., will be associated with me in the future. Mr. William Carr, an expert Saddler from England will be in charge of our Repair Department.

And I am going to work with them to make my Saddlery business the biggest and best in America.

Write for catalogue

Discount to Riding Academies and Saddlery Stores

The "little joe" Wiesenfeld Company
Baltimore, Maryland

COUNTY NATIONAL BANK AND TRUST COMPANY OF SANTA BARBARA

THROUGH the courtesy of the William Macbeth Galleries, New York, the County National Bank and Trust Company of Santa Barbara is showing a collection of canvases of well known Eastern painters.

Community Arts Association of Santa Barbara
Calendar—February, 1925

Feb. 1. Sunday afternoon, 3:30 o'clock, Lobero Theatre. Lecture by Arthur Bliss. Subject: Program of Philharmonic Concert to be given at Granada Theatre on Feb. 2. Free to public.

Feb. 2. Monday morning, 9 o'clock. Opening of Spring Term of School of the Arts.

Feb. 6. Friday afternoon, 2 o'clock, School of the Arts, 936 Santa Barbara Street. Lecture by Frank Morley Fletcher. Subject: Architecture. Admission by ticket, free on application to the Secretary.

Feb. 14. Saturday morning, 11 o'clock, Recreation Center. Children's Story Hour. Subject: Fairy Tales. Told by Mrs. Maude Morley Fletcher. Moving Pictures: Pied Piper of Hamlin. Legend of Willow-Pattern Plate. Admission free.

Feb. 15. Sunday afternoon, 3:30 o'clock, Lobero Theatre. Pop Concert, under direction of Arthur Bliss. Admission 35c and 75c.

Feb. 16. Monday. Drama Courses begin in School of the Arts.

Feb. 17. Tuesday afternoon, 3:30 o'clock, Recreation Center. Informal Meeting for all Community Arts Committees. Members of Association are invited to attend and join discussion of Community Arts affairs.

Feb. 20. Friday afternoon, 2 o'clock, School of the Arts, 936 Santa Barbara Street. Lecture by Frank Morley Fletcher. Subject: Architecture. Admission by ticket, free on application to the Secretary.

Feb. 21. Saturday afternoon, 3 o'clock, 936 Santa Barbara Street. Talk on Mendelssohn, by Arthur Bliss, for the pupils of the School of the Arts. Refreshments served. No charge.

Feb. 26, 27, 28. Thursday, Friday and Saturday evenings, at 8:30; Saturday matinee at 2:30; Lobero Theatre. Community Arts Play. Mail orders now. Tickets 50c, $1.00, $1.50, $2.00.

March 1. Sunday afternoon, 3:30 o'clock, Lobero Theatre. Lecture by Arthur Bliss. Subject: Program of Philharmonic Concert to be given at Granada Theatre on March 2. Free to public.

Permanent Architectural Exhibit: Corridor, 15 E. de la Guerra Street.

ALLIED ARCHITECTS ASSOCIATION OF LOS ANGELES

DESIGNERS OF

PATRIOTIC HALL

ADDITIONS TO THE MUSEUM OF HISTORY SCIENCE AND ART

EXTERIOR DESIGN OF THE HALL OF JUSTICE

ARCHITECTURAL TREATMENT OF VIADUCTS AND BRIDGES OF THE CITY OF LOS ANGELES

ADMINISTRATION CENTER FOR THE CITY AND COUNTY OF LOS ANGELES

AN ASSOCIATION FOR FURNISHING ARCHITECTURAL SERVICE FOR PUBLIC STRUCTURES ONLY

Marshall Laird

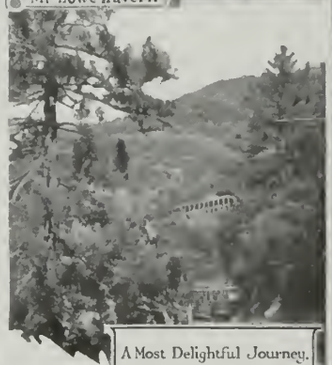
Furniture of Character

Authentic Reproductions of Fine Furniture

2815 West Seventh Street
Los Angeles
Phone DUnkirk 6015

Is Edison On Your List?

70,000 people own Edison Stock. It has paid dividends uninterruptedly since organization.



Issued under authority of the Railroad Commission of California.

Not subject to California tax or normal Federal income tax.

Edison 7% Cumulative Preferred
PRICE: $105 cash
$106 by installments
Ask at any Edison Office

Southern California Edison Company

MT. LOWE RESORT
America's Greatest Mountain Scenic Trolley Trip

Mt. Lowe Tavern

5 TRAINS DAILY from MAIN ST. STATION
8.9 10 AM
130.4 PM
Round Trip Fare $2.50
For Literature and Information Address
A Most Delightful Journey.
Supplemented by Refreshment, Comfort and Ease at Mt. Lowe Tavern, the Beautiful Mountain Inn.
An Ideal Vacation Place for a Day, Week or Month Where One May Enjoy Rest and Recreation
Hiking · Riding · Dancing · Tennis
and other amusements
PACIFIC ELECTRIC RAILWAY
O. A. SMITH Passenger Traffic Manager
LOS ANGELES

HOTEL GREEN
A well ordered Residential and Tourist Hotel of peculiar excellence. Open all year. Moderate rates. Apartments by the month.
The Green Tea Pot Reopened October 15
CHARLES B. HERVEY, Proprietor

For Sale
2300 Acre Ranch in Oregon on beautiful McKenzie River
Second growth timber. Comfortable modern house. For details write:
MRS. R. G. MILLER
625 Oak Knoll Avenue, Pasadena

La Solana
A quiet, well-appointed small hotel on the West Side near Orange Grove Avenue.
Expert Service
Each menu is carefully planned and prepared every day.
Grand Ave. and Lockhaven St. Pasadena

California Southland

M. URMY SEARES - - - - - Editor and Publisher
ELLEN LEECH - - - - - - - Managing Editor

NO. 62, VOL. VII. FEBRUARY, 1925

CONTENTS

	PAGE
LUCRECIA BORI.....(From a painting by de Blaas at Cannell and Chaffin Galleries, Los Angeles)	Cover Design
SOUTHLAND CALENDAR	4, 5, 6
AMERICAN HOMES OF TODAY—A REVIEW	9
THE LOS ANGELES ADMINISTRATION CENTER	11
THE BOOK OF JOHN MUIR.....Louise Morgrage	12
A TRIBUTE TO DOCTOR BRIDGE.....Dr. James McBride	13
THE SANTA BARBARA SCHOOL OF THE ARTS	14
STATE STREET, SANTA BARBARA	15
SOUTHLAND OPINION.....Paul Perigord	16-17
CHILDREN IN CALIFORNIA.....Ellen Leech	18
THE THREE-GAITED HORSE.....P. M. F.	19
THE ARCHITECTURAL CLUB HOUSES.....H. O. Sexsmith	20
FROM A BREAKFAST ROOM WINDOW.....C. H. Benjamin	21
THE ARTS AND CRAFTS SOCIETY.....Marion H. Clark	22
PRINTS IN THE HOME.....Nell Brooker Mayhew	22
THE SERENDIPITY ANTIQUE SHOP.....Ellen Leech	22
A MODEL HOUSE BY R. E. COATE.....M. Urmy Seares	23
MAKING A MOVIE—III.....George Drumgold	26
ASSISTANCE LEAGUE BULLETIN.....Mrs. James Reid	28
REGULAR MEETING A. I. A. LOS ANGELES..Harold O. Sexsmith	29

Official Organ of the Architectural Club of Los Angeles, California
Official Organ of the ASSISTANCE LEAGUE of SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA,
Presents the interests of The Community Arts Association of Santa Barbara

CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND is published monthly at Pasadena, Cal.
Copyrighted, 1924, by M. Urmy Seares
Advertising: CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND, Pasadena, Col. 916. Los Angeles, MEtropolitan 5270. Subscription price for 1925, $2.50 per year.

The Los Angeles
Elizabeth Arden Salon
with
J. W. Robinson Co.
UNDER the direct management of Miss Arden and her New York staff, and offering the same specialized treatments that have made Miss Arden's other salons internationally known.
Seventh Floor

KATHERINE BASHFORD
LANDSCAPE ARCHITECT
810 CENTRAL BUILDING
TERRACE 9403 PASADENA

Alice Coleman Batchelder, Pianist,
Presents the 1924-1925 Series of Eight
Coleman Chamber Concerts
In the Music Auditorium of The Pasadena Institute of Technology
Agnes E. Lownsbery, Secy.
Telephone, Colo. 3414
695 Calaveras St., Altadena

NOTARY PUBLIC
METROPOLITAN 5270
MISS MARJORIE FYFE
MISS ELLA GILBERT
PUBLIC STENOGRAPHERS
MULTIGRAPHING AND MIMEOGRAPHING
929 LOEW'S STATE BLDG.
LOS ANGELES

MARGARET CRAIG
ARCHITECTURAL PHOTOGRAPHY
Portraits by Appointment
Official Photographer for California Southland
610 So. Western Ave., Los Angeles
Telephone 56254

CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND
AN ILLUSTRATED MAGAZINE OF NATIONAL INTEREST

CALIFORNIA'S CONTRIBUTION TO ARCHITECTURE

By M. URMY SEARES

AMERICAN architecture has received an enlightening and adequate record of achievement in a book just published by Macmillan. It is written by Augusta Owen Patterson, for more than ten years Art Editor of TOWN AND COUNTRY MAGAZINE. It is a compilation of available illustrations gathered from engravings and photographs by various magazine writers and photographers, and not altogether, as the author tells us, selected because they specifically illustrate "the ideals upon which the book is based." But "American Homes of Today" is much more than a compilation, and the basic ideals are there and dominate the text. The author, immersed in an atmosphere of pictorial magazine publicity, has emerged in her writing with definite decisions and an important contribution to the architectural literature of America. Disarming the critics with her first sentence, Mrs. Patterson chooses the subtle field of aesthetics rather than that of architecture as her subject. And what architect-critic can pursue her there? Nor is the critical one an attitude in which to approach this interesting book, which gives to the layman and the host of young architects eagerly pressing toward the goal of a native architecture, solid foundation for historical knowledge and a fine perspective for future work.

The Colonial, the English, Italian, French and the general Mediterranean models are duly set in their places on beautiful pedestals and the mass of work in domestic architecture done by American architects of the past is presented with smiling courtesy and clever, well-directed banter. We are told what we have done and how we happened to do it and with due appreciation of how funny we are when we are turned loose on the earth with hammer and saw.

Mrs. Patterson would revel in the bungalow brood of California's prolific Southland, where every village in every state in the Union has contributed its dream of a home in "the land of heart's desire." Before writing another book she should also become as familiar with our architects' work as she evidently is with that of the Atlantic Coast.

Chapter eleven, The Mediterranean Model, pays tribute to the good sense of California's architects in adopting the Mediterranean styles, and shows many illustrations of this appropriate manner of building in semi-tropical countries. These contributions from California seem, however, to have lost their tags in their trip across the continent, and even the text here shows how hard it is to fish for beauty with so long a line.

California has made a distinct contribution to architectural beauty in this country. It has, as Mrs. Patterson says in chapter eleven, shared with Florida the development of the Mediterranean type of architecture. But Mr. Addison Mizner, whose work dominates the Florida selections, is a Californian—a member of one of our oldest San Francisco families—and his broad view of the problem of adapting Mediterranean forms to American life, and his quick glance over our latest landscape on his last visit to the Coast, resulted in a brotherly remark about the inadequacy of our present roof lines—a remark well meant and seriously helpful. For, without any noise, California architects are now designing real California houses fitted to the life of the Californian who knows how to live in his native state. On page 278 and 279 Mrs. Patterson has given up the problem of telling what point American architecture has reached at present and in despair of understanding what California is doing, has made a comparison between the hall of the Sewell house, built by Eastern architects in California, and the hall by Mr. Reginald Johnson (of California, not Chicago) in the beautiful house he built for Mrs. Wellington Morse in Pasadena. This puzzled comparison is Mrs. Patterson's discovery of California architecture; her caption unconsciously describes what Mr. Johnson has done for American architecture in his California houses. It says of the hall—that index of home life: "It is interesting to compare this hallway with that in the Sewell residence on the opposite page. Its plain walls, its heavy arches, its tiled floors have the same insinuation of coolness so welcome in a hot climate, but there is a certain English discipline which suggests a compromise with the Mediterranean traditions, although, with the exception of the stairway, the details seem Italian rather than British."

THE SANTA BARBARA RESIDENCE BUILT FOR MRS. WILLIAM H. BLISS BY CARLETON M. WINSLOW, ARCHITECT, LOS ANGELES. AS AN EXAMPLE OF PURE CALIFORNIA ARCHITECTURE IT WAS USED IN THIS MAGAZINE IN 1921. THIS PHOTOGRAPH SHOWS THE BEAUTY OF LIVE OAK SHADOWS ON PLASTERED WALLS AND THE REVIVED USE IN CALIFORNIA OF IRON GRILLS.

In this mystified manner does our author, sure and confident in her description of known styles, try the touchstones of her knowledge on this new thing, this exquisite product of a modern, American architect.

ANOTHER CALIFORNIAN DOORWAY. PHOTOGRAPHED BY MARGARET CRAIG. A HOUSE DESCRIBED ON PAGE 23. ROLAND E. COATE, ARCHITECT

And the estimate she has unconsciously made of Californian architecture is a just and an expert one. Restraint, discipline, as she calls it, is one of the happy characteristics of Mr. Johnson's houses and is the insignia of the work of all finished artists. Like the masters of all time, California architects help themselves to all that has gone before them in the history of art, but their houses are not copies of any style. Spontaneous and free from tradition's slavery, they spring from the soil they cover and please chiefly by their livable qualities and their orderly relation to their environment. The Bliss house in Santa Barbara, pictured on the preceding page, appeared in this magazine for July, 1921, illustrating an article on the beautiful work of Mr. Carleton M. Winslow. Here blank walls are not used—as Mrs. Patterson would have it—because "we recognize the sanctity of style" and "the Spanish attitude toward life"; but because our architect reveled in the joy of seeing on these blank, white walls the tracery of shadows from the native California live oaks with which the site was covered and, as he told me one day, he "just made pictures" on every facade.

That California architects have built in Chicago and in Florida only emphasizes the fact that there is a California style—evolved out of our Spanish or French or Italian and Greek inheritance—but distinctly our own. Perhaps the most distinguished and beautiful example of pure Californian is Willis Polk's house, built down the peninsula from San Francisco—for Mr. and Mrs. Charles D. Blaney. Yet I doubt if Mr. Winslow or Mr. Johnson ever saw it or ever knew Willis Polk. Each architect, working lovingly in the free air of California, expressed for his client the joy and beauty of California living and placed, on the edge of our arroyo in one case, and crowning the softly rolling foothills of Santa Cruz in the other, a beautiful conception of what our climate, our landscape and our love of the appropriate demands in a California house.

These are but three of our sincere leaders.

Others, talented and original in their conception of what life in California demands, are building here in a manner unknown to the East excepting through a casual magazine article careless in giving credit or ignorant of copyright laws. The notable work of Marston, Van Pelt and Maybury is shown in "American Homes of Today," but Wallace Neff's popular houses are not mentioned, and his charming group of stables on Mr. Libbey's picturesque farm at Ojai was accredited to the farm manager, in a recent issue of TOWN AND COUNTRY magazine.

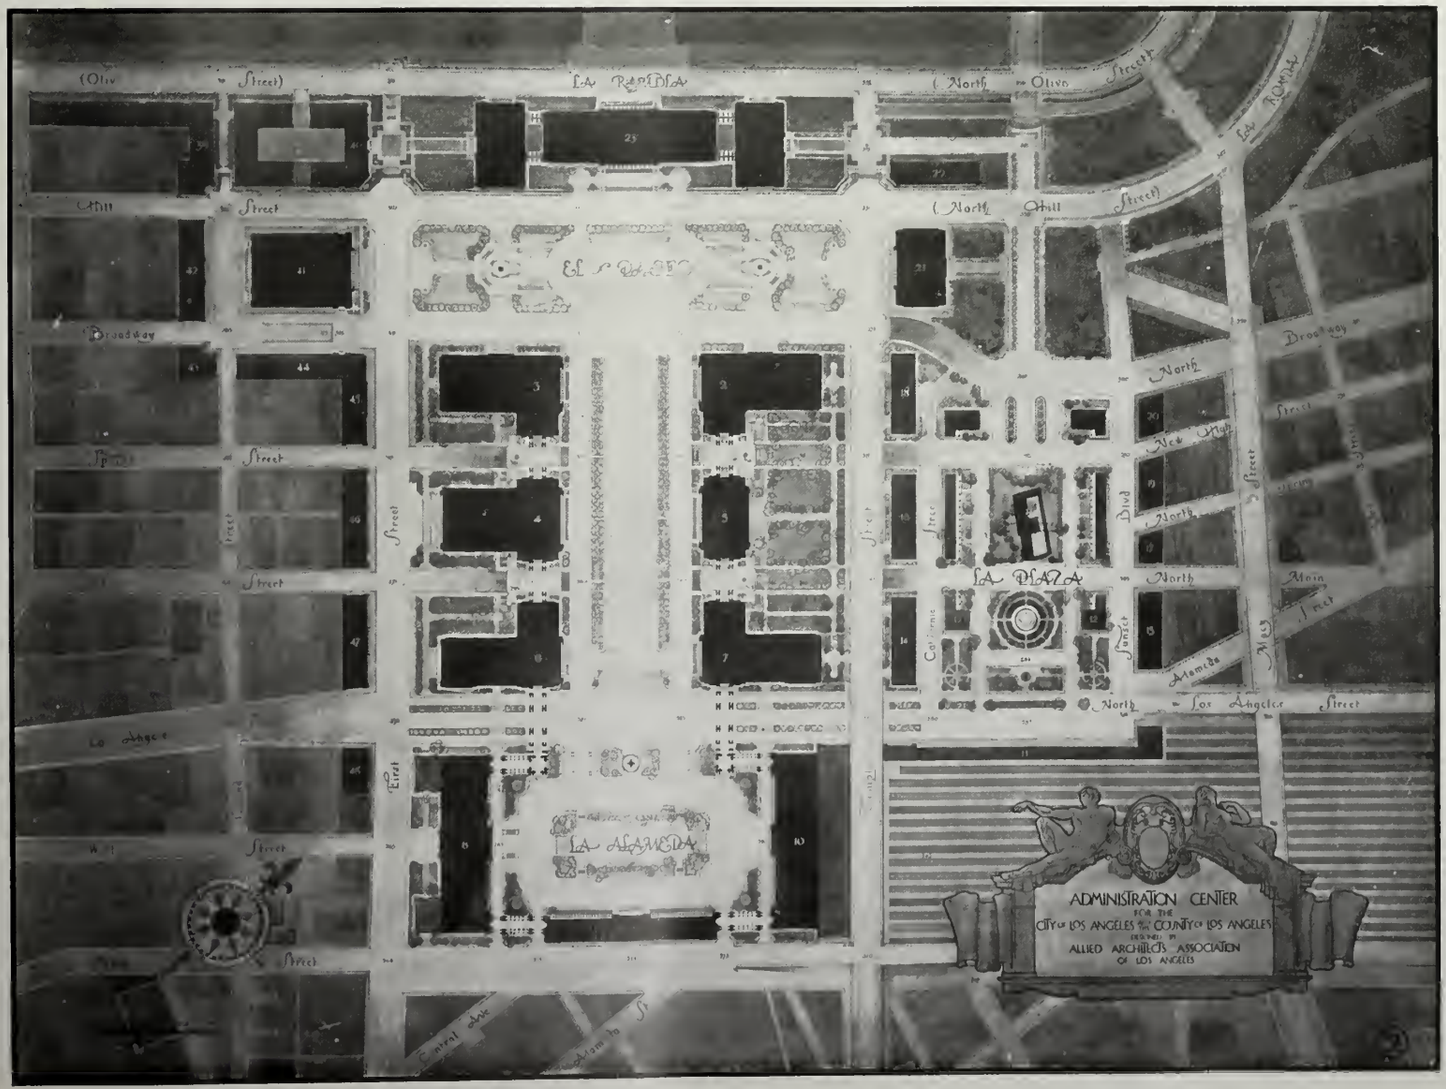
BUT the fascinating art of making beautiful houses is not the whole work of the architects who are building for the future in California. The skyline of San Francisco and her civic center, her World's Fair buildings and the handsome State University group across the Bay, speak eloquently of the genius of our architects. In the South, semi-public buildings, such as our first plateresque tower designed by Myron Hunt for the church at Riverside and the simple, dignified mass of our great hotels later built by the firm of Myron Hunt and H. C. Chambers; the beautiful school houses of Allison and Allison scattered all over the state and culminating, perhaps, in the high school at Palo Alto; the Church of St. John's by Pierpont Davis and the Cathedral of St. Paul's, by Johnson, Kaufmann and Coate in Los Angeles, bespeak something new and fine in American building.

Mr. Carleton M. Winslow, who designed most of the buildings on the principal avenue as Mr. Goodhue's representative on the San Diego Exposition, and who had charge of the California Building designed by Mr. Goodhue himself, is now carrying out Mr. Goodhue's design of the new library for the city of Los Angeles, as nearly as possible as the architect would have done it had he lived.

Thus do the semi-public buildings by our best architects lead up to that index of community ideals, the civic center of our latest full-grown metropolis. For there is something more still to record of the architects of the Southland of California.

DETAIL OF SHOPS, LOS ANGELES, MORGAN, WALLS AND STILES O. CLEMENTS, ARCHITECTS.

Discovering that Los Angeles—which has still to find herself as an organic unit—had a charter which did not provide for architectural aid in civic building, the leading architects of the city organized a business association to bid on this work, so vital in making a city an organized, orderly and handsome center of social and business life.



For the sake of their city's comfort, and reputation, her good looks and her ability to function as a metropolis—a mother city—to the thickly settled towns and county of Los Angeles, these sixty or seventy architect-citizens have united in giving up their personal fees and, pooling their talents and trained faculties, combine to give Los Angeles their united services.

"The finest thing Los Angeles has ever done," commented a wise resident of the county who has avoided the city entirely since his years have bade him be careful.

The plans below give but a hint of this splendid devotion to civic interest. They have just been announced after months of work, for which the city pays but one dollar.

Each of the members of the Allied Architects' Association, a list of which follows, has taken some active part in the development of the plan:

A. L. Acker, David C. Allison, J. E. Allison, Edwin Bergstrom, E. J. Borgmeyer, S. R. Burns, H. C. Chambers, Charles H. Cheney, Wm. M. Clarke, S. O. Clements, E. H. Cline, R. E. Coate, K. K. Cutter, Pierpont Davis, Walter S. Davis, W. J. Dodd, A. M. Edelman, Robert D. Farquhar, Elmer Gray, Fitch H. Haskell, T. M. Hastings, Harwood Hewitt, R. Germain Hubby, Frank D. Hudson, W. Asa Hudson, Myron Hunt, Sumner P. Hunt, A. R. Hutchason, Harold S. Johnson, Reginald D. Johnson, W. Templeton Johnson, Gordon S. Kaufmann, T. Beverley Keim, Jr., John R. Kibbey, John P. Krempel, Sylvanus B. Marston, E. W. Maybury, Roy C. Mitchell, Ross G. Montgomery, O. W. Morgan, John Fredrick Murphy, W. A. O. Munsell, E. W. Neff, A. S. Niebecker, Jr., C. E. Noerenberg, Robert H. Orr, H. M. Patterson, Chas. F. Plummer, Scott Quintin, Lloyd Rally, Alfred W. Rea, Wm. Richards, W. L. Risley, Harold O. Sexsmith, Winsor Soule, S. M. Spaulding, J. E. Stanton, W. F. Staunton, Jr., Clifford A. Truesdell, Jr., Garrett B. Van Pelt, Jr., John T. Vawter, Loyal F. Watson, Walter Webber, W. H. Wheller, Carleton Monroe Winslow, Henry F. Withey, David J. Witmer, J. T. Zeller, A. C. Zimmerman.

NEW BOOKS REVIEWED

By LOUISE MORGRAGE

THE many admirers of California's great naturalist will joyfully receive this splendid work in two volumes, by his literary executor William Frederic Bade. The life of a man of genius can never fail to thrill and interest all, even those unacquainted wtih his writings, since his very personality will shed a magic glow upon events which in other lives would be entirely commonplace. In the case of John Muir. we have had to depend upon an incomplete autobiography for any record of his life, although at his death, he had in preparation material for a second volume of these memoirs. This collected material is the basis for the Life now published, together with fragments of unpublished journals, and numerous letters written to relatives and friends with no thought of their being read by other than the recipients; also in some cases, where the narrative demands it, excerpts from his published works.

The examination of the notes and papers left by Muir surely must have been a heavy task, but Mr. Bade has done his part excellently well. His own story of the naturalist's boyhood is absorbing, written with a pleasing simplicity, offering a viewpoint which the autobiography naturally could not give. It is a tale of terrible hardships, narrow environment, with a religiously fanatical father and besetting difficultics on every side, especially after the family had removed from the home in Scotland to another in Wisconsin, in our hero's twelfth year. However, youth has buoyancy and this boy with his passionate love of nature and books, had no lack of this quality to spur him on. At that period his working day lasted from five in the morning till nine at night; in consequence we find him inventing a clock to awaken him at one 'oclock in order to enable him to find some time for study; a proceeding which he had to conceal from a father who believed in nothing but work and Bible study. Between the ages of eleven and twenty-two, Muir had only two months' attendance at any school and so was mostly self-educated. At length his skill in contriving mechanical inventions like the clock, attracted so much attention, that it served as a means to get him away from home and ultimately to procure for him a college education, although secured at the expense of terrible privations.

During these college days, he thought of studying medicine, but a chance encounter aroused his interest in Botany which with other natural sciences, combined with writing, was to be his life's work, although he was making no conscious preparation for it. Once awakened, this dormant enthusiasm for natural history became a burning passion, sending him forth on those wanderings, which were in the end, to take him nearly everywhere in the world, but at that time only to the Yosemite Valley, where he landed in the late sixties.

The following ten years were fateful indeed. Unconsciously he was planting his genius-seeds which later were to grow to a flowering greatness. Apparently he was well aware that his ability to invent mechanical contrivances could be made to bring him wealth and comforts, but he preferred living close to Nature in this wonderful valley, studying all her secrets with such a passion of love and reverence, that she revealed them to him to an extent seldom vouchsafed to human beings. The effect upon him as disclosed in his letters, was almost overwhelming. Their importance cannot be too highly estimated, as they represent his only literary product at a time when it is difficult to decide whether he was a poet who happened to be a naturalist, or a naturalist who happened to be a poet. Mr. Bade aptly calls the style in which these letters were written, prose-poetry. In them his descriptions of his life in the wilds, sparkle with a joyous spontaneity and a picturesque imagery, showing him to be intoxicated, as it were, with sheer delight over merely existing in the midst of such marvelous surroundings. Natural phenomena like storms and earthquakes served only to quicken his pulses and cause him to send off another glowing appreciation of Mother Nature to some fortunate friend. He was living at the time mostly alone, wandering about the valley, making a searching examination of every plant, every tree and rock, paying particular attention to the marks of glaciation, a subject which was already making a strong appeal to him.

MUIR IN THE REDWOODS. PUBLISHED BY THE COURTESY OF WILLIAM FREDERICK BADE AND HERBERT W. GLEASON

PHOTOGRAPH OF JOHN MUIR, LOANED BY MRS. E. R. DICKEY. MARGARET CRAIG, PHOTOGRAPHER.

Such remarkable letters as these, valuable from both a literary and scientific standpoint, could not fail to arouse wonder and admiration, and Mrs. Carr in particular, to whom many of them were sent, began urging him to write articles like them for publication. Unknown to him she forwarded some to eastern papers in which they appeared and at once attracted wide attention. He was thus encouraged to offer some articles on various subjects connected with the valley and with their publication, began his literary and scientific career which was to make him so famous.

For greater convenience in accomplishing this work, he felt obliged to leave the spot in which he had passed ten happy and fruitful years, whose benefits he was now to reap on the road to fame. He went to live in Oakland first, and later in San Francisco, where the change from the life in the wilderness to the haunts of civilization proved irksome indeed. His long periods spent in writing for publication, however, were interrupted by ever widening excursions in all directions, for purposes of observation and study. His friends were increasing also, including eminent men like Emerson, LeConte, Whitney, and the publishers of the leading magazines of that day, all coming gradually to regard him as an authority on matters of natural history, as well as paying respect to his literary gifts. His letters now were being addressed to an ever widening circle of acquaintances, and lacked to a certain degree the joyous abandon of old Yosemite days. No longer in them, appear the woodnotes wild. But even so they make delightful reading and in those written to his wife, shortly after his marriage in 1880, we discern a new quality, a charming whimsicality and fanciful nonsense, assumed apparently for the purpose of cheering her during his long absences, for he never stopped wandering to the day of his death.

Just before his marriage he set forth on a journey through the Nevada desert. Nature here presented a somewhat different aspect, to the woods and streams to which he was accustomed in the Sierras, but he did not fail to find beauty everywhere and give expression to his appreciation for it in the letters that he wrote thence, the only existing record of this trip. He had visited Alaska several times, where the study and observation of glaciers was his chief occupation, when in 1881, he was invited to join the expedition then setting forth in the Corwin to search for the missing Jeannette. This was a wonderful opportunity for him to penetrate far into the polar seas and the grandeur of these icy regions so inspired the poet in him, that again in his letters appear vivid and thrilling descriptions of natural phenomena, this time mountains of snow and ice, and terrible gales at sea. However, on this expedition, the man of science was also active, and the botanical collection made by him then, is still the only one known to science from Wrangell Land, of which the United States took formal possession on that occasion.

After ten years devoted to the development of a fruit ranch, near Martinez, which he made a financial success, he began writing the classics for which he is now famous, and this literary work with study and frequent travels, occupied the remainder of his life. During this whole period, his untiring efforts to preserve the forests and establish national parks, is discussed by Mr. Bade in an important and impressive chapter called "His Public Service." We read this and understand, many of us perhaps for the first time, how much gratitude the nation owes to John Muir, who is largely responsible for the national monuments, set apart for the happiness of all the people.

The use of these two delightful volumes, as supplementary reading in connection with the naturalist's books will surely furnish pleasure and profit to all thus employing them. Mr. Bade is to be highly commended for the omission of all unpleasing details, making the work a record of lovely thoughts alone, fitting to the subject and the man.

The Life and Letters of John Muir, by WILLIAM FREDERIC BADE. Houghton, Mifflin and Company. The Riverside Press, Cambridge.

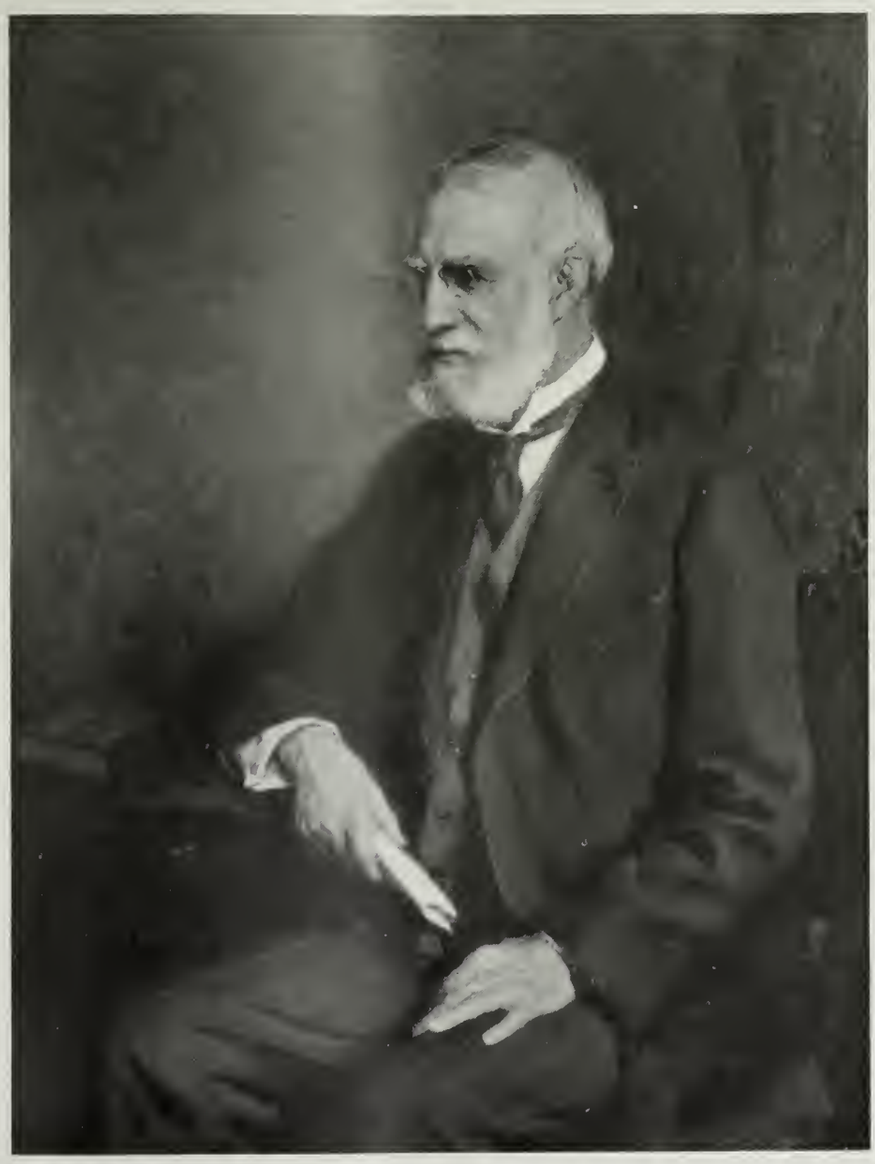
DR. NORMAN BRIDGE

By DR. JAMES H. Mc BRIDE

THE editor of this magazine has appointed me a very difficult task, that of summarizing the important characteristics of an individual. Each of us humans is a variable and complex quantity, and few things are more difficult to do with the pen than to state with complete fairness the qualities that have made a man what he is.

Dr. Bridge was a well poised and far-seeing man, having a clear understanding of his place in the world and the things he could do best. Though the Doctor was almost constantly in public service for fifty years, he proved to be free from those defects of character that have so often marred the personal history of famous men.

As physician and citizen Dr. Bridge was successful from the first, his ability being recognized more than once by the public which chose him for responsible positions. He must have had great satisfaction when, in the quiet days of old age he could review in long perspective his varied and useful past. Success is always a test of character; it steadies the strong man and turns the head of the weak man. The strong man appreciates, as did Dr. Bridge, his obligation to this beautiful and moving order we call society; he realizes that however great his talents or his attainments, he owes much in the way of service to this world of crying needs in which he lives.



In all the activities of Dr. Bridge his strong personality made a distinct impression upon his associates, and in his relation with societies and movements he was recognized as a leader, and leadership is the quality that moves the world. Personally and intellectually,, the Doctor was a prominent figure, with the quiet interests and unaffected ways which keep a man in harmony with his fellows.

Early in his professional life Dr. Bridge showed his breadth of interest by taking an active part in public affairs. These interests persisted throughout the Doctor's entire career and the things he did later were the natural result of his early ideals. When great opportunities came to him he discharged his new obligations with quiet dignity, distributing his benefactions modestly and wisely.

Lord Bacon expressed an important truth when he said that every man is a debtor to his profession, and it is also true that everyone owes a debt to society for the talent which has been bequeathed to him by the generations that have gone before, those countless dead who have suffered and toiled that he and others might receive the gift of life. This debt to society Dr. Bridge paid in unselfish service and generosity, the benefits of which will reach far beyond this generation.

The benefactions of Dr. Bridge in this community are in the interest of young men and those whom they may serve in after years. In such gifts there is more than money, there is a contribution to opportunity and an incentive to achievement that develops ambition and prepares men for practical work, and helps to create ideals of good citizenship and service to society.

Through a strict mental discipline and the educational drill in habits of persistent effort that the Institute furnishes, these young men for whom Dr. Bridge so generously provided will get here lessons in self-reliant character, and the development of character is one of the great objects of education. Character, the indefinable quality that lies in personality and from which others benefit, the one legacy that the poorest may leave, the greatest individual achievement, the one immortal thing that belongs to life.

THE PORTRAIT OF DOCTOR NORMAN BRIDGE, BY SEYMOUR THOMAS, LA CANYADA, CALIFORNIA. PLACED IN THE LIBRARY OF THE NORMAN BRIDGE LABORATORY OF PHYSICS. IT IS A CONSTANT INSPIRATION TO THOSE WHO ENJOYED HIS FRIENDSHIP.

A Norman Bridge Laboratory will stand in this community for generations. It will remain as a monument to the idealism of one who struggled up from obscurity to an honorable prominence. Dr. Bridge has written in modest phrases the annals of his past in the little autobiographical sketch, "The Marching Years." This should become a student classic on character growth. In reading it one can see how the Norman Bridge Laboratory followed on the good fortune of its author. It will answer the questions of students and others who in the future may wish to know something of the man whose vision led him to provide technical training which will grow in importance as the years pass. As generations of young men enter the doorway of this building they should uncover in memory of the donor, who opened to them the other and ideal doorway of opportunity.

AT a special assembly of the students and faculty of the California Institute of Technology, in Pasadena, Hiram W. Wadsworth, member of the board of trustees, spoke feelingly of the many beautiful characteristics which marked the life of Dr. Norman Bridge, who was for many years the active head of the board of trustees.

Mr. Wadsworth declared that the quality in his friend which impressed him more than any other in their years of close association was that of being able to exert a strong influence upon all who came into contact with him. As a teacher, physician, philosopher, writer, philanthropist, and friend he was known and loved by a countless number of individuals and he never failed to draw a circle of warm admirers about him.

George S. Patton, member of the board of trustees of the Institute, next spoke of Dr. Bridge as the truth-seeker, pointing out the fact that nowhere is greater emphasis placed upon the necessity for absolute and unswerving truth in all things than at the California Institute of Technology, where the influence of Dr. Bridge was so keenly felt. Mr. Patton spoke of the scriptural passage, "Ye shall know the truth and the truth shall set you free," and declared that this might well be given as the text of Dr. Bridge's life, for his interest was ever centered in the work of men in every branch of knowledge who were seeking to discover the fundamental truths of man and nature while his own work was a constant exemplification of that search.

The next speaker was Seymour Thomas, noted artist, whose remarkable portrait of Dr. Bridge was unveiled two weeks ago in the library room of the Norman Bridge laboratory. He told in a very charming way of the glimpse into Dr. Bridge's beautiful personality which he had during the course of the sitting for the portrait in New York City. Before beginning the canvas he asked the great philanthropist if he could recall any incident in his life in which his work seemed to mean the most to him. Dr. Bridge immediately replied that he experienced this feeling always when he had a class of medical students before him. It was therefore as a teacher that Mr. Thomas visualized his subject and proceeded with the portrait.

Dr. Robert A. Millikan, chairman of the executive committee of the Institute, and director of the Norman Bridge Laboratory of Physics, in speaking of the great service which Dr. Bridge had rendered to the local college, said: "No more fitting spot in the world could be found for a gathering of the friends of Dr. Bridge to do him honor than at the Institute where he gave the best that was in him, the best in thought, the best in council, the best in substance, the best in vision, and the best in hope.

"I know of no man who had so truly found the secret of glad living as had Dr. Bridge; found it in giving of himself, his money, his thought, and his effort for others. The secret of that glad life lay not in external circumstance, but far down in the depth of character, and such a character with the influence which it exerts on everyone who comes into contact with it. That sort of character is immortal and Dr. Bridge lives on forever in this spot for which he did so much."—From a local appreciation in the Pasadena Star-News.

THE INTERESTING WORK OF THE COMMUNITY

SCHOOL OF ARTS

NO electric signs, no flaming billboards proclaim the School of the Arts in Santa Barbara. Its classes are modestly divided between the ancient yellow adobe on Santa Barbara St., flanked with its feathery pepper tree and picturesque with brick walls and flower borders, and the big airy structure, half church, half barn, on the corner of Santa Barbara St. and East Ortega. The casual visitor, loitering down Santa Barbara St. will perhaps be arrested by the sound of fiddling which comes from the squat adobe with its long French windows opening on the street. Picking his way up the narrow little side path, he will step all unaware into the sun-filled back court of the School, and will perhaps espy under an apple tree, or in a sheltered corner, Mrs. John Frederic Murphy with her children's drawing class grouped eagerly about her. Peeping into the little studio on the left he will see youthful Elmans and Kreislers scraping away under the benignant tutelage of Antoni Van der Voort.

The sound of foreign vowels will attract his ears to the old bench in the sun, where Leon Clerbois will be introducing a trio of students into the intricacies of the French language. As the visitor slips by, he may cast a glance in at the long windows, where, in the sun-checkered salon twelve small mites, courtesying and sacheting with expressions of the gravest concern on their faces, represent the children's dancing class of Edith McCabe. From the back room will come the cheerful tones of pianos, as various other mites enter the wondreful world of music under the direction of Roger Clerbois, Caroline Kellogg Dunshee, or one other of the numerous piano instructors. If the visitor is lucky he may happen in on a Wednesday morning when Arthur Bliss directs the musical studies of several talented advanced pupils.

Walking down Santa Barbara St. for three blocks, the visitor finds himself before the big roomy art studios of the School. Here Frank Morley Fletcher and a group of earnest smock-clad students are busy with a study from Life. In the large salle, bent over long benches, Charles Paine's in Design are working. The place has an air of brisk and happy occupation, and also a fine earnestness, for many of these young people are seriously studying for professional art work. As the visitor steps from the dim studios into the sun, he will perhaps meet Colin Campbell Cooper's landscape class returning from a day's sketching trip with their easels and canvasses, tired and dishevelled, but with faces glowing with the deep satisfaction of hours richly spent.

If the visitor remained in Santa Barbara a month he would be able to attend pupil's recitals, exhibitions, students' parties and ensemble work and the projected Atelier of the Beaux-Arts Institute of Design, Department of Architecture. A course in voice training and other dramatic work is also on the eve of its initiation. This makes the schedule of the school a full one, and one which is constantly enlarging its scope.

SALON OF THE SCHOOL OF THE ARTS, 936 SANTA BARBARA STREET, SANTA BARBARA

CHILDREN'S CONCERT DIRECTED BY ARTHUR BLISS, UNDER AUSPICES OF MUSIC BRANCH OF COMMUNITY ARTS ASSOCIATION AND SCHOOL OF THE ARTS, HELD AT RECREATION CENTER.

OUTDOOR ADVERTISING

THE following bulletin of information was issued for January, 1925, at the suggestion of the Plans and Planting Committee, the directors of the Community Arts Association having endorsed the work of the National Committee for the Restriction of Outdoor Advertising.

An annual report of the work of this committee was sent to our membership of 1800.

We are certain that the members of the Community Arts Association will appreciate this opportunity to learn of the activities of an organization which has done so much throughout the country to prevent the thoughtless and selfish defacement of many of our most delightful roadside vistas.

It will be noted that the policy of the National Committee is not against billboard advertising, except where its use is a detriment to the community. In California, where our scenic highways are so important from an economic point of view, this is important.

LIFE CLASS TAUGHT BY FRANK MORLEY FLETCH ER AT SCHOOL OF THE ARTS, 130 EAST ORTEGA ST. (MR. FLETCHER AT EXTREME LEFT.)

ARTS ASSOCIATION, SANTA BARBARA

California has already made great strides along these lines and notable contribution was recently made by the Standard Oil Company of California. This company voluntarily withdrew from roadside advertising of a detrimental sort, and has received widespread commendation.

Certain of our merchants have followed the excellent example of the Standard Oil Company of California.

The City Manager of Santa Barbara is an advocate of the movement and the freedom of city property from obnoxious advertising is a credit to his activities.

An imposing list of prominent advertisers who have agreed to support the policies of the National Committee will be found in the enclosed report.

*If you know of other cities or corporations or individuals who have taken effective action along this line, please send notice of it to the Plans and Planting Committee, Community Arts Association.

---

*The Community Arts Association has printed a digest of the city, county and state regulations as to advertising which is available on request.

THE BEAUTIFUL BANK BUILDING OF THE COUNTY BANK. MYRON HUNT AND H. C. CHAMBERS, ARCHITECTS. UNDER CONSTRUCTION IS A BUILDING BY SOULE, MURPHY AND HASTINGS

ORENA STUDIOS, A FEATURE OF THE NEW STATE STREET, SANTA BARBARA. BELOW: SANTA FE BUILDING. SOULE, MURPHY AND HASTINGS, ARCH.

HIGHWAY ADVERTISING SIGNS

SOME time ago the Standard Oil Company (California) announced its intention of removing from the highways some 1200 advertising signs, and it did so forthwith. The company felt that the beauty of the highways of the Pacific Coast should not be marred by advertising signs and believed that the removal of Standard Oil signs would be in accord with public sentiment. This proved to be true to an astonishing degree. From the press, from great numbers of individuals, business firms, and civic organizations, the company received most commendatory communications, revealing a virile and deep-seated sentiment on this subject. These commendations came not only from California, Washington, Oregon, Nevada, and Arizona, where the signs were torn down, but from other parts of the country as well.

In the collection of expressions of approval which has accumulated the company believes it possesses sound evidence as to public opinion on an important public question, which may well be given to the public. In this booklet, therefore, there is published communications, or extracts from communications, from numerous public bodies representing a variety of phases of civic activities and from one or two individuals. The newspaper comment, consisting of favorable editorial expression from more than four hundred newspapers, is too voluminous for republication.

THE FIRST LITTLE WHITE PLASTERED SHOP ON STATE STREET, MRS. CRAIG DESIGNED IT AFTER PLANS BY HER HUSBAND WHO WAS THE ARCHITECT FOR THE GROUP OF THE DE LA GUERRA STUDIOS AND THE INSPIRATION FOR THIS MOVEMENT FOR BETTER TOWN ARCHITECTURE IN SANTA BARBARA. THROUGH THE DOORWAY OF THIS LITTLE SHOP ALL SANTA BARBARA MAY PASS INTO THE INNER COURT OF THE "STREET IN SPAIN," AN ACHIEVEMENT WHICH IS MAKING SANTA BARBARA FAMOUS FOR GOOD COMMERCIAL ARCHITECTURE

STATE STREET SANTA BARBARA

In sections where the beautiful architecture of J. Osborne Craig designed for the De La Guerra Studios has broken through from the key lots and back alleys where it originated into the main street of Santa Barbara, which is thus destined to be the most beautiful town in California. All the citizens of Santa Barbara are interested in making State Street a famous thoroughfare, but opinions differ and taste is a subtle thing. Is this not a case where an Allied Architects' Association should function? — M. U. S.

SOUTHLAND

The French War Debt

NO permanent good can be accomplished in the building up of more rational standards in International Relations until we considerably reduce the number of indiscreet reporters and irresponsible politicians. These two classes of public nuisances, on both sides of the Atlantic, have lately caused two great nations to blush with shame.

Since the Dawes Plan has brought an appreciable measure of peace and harmony in the heretofore much agitated camp of Reparations, the outstanding international question has become Inter-allied Indebtedness, and particularly the debt of France to the United States. Suddenly, without the least provocation, a shocking campaign of denunciation and suspicion has been launched by two or three over-zealous correspondents and a great number of our newspapers, even those which are generally accurate and thoughtful, have published comments and editorials of the most offensive character. It seems that the French Press has retaliated in kind. As a resultant, the question has been brought before the French Chamber of Deputies and the American Senate and in both arenas there has ensued a heated debate quite unworthy of the Franco-American tradition of friendship and of mutual confidence. A sad spectacle, indeed, those would-be heroes of the rostrum and the pen have given to the world when there was absolutely no foundation for such a controversy.

The leading financiers and statesmen of France and America, the masses of the people of both countries always sound at heart, are fully aware of their respective rights and responsibilities. The question is not one to be settled by busybody correspondents and amateur politicians. It is entirely a question of national honor, and of practical economics. Our trusted bankers and financiers, international experts as many of them have lately become, and not upstarts and demagogues, are our best council in this perplexing situation.

The entire discussion hinges upon two fundamental points which are quite clear to thoughtful men: the willingness of France to pay to the limit of her power without incuring economic ruin and bankruptcy, and the desire of America to make concessions within the limits set by fair play toward other nations and justice to her own citizens.

These two statements could be proved at great length, but our readers need no such demonstration. The writer prefers to relate here a bit of his own experience, which may throw more light on the problem than pages of argument. After the declaration of war, it became his privilege to visit every state in the Union, on behalf of the National Council of Defense, in order to explain to the American people the views and purposes of the great conflict. Nearly everywhere individuals expressed opinions, and civic bodies passed resolutions to the effect that the war debt of France should be cancelled in view of her sacrifices. The writer was requested repeatedly to convey these sentiments to the French Government and to the French people. This he did from time to time. What was the reply? The reply was invariably that while the French Government appreciated deeply these expressions of friendship and loyalty, still it could not but hold itself bound to repay its just debts, if for no other reasons at least in order to safeguard the prestige and credit of France.

What is the situation today? It may be conceded in the light of postwar judgments that the American people are no longer in favor of cancellation, but they are, even less, in favor of imposing harsh terms on the ally of yesterday and on the friend of always. Educated Americans know the difference between ordinary commercial debts and the French War Debt. No amount of sophistry or casuistry will blind them to the special character of that indebtedness incurred in a long struggle for a common cause. True Americans are not asking themselves "How much can we get?" but rather "How much can we afford to take?" "What judgment will our children pass upon us when they read these two great chapters of Franco-American cooperation, that of 1781 and that of 1918?" It is our honor which is at stake, not our pocket book.

Similarly with France. France cannot repudiate her indebtedness, nor can she gracefully seek cancellation. In justice to her impoverished people she should accept and even ask for the easiest terms that the United States can consistently grant, but no more. Her honor, her credit, her prestige in the world are worth to her more than four billions of dollars.

America is willing, nay eager, to be fair and generous. France is willing, anxious to honor her signature. That is all there is to this vexed problem. The terms of this huge transaction must be worked out by financiers, who alone have the competence and the experience. Even they can but offer tentative and temporary solutions; for no one can foretell the eventual consequences, in the field of trade and of finance, of such enormous transfers of goods and money. In any case, let us insist upon international courtesy, so that our well deserved reputation of generosity, fair play and business sense may not be impaired by inconsiderate journalists or apprentice statesmen.

PAUL PERIGORD.

Our Tournament of Roses

ONE of the dominant traits of the American people is their individualism. We seek to enlist the cooperation of others only when it is quite evident that we can no longer carry the burden unaided. We are eager to retain the initiative, anxious to preserve exclusive credit for our undertakings even, sometimes, at the cost of greater efficiency and of larger usefulness.

What is true of individuals is likewise true of our cities and states. Indeed we carry that very spirit into our national government and the most striking consequence of it is our boasted isolation, our unfettered sovereignty for which both we and the world have, during the last six years, paid a huge price.

Pasadena offered in the last New Year's celebration an interesting illustration of that attempt to continue to do alone something which could be done with much greater success on a wide basis of inter-city cooperation. The Tournament of Roses has carried far and wide the fame of Pasadena. This year the festivities drew the largest crowd in their history, approximately five hundred thousand people. To anyone who approaches the problem in a detached spirit of investigation, it is quite evident that this festival has grown far beyond the power of a single city of the size of Pasadena to handle successfully and to utilize to the best advantage.

The Pasadena Tournament of Roses is developing into a southern California Tournament of Roses, truly to take place in Pasadena, as of yore, but which in order to remain a distinctive feature of our region must become a cooperative enterprise.

Pasadena has acquired the right to that day, for during 35 years she has by her untiring efforts and undaunted confidence made known beyond the frontiers of the United States the beauty and attractions of the Southland at a time of the year when the largest part of the country is blanketed with snow. No more efficient way could have been found to advertise our skies, our land and our art. Pasadena has served the Southland well.

Now that the Tournament has grown into such metropolitan proportions, Pasadena must be broadminded enough to invite outside assistance, and the neighbor cities of the South should be far-sighted enough to offer their enthusiastic and sincere cooperation.

That cooperation can be manifested in many ways,—primarily by avoiding anything which would seriously detract from the character of the occasion, for example, through competitive events of an unusual character, secondly by making such contributions to the floral parade which will reflect the resources, the beauty, the artistic taste and the originality of neighboring communities, thirdly, by insuring the success of the Tournament through an efficient handling of traffic and publicity.

OPINION

In return, Pasadena should take adequate measures to provide for the comfort and entertainment of her host of visitors, generally through a competent and up-to-date organization, and particularly through the early completion of her stadium so as to make it unquestionably the largest available in the Southwest for inter-university contests.

Here is an institution of great value, firmly established, widely known, its appeal, its attractiveness, its signficance, have well nigh reached their limits unless southern California recognizes the opportunity it affords to make, through Pasadena, a genuine contribution to the artistic and aesthetic life of our nation. PAUL PERIGORD.

Significance of Our Service Clubs

SERVICE Clubs are these associations of professional and business men who gather weekly at the luncheon hour in a wholesome atmosphere of fellowship and helpfulness. Some of their names are familiar, Rotary, Kiwanis, Optimists, Lions and others. Outsiders frequently wonder what they truly stand for, what they really accomplish. Are they not merely fads, or, at most, organizations for the promotion of selfish interests in the community, and in their larger activities are they not guided by ambitious organizers and unpractical visionaries? In any case, can they be taken seriously by thoughtful and busy men?

A closer study would quickly convince the critics of the genuine worth of these organizations. If democracy is to be a success, it will be so only through the education of the majority in the principles of service—service to our fellows, to our community, to our state, to the nation, to the world. That task of educating a whole country is enormous. Education does not stop at high school graduation; it would more fittingly be said to begin there. It is a life-long process. It cannot be carried out except through small groups which will gather, here and there, for the consideration, the adoption and the furtherance of the highest standards of individual and collective action. The Service Clubs are one of the answers to that crying need.

We cannot in a short article do justice to their program; but will follow with some of the principal contributions they make, in a later editorial. PAUL PERIGORD.

Noblesse Americaine

WE, too, have our peerage, our noblesse, our aristocracy, a genuine product of our land. A study of social statistics regarding American extravagance, greed, intemperance, general lawlessness tends to render us pessimistic about the quality of our civilization. But how quickly we shall be freed from discouragement and alarm if we but look about us for evidences of genuine goodness, sterling honesty, vigorous manhood and refined womanhood. We read statistics and we grow concerned; we look about us and we are filled with pride at the sight of the virtue, the intelligence, the idealism of some of our fellow citizens.

Truly there is little need of reading the annals of the past in search of inspiration to a higher life. There live in our midst men and women in no way inferior to many of the saintly or heroic characters of the past held up to our imitation. Some of them reach great heights of vision, achievement and altruism. Moreover, these higher peaks of moral excellence are not exceptional departures from a generally lower type, they inevitably rest upon a larger base, a mass of men and women of high average in intelligence and virtue, of which they are the finer flowering. This last month we have mourned the passing of one of these embodiments of moral excellence, Dr. Norman Bridge.

Much has already been said and written in eulogy of Doctor Bridge. The distinction he attained in the medical profession, his intellectual gifts, his business success, his unfailing courtesy and kindness, his generosity have all been eloquently recalled. Today we would like to emphasize particularly his vision in the field of education.

Doctor Bridge has deserved to live long in the memory of his fellow citizens, but, alas, in our busy existence the best and greatest men can hold our attention but a short time. The fame of Doctor Bridge, however, will endure for generations because his name will remain connected with what promises to become one of the most widely and favorably known centers of scientific research, The California Institute of Technology.

The United States too readily borrows its culture and scientific thought from Europe. It would be most unfortunate if we were to become reconciled to the wholesale importation of the fundamental elements of our cultural and artistic life as we seemingly are to the importation of Grand Opera. An unlimited supply of talent in all fields of human endeavor lies dormant in the minds and hearts of the American people. That talent must be awakened. It cannot be awakened, however, unless we create an environment which will provide the adequate stimulus. In the scientific sphere that environment consists primarily of appropriate equipment. Then, that equipment must be vitalized by the presence of one or several truly creative men, and these will not fail to engender creative men of a like type. Creative men are produced where creative men exist, as education is primarily a question of association and contact.

The penetrating vision of Dr. George E. Hale, who brought to California the Mount Wilson Observatory of the Carnegie Foundation must be credited with the laying here of a solid foundation for a scientific center of unsurpassed promise. It was soon felt that the great problem of man's interpretation of nature and his eventual control of her forces was fundamentally one. The avenue of approach might be different, but a close and loyal cooperation between the investigators in every domain was the best way to obtain rapid and reliable results. To derive therefore the greatest possible profit from the Mount Wilson Observatory, which was anxiously watching the experiments which go on in the 'cosmic crucibles" of the laboratories of Nature, it became necessary to establish here other centers of research of equal excellence in physics and chemistry.

Dr. Hale and the Trustees of the Institute made sure of the men first and then concentrated upon the equipment. They brought Doctor Millikan from Chicago and Doctor Noyes from Boston. These outstanding scientists could not fail to be magnets for some fare-seeing Moecenas. Doctor Bridge, although already engaged in many enterprises of a philanthropic character quickly saw the possibilities of the California Institute. His generosity permitted the immediate erection of a laboratory of Physics. He thereby supplied a great scientist with tools worthy of his ability and made possible contributions to scientific research which will not fail to enrich our knowledge and increase our power.

The workmen have hardly left the building, but the Norman Bridge Laboratory is known the world over and shelters teachers and students who come from regions as remote as India and Norway.

Dr. Bridge has created a fine spiritual monument in the hearts of all of us, a monument the stones of which are respect, admiration, gratitude and love, but that monument cannot outlive us. It will pass out with us into the Great Beyond. The monument which will continue to speak the honored name of one of the noblest citizens of southern California will be the Norman Bridge Laboratory of Physics of the California Institute. PAUL PERIGORD.

Jewels

JUST a dew drop on grass or leaf; just some rain drops remaining on the leaves and grass after a shower; and sunshine touches them and our eyes are gladdened by the brilliant colors of the spectrum. They are blue; they are green; they are yellow; they are orange; they are red, as the angle of reflection changes; they are beautiful beyond our power to describe, and flash before our eyes in settings more beautiful than any of gold, or of platinum, or of silver.

Evanescent? Yes, but we can have them often—these anybody's and everybody's jewels, fashioned by the greatest of artists—Nature. JAMES H. RICHARDSON.

CALIFORNIA CHILDREN AT WORK AND PLAY

Albert Hiller, Photographer

ON THE VERANDAH AND LAWN OF THE VALLEY HUNT CLUB, SHOWING THE SMALL SONS AND DAUGHTERS ASSEMBLED FOR A CHRISTMAS PARTY AT WHICH RADIO WAS VITALIZED IN THE PERSON OF UNCLE JOHN AND FOUR OF HIS NICE STORY-TELLING CHILDREN

OUT-DOOR CLASS IN ELEMENTARY DRAWING AT 936 SANTA BARBARA STREET, SANTA BARBARA, TAUGHT BY MRS. JOHN FREDERIC MURPHY. FERNAND LUNGREN, CHAIRMAN OF SCHOOL COMMITTEE, ON LEFT. PHOTOGRAPH TAKEN JANUARY 20, 1925.

POINTS ON ROAD HACKS AND PARK HACKS FOR THE LOS ANGELES NATIONAL HORSE SHOW

By P. M. F.

TWO types of three-gaited saddle horses are seen in the horse-shows of today, park hacks and road hacks. The park classes are usually won by an American saddler, a type originated in Kentucky and now bred and shown all over the United States. This breed is not well known abroad, and when Englishmen are invited to judge in our shows they do not think so highly of this type as do the Americans. The road classes, both here and abroad, are won by thoroughbreds or horses very nearly thoroughbred.

The conformation desired is the same in both classes, namely, a small and intelligent head, a slender throat, a graceful and proportionate neck, sloping shoulders, high withers, a short back, a well ribbed out barrel, strong rounded quarters, and stright, clean legs. In the legs are two differences in the desired points. The road hack, like the hunter and the polo pony, should have larger joints and shorter pasterns than the show horse. This is because his work is much harder, and long pasterns, while adding softness and elasticity to the gaits, are more liable to strain and inflammation. The pasterns should be sloping and never upright. The park hack is just what his name implies and is rarely asked to work for more than two hours over smooth bridle paths or in a tanbark ring. The road hack, on the other hand, must be able to go long distances over rough country, soft or hard roads, fields or trails. Both should possess light mouths and perfect manners.

The carriage of the park hack must be proud and spirited, and he must go with a great deal of action. These are the greatest points of difference between the two, for the road hack should not have much action nor carry a high head. The up-and-down trot, so popular in the ring, is tiring to both horse and rider if kept up for a long time. The road hack's eyes should be about level with his withers, and his nose should be slightly extended that he may breath with ease, for the arched neck cramps the windpipe. He must also be able to look his ground over and avoid rocks and holes, pitfalls which do not enter into the daily life of his more stylish brother. The walk of both types should be fast and springy and show very little body motion. The trot must be regular and true in line, the canter graceful and collected. The road hack should be able to gallop with loose rein without running, and to run when asked without undue excitement.

It seems rather a pity there are not more classes for road hacks—for his is the type understood by the riding public. Perhaps if fine specimens of this kind were more often seen in the ring, we amateurs who are eager to show in a small way would buy good road hacks and show them, instead of allowing the dealers to palm off second and third rate park hacks, with the well known phrases "hard to beat," "sure to be in the ribbons," "able to win in any company," "fiine prospect," etc. The man or woman who rides every day and takes pride in possessing a nice horse can rarely compete with the owners of large stables who are able to spend freely year after year, buying the choicest animals and improving their stock. But in the road classes we can compete, for these horses may be bought for moderate sums and their qualities improve with daily use.

MILADY MINTON, CHAMPION THREE-GAITED MARE, WINNER OF FIFTY-SEVEN BLUES, INCLUDING SIX CHAMPIONSHIPS, IN TWO YEARS. OWNED BY OLD HICKORY MOUNTAIN STABLES.

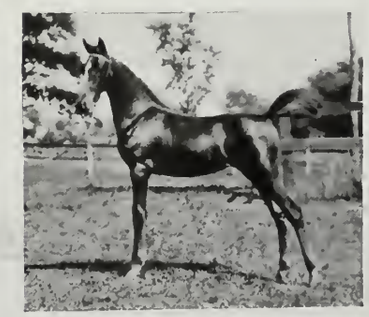
In America the trot of the road horse is considered his most important gait, while in England the canter comes first. This difference of opinion is doubtless due to the fact that most American trails and bridle paths are hard, while those in England are soft and springy. Then, too, the English are a hunting nation and are fond of galloping; they ride for recreation and to relax, and it must be admitted that the majority of Americans ride for exercise. It is well to remember this point if an Englishman is judging, for the ribbons may go differently from one's expectations. Then there are judges who think there is only one saddle horse in the world—the thoroughbred. They seem to think of other types as ornamental, but not useful, and greatly lacking in quality. Others would not consider a thoroughbred and think of him as a temperamental beast fitted only to race or hunt, and not possessing sufficient action to win in any walk-trot class. It is all in the game, of course, but these prejudices must be remembered by those in the grandstand who like to anticipate the judge's decisions.

Exhibitors in this country usually find out who is to judge before entering their horses and will not show a Kentucky type before a "thoroughbred man" or a thoroughbred before a man who prefers the American saddler.

It is of interest to note that the requirements of a first class park hack are very little changed since the days of our great grandfathers. I find that Mr. Sargo an eminent dealer of London in 1850 is quoted by S. Sidney in his Book of the Horse, as saying, "The park hack should have, with perfection of graceful form, graceful action, an exquisite mouth, and perfect manners. He must be intelligent—amongst horses senseless brutes are legion—for without intelligence, even with fine form and action, he can never be pleasant to ride. Thoroughbred is to be preferred; and if not quite, as nearly thoroughbred as possible, of any color except mealy or fouly marked. White marks often much improve, sometimes quite disfigure a horse.

"The head should be of the finest oriental type; the neck well arched but not too long; the shoulders light at the points, long, and grown well into the back. The loins should be accurately arched, and the quarters level and nicely rounded, not drooping abruptly toward the tail (like many capital hunters, famous race horses, and useful road hacks). The mane and tail should be full, straight, without the least suspicion of a curl and every hair as soft as silk; four clean, well shaped, well placed legs, the pasterns rather longer than would be chosen for a hunter. From such a form action pleasant to the rider may be confidently expected, the paces agreeable for even the commonest observer to follow.



"The walk of a park hack should be perfection—fast, springy; the legs moving as it were independently of the body, without apparent exertion with all the certainty of machinery, the head keeping in its right place the neck gracefully curved, the tail displaying a full flag gracefully keeping time with the footfalls. From the walk he should be able to bound into any pace, in perfectly balanced action, that the rider may require."

The grandstand must remember blemishes and unsoundness in picking their favorite; for an unsightly fault may not appear to them.

ROYAL SPORT, AGE FOUR MONTHS, SIRE KING'S SPORT, DAM PURINA BELL BY DICK TAYLOR, OWNED AND BRED BY MISS CLARA PECK, AMATEUR SPORTSWOMAN OF REDBANK, NEW JERSEY. THIS COLT SHOWS HIS FINE BREEDING IN HIS NATURAL CARRIAGE AND IS ALREADY DEVELOPED ENOUGH TO SHOW CONFORMATION AND QUALITY. SPORT MODEL AT EXTREME RIGHT OF PAGE LOOKS LIKE A BETTER BUILT LITTLE CHAP THAN THE COLT ABOVE. NOTE HIS SHORT BACK LINE, AND SLOPING SHOULDERS AND WELL PLACED LEGS.

SPORT MODEL, AGE THREE MONTHS, SIRE KING'S SPORT, DAM MOONGLOW BY MOUNTAIN DARE. A SHOW PROSPECT OF 1929.

CENTER: KING'S SPORT, FINE TYPE OF AMERICAN SADDLE SIRE OWNED BY MISS PECK. THROUGH AN ERROR IN LAST MONHT'S ISSUE OF CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND THE CAPTIONS UNDER PICTURES OF KING'S SPORT AND MR. BEN MEYER'S DAUGHERTHY DARE WERE INTERCHANGED. IN 1922 KING'S SPORT WON THE FAMOUS KENTUCKY STAKE FOR FIVE-GAITED SADDLE HORSES BUT IS NOW BEING USED AS A THREE-GAITED SIRE.

THE ARCHITECTURAL CLUB OF LOS ANGELES

MONTHLY BULLETIN

OFFICERS

J. E. Garnsey, President
Roy H. Kelley, Vice-President
H. O. Sexsmith, Secretary
Paul W. Penland, Treasurer

DIRECTORS

J. E. Stanton, Director
H. C. Chambers, Director
Walter S. Davis, Director

SMALL HOUSE COMPETITION

A MOST interesting letter was received from Theodore Koetzli of the Small House Plan Service of the Architectural Club. We are sorry we haven't space to print it in full. He is asking that a committee of the club be designated to conduct a competition among club members for a small house. One of the daily newspapers is to be interested in the competition and give it publicity in its Sunday edition. The real estate men are to be approached with a request to furnish a lot upon which to build the house or houses which win the competition. Building material men will also be given an opportunity to contribute toward suitable prizes. Moving pictures will be taken daily during the erection of the house and will be used in an educational film on good and bad design in domestic architecture.

Mr. Koetzli says, "The idea has been carried out by several newspapers in the East with great interest on the part of the public. A record was published of the progress from day to day in the form of a continued story. All the steps necessary to build a home were covered: the selection of a lot, escrow proceedings, selection of plans, selection of contractor, etc. All this with the moving picture accompanying it, we believe would be fully as interesting, as much of the matter now thrown on the screen." Prominent men in all the fields affected have already been interviewed and their enthusiasm for the idea constitutes a practically unanimous endorsement. The matter will be taken up by the Executive Committee of the club and there will probably be something of interest to report on it at the February meeting.

Lost or Strayed

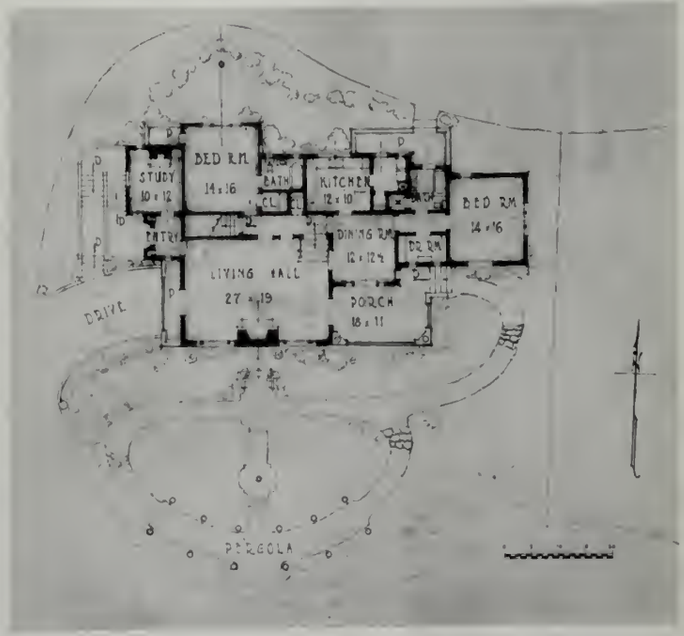
Several very valuable drawings, the property of Morgan, Walls, Clements, were taken from the U. S. C. Senior drafting room after the last club meeting. The drawings were the only design record of a building about to go into the working drawing stage. The man who took them has been recognized and, we are certain, did not realize their value when he walked off with them. If he will return them to the Allied Drafting room office, no questions will be asked.

FIRST DRAWING FOR THE FRIDAY MORNING CLUB, ALLISON AND ALLISON, ARCHITECT

THE January meeting was a joint meeting with the Architectural Society of the University of Southern California as hosts. C. M. Morehead, president of the society, conducted the ceremonies, which, to say the least, started off with a bang. Four of the students gave a hair-raising one-act—we can't find a name for it—which was announced as a Russian tragedy. The tense human interest and "Secks apeel" were overwhelming. We found ourselves in a clam-like chill when the villain finally ran off with the highly colored heroine.

When things cooled off a bit, Mr. Morehead introduced Mr. John Vawter, consulting architect for the Board of Education. Mr. Vawter gave a most scholarly talk on the "Unity of Design." One of the most interesting statements made by Mr. Vawter related to his investigations of the stresses in the vaults, buttresses, and piers of the French Gothic cathedrals. He said: "The Gothic structures, although designed without knowledge of statics, are found to check almost perfectly with mathematical design. This conclusive evidence of the close relation between aesthetic design and structural necessity is startling. The Gothic builders had a natural sense of structural design which fitted perfectly with their aesthetic sense." He concluded his talk with a plea for closer harmony between architect and engineer.

THE following note was handed to us with the request that it be published in the Club bulletin.



"We have a great many calls for double bungalows, two story duplexes, flats and courts. Club members who have plans of such structures which they can place in stock are urged to file them with the Plan Service. In the last few months we have had an increase of about 50 per cent in our daily attendance, which means that the building public are becoming more and more interested in plans of architectural merit. With this reviving interest it is necessary that we have a large and varied assortment of attractive designs to fill their needs. We believe the designers will profit by submitting designs and are certain the public will get better plans than can be had anywhere else in the city at a like price."

Club members are urged to visit the Plan Service in the Metropolitan Building. An interesting group of "plan hunters" can always be found there.

The Small House Plan Service,
Sixth Floor, Metropolitan Bldg. Los Angeles

A HOUSE, By LLOYD RALLY, Architect

THIS house, on a Hollywood hill top, commanding a view to the south over the entire city and a hill view to the northwest, was influenced by the outlook and the prevailing winds.

The approach is from the south, and the garage in the basement, and a sheltered basement entrance gives easy access for the returning owner while visitors enter through the arched door to the living room level with the study at the left.

The south porch commands the principal view and is sheltered from the cooler winds.

The rest of the house is on a higher level than the lofty vaulted living room, which has open arches to the passage and dining room.

The guest room with its view of the highest hills over Hollywoodland has its separate bath and porch.

The owners' room, complete in its appointments, enjoys three exposures and the morning sun.

The owners, whose wise preferences were followed, feel that the orientation and arrangement are perfect.

CALIFORNIA HOMES AND GARDENING MANUAL

FROM A BREAKFAST ROOM WINDOW

By C. H. Benjamin

THERE are two windows to our breakfast room, one looking west across the garden to the Verdugo Hills, the view from the other bounded by the drooping branches of the pepper trees across the Place. And just outside each of these windows, some six feet away and on a level with the sill, is a birds' lunch counter. Just a level board surmounting a slender post and bounded as to its outer edges by a low parapet. The menu set forth for the guests is of the simplest, but varied. The "piece de resistance," a solid chunk of suet wound with twine and securely fastened to the board with a single spike. The spike is a necessary precaution, for a loose piece of suet would be too much of a temptation for the larger birds.

Scattered about the surface of the table is a mixture of ground bread, chick feed and canary seed, the greater the variety the more species of visitors. The addition of rape and canary seed brought three new birds within a day, A shallow saucer of water complete the list. Not far away is a large bird bath, but our birds are fastidious, taking their baths in the early morning and drinking only from the saucers with their meals.

And now the scene is set ,let us watch the play. A careful approach to the window at sunrise reveals a stray Audubon warbler perched gingerly on the edge of the counter, glancing warily from side to side and now and then snipping a seed, about one snip to four glances. He knows that he is the smallest member of the community and that he must make hay before the sun shines.

A sudden flutter of wings; Audubon has vanished and in his stead we see the plump body and the ruddy crest of Rufus, the rufous-crowned sparrow. A handsome bird and perfectly conscious of the fact, as he eats rapidly and carelessly, paying little attention to his surroundings. Perhaps his mate joins him and they feed contentedly together, while Audubon gazes wistfully from a telephone wire overhead. But Rufus' meal is a brief one; another flutter of wings and the scene changes again. White Cap, the white-crowned sparrow now makes his appearance on the stage and struts about like the swashbuckler that he is.

His brilliant crest of black and white, his plump gray breast and his showy uniform all bespeak the aristocrat of the sparrow clan.

He disdains eating around the edges and plants himself in the middle, where the grain is thickest and eats complacently. Presently another White Cap joins him, or perhaps Donna, the song sparrow, in her dress of simple gray with lace at throat and sleeves, ventures to stand on one edge and pick a crumb now and then.

White Cap tolerates her but encourages no intimacy, perhaps because of the presence of his lady. And now Donna has silently stolen away and, perched at the very top of a slender spray, is giving melodious thanks to the Giver of every good and perfect gift. But a new arrival takes her place, a sleek and slender bird with every feather in place, a ruddy head and breast and a stout bill. Redpoll, the house finch is not so gaudy as his brother of the purple, but he is well worth looking at. Taking a corner remote from White Cap, he proceeds to fill himself incontinently. His stout bill cracks the seeds so loudly that you can almost hear them and all is fish that comes to his net. Casually he advances towards the center of the arena where the food is more plentiful. White Cap notices this and decides to assert his authority. Assuming an air of proprietorship, he struts towards Redpoll and warns him off. The finch has no idea of retreating, but spreads his feet wide apart, lowers his bullet head and opens his stubby bill, looking the image of a bantam fighter.

In another minute the contest is on and, amid a whir of wings, the birds rise in the air, striking and parrying. A feather or two flutters down and it is over. A bird settles upon the table and resumes his interrupted meal. It is the finch. The sparrow has retreated to a branch of the acacia to readjust his dishevelled feathers and reassume his dignity. Bur Redpoll has established once for all his standing in the community.

And now Antony, the brown towhee, comes quietly to feed and pushes aside any smaller bird that is in his way. He is not pugnacious, but his size and weight command respect, and soon he is left alone to finish his meal. He presently drops to the ground in search of greater variety than is afforded by the lunch counter, and the sparrows return and resume their bickering.

Out of a clear sky comes a tumult of black and white and lavender, as with a characteristic flourish Sir Mocker comes to his late breakfast. The finches and the sparrows disappear as if by magic, but Sir Mocker knows that he has an audience in hiding, and before he eats he struts about the table, drooping his wings and moving his head from side to side. His eating is done with a certain affectation and display which minded me to call him Sir Piercie Shaften, that mirror of fantastic courtesy depicted by Walter Scott.

So engrossed was I in these thoughts that I failed to notice his disappearance from the scene, but when I looked again the King of Arcady held the stage in the person of the California thrasher. His size and the truculent curve of his beak were sufficient to intimidate any less formidable individual. As he eats at one table he calls a simple note and her Majesty the Queen comes to eat beside him. With Oriental nonchalance he pushes her off the perch and, taking the hint, her Majesty repairs to the other table. And, so, for a space, these are the whole show. There is not much left on the tables after the royal pair have finished.

All this time a solitary bird has been sitting on a nearby wire, occasionally turning his head to see what is doing. He is even more fancifully attired than Sir Mocker, in a costume of silver and black, but his square head set solidly on a short neck, and his strong beak are unlike those of his rival. If Sir Mocker is a courtier, Sir Butcher, the shrike, is a soldier. He flies down to one of the tables and eats slowly and stolidly, noticing no one. He has not driven the others, for he does not need to, they fly on his approach. His reputation is bad, but birds doubtless exaggerate as do humans.

Perhaps he encourages the gossip to save himself trouble. Be that as it may, he walks alone, like the two-gun man of the western novel. After his departure comes a quiet little gentleman in a sober suit of gray set off with a beautifully embroidered shirt front, Hermit, the thrush. He eats daintily, glancing about him with a bright, round eye, and anon cocking up his head and tilting up his slender bill, while a gentle quiver stirs his wings. We had misjudged him, for as we often saw him scurrying under the hedge, we thought him too aristocratic or too timid to eat at our table. No, he was merely unobservant, as his horizon was limited by his lowly habits. When he had by chance discovered the food supply aloft, he came regularly and was not at all averse to driving away the sparrows and eating by himself. A well set-up, debonair little gentleman.

Meantime we had noticed an interesting bit of byplay on the garden path. Queen, the thrasher, was solemnly digging up a mixed assortment of seeds and bugs, when Sir Mocker came tripping along and decided to drive her Majesty away from his feeding ground. He drooped his wings and then raising them again, he hopped up and down like a boy skipping rope. As she paid not the slightest attention, he went through the performance again and without result. She was as phlegmatic as a Dutch queen. Just as he was preparing for another demonstration, the King descended on the scene and Sir Mocker made an ignominious retreat. Whether this was another example of the "eternal triangle" deponent saith not.

And now: "The tumult and the shouting dies, the captains and the kings depart." Quietly and unobtrusively Audubon, our first visitor, has returned, and like Ruth, is gleaning after the others have gone. And there we will leave him to get what comfort he may. The prologue and the epilogue are his. What more would one have?

Altadena, California,
January 7, 1925.

Please mention California Southland to its advertisers when you can.

THE CALIFORNIA SCHOOL OF GARDENING FOR WOMEN

Offers a two years course in practical gardening, including the propagation and care of flowers, shrubs, fruit and vegetables, the laying out and management of small gardens as well as large estates. At Hayward, California (one hour by train or motor from San Francisco). Principal: Miss J. Walrond-Skinner, N.D., Hort., F.R.H.S. Tuition $250 per annum. Term begins Jan. 15, 1925. Only six students will be taken the first year. Write for information and make application now to the Principal, Hayward, California.

T. W. Mather Co. Inc.
PASADENA, CAL.
Dry Goods
Women's & Children's Wearing Apparel
Colorado Street at Marengo

S. M. Wershow
LADIES TAILOR
Riding Habits, Coats and Suits
Furs Stored and Repaired
7066 Hollywood Boulevard
Hollywood
GRanit 4254

R·K·EARLE
CONSULTING ENGINEER
LANDSCAPE ARCHITECTURE
PRIVATE ESTATES·GOLF COURSES
1308 PERSHING SQUARE BLDG.
LOS ANGELES
VANDIKE 3681

ARTS AND CRAFTS . . ETCHINGS BY LOREN BARTON

PRINTS FOR THE SMALL HOUSE

By NELL BROOKER MAYHEW

I LOOKED at the little desert picture above the mantel—a real picture in the tiny living-room of two working girls.

"Our picture has given joy to so many people," one of them said. "No one ever waits in this room even for a moment, who does not say something lovely about it,—even the insurance man and the bill collectors. We feel that it is money well invested, for the good it has done to people."

"But real pictures are expensive," some one will say.

Well, perhaps one should not care if they are,—since also a radio, a piano, an automobile,—are expensive, and yet they are likely to appear in a small house as in a large one. One buys what one really wants. It is really wanting it that counts. The editor of an art magazine was telling me of a printer who had each month helped to print the magazine. He had looked at the reproductions of real pictures in its pages and read about the artists until he wanted to possess a real picture. He came to the editor for advice as to where to obtain one. Gladly he purchased in monthly installments a picture which becomes the rare possession in that humble home. Two hundred dollars well spent.

Very simple should be the furnishing of a small living-room—a comfortable place to sit and read, a table and books, and a real picture on the walls. The printer purchased a little oil painting, but it is prints for the small home that I should like to talk about a little. In the first place no oil painting can be more exquisite than a beautiful etching or block-print. Anyone who has informed himself at all about pictures, loves an etching, the aristocrat among pictures. The possessor of an etching at once comes into the class of patrons,—those happy folks whom Lewis Hind has so cleverly described in his most readable book, "Art and I." A real print has an air of elegance which we associate with lovely old mahogany and things rare.

It is beautiful anywhere,—in a bedroom, above the breakfast table, or, if it is a small print, close beside the cherished writing table or desk, where the owner can enjoy its delicate beauty at close range. If it is a larger, bolder type of print, then it is charming alone as the center of interest on a large wall space in the little living-room. Or it is lovely above the table, with a vase of flowers which echo the color in the picture, if it be a color-print.

Such exquisite color prints now in many good art stores!! The colors as ethereal as in a pastel,—pastel, the medium that artists have so longed to use, but have been barred because it is so perishable! But a color-print is a permanent joy with all the beautiful quality of a pastel.

A print, too, is a hand-made thing, made by the artist with all the care and joy with which he makes a far more expensive oil painting. Like the velvet of a Persian rug are the colors. This pastel effect is achieved through the pressure of the etching-press.

Not anyone but could choose for his little home one or two lovely prints, if only he knew the joy of making friends with real pictures.

ARTS AND CRAFTS

By MARION HUGUS CLARK

WE were sitting in the little gold room of a certain Studio Home. On the outside, the house and garden is like the cover page of a magazine: Boxed hedges, brilliant flowers, a riot of bird calls, a pointed roof on which swings a weather-vane bird that only an artist and a craftsman could imagine and execute. Friend, you would love that house and when, in his lecture, the kind owner tells you that pigment is a physical thing; light is a spiritual thing, you breathe thankfully in that peaceful and happy interior. The little gold room, papered in Chinese tea box paper is just off the studio proper.

We were recalling the words of Ralph Helm Johannot in his talk to the Arts and Crafts Society. Mr. Donaldson said: "Mr. Johannot was not so rhetorical as Mr. Purcell. He described very simply what he had experienced in America from the Arts and Crafts viewpoint in the past fifteen years."

(Mr. Johannot was a pupil of Dow's. I behe succeeded him at Pratt.)

"The Boston society," said Mr. Johannot, "is the same now as it was fifteen years ago. The man who went in as manager then is still at its head." My mind pictured shelves of silver in Colonial pattern.

"Well," said Mr. Donaldson, "it illustrates the negative quality of the jury system."

"Yes," I answered, "your standard is safely colonial, as in this case where the Society is a one-man affair."

"Now, contrasted with Boston, we have Detroit," said Mr. Johannot. "In the Detroit Arts and Crafts one finds the finest collection of beautiful things in this country. If I had anything to buy, I would rather buy it there than any other place."

GEORGE ARLIS AS DISRAELI BY LOREN BARTON

When a teacher of color and design like Johannot says a thing like that, we Arts and Crafters listen.

"It is the result, I believe," continued our speaker," of Miss Plumb's way of handling the problem of selection." Her method is to go to Chicago, if she learns that they have anything of beauty, to New York, Los Angeles, the Kentucky Mountains, Europe and search for the beautiful."

The writer does not know the secretary of the Detroit society, but one can picture her with Robert Louis Stevenson wide eyes. "The world is so full of a number of things," we'll just take a little trip and find some for our society.

"Detroit has the jury system just as Boston has, so we know that the jury system will work."

For the information of the lay member of any Arts and Crafts Society, the jury system has been adopted generally to safeguard the standards of the societies endeavoring to hold their members up to a high level of efficiency in beauty and craftsmanship. "Passing the jury" is, of course, equivalent to saying that the Craft Society approves of the work submitted and are glad to have such work sponsored by the Society to which you belong.

Mr. Johannot spoke to quite an extent about this question of art standard. "We have had to live down what the Arts and Crafts seemed formerly to stand for. The present standards are the result of greater skill and it is necessary to keep it that way in order to hold the best workers."

The Architectural Club holds this high standard, I have been told. The client first. The best standards of his profession second, and last, the worker, himself.

SERENDIPITY ANTIQUE SHOP

By ELLEN LEECH

IN ANY community an artistic possession, whether it be a studio, a home, a museum, or a shop, is a civic asset, but like other assets frequently remains unappreciated. We pass by such a grant unknowingly while really yearning for beauty and for objects to stimulate the imagination.

At least half the travelers of the world invariably visit the museums of the countries foreign to their own, studying, and thus reliving the past periods of history, picturing actual occurences as happening among the supplied surroundings. Any child can develop a decided interest in history which herctofore has been merely a series of dull, meaningless words, if the child is brought to a consciousness of the realness of the words he has been reading, the portent of the fact that the people of history lived and had their lives set among just the same material surroundings that hedge us in, living, sleeping, and dining quarters, more or less elaborate as the period demanded. There has always been fashions in furniture, just as now, and at different periods in English history varying fashions prevailed. When Chippendale reigned no other dictator might say as to the fashioning of the pieces in the magnificent and formal old drawing rooms of London, and when this was followed by a taste for Sheraton, most of the homes were denuded of their once cherished old rosewood and painted pieces and given over to lighter things. If this were not the case we, in this new world, today, would rarely have the opportunity of seeing examples of the work of the different artists and craftsmen of centuries past.

It has been suggested that Pasadena is in need of a museum, and the day may come when it will be, but it is hardly here now, because if the need were there, and the demand great enough, every citizen would already have seen the collection of good antique things assembled by Bradford Perin and exhibited in the Serendipity Antique Shop on South Los Robles, near Colorado.

Even if things equally as good could be found in a museum, no museum could give up so much space to the proper display of the collection. In the Serendipity shop the rooms are carefully arranged,—the furniture placed just as it would conform with the house in which it should ultimately rest. This particularly applies to the drawing room, and the dining room. Another room is delightfully quaint and is a sublimated reproduction of the kind of antique shop which may be found now in provincial England. Another two rooms are purely Spansih, the formal Spanish type, with the most extraordinarily beautiful tiled ceiling, brought in its entirety from a dismantled house in Seville.

Mr. Perin is an artist, a painter, and he likes to talk about these lovely things and explain his sheer good luck, as he terms it, in having found these old tapestries, furniture not only of artistic but historical value, old brasses, hand wrought iron, Delft ware, china and porcelains.

Many artists who have delightful things in their studios which the public enjoy seeing, keep open house on Sunday, or some selected day, and ask their friends and to-be-friends to come in and share these pleasures with them, and now that Mr. Perin invites us at all times and on all days to come in and browse, study, or merely look and delight, do let us go, and very often make the shop a morning or afternoon objective.

HOW TO BUILD YOUR HOUSE IN CALIFORNIA

ILLUSTRATED BY A HOUSE BY R. E. COATE, Architect

By M. U. SEARES

Photographs by MARGARET CRAIG

HAVING chosen a lot in the fairest portion of Pasadena, where the lovely liveoaks are waiting to make lace-like shadows on our plastered walls and the view from each window will keep us contented at home, we look for an architect who will be sympathetic with our own ideas and in whom we have confidence.

If we are experts in our own business profession or homecraft, we know the necessity of employing an architect and we seek one whose experience in California has given him a knowledge of what is appropriate in California.

The Southland of California has become famous for the beauty and appropriateness of its home tracts of land, and the best way to make up one's mind on the vital subjects of situation, architect and design is to drive leisurely around the district to which circumstances may limit us and to study the work of subdivider and architect on the spot.

We have chosen for this article the house built by Mr. Roland E. Coate, architect, for Mr. and Mrs. O. Nicholas Gabriel, in that portion of San Marino where Rosalind Road meets Oak Grove Avenue, and for the benefit of inquiring friends will follow this wise procedure in a specific case.

Sightly lots may still be found on this elevated plateau above the San Gabriel Valley, and here is a house built by one of our younger Californian architects, whose study of the landscape and the outdoor life of this community gives the experience necessary to avoid pitfalls in this climate, and whose acknowledged talent has been shown in the beautiful building he has done as a member of the firm of Johnson, Kaufman and Coate before that partnership reached the end of its term with the close of last year.

THE HOUSE BUILT FOR O. NICHOLAS GABRIEL. R. E. COATE, ARCHITECT. THE EXTERIOR WALLS ARE OF WHITE-WASHED COMMON BRICK WITH MEXICAN TILE. PETER HALL, CONTACTOR

Following the architect through the intricacies of building and furnishing a house we find a fascinating excursion awaits us. For the architect has delved deeply into the products of the land and knows how to find what is beautiful and appropriate as well as to build a house that will not disappoint us after it is done.

The first thing to choose after our plans are worked out to suit our individual ideals of comfortable and happy living is a contractor who will carry out with honest and expert knowledge the plans and specifications of the architect.

Peter Hall
General Contractor

The architect chooses the general contractor whose past experience best fits him for the job in hand and upon whom he can rely implicitly. The general contractor for this house was Peter Hall of Pasadena, who also carried out the contract for St. Paul's Cathedral under Johnson, Kaufmann and Coate with sound construction and satisfaction.

A HOUSE IN OAK KNOLL PARK, CALIFORNIA, BUILT FOR O. NICHOLAS GABRIEL, BY ROLAND E. COATE, ARCHITECT, LOS ANGELES. THE LIVING-ROOM AND DINING-ROOM BOTH OPEN ONTO THE SEMI ENCLOSED COURT WITH ITS SPANISH FOUNTAIN AND DELLA ROBBIA PLAQUE FOR COLOR.

To the contractor belongs the work of chosing among the hundreds of subcontractors and workmen crowding the market, those honest and skilled in the particular work of building a perfect house, and our close examination of this model home will discover no slouchy work from basement to roofing tile.

We will leave to this wise friend of client and architect the building in general and choose our own tile for fountain or floor, our hardware and other decorative units in the house.

On Raymond Avenue, a blue sign above a fascinating display of tile work, introduces the local architects as well as the novice in home building to all of the beautiful tiles obtainable on this coast or in the old world.

The Western Tile Company, Contractors

The West Coast has long needed just such a clearing house for tile as this company of Tile contractors has set up in Pasadena. Much needed, too, is the work which this company does in contracting to set beautiful tile properly. California has boundless stores of tile-making clay and it also has Ernest Batchelder, who has designed the best tile in the country. But it has been hard for such designers to find contractors who would carry out their plans with sympathy and skill. The Western Tile Company were chosen by Mr. Coate to make this beautiful fountain in the court angle which forms the out-door living room. Spanish tile are here used in gay colors which seem appropriate in the shadow of the oak on the north side of the house. But if one desires other color schemes one may find samples of all tiles made or imported at the request of the architects and clients who know this firm. Theirs', too, is the panel of wall tiles, seen through the hall door in the dining room

THE HALL AND DINING-ROOM. DOORS DESIGNED BY THE ARCHITECT AND FINISHED BY GEORGE HUNT. KNOBS FROM THE VAN SITTERT CO. WALL TILE FROM WESTERN TILE CO.

INTERIOR OF THE TOWER. ON THE STAIRS IS A DELIGHTFUL STAINED GLASS WINDOW BY THE JUDSON COMPANY. DANTE CHAIR BY GEORGE HUNT picture. The sparkle of Spanish or Byzantine glazed tile in the sunshine on water splashed fountain, or the quiet, restful color scheme of a fireplace can be selected by the client and architect right here in the comprehensive exhibition rooms of the Western Tile Company on South Raymond.

The Van Sittert Hardware

Farther up Raymond Avenue, on the west side near Colorado Street, we find that the architects have preceded us in the selection and designing of wrought iron latches and bronze door knobs. Hitherto this choice has seemed endless, but with the good design and interesting old world touch, to be found on Mr. Van Sittert's display table in his office, we are beguiled into making a selection of hardware that the architects have designed for their own houses, or taking a design from this unusual selection of good stock.

The Judson Glass

Few laymen and not even all architects know of the development of the making of stained glass windows in Los Angeles. For forty years the Judson family, father and sons, have been contributing to art on this coast, and now in choosing the stained glass for All Saints' Church in Pasadena. Mr. Coate after looking over the field in this country and abroad, came back to our own local studios at Garvanza and had their beautiful, churchly windows made for clerestory and aisle.

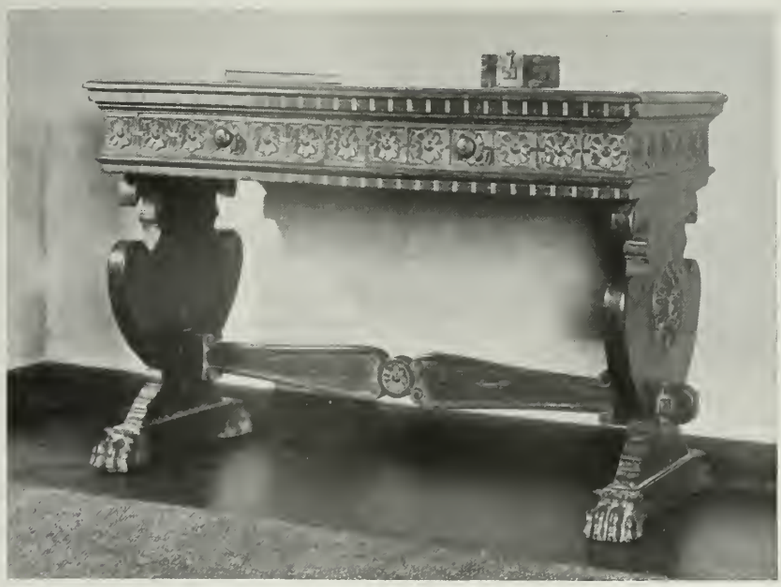
Will you temper the sunlight of California in a west stair window so that you need no curtains? Investigate the use of real stained glass through which the lovely pattern of a tree shows in nature's own design. Would you add a bit of bright color to a north window? Look up the office of Judson Company or visit the studios where European glass workers design and cut the imported glass and put the pieces together with intricate leading as did the glass workers of old cathedrals lost to us in the world war.

The Judsons go at the problem of furnishing the architects of Southern California with stained glass windows in an all-comprehending way which does not consider the window a hole to fill up, but studies the environment, the outlook, the general style of the house, and the plans and ideas of the architect.

GARAGE AND GARDEN GATE OF THE O. NICHOLAS GABRIEL HOUSE, SAN MARINO, CALIFORNIA. ROLAND E. COATE, ARCHITECT.

And now comes the greatest fun of all—as the house takes shape we begin to fill each empty space with appropriate furniture.

In this beautiful house, deftly designed to combine the beauty of the old world with life in California, Mr. Coate has chosen and the client has agreed to have the furniture made in California.



The Furniture of George Hunt

What more delightful little journey could a client make than to go with the architect to confer with an artist who is reproducing here in Pasadena the beautiful old world furniture of the period to which our Spanish and Italian and native Californian houses belong! To produce, by hand work and careful study, those qualities in an old chest, or a Dante chair which make us exclaim at its beauty, is an art that is rare and genuine. For we do not love old furniture because it is decaying and therefore impracticable. We love it because it is mellow and serene, because it fits into our lives like the scent of violets in a living room,—like the song of a bird on a quiet afternoon,

Mr. Hunt's furniture is made by masters in joining and carving, who work in a little shop near the planing mill on the Arroyo's northern edge. Here is true craftsmanship and skilled inheritance trained in old world ideals and proud of its work.

The designs are selected by Mr. Hunt for the particular place in the house he is furnishing. The beautiful doors of the Gabriel house, designed by the architect are finished by Mr. Hunt to show that design and not to cover it up.

The Dante chair in the hall is adapted from the Italian models, but is made more solidly and put together more firmly than any you might pick up yourselves abroad. Be assured that the Italian government has placed safely in museums all that is worth picking up abroad, and content yourselves with securing the beauty of finish and contour, the soft undulating surface of hand planing and the solid workmanship of our own California furniture. It has the quality of an antique, the substance of hand-made, conscientious craftsmanship and the solidity of our native American walnut and birch. Shall I tell you where to find this treasury of antiques to fit your dream of a beautiful house? Make an appointment through your architect or with Mr. Hunt, whose finishing shop and models are to be found at his studio on Parkview Drive. But be sure you really want to furnish a home with things your children will love to inherit, for Mr. Hunt does much of this fascinating handwork himself and his time belongs to those who appreciate fine work.

A TABLE IN THE HALL OF THE GABRIEL HOUSE, OAK KNOLL PARK. MADE BY EXPERT CABINET MAKERS, CARVED AND FINISHED IN THE HUNT SHOPS.

In a series of such articles as this, CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND will attempt to give, during this year, a resume of all the good and well-designed products of the architects and artists, the craftsmen and contractors who are working in this newest center of arts and crafts.

To California, during the past few decades, have come many thousands of workers who, revolting from factory conditions in other places, are determined to work out in the far west their ideals in workmanship or skilled crafts. Here conditions are such that a skilled workman may own his little home on the hillside or in the fertile valley and ply his craft independently with some hope of fitting into the pleasant life of the land.

Many crafts can here be practiced out of doors for many months in the year. Behind a high hedge or board fence trimmed with vines, one may often find workers enjoying the open air and working with greater efficiency than in a crowded room.

The ring of the hammer on silver spoons is already heard in the shop of Porter Blanchard, President of the Arts and Crafts Society of Southern California. In the rooms of the Society at 2508 West Seventh Street, we find many other beautiful things; chiefly the beautiful Hewson handwoven home-spuns.

Surely the time will soon come when hand looms, now beginning to be used as in the Hewson Shops, will be carried out of doors in May and we shall hear the singing of California craftsmen and women as they weave or embroider new patterns of orange poppies on a cloth of gold.

THE COVER PLATES

CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND has through its cover plates in color during the six and a half years of its existence introduced many California artists to the reading public and the non-reading public of this country and abroad. With nothing but the love of art and a determination to be heard the publisher has presented these plates without profit to the magazine, but with much profit to Art in California.

The use of these plates is protected by our copyright and courtesy to the publisher demands that credit be given when they are used by other magazines at a later time.

The plates on this issue were engraved by Bryan and Brandenburg, Los Angeles, from a painting loaned by Cannell & Chaffin.

OAK KNOLL PARK

An Exclusive Residential Section

"Where Rosiland Road meets Oak Grove"

Choice Lots Amid a profusion of Live Oaks and with a Glorious View of the mountains

See the Representative at the Tract Office, or—

O. NICHOLAS GABRIEL
304 Pacific Mutual Bldg Los Angeles.
Trinity 7654

MAKING A MOVIE FILM

NO. III.

THE FILM LABORATORY

By GEORGE DRUMGOLD

THE HUGE DRYING DRUMS, PROPELLED BY ELECTRIC MOTORS FOR DRYING THE PRINTS

THE motion picture film laboratory is one of the most important links in the chain of artists who create the successful motion picture of today. Yet far too little credit is given to this particular department.

When one stops to consider that negatives representing fortunes are placed in the hands of the laboratory for developing and printing, and if the laboratory, through carelessness or poor equipment, should ruin these negatives, the producer suffers a total loss, the importance of this laboratory work is at once apparent. You realize that the great artists appearing before the camera, the author, director, cameraman, distributor, and finally the exhibitor, fail in their purpose to please the public, if what they have accomplished is not properly presented on the screen.

Good photography, along with good laboratory work cannot make a picture great, but good photography and poor laboratory work can seriously injure the reputation of the star, the investment of the producer and distributor, and the box-office of the exhibitor.

The larger studios maintain their own laboratories, which are housed in a separate building conveniently located on the studio lot, while the smaller independent companies send their negative to one of the several independent laboratories located in the heart of filmdom.

After each scene is taken at the studio, the scene number is photographed and a few extra feet of film is also taken, to be used as a "test" by the laboratory. These few feet of "test" contain the same light values and the relative position of the actors, as the scene. This test system enables the "negative" man at the laboratory to experiment with this test, in determining the exact timing for proper values and quality, for developing the scene itself. These negative tests are rushed back to the cameraman who photographed them, for his inspection and O. K., after which the laboratory proceeds with the developing and printing of the scene.

The photographing of the number slate after each scene, is of vital importance to the laboratory. Upon this slate is written the name of the company, the director, cameraman, date, the number of the take, (the same scene being taken several times), and the scene number which is taken from the story continuity. This slate system prevents scenes from being lost, and is a great time saver to the film cutters (editors) in "breaking down" or assembling the scenes according to their numbers.

One of the most interesting features of a modern film laboratory, is the fact that all air before entering the building, is washed. The air is thoroughly filtered through water, thus preventing dirt or dust from reaching any of the many departments in the building, through an elaborate ventilating system. Another very necessary feature, is the proper government of temperature and humidity in the various rooms. The building, of course, is of fireproof construction. Aside from the laboratory itself, the building contains a machine shop for the repair of cameras and attachments, also private projection rooms (miniature theaters), cutting rooms, camera changing rooms, film vaults, and a room equipped with a special camera and apparatus for photographing titles. The titles are printed or executed by hand, on cardboard, then placed in a stationary frame and photographed.

At the close of a day's work at the studio, the cameraman and his assistant lock themselves in a darkroom, and unload the camera magazine cases, which contain the exposed negative of the scenes made that day.

This negative is placed in flat circular film cans, the covers tightly pressed down and taped with adhesive, to insure against the negative being light struck or "fogged" when the cans are removed from the dark room. Each can is marked with a sticker label of the company.

The cans are then rushed to the laboratory. The film is placed on racks in the developing room, which is totally dark. These racks are submerged in large tanks of developing fluid for a certain number of minutes, an inspector is constantly keeping check on the time, and watching the negative closely as it "comes up." The racks are then taken from the tanks and placed under running water in the wash tanks. From here the negative starts on its tour of the building. First into the drying room, and after it is thoroughly dry, it is polished by hand on a large padded drum, and then passes into the negative inspection room. From this inspection it enters the printing room, where the test print is made from it upon positive stock (film). The printing machines are very intricate pieces of machinery, and would require a long technical description which we will omit.

This test print is for proper light, and is only a short piece. A number system is used by the print expert, which is passed along to the head printer, who prints the entire scene. This print is developed under the same process as the negative, only in a different room. After leaving the wash tanks, it is taken into the drying room and stretched on huge drying drums which are set in motion, and are propelled by electric motors. After drying, it is removed from the big drums, and all of the many scenes are spliced together into one long reel. (To be Continued)

Angelus Lighting Fixture Co., Inc.

Designers and Craftsmen of

Lighting Fixtures, Lamps, Fire Tools, Console-Tables and Mirrors

746 So. Figueroa St., Los Angeles

VAndike 2296

PAINTINGS OF THE WEST

STENDAHL GALLERIES

OF THE PACIFIC COAST

The Ambassador Hotel—Los Angeles Hotel del Coronado—San Diego

Clarence P. Day Corporation

Engineers—Contractors

35 N. RAYMOND AVE. PHONE COLO. 1006

PASADENA, CALIFORNIA

An Ideal School for Young Women

Cumnock School

COLLEGE WORK IN THE FOLLOWING COURSES:

Vocal Interpretation of Literature

Literary Appreciation	Voice and Diction	Short-Story
Public Speaking	French	Dancing
Dramatics	Story Telling	Psychology
	Journalism

Art and Art Appreciation

An accredited High School and Junior School under same management

HELEN A. BROOKS, Director

5353 West Third Street Los Angeles

GRanit 3253 —TELEPHONES— GRanit 3353

OAK BEECH — Furnished Scraped

H. G. BENNETT

HARDWOOD FLOORS EXCLUSIVELY

524-26 SO. RAYMOND AVE.

COLO. 178 - PASADENA, CALIF.

MAPLE BIRCH — Laid Finished

Estimates Cheerfully Given

Old Floors Resanded and Polished

THE HOSPITALITY COMMITTEE OF PASADENA'S LEADING WOMEN'S CLUB

By MRS. C. A. BEATON

THE Shakespeare Club of Pasadena moved into its beautiful new Auditorium the first of October, and in November held its first new members luncheon, for the year.

The New Member luncheon event, which is held every two months, was a plan inaugurated by the Hospitality Committee last year, and has proved a most pleasant and happy way for the new members to be presented to the Club, giving them a special welcome.

With a club as large as the Shakespeare, (over twelve hundred members)—the new comers are apt to become absorbed and lost if there is not some plan adopted by which they can become identified with the club at once and made to feel at home.

This plan also makes it possible to find out the kind of new timber that is being added to the club, their talents and possibilities, and can at once be made use of; it is surprising how much valuable information is acquired in this way during the club year.

At the New Members' luncheon in November we had joining with us writers, poets, artists, musicians, lecturers, former Presidents of eastern clubs, organizers, etc., all of which the club would have had no record of if it had not been for this method of receiving the new members.

The plan is a very simple one. The names of all the new members are given to the chairman of the Hospitality Committee who get in personal touch with each new member over the telephone;—finds out where she is from.—what club she has belonged to, if any, what her talents are, and what acitve part she has taken in club life. This is all recorded and kept for the benefit of the club.

In a country like the Southland of California where we nearly all come from "somewhere," we have found that this means has made it possible for many strangers to find mutual friends from the same towns or districts and immediately there is a friendly feeling established.

On the day when the luncheon known as "New Members Day" arrives, a special table or tables, are set for the new members at which the Hospitality Committee preside as hostesses. The Chairman of the Committee at the head of the table and her committee seated among the new members, helping them to get acquainted. The table has had special attention in regard to place cards, flowers, etc., in honor of the occasion; also at each new members place is placed a small bow of orange ribbon which she is supposed to wear at each successive meeting until the next New Member's Day. This gives the older members an opportunity to show these new members special courtesies during the next two months until they can begin to feel somewhat at home and feel they really belong there.

After the luncheon and just before leaving the table, the Chairman prsents each new member to the President and other club members;—each lady's name is called, where she is from and any special notice regarding her and her activities as is deemed best. As each name is called the lady rises and the club greets her.

You see it is all very simple, but it seems to have been the solution of a pretty difficult problem of handling new members in a large club, and I should think would be equally as pleasant and profitable in any club. Also it has become a very valuable means of bringing into early recognition the talents and capabilities of the new members, thus keeping the club work alive and progressive.

The Hanson House, Flintridge, Pasadena, California
Harwood Hewitt, Architect

For Information Regarding

PASADENA,

Her climate and living advantages. Write to the Chamber of Commerce

100 So. Raymond Avenue, Pasadena, California

McBRATNEY'S

IRISH LINEN STORE

Beautiful Linens

Direct from Ireland

Linen Damask Tablecloths and Napkins, Luncheon Sets, Art Linens, Lingerie Linens, Dress Linens, Handkerchiefs

Superior Quality Moderate Prices

421-423 S. MYRTLE AVE

MONROVIA CALIFORNIA

Hotel Raymond
and
Golf Course

Season: Dec. 27th to Late April

The only hotel in Pasadena having a golf course on its immediate property

WALTER RAYMOND
Proprietor

MARTHA

WATSON-KERBY

Exclusive Fashions for Women

GOWNS WRAPS SPORTS CLOTHING

2224 WEST SEVENTH STREET

LOS ANGELES

WESTLAKE SQUARE PHONE FITZROY 0823

THOMAS FRANKLIN POWER
ARCHITECT
AND
ARCHITECTURAL ENGINEER

DUNKIRK 1442

2615 W. SEVENTH ST.
LOS ANGELES

ASSISTANCE LEAGUE OF SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

MONTHLY BULLETIN

"All for Service—And Service for All"

OFFICERS:

MRS. HANCOCK BANNING, President
MRS. EDWARDS LAUGHLIN, First Vice President
MRS. WILLIAM GIBBS MCADOO, Sec. Vice-Pres.
MRS. ERWIN P. WERNER, Third Vice-President
MRS. E. AVERY MCCARTHY, Fourth Vice-Pres.
MRS. JAMES REED, Secretary
MRS. J. WARREN TATUM, Treas.
MR. D. C. MACWATTERS, Auditor

CAPTAIN PERIGORD'S OPINION

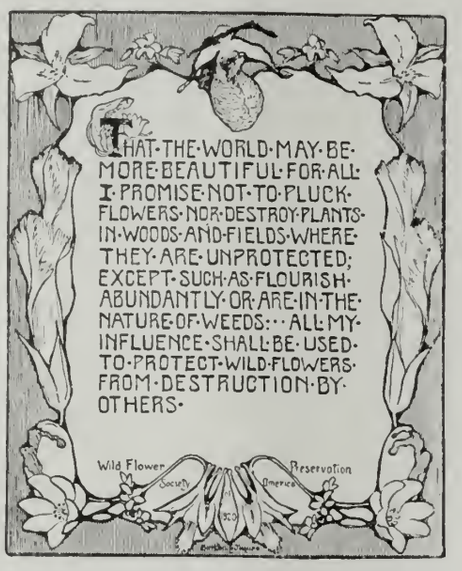
SPEAKING before the Round Table at the annual meeting of the League, February 20, Captain Paul Perigord, American citizen and world-wide statesman, gave the women there working in social service sincere encouragement and vital inspiration.

"You have learned," said this brilliant speaker, "the great secret, the joy of service."

This word, service, which he called the greatest word now heard the most frequently in our language, is the keynote of today's progress, and the work of the Assistance League exemplifies it in its totality.

Captain Perigord showed his deep knowledge of human nature as well as of modern ecenomic and social movements when he quoted from many sources and applied his conclusions to the individuals there listening to his sympathetic outline of the League's charities.

But his application of the principles there set forth in the daily routine of welfare work, day nursery and business organization of such a unified charity as the Community House, found a happy response in the hearts of his hearers. "Service is not alone the giving of money. We welcome that, but it is not enough. Give of yourself, of your thought. That takes time. One's entire thought must not be centered on oneself. Turn toward others and think for and of them. Emphasize the verb to be, not to have." By making others try this effort, by enlarging its membership and inspiring others to give of themselves the League is doing good to the members themselves as well as enlarging the work of charity. "Thus," continued the speaker, "you will get while giving. When you suffer, when you are discouraged, go out of yourself through the many avenues of service opening through this organized plan for helping others. Do good, find someone more unfortunate than yourself; and you will see that you will find healing words for them and they will help you to meet life bravely and to fill your own time with happiness.



"The Assistance League is a temple of service, where the talents of many human beings wishing to serve can be dedicated to the service of the many in making its motto a reality—'All for Service and Service for All.'"

HOW YOU CAN SERVE THE LEAGUE

(1) By becoming a member yourself and by securing other members.
(2) By sending us your used garments, old books, discarded articles of every description.
(3) By allowing your home, garden, ranch, hotel, store or business house to be used for filming purposes through our Film Location Bureau.
(4) By securing books for our Circulating Library.
(5) By entertaining your friends in the "Studio Tea Room."
(6) By attending the Round Table luncheon on the first Tuesday of each month.
(7) By patronizing our Exchange and Thrift Shop.
(8) By referring needy cases to our Good Samaritan Committee or our Shut-in Aid Department.
(9) By enrolling in our Needlework Units.
(10) By volunteering your services as an active member of one of our committees.

ANNUAL REPORT OF THE SECRETARY OF THE ASSISTANCE LEAGUE OF SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA FOR 1924

IT is with great pride that we submit to you a League with a membership of nearly three hundred people, a Board of Directors of sixty members, meeting the first Tuesday in each month, and executive committee meeting the other Tuesdays, also numerous standing committees holding regular meetings.

The year 1924 opened with one paid employee in the office and ended with three with an increase in volunteer help besides, so you can judge of the volume of routine business. In addition to the fifty-two regular meetings of the Board of Directors or Executive Committee, there has been an average of two hundred letters a month to be written by the Secretary. Every inquiry, every gift and every favor must be properly acknowledged, and though a great deal of this is handled by the committee to which it is directly donated, still all these letters must be made and filed in our office to keep the records correct, and the regular notices to members would swell the number of letters much beyond this.

Besides all this routine work the Secretary must be prepared at any time to put practically the whole office force at the service of any committee planning for a special event, such as the Garden Party of June.... the opening of the Day Nursery, or the Contest. The cheerful co-operation of all our employees at these times of great effort, deserves special recognition.

The Bulletin which Mrs. Seares has so generously given us in CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND, must be prepared each month, and besides all these things the cheerful handling of the telephone calls alone take a great part of one person's time.

All of this recital is not to complain of work, because that is what we are here for, and wish; but to show you that we need your help—that is the personal support of each one of you.

Briefly, hoping not to take too much of your time, I will outline the out-standing events of the year, leaving out, in every case, the names of the marvelous women who did this work, in order to save a few of the precious moments, and because I feel sure these names are written in the "book of gold."

The first act of the new year was the acceptance by the Board of the splendid gift of Mr. Herman for the building of a Day Nursery, and the formation of a Committee for this purpose—all of this will be fully described later by the able chairman.

The co-operation with Fitzgerald Concerts, which brought us a neat little profit, entered the list next and here again we found Mr. Fitzgerald our loyal friend.

Next came the Mah Jongg Party and Shawl dinner at the Vista del Arroyo, a repetition of the much admired party in the Studio Tea Room—then the Membership Drive, during which six thousand letters were sent out, and many new members joined our ranks—closely following this was the Pre-Easter sale and Children's Party.

On June 11th the Community House held its birthday party, when we all feasted and made merrie. Then, with the warm days, our delightful Round Table Luncheons were held in the Garden, where fresh corn from Banning House shared the honors with chops cooked on our own grill. August, with its beautiful nights, brought us the Fete in the Isaac Hampshur-Jones Gardens—a Fairy Land with many many Fairy Princesses.

The question "To be or not to be" had been troubling the Board for weeks, and about this time came the decision to enter the Community Chest. Never doing things by halves, you will recall how your Division worked and accomplished, and with the help of all its good friends turned in over Seventy Thousand Dollars, and more subscribers than any other geographic division.

The establishment of the Wilmington Unit was the next problem, and today we have a growing child which needs all the attention we can possibly beg for it. And last, but not least, our widely known and marvelously conceived Contest of Craftsmanship—the benefits of which will be felt for months to come.

The Annual Christmas Party and the opening of the Day Nursery with its list of distingueshed guests—prelates and men of letters crowding our Studio Tea Room to its capacity—a proud moment when we trembled a bit over the strength of three supporting beams, but like all good things, they held.

In nearly all of these events our Entertainment Committee functioned with great efficiency. But you must not forget that these are all special events, and that throughout the year all of our departments function in a perfectly regular way.

Our Day Nursery, the most perfect of its kind and the pride of this great Community, the Wilmington Unit, Woman's Exchange, Thrift Shop, Entertainment Committee, Good Samaritan Committee, Location Bureau, Membership Committee, Painting Unit, Sewing Units, artistic Fancies, Helping Hand Committee, Tiny Tim Fund, Circulating Library, Shut-Ins' Aid, Motor Corps and Community House Hostess are all vital parts of this organization needing your support, your help, your work—they all belong to you, and only by each of us putting our shoulder to the wheel can the carriage of our League be drawn to the lofty position it is fitted to occupy.

You are going to have a short report from each, of the work they are doing, and please make a vow that you will not leave here today without signifying your desire to become an active worker in one or more of these divisions.

Let this be a League, not only in name, but with fame for its workers.

MRS. JAMES REED,
Secretary.

Ex-Service Men Are Badly In Need Of Acceptable Clothing

If it were possible for you to know how vital the need is—you would not rest today until you parted with some of your belongings—even at a sacrifice.

Let us know today what we can expect from you

Assistance League of Southern California

5604 De Longpre Ave., Hollywood
HEmpstead 5133 HEmpstead 5506

HEWSON HAND CRAFT STUDIOS
Handwoven One Piece Dresses, Coats and Scarfs, Canadian and Candlewick Bedspreads
Dutch and East Indian Brass, Beads, Fine Pendants and Objects of Art in Great Variety
F. O. 6555 — 602 E. Colorado St. Pasadena
DUnkirk 4909 — 2508½ W. 7th St. Los Angeles

"Amymay"
For your home—Hangings, Curtains, and Lamp Shades specially designed. Pattern dyed luncheon sets that launder.
O'Dee Toys o' San Francisco
Special Hand Wrought Metal Work from Harry Dixon's Studio
527 California Terrace Pasadena
Phone Colo. 3655

Hand-wrought Silver and Pewter by
PORTER BLANCHARD
Shown at
Arts & Crafts, 2508½ W. 7th St., L. A.
Hewson Studios, 602 E. Colorado, Pasadena
Assistance League, 5604 DeLongpre, Hollywood
The Attic, 4th at Wilshire, Santa Monica
Exceptional for Gifts

FLORNINA
Gowns · Negligees · Accessories
Ready to Wear or Made to Order
95 South Los Robles Ave., Pasadena
Phone Fair Oaks 113

Kinsey & Elliott
PLATINUM JEWELERS
Diamonds and Precious Stones
Hamilton and Longines Watches
Remount Her Diamonds in Platinum
Jewelry Manufacturing
303-4 Jewelers Bldg., 747 So. Hill St.
Los Angeles, Calif. Phone VAndike 1604

Antiques
JOHN W. CONDIT
Dealer in rare old pieces selected from private homes. Specialist in the proper restoration of heirlooms.
199 S. Fair Oaks Ave. Tel. F. O. 315
Pasadena, California

L. BIXBY-SMITH
Camera Portraits
Architectural Studies
2504 W. 7th St.,
Los Angeles, Calif.
Phone FItzroy 3542

H. O. CLARKE
General Building Contractor
388 So. Raymond Ave., Pasadena, Calif.
Phone Fair Oaks 537

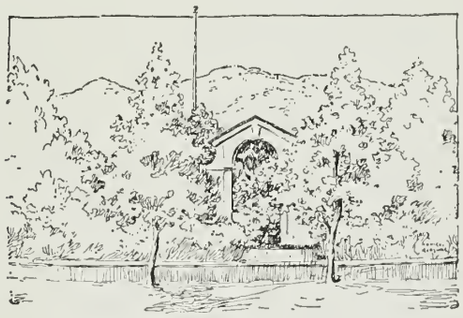
COMMENTS ON THE JANUARY MEETING OF THE SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA CHAPTER THE AMERICAN INSTITUTE OF ARCHITECTS

Harold O. Sexsmith

IT was with much regret that Chapter members learned that Reginald Johnson would not be a candidate for president of the Chapter to succeed himself. His energy and wisdom have done much in the past year to advance the cause of architecture in southern California. His resourcefulness has unveiled several new and fruitful channels of interest which have done much to maintain a high degree of loyalty to the Institute. We witness his withdrawal from active leadership with genunie regret, but in the same moment we can not but congratulate ourselves upon the leadership we are to have through the new year. David C. Allison will enjoy as loyal support as the one he succeeds, for he is esteemed as a man and the Chapter is proud to claim him as an architect. His words of acceptance of the office of president of the Chapter were an inspiration to those who heard him at the Annual Chapter Meeting, which was held January 13, at the Mary Louise Tea Room in Los Angeles. It is unfortunate that both his address and the report of the outgoing president could not, at least in part, receive more general publicity; both contained good seed which should be sown broadcast.

The Chapter was honored by the presence of several guests. The first of these who spoke was Mr. Robert Burns, of the Los Angeles School Board, who, after giving some data as to the tremendous increases in our school population, said he had accepted the invitation as a guest partly from a selfish reason. He hoped to learn from the architects how to squeeze a great many school children into a very small space. His comparison of the schools of southern California with those of the east in design, cost, and efficiency was a graceful compliment to California architects. He said also that the present system of alloting the design of schools to various architects was most successful and that the architects were giving splendid service.

Mr. Paul Langworthy of the Builders' Exchange confessed that this was the first gathering of architects he had ever attended. His words of appreciation for the efforts of the Institute in upholding a high standard of professional ethics sounded sweet to the ears of those who have perhaps thought that only architects dealt in such things. A Latin phrase we used to drone over in school comes to our mind right here as particularly applicable. We will just shove it in to help fill the space, "quis custodiet ipsos custodes." Mr. Langworthy surely has the spirit of a true architect. The climax of his speech came in his quotation from Ruskin. "When we build let it not be for the temporary fleeting present." May the time soon come when some miracle may give us the tongues of orators to make our clients see the truth of that quotation.



Mr. Alexander Williams, Secretary of the Award Committee of the American Chemical Society, gave a splendid suggestion in his talk. The American Chemical Society is offering scholarships at Yale and Vassar for non-technical articles on Chemistry written by High School students. If Chemistry can be presented to the public in words of one syllable, surely architecture, which has a more popular appeal, would find an equally popular reception. Perhaps the Institute's endowment fund for education might find the germ of an idea here.

Mr. Holtzman of Chicago, three times president of the Illinois Chapter, reminded us that if we, as architects, are to carry on our great professional ideals we must lose our provincial, chapter, small group, idea and think first that we are a small part of a great national organization with common national ideals. He recalled to us that the preamble to our A.I.A. Constitution is National in scope, "To be of increasing Service to Society." It was interesting to hear him say that only one other technical society voiced the same aim. And that society exists in Germany!

We could go on if space allowed and tell of spirited messages of helpfulness and cooperation from Mr. C. A. Fultz, General Manager of the Merchants and Manufacturers Association, J. Hunter Clark of the Joint Technical Societies, Mr. Godfrey Edwards of the Associated General Contractors, and Mr. Brook Hawkins.

The Fireplace originated with the use of fire by man. Used in every period of architecture down to the present time, it may now be designed to harmonize with any interior scheme. Much helpful information about fireplace design and construction will be found at the display room of the Los Angeles Pressed Brick Company, sixth floor of the Frost Building, Second & Broadway, Los Angeles.

MRS. CHARLES C. BELL
Orchard Homes and Villas
Mountainside Acreage
Rentals Near Good Board
SARATOGA - - CALIFORNIA

HILLER'S STUDIO
Official Photographer for California Southland
49 East Colorado Street
Pasadena, California
Albert Hiller Phone, Fair Oaks 155

French and Italian Arts
Imported by
ELEANOR AND HOLLINGSWORTH BEACH
Italian Sports Hats — Antiques
Old Furniture — Brocades
Embroidered Linens — Old Prints
French Falence — Italian Majolica
Desk Sets in Florentine Tooled Leather
630 E. Colorado Street, Pasadena, California
Fair Oaks 6028

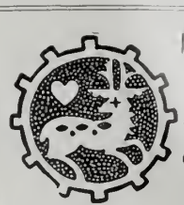
A great year of activity is before the Chapter with opportunities for "increasing service" on every side. Other organizations in allied lines look to the Chapter to strike the key for the great chorus of concerted effort which will help southern California toward its magnificent goal. As we close these hastily written remarks we can not but feel that the Chapter's first big job is to help put over the adoption of the Civic Center Plan for the City and County of Los Angeles.

—H. O. Sexsmith.

PASADENA HOMESEEKER'S REFERENCE PAGE

DORN-SYKES CO.
REALTORS
Dependable Real Estate and Insurance Service in Pasadena for more than 22 Years.
30 So. RAYMOND AVENUE
PASADENA, CALIF.
Phone Fair Oaks 180

B. B. ELKINS
REAL ESTATE, RENTALS, INSURANCE
PHONE FAIR OAKS 4197
257 EAST COLORADO STREET
PASADENA, CALIF.



For Reliable Information on Pasadena Real Estate
Consult
LEO. G. MACLAUGHLIN CO.
Established 1899
119 E. COLORADO ST.
PASADENA, CAL.

Tel. Colorado 632
Reweaving—Repairing
Oriental Rug Cleaning Co.
MODERN FIREPROOF PLANT
22 N. Roosevelt Avenue
N. E. Cor. Roosevelt & Colorado
Pasadena, California
Edgar Round, Mgr.

The Mary-Isbel Shop
Nestle Lanoil Permanent Waving, Marcelling, Manicuring and Scalp Treatment.
20 South Los Robles Pasadena
Phone Fair Oaks 916
Pasadena's Most Exclusive Shop

Everything Worthwhile in Radio
The Radio Store of Paul Franklin Johnson
Phone F.O. 3281
560-562 E. Colorado St.
PASADENA, CALIFORNIA

Books ... Toys
Gulck Stationery Co.
173 E. COLO. ST., Pasadena
Fair Oaks 39
Picture Framing, Artist's Supplies

The Gearharts
ETCHINGS AND BLOCK PRINTS
611 So. Fair Oaks Ave.
Pasadena

The Rose Tree Tea House
Luncheon, Afternoon Tea, Evening Dinner
CLOSED SUNDAY
ITALIAN LINENS, POTTERIES AND VARIOUS GIFTS SUITABLE FOR CHRISTMAS
ROSE TREE GIFT SHOP
167 North Orange Grove Avenue
PASADENA, CALIFORNIA
Telephone Colorado 5523

POIRETTE COMPACT
These Compacts are so constructed that they eliminate all brassiere difficulties and proportion off excess flesh into proper symmetrical lines—really reducing the measurements of the figure—the bust and hips—from two to four inches—and giving utmost comfort. These garments can be laundered as easily as silk underwear. Made in all lengths.
Pasadena Corset Shop
HELEN B. FORD, Corsetière
308 E. Colorado St., Pasadena, Cal.
Opposite New First National Bank
Fair Oaks 3388

Decorating and Finishing Exclusive Furniture
W. G. Pesenecker
Interior and Exterior Painting
34 North Broadway
Phone Col. 5656 Pasadena, Calif.

WE offer for investment of Personal or Trust Funds sound Securities returning highest rates consistent with safety.
WILLIAM R. STAATS COMPANY
Established 1887
Government, Municipal and Corporation Bonds
311 East Colorado St.
PASADENA, CALIF.
Los Angeles San Diego San Francisco

OHRMUND BROS.
Unit System of Heating
sets the Standard of the World
with
Superior and Distinctive Features
A Comfortable Home Must Be Properly Heated
PASADENA GAS APPLIANCE CO., INC.
901-3 East Colorado Street Fair Oaks 93

MAC BLANKENHORN
REAL ESTATE
GENERAL INSURANCE
Over 30 Years a Resident of Pasadena
Conservatism Our Motto

Sup rior Rental Service
HOMES, APARTMENTS, BUNGALOWS
In Pasadena's Exclusive Sections
MRS. MORRIS (Rentals Exclusively)
THE J. W. WRIGHT CO.
312 E. COLORADO ST., PASADENA

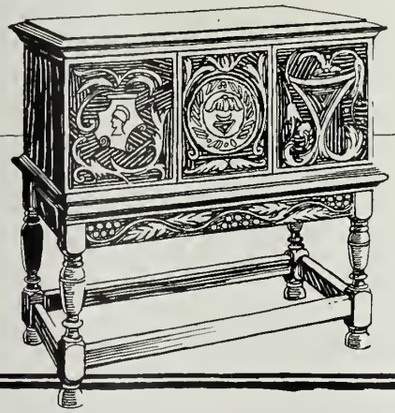
FRANK MELINE CO.
(Incorporated)
REALTORS
26 No. Euclid Ave., Pasadena, Cal.
Phone Fair Oaks 6260

JAMES CINI & COMPANY
of Italy
Antique and Foreign Jewelry
Iatlian and French Novelties
390 E. Walnut St. Pasadena, Calif.
Fair Oaks 5583

Euclid Hat Shoppe
Exclusive Line of Dress Hats
Dobb's Sports Hats
Hats for Every Occasion
472 E. Colorado St. Pasadena, Calif
Fair Oaks 3939

QUALITY SERVICE
THE ELITE
DRY CLEANERS AND DYERS
Plant: 797 So. Fair Oaks Ave.
Colo. 1349 Pasadena, Cal.

W. F. CRELLER
PLUMBER
Steam and Hot Water Heating Appliances
Overhauling and any branch of Repair
Estimating, Contracting, Service
120 West Colorado St., Pasadena, California
Phone Colorado 804



Permutit Soft Water Saves Clothes
TROY LAUNDRY
In Business for Twenty Years
Pasadena, Cal. Phone C. 146
Alhambra 243-J

LAUNDERERS DRY CLEANERS
Royal Laundry Co.
461 So Raymond Colo. 67
Pasadena, Calif.

THERE is no more fitting complement to a beautiful home than a phonograph or radio from The Music Lover's Shop.

The standard and Art models of Victrolas & Imported Art Cabinets that are shown here offer unparalleled opportunities for selection.

RICHARDSON'S INC.
The Music Lovers' Shop
NOW~at 730 West Seventh St.

Choose your own architect from the representative styles shown in "California Homes" by California Architects. Price $1.00.
Address: ELLEN LEECH,
544 So. El Molino Avenue Pasadena, Calif.

THE BATCHELDER TILES

We produce Tile for Fireplaces, Fountains, Pavements, Garden Pots---anything that is appropriately made from clay. :: :: :: :: ::

LOS ANGELES, CALIFORNIA

rich silks and embroideries, brasses, carved woods and ivories, lamps, jades, crystals, Poisonne,

Oriental Art Objects

Few people realize the difficulties encountered, dangers risked, to bring from China, where unrest is rampant, the beautiful things shown at Milnor shops.

Come in today and see them. You may leisurely inspect everything we have to offer.

MILNOR INC. IMPORTERS

Hotel Virginia, Long Beach — Hotel Maryland, Pasadena — Hotel Arlington, Santa Barbara — Beverly Hills Hotel
1206 Orange Avenue, Coronado — Hotel Moana, Honolulu, H. H.

27

Samson loosing the Foxes with fire-brands tied to their tails in order to destroy the corn of the Philistines

This splendid composition is one of the several fine Antique Tapestries recently acquired in Europe by Mr. Perin.

The Serendipity Antique Shop

26 and 30 South Los Robles Avenue, Pasadena, California

BRADFORD PERIN, Proprietor

CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND

Forecourt of the Benjamin R. Meyer Residence, Courtesy of Gordon B. Kaufmann, of the firm of Johnson, Kaufmann and Coate, Architects. Rendered Into Color by Norman Kennedy.

No. 63 MARCH, 1925 25 Cents

MARY E. HAUAN
Partly-Worked Needlepoint Tapestry
Studio 26, de la Guerra Studios

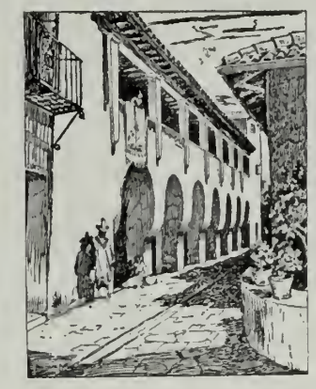
EL PASEO SPORT SHOP
MRS. CHARLES O'DONNELL LEE, JR.
Sport Clothes, Hats, Evening Gowns
Children's Clothes
Studio 30, de la Guerra Studios

DORIS OVERMAN
Designer
Shades, Trays, Decorative Panels,
Aztec Pottery and Lamps
Studio 27, de la Guerra Studios

MONCURE DEARDORF
Important Collection of Chinese Jewelry
Dealer and Expert in Chinese Works of Art
Studio 24, de la Guerra Studios

PACIFIC MUTUAL
LIFE INSURANCE CO.
SANTA BARBARA BRANCH
101 EL PASEO DE LA GUERRA

El Paseo Patio



Lunch Out of Doors or Dine
at
"EL PASEO"
23 E. de la Guerra St.
Santa Barbara

CLAUDE D. FISH
AUDITOR-ACCOUNTANT
INCOME TAX SERVICE
EISENBERG BUILDING
SANTA BARBARA, CALIFORNIA
PHONE 541

DE LA GUERRA STUDIOS
SANTA BARBARA
THE LOVELY SHOPPING STREET IN SPAIN

SPUNWOVEN
"THE GYPSY SHOP"
Hand Fabrics
BETH AND IAN M. WOLFE
Studio 32, de la Guerra Studios

BROWN CALDWELL
MODERN ETCHINGS
Studio 102
El Paseo de la Guerra

GEORGE M. MILLARD (of Pasadena)
RARE IMPORTED BOOKS
Santa Barbara Associates
MR. EVERARD MEYNELL MRS. E. M. GROSSMANN
STUDIO 25, EL PASEO
15 EAST DE LA GUERRA STREET

MARINA FLINT
Kimonos, Chinese Suits, Bed Sacks
Suite 114, de la Guerra Studios

ELEANOR JOHNSON
Studio for the Voice
Suite 103, de la Guerra Studios

SANTA BARBARA COMMUNITY ARTS ASSOCIATION
FRANK MORLEY FLETCHER, Director
SCHOOL OF THE ARTS
Announcement: Term, February 2—May 16
Graphic and Decorative Arts, Drama,
Music, Dancing, French
For further information address the Secretary, Mrs. Jeanne Augé, 936 Santa Barbara St. Santa Barbara, California

We also do Remodeling Repairing
ALLAH FUR CO.
FURS EXCLUSIVE
Phone 1517
As well as Dyeing Storage
SANTA BARBARA 9 E. ANAPAMU

CHEER COLOR COMPANY
409 So. WESTERN AVE., LOS ANGELES, CALIFORNIA
PHONE 567-892
American designs for American homes of the finest Chinese silks and embroideries
Unusual small gifts for Bridge and Mah Jongg

B. CROFTON ATKINS
Pipe and Tobacco Shop
And Men's Imported Clothing
Studio 29, de la Guerra Studios

LEE ELEANOR GRAHAM
Interior Decorator
de la Guerra Studios
23 East de la Guerra Street
Santa Barbara

THE POLK STUDIOS
MUSIC, DRAMA, DANCE
Gertrude Jeanette Polk
Artist Teacher of Vocal and Physical Expression
Henry Polk
Teacher of Piano, Voice and Pipe Organ
Suite 110, de la Guerra Studios

LA MANTILLA
Costume Designing and Remodeling
Studio 31, de la Guerra Studios

SANTA BARBARA ART CLUB
No. 15 E. de la Guerra Street
Free Exhibition of Paintings and Etchings
Open Daily 10 a. m. to 5 p. m.
Paintings and Etchings for sale

Maria Kedrina

Studios of Russian Ballet
EASTERN STUDIO
33 Commonwealth Avenue
Boston, Mass.
WESTERN STUDIO
130 E. Arrellaga St.
Santa Barbara, California
CIRCULAR SENT UPON REQUEST

"The Woman's Silk Shop"
We Carry a Wonderful Line of
All Kinds of SILKS
You Will be Interested to See
Our Line of Silk Hosiery
WE FEATURE THE BEST
Lingerie Goods — Excella Patterns
1017½ State St.
Santa Barbara

ALLIED ARCHITECTS ASSOCIATION OF LOS ANGELES

DESIGNERS OF

PATRIOTIC HALL

LOS ANGELES GENERAL HOSPITAL

ADDITIONS TO THE MUSEUM OF HISTORY SCIENCE AND ART

EXTERIOR DESIGN OF THE HALL OF JUSTICE

ARCHITECTURAL TREATMENT OF VIADUCTS AND BRIDGES OF THE CITY OF LOS ANGELES

ADMINISTRATION CENTER FOR THE CITY AND COUNTY OF LOS ANGELES

AN ASSOCIATION FOR FURNISHING ARCHITECTURAL SERVICE FOR PUBLIC STRUCTURES ONLY

Has Your Car These Features?

The 1925 Star Has!

S T A R

Continental Red Seal Motor
Forced Feed Lubrication
Hollow Crankshaft
Four Wheel Brakes
Single Plate, Dry Disc Clutch
Morse Silent Timing Chain and Gears.
Warner Transmission
Fedders Radiator
Semi-Eliptic Springs

Any Car Without These Features Cannot be Complete
Star Standard Touring $684.00 Here

PASADENA MOTOR CAR COMPANY

64 South Raymond Avenue
Fair Oaks 1067

O. O. KIEFFER D. A. CANNON

SOUTHLAND CALENDAR

Announcements of exhibitions, fetes, concerts, club entertainments, etc., for the calendar pages are free of charge and should be received in the office of CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND, Pasadena, at least two weeks previous to date of issue, the 10th. No correction can be guaranteed if they are received later than that date. California Southland is published monthly at Pasadena, California. One dollar and twenty-five cents for six issues, two fifty per year. Addresses will be changed as many times as desired if notice is given before the first of the month for which the change is made.

Entered as second class matter, July 28, 1919, at the Post office at Pasadena, California, under act of March 3, 1879.

Clubs

VALLEY HUNT CLUB:
During March the announcements are: The usual monthly Monday luncheon at 1:00 o'clock, followed by bridge and mah jongg. Regular afternoon teas, with bridge and mah jongg, 9-16-23-30. Evening bridge and mah jongg. Sunday evening suppers at seven o'clock.

ANNANDALE GOLF CLUB:
St. Patrick's Dinner-Dance, Saturday, March 14. Musicale, Wednesday, March 25, given by Mr. Josef Rosenfeld and his ensemble of Russian artists.
Mixed Foursomes January 4th and alternate Sundays thereafter.
Every Friday is Ladies' Day.
The afternoon Bridge, Mah Jongg and tea parties have been resumed for the season. Tea will be served as requested and tables for cards are always available.
The usual Wednesday and Saturday sweepstakes each month.

FLINTRIDGE COUNTRY CLUB:
Tuesday is Ladies' Day and a special luncheon is served. In the afternoons informal bridge parties may be arranged, followed by tea.
St. Patrick's Day Dinner-Dance, Saturday evening, March 14.

LOS ANGELES COUNTY CLUB:
Ladies' Days, second Monday of each month.
Music during dinner, followed by dancing, every Saturday evening during the month.
Luncheon served from 11:30 to 2 .p m. on Saturdays.
Sunday night concerts during month. Tea served as requested and tables for cards always available.

WILSHIRE COUNTRY CLUB:
Ladies' Days, third Monday of each month.
Dancing every second and fourth Saturday during the month.
A musical is arranged for each Sunday night in the month.

MIDWICK COUNTRY CLUB:
Ladies' Days, fourth Monday in each month.
Tea and informal bridge every afternoon.
Polo, Wednesday and Saturday of each week.
Dancing every Saturday night.
Buffet luncheon served every Sunday. Match polo games every Sunday, preceded by luncheon parties, followed by teas, during season.

LOS ANGELES ATHLETIC CLUB:
Dinner dances, Tuesday and Friday nights of every week, Tuesday night informal; Friday night semi-formal. Plunge open to the ladies Tuesday and Friday of every week.

SAN GABRIEL COUNTRY CLUB:
A dinner dance is arranged for the third Thursday of each month.
On Friday of each week a special luncheon is served, with bridge in the afternoons.
Ladies play every day starting after ten a. m., and not before two p. m.

MONTECITO COUNTRY CLUB:
Provides an 18 hole golf course, two concrete and two dirt courts for tennis, bowls and croquet.
Tea is served and informal bridge parties arranged as desired.
A buffet supper is served every Sunday night.

NEWPORT HARBOR YACHT CLUB:
Saturday, March 14, St. Patrick's Day Dinner-Dance.
The Woofel Birds, Shirley Meserve, Woofel Cock, Commander, go on cruise in search of the egg of the Woofel bird, sailing March 6. San Miguel and St. Nicholas Islands will be visited, the latter, it is believed, having been the early habitat of this historic bird. The "Vacquero" has been chartered for the expedition.

Fashions for Los Angeles' new Skating season!

THE LITTLE MOTHER — By Hovsep Pushman

Hovsep Pushman Exhibition, Pasadena, March 2 to 14

Cannell & Chaffin, Inc.

Paintings :: Period Furniture :: Antiques

MARYLAND HOTEL
PASADENA

720 W. SEVENTH ST.
LOS ANGELES

LA CUMBRE GOLF AND COUNTRY CLUB:
Offers a course of eighteen holes, rivaling any in hazard and beauty. A recent purchase of additional acreage will provide an extended and even more interesting course.
Luncheon is served every day, and tea may be arranged as desired.

REDLANDS COUNTRY CLUB:
Golf tournament for men is held every Saturday. Monday the course is reserved for the women and a special luncheon served. Those who do not play golf or who have had a round in the morning, devote the afternoon to bridge or mah jongg. Every Saturday afternoon tea is served and the men from their golf and the women from their Bridge and Mah Jongg tables join, with one of the women members as hostess, for a social cup.

Art

LOS ANGELES Museum of History, Science and Art, Exposition Park, announces for March the Sixth International Print Makers Exhibition, under the auspices of the Print Makers Society of California, March 1st to 31st. The exhibition includes etchings, lithographs, block prints and engravings. Jury of Selection: Benjamin C. Brown, Howell C. Brown, Frances H. Gearhart, Carl Oscar Borg and Arthur H. Millier. The Museum is open daily from 10 to 4, except Wednesday afternoons. Open Sunday, 2 to 5 p. m. Admission free.

CANNELL AND CHAFFIN will show in their Los Angeles Galleries, 720 West Seventh Street: March 2nd to 14th, Paintings by Robert Vonnah and William Cahill. In the Print Room, water color sketches of the Phillipines and the Orient by Anna Marvell. March 15th to April 1st, Paintings by Gordan Grant and William Silva.

CALIFORNIA Society of Miniature Painters held their eighth annual exhibition at Friday Morning Club, Los Angeles, during February. A jury composed of Carl Oscar Borg, Arthur Millier, and Emma Siboni awarded the first prize to Miss Gertrude Little, on the miniature "Helsingland Girl," which also received the prize by popular vote. The First Honorable Mention went to Miss Ella Shepard Bush, on the miniature, "Bertha Lovewell Dickson, Ph. D." Miss Laura M. D. Mitchell received Second Honorable Mention on the collective vote.

CARMELITA GARDENS HOUSE, Pasadena, opened to the public during February as an art gallery, sponsored by the Pasadena Art Institute, and under the direction of Joseph E. Tilt. Paintings, etchings, water colors, prints, wood carvings, and old English china made up the opening exhibition, which will be followed continuously by others. The officers are: Joseph E. Tilt, president; Arthur H. Fleming, first vice-president; Wallace L. DeWolf, second vice-president; Miss Grace Nicholsen, third vice-president; James A. Nelson, secretary; H. I. Stuart, treasurer.

LUCILE HINKLE will continue her exhibition of small water colors at the Public Library in Los Angeles, through the first week in March.

DAVID ANTHONY TAUSZKY has been doing portraits in New York during the past four months, and is exhibiting some of his work at the Jacques Seligman Galleries, Fifth Avenue. He is also showing a decorative panel in the annual oil exhibition at the Salmagundi Club, New York. Other artists represented are Bruce Crane, Richard Miller, Horatio Walker, and John and Emil Carlsen.

THE Brainard Lemon Collection of antique silver and rare old Sheffield Plate, which also includes marvelous old hand-wrought jewelry will be shown at the Cannell and Chaffin Galleries through Tuesday, March 10th. Owing to this prolonged stay in Los Angeles the collection will not be shown in Pasadena.

F. HODGSON SMART, well-known English portrait painter, who exhibited at the Ebell Club last month, showing portraits of President Harding, Gen. Foch, Gen. Pershing, Admiral Sims, and Anna Besant, has announced his intention of opening a studio in Los Angeles and making California his home.

An etching by Henri deKruif, showing the beginning of the new wing of the Museum, is hung in the rotunda of the Los Angeles Museum of History, Science and Art. It is called "The Harrison Gallery Begins." An interesting print, showing the steam shovels at work, making the excavation for the foundation of the first unit of the new Los Angeles Museum.

A. PHIMISTER PROCTOR exhibited the model for his sculpture group, "The Pioneer Mother" before sending it to New York to be enlarged to heroic size and cast in bronze.

STENDAHL-HATFIELD GALLERIES announce an exhibition of paintings by Paul Lauritz in their galleries at the Ambassador Hotel, March 2 through March 21.

Also selected paintings by Eastern men in the private room of the Gallery, March 1-16. And in the Print Rooms an exhibition of fine etchings by Whistler, Blampied, Manet, Seymour Haden, Armin Hansen, Bauer, Zorn, Walcot, Forain, Rembrandt, and Fitton, March 1-16.

SOUTHWEST MUSEUM, Marmion Way, and Avenue 46, Los Angeles: The Sculptors Guild of Southern California, in co-operation with the Southwest Museum, will open their Second Annual Exhibition on March 7th and which will continue until April 7th. Sculptors outside of the Guild are not restricted from entering. The exhibit is to be featured on an educational basis, free from competitive awarding.

BILTMORE SALON exhibitions include: Jack Wilkinson Smith to March 9th; Maynard Dixon to March 9th; Carl Oscar Borg, March 9-23; Clyde Forsythe, March 23-April 6. In the Galleria Real, during the entire month, a wonderful and comprehensive exhibition of French Impressionists will be hung, Claud Monet, Renoir, Degas, Pissorro, Sisley, Manfra, and more than a dozen others.

WEST COAST ARTS, INC. include in their compiled list of good art lectures by artists, "Making a Home" by Douglas Donaldson, in a single lecture or in a series of lesson lectures, illustrated with designs in color; "Review of Recent Art Books," and "Gallery Talks" by Mary Everett. "Costume Design" by Bessie Ella Hazen, in a single lecture or in a series of six lectures, illustrated with models; also by Miss Hazen. "Interior Decoration," a series of lesson lectures, or a single lecture, illustrated with lantern slides, and "Art Appreciation." "Two Years in Japan," illustrated with an exhibition of paintings from the beginning of the journey to the end, by Evelyn Nunn Miller. "How to Look at Pictures" by Marie Kendall, "Modern Developments in Art" by Frederick Schwankovsky, "Making Etchings of the California Missions," illustrated with color etchings by Nell Brooker Mayhew, also "Art Appreciation for Children" by Mrs. Mayhew. "The Municipal Art of Paris" and "The Municipal Art of Boston" by George J. Burns. "The Line of Magic," illustrated by hand-made prints, by Mrs. John W. Cotton. "Modeling in Clay" illustrated with clay, by Louise Everett. "How to Look at Pictures" by Francis Kirk. "Design and Embroidery," "Household Design," and "Landscape Design" each in a series of lessons by Vivian Stringfield. "Pottery" a series of lessons by Olive Newcomb.

CANNELL AND CHAFFIN announce exhibitions in the Pasadena Gallery, Maryland Hotel, as follows: Hovsep Pushman, March 2-14; Marion Kavanaugh Wachtel, March 2-14; Orrin White, March 16-31.

A. E. LITTLE has assigned space on the mezzanine floor of his shop on West Seventh street for the exhibition of paintings and prints. The first exhibition opens March 2, and consists of a group of etchings by Seymour Haden, Whistler, Cameron, Benson, Zorn, Troy Kinney, Heintzelman, and Lavy. Peter De Keyser will be in charge.

GLENDALE ART ASSOCIATION held the second anniversary banquet at the Tuesday Afternoon Club of Glendale, February 28. Dr. and Mrs. William Alanson Bryan were the guests of honor.

LOREN BARTON is exhibiting oils, water colors, etchings and drawings at the Ebell Club.

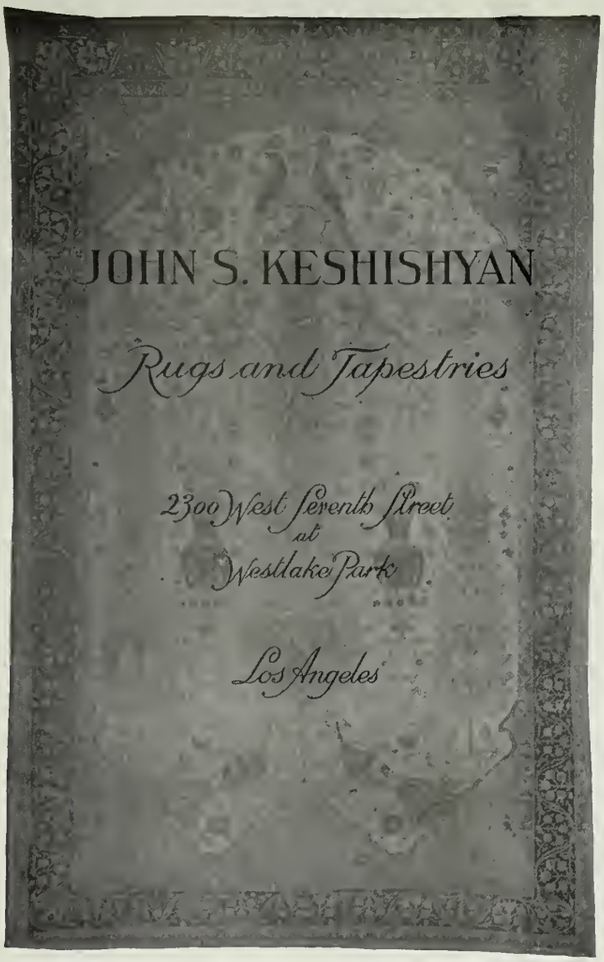
THE Wenzell Gallery has been opened by the widow of A. B. Wenzell, at 3002 Wilshire Boulevard, and will be open to the public every day in the week. Portraits and figures by the well known American painter and illustrator will be shown.

THE new Chamber of Commerce building, Los Angeles, has assigned very liberal space to art, and through the Biltmore Salon has hung a number of canvases by American artists, including Kathryn Leighton, Edgar Payne, Alson Clark, Maurice Braun, Richard Miller, F. Tenney Johnson, Hanson Puthuff, Franz Bischoff, Carl Oscar Borg, Aaron Kilpatrick, Norman Chamberlain, Elmer Wachtel, and Douglas Parshall.

PACIFIC COAST CHAPTER of the American Society of Landscape Architects announced the awards in the exhibition held at the Southwest Museum, at their second annual banquet, held February 26, at the Museum, as follows:

Parks—First, Recreation Park, at Long Beach, Cook & Hall; second, William Land Park, Sacramento, by Frederick D. Evans.

Subdivisions — Level topography, first, Mission Beach, San Diego, by Cook & Hall; hilly topography, first, Bird Rock, San Diego, by Cook & Hall.



Country clubs—First, Green Bay, Orange county by Cook & Hall.

Institutions—First, College of Agriculture, Davis, by John Gregg; second, Citrus Experiment Station, Riverside, by John Gregg.

Cemetery—First, Central Memorial Park, Santa Ana, by Cook & Hall.

Residential development. one acre or less—First, Mr. and Mrs. Walter S. Young, Pasadena, by Helen Deusner; honorable mention to the Misses Davenport, Pasadena, by Florence Yoch. More than one acre: First, Mrs. Franklin Booth, Hollywood, by Charles G. Adams; second, El Brolino, Mrs. Mary Stewart, Montecito; by Florence Yoch; honorable mention for two photographs of the estate of Mrs. G. W. Gates, Pasadena, by Florence Yoch and for six photographs of the estate of Ben R. Meyer, Beverly Hills, by Paul G. Thiene.

City planning awards—Park System of Santa Barbara, by Olmsted Brothers; for the civic center plan, Cook & Hall and William Lee Woollett, honorable mention. The committee did not decide on the award because the Allied Architects' plan on exhibition was not submitted.

B B Bell & Company

Lighting Fixtures
Fireplace Fittings
Lamps
Console-tables and Mirrors
Hope's Casements

2302 West Seventh Street
at
Westlake Park

Los Angeles

Music

PHILHARMONIC ORCHESTRA of Los Angeles, Walter Henry Rothwell, conductor, will give the monthly Friday afternoon Symphony concerts at 3:00, March 13-27, and the Saturday evening concerts at 8:30, March 14-28; and the popular Sunday afternoon concerts at 3:00, March 8-22. All concerts are given in the Philharmonic Auditorium, Fifth and Olive, Los Angeles.

PASADENA MUSIC AND ART ASSOCIATION, in the 1925 Artists Series, will present Fritz Kreisler, Tuesday evening, March 17, in the Pasadena High School Auditorium.

ALICE COLEMAN BATCHELDER, pianist, announces the sixth concert of the series of eight chamber music concerts for Thursday evening, 8:15, March 19, in the Music Auditorium of the Institute of Technology, Pasadena. The Zoellner Quartet are the assisting artists.

L. E. BEHYMER presents in the Philharmonic Artists Course Series, Tuesday series: Myra Hess, March 9, Gamut Auditorium; Royal Dadmun, baritone, March 10; Pavlowa Ballet, March 17, and Feodor Chaliapin, March 24 and April 2. Thursday series: Pavlowa Ballet, March 12; Rosa Ponselle, March 26, and Maria Jeritza, March 31.

AUDITORIUM ARTIST SERIES, (George Leslie Smith, manager), will present Mabel Garrison, soprano, Monday, March 9; Ernst Von Dohnanyi, pianist, March 23, and the London String Quartet, March 31.

THE fifth concert of the series of six given in Pasadena by the Los Angeles Philharmonic Orchestra, Walter Henry Rothwell, conductor, is announced for March 9, 8:15, Raymond Theater.

LOS ANGELES Chamber Music Society will give the fifth concert of the series of six, March 20, in the Music Room of the Los Angeles Biltmore at 3:00 p. m. These concerts alternate with the Friday afternoon concerts of the Philharmonic Orchestra.

THE Los Angeles Trio—Sylvain Noack, violin; Ilya Bronson, 'cello, and May MacDonald Hope, piano, will appear in concert at the Ebell Club, Los Angeles, March 25.

LOS ANGELES Oratorio Society, under the direction of John Smallman, will give Verdi's Requiem, Sunday afternoon, March 1st. The soloists will be Monnie Hayes Hastings, soprano; Clemens Gifford Johnson, contralto; Harold Proctor, tenor, and W. R. Guiberson, bass. Dr. Ray Hastings, at the organ; Lorna Gregg at the piano; and an orchestra of forty players from the Philharmonic, will assist.

THE San Carlo Opera Company's engagement in Los Angeles continues through March 7. The operas of the second week include: "Boheme," "Carmen," "Tales of Hoffman," "Aida," "Lucia." "Andrae Chenier," "Butterfly," and "Trovatore."

MUSIC AND DRAMA COURSE of Pomona College will present this month the Flonzaley String Quartet on March 26th. It is expected that the course will close with the usual dramatic production under the auspices of the Dramatic Department of the college.

CHARLES WAKEFIELD CADMAN'S one-act opera, "The Garden of Mystery," will be given in New York, at Carnegie Hall, March 20th.

DR. H. J. STEWART'S sacred cantata, "The Hound of Heaven," is announced for performance in San Diego at the Spreckles Theater, March 9, under the direction of Nino Marcelli.

ESTELLE HEARTT DREYFUS, contralto, will broadcast over Super Station K. F. I., three Lenten song hours, Sunday evenings, 8 till 9 o'clock, March 1-15-29. Assisting artists; Adolph Tandler, violinist, Jay Plowe, flutist, Alfred Kastner, harpist, Grace Andrews, pianist.

FOUR Metropolitan artists will lend their support in building up the maintenance fund of the Southwest Museum by giving a series of four concerts to be known as the Biltmore Ball Room Morning Musicales. The first of tho series featured Florence Easton, prima donna soprano on February 28th; Myra Hess, great woman pianiste will appear on March 12th; Rosa Ponselle, queen of the opera, will be heard on March 28th and Frieda Hempel, in Jenny Lind costume will sing on April 23rd. The Southwest Museum and Los Angeles are fortunate in having gained the interest of this most celebrated quartet of artists as it is not likely that any hotel in America has offered a series that equals it in artistry and value.

Announcements

PASADENA COMMUNITY PLAYERS announce the following plays in the Community Playhouse, "On the Hiring Line," a comedy by Harvey O'Higgins and Harriet Ford, eleven performances, opening Thursday, March 5th. "Heritage" by Bosworth Crocker (Mrs. Ludwig Lewisohn), "first time on any stage," March 19th.

THE Pasadena Lecture Course on Current Topics includes for March, the following speakers and subjects: March 3, John Collier, "Our Oldest and Youngest Civilizations"; March 12, at 8:15, Lothrop Stoddard, "The New World of Islam"; March 17, Dr. Alexander Kaun, "Russia in the Crucible"; March 24, E. Douglas Adams, (to be announced); March 31, Dr. Maurice Parmelee, "The Abolition of Poverty." All lectures are held in the California Institute of Technology, on Tuesdays at 4:00 p. m.

MRS. BANNELL SAWYER announces Interpretive Studies, illustrated, of Great Masters in Art. Four afternoons with great painters, Thursdays, three o'clock, in the Ballroom Foyer, The Biltmore, Los Angeles. March 19, Rembrandt; March 26, Antoine Watteau; April 2, George Frederick Watts, and April 9, The Distinguished Artists of America.

ALINE BARRETT GREENWOOD will present her current reviews on world events, books, music, art and plays, at the Shakespeare Clubhouse, Pasadena, 11:00 a. m., March 18.

CHEVALIER FULGIVIZIO GUERRIERI, conductor of the San Carlos Grand Opera Company, was the honor guest of the Art Club at a dinner given February 28, at the Assembly Tea Room in Los Angeles. Chevalier Guerrieri is a charter member of the International Artists' Club, which is composed of the allied arts of all nations. The musical program included Bianca Saroya, the Japanese singer, Pamaki Miura and Alice Gentle, also Demedrio Onoffrei, Amelio Gallo, Madame Isabella Piana and Madam Patricia Robazza.

ANNA PAVLOWA, with her dancing partners Volinine and Novikoff, will fill an engagement at the Philharmonic Auditorium, Los Angeles, March 11-21, with Saturday matinees, March 14 and 21.

The programs, with dates are as follows: Wednesday evening, March 11, Thursday evening, March 12, Monday evening, March 16, and Saturday matinee, March 21, "Don Quixote and Divertissements." Thursday matinee, popular prices, March 12, "Sleeping Beauty," "Fairy Doll." Friday evening, March 13, "Amarilla, Oriental Impressions." Saturday matinee, March 14, "Copellia and Chopinana." Tuesday evening, March 17, "Invitation to Dance, Russian Folk Lore." Wednesday evening, March 18, "Chopinana and Autumn Leaves." Thursday matinee, popular prices, March 19, "Magic Flute, Snowflakes." Thursday evening, March 19, "Copellia, Flora's Awakening." Saturday evening, March 21, "Polish Wedding and Amarilla."

BEGINNING on Sunday, March 1, three concerts, two weeks apart, are to be given at the Coliseum by the entire Philharmonic Orchestra of ninety men, Walter Henry Rothwell directing. These concerts will be given at prices of ten, twenty-five and fifty cents. Should the attendance indicate a sufficient appreciation of these concerts, it is planned to have an annual series of such performances at the Coliseum by this splendid orchestra, each spring.

These concerts have been made possible through the courtesy of the Community Development Association.

THE Ambassador takes pleasure in announcing that the well known English contralto, Miss Maude Elliott, will sing at the Dinner Concert in the Fiesta Room, Sunday evening, March 1st. Miss Elliott won the Royal College of Music Scholarship for female voices in England in 1923, and has been unanimously praised by music critics since her arrival in America.

Josef Rosenfeld and his concert orchestra.

THE Drama League, Pasadena Center, by request of the Shakespeare Club, will repeat "The Potters," by Joseph Patrick McEvoy, the evening of March 7, with practically the same readers who gave it February 9.

DR. MARGARET CARHART will continue her Thursday book talks during the month, in Pasadena: March 5, Romaine Rolland's "Ghandi"; March 12, "As the Critics See Us," and March 26, a group of four recent novels.

THE PLAYBOX, Pasadena, under the direction of Gilmore Brown, will present "The Tragedy of Nan" by John Masefield, beginning March 4.

THE POTBOILERS, 930 S. Grand Avenue, Los Angeles; Sigurd Russel, director, March 21-28, inclusive, will present three one-act plays, "Behind the Curtain of the Soul," by Yevreynoff, which has run for six years in Russia; "The Blind," by Maurice Maeterlinck, and "A Pantomime of Masks," by William Mortensen.

THE Soroptimist Club of Los Angeles now issue their Club Weekly, which contains the program of their weekly luncheons, an editorial by the president, an interesting sketch of an officer of the club or of one of the prominent members. The program for the first Tuesday in March will include the operalogue, "Madam Butterfly," presented by Margaret Goetz, and a piano solo by Fumi Iwasaki, the talented Japanese girl.

A. Schmidt & Son

For Fifty-six Years

Importers of Antique and Modern Silver and Sheffield Plate, Fine China and Glass.

2320 W. Seventh St., Los Angeles.
391 E. Colorado St., Pasadena.

Boston New York Washington

ANNA PAVLOWA
The Incomparable Dancer and Her Ballet Russe
SEE CALENDAR COLUMNS FOR PROGRAM BY DATES
Presented by L. E. BEHYMER
Philharmonic Auditorium, Los Angeles

Santa Barbara

SANTA BARBARA ART CLUB held the members' winter exhibition during February in the galleries in the Paseo with marked increase in the attendance. The group comprised thirty-four paintings, which included portraits, landscapes, and figures, in oils, pastels and water colors. Among the artists exhibiting were Fernand Lungren, Oscar Coast, Colin Campbell Cooper, Arthur M. Hazard, William Otte, Frank Morley Fletcher, Dudley S. Carpenter, John Gamble, Douglass Parshall, Homer F. Emens, Edward Borein, A. Brougier and Rosina Emmet Sherwood, A. N. A., a guest exhibitor.

IN the special performance of Chamber Music Works by Henry Eichheim and Arthur Bliss, which includes Malay Mosaic, it is interesting to know that the composition is played in Santa Barbara simultaneously with the New York Premiere, March 1, 1925, by Stokowski and the Philadelphia Symphony Orchestral Ensemble at a Concert of the International Composers' Guild.

ART CLUB dates, De la Guerra Studios, are as follows:
March 2-14—Arthur M. Hazard.
March 16-23—Oscar R. Coast.
March 30-April 10—Douglas Parshall, Dan S. Groesbeck.

MYRA HESS, celebrated English pianist, will appear at the Lobero Theater, Tuesday evening, March 10.

THE Strollers' Hi-Jinx dinner at the Montecito Country Club in February was the occasion for the announcement of the winner of the Stroller Poetry contest. Francis M. Livingston won the twenty-five dollar cash prize for the best poem on Santa Barbara. Mrs. Eugene Bayliss received honorable mention for her poem.

Community Arts Association of Santa Barbara
Calendar—March, 1925

March 3. Tuesday afternoon, 2:30 o'clock. Lobero Theatre. Special performance of Chamber Music Works by Henry Eichheim and Arthur Bliss. Played by 12 solo artists from the Los Angeles Symphony Orchestra.

March 5, 6, 7, Thursday, Friday and Saturday, 10-5. School of the Arts, 936 Santa Barbara street. Exhibition of tapestry weaving by Lisette Parshall and students. Free to public.

March 6. Friday afternoon, 2 o'clock. School of the Arts, 936 Santa Barbara street. Lecture by Frank Morley Fletcher. Subject: Architecture, illustrated by lantern slides. Admission by ticket, free on application to the Secretary.

March 7. Saturday evening, 8 o'clock. School of the Arts, 936 Santa Barbara street. Recital by a few students in the Music Department. Tickets free on application to the Secretary.

March 14. Saturday morning, 11 o'clock. Recreation Center. Children's Story Hour. Subject announced later. Moving Picture. Admission free.

March 14. Saturday afternoon, 2:30 o'clock. Recreation Center. Public invited to discussion, meeting of Civic Music and Arts Association of Southern California. Subject, Eisteddford-Art Festival.

March 14. Saturday evening, 8:30 o'clock. Lobero Theatre. Community Arts members meeting. Speaker, Charles Farwell Edson. Music and dances. Refreshments served on stage. Secure free admission cards from Community Arts office before 5 o'clock, March 14.

March 15. Sunday afternoon, 3:30 o'clock, Lobero Theatre. Community Arts Popular Concert, under direction of Arthur Bliss. Admission 35c and 75c at door.

March 20. Friday afternoon, 2 o'clock,, School of the Arts, 936 Santa Barbara street. Lecture by Frank Morley Fletcher. Subject, The Applied Arts, illustrated by lantern slides. Admission by ticket, free on application to the Secretary.

March 21. Saturday afternoon, 3 o'clock, 936 Santa Barbara street. Talk on Beethoven by Arthur Bliss, for the pupils of the School of Arts. No charge.

March 26, 27, 28. Thursday, Friday and Saturday evenings, at 8:30; Saturday matinee at 2:30. Lobero Theatre. Community Arts Play. Mail orders now. Tickets 50c, $1.00, $1.50, $2.00.

California Landscape Architects' Exhibition, and Southern Chapter of the American Institute of Architecture will be shown during March, under the auspices of the Plans and Planting Branch. Dates to be announced later.

Continuous Architectural Exhibit: Corridor 15, E. de la Guerra street.

Clarence P. Day Corporation

Engineers—Contractors

35 N. RAYMOND AVE. PHONE COLO. 1006
PASADENA, CALIFORNIA

MARTHA

WATSON-KERBY

Exclusive Fashions for Women

GOWNS WRAPS SPORTS CLOTHING

2224 WEST SEVENTH STREET
LOS ANGELES

WESTLAKE SQUARE PHONE FITZROY 0823

THOMAS FRANKLIN POWER
ARCHITECT
AND
ARCHITECTURAL ENGINEER

DUNKIRK 1442 2615 W. SEVENTH ST. LOS ANGELES

Hotel Raymond
and
Golf Course

Season: Dec. 27th to Late April

The only hotel in Pasadena having a golf course on its immediate property

WALTER RAYMOND
Proprietor

THE BILTMORE SALON

LOS ANGELES BILTMORE
PAINTINGS ETCHINGS BRONZES

MESSRS. HENRY D. MEYER
and
ADOLFO DI SEGNI
wish to announce that they have purchased
THE CURTIS STUDIO
of Los Angeles situated at
640 SOUTH FIGUEROA STREET which will be conducted in the future under the name of
THE MEYER AND DI SEGNI GALLERY
Antiques, Furniture, Objects of Art

VAndike 2936
640 South Figueroa Street
Los Angeles, California

Is Edison On Your List?

70,000 people own Edison Stock. It has paid dividends uninterruptedly since organization.

Issued under authority of the Railroad Commission of California.

Not subject to California tax or normal Federal income tax.

Edison 7% Cumulative Preferred
PRICE: $105 cash
$106 by installments
Ask at any Edison Office

Southern California Edison Company

MT. LOWE RESORT
America's Greatest Mountain Scenic Trolley Trip

5 TRAINS DAILY from MAIN ST. STATION
8.9.10 A.M. 1.30.4 P.M.
Round Trip Fare $2.50
For Literature and Information Address

A Most Delightful Journey.
Supplemented by Refreshment, Comfort and Ease at
Mt. Lowe Tavern.
The Beautiful Mountain Inn.
An Ideal Vacation Place for a Day, Week or Month Where One May Enjoy Rest and Recreation
Hiking · Riding · Dancing · Tennis
and other amusements

PACIFIC ELECTRIC RAILWAY
O·A·SMITH Passenger Traffic Manager
LOS ANGELES

California Southland

M. URMY SEARES - - - - - Editor and Publisher
ELLEN LEECH - - - - - - - Managing Editor

NO. 63, VOL. VII. MARCH, 1925

CONTENTS

	Page
FORECOURT OF A HILL HOUSE (From a painting by Norman Kennedy)	Cover Design
SOUTHLAND CALENDAR	4, 5, 6
PROBLEMS OF A MISSION TOWN, SAN GABRIEL	9
NEW BOOKS REVIEWED — Louise Morgrage	11
CALIFORNIA EN FIESTA THE YEAR 'ROUND	12
THE COMMUNITY ARTS OF SANTA BARBARA	14
SOUTHLAND OPINION — Dr. George Dock, and Ernest G. Bishop.	16, 17
CALIFORNIA SPORTS — Ellen Leech	18
THE LOS ANGELES NATIONAL HORSE SHOW	19
THE LOS ANGELES CHAPTER MEETING — H. O. Sexsmith, A.I.A.	20
THE ARCHITECTURAL CLUB NOTES — H. O. Sexsmith, Editor	21
THE INTERNATIONAL PRINT MAKERS — Howell Brown	22
THE CHILDREN'S EXHIBIT — Marion Hugus Clark	22
THE BEN MEYER ESTATE — M. Urmy Seares	23
MAKING A MOVIE—III — George Drumgold (Continued from February)	27
THE SERENDIPITY OLD MASTER	28
THE ASSISTANCE LEAGUE BULLETIN	29

Official Organ of the Architectural Club of Los Angeles, California
Official Organ of the ASSISTANCE LEAGUE of SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA,
Presents the interests of The Community Arts Association of Santa Barbara, and is sent East by many of its eighteen hundred members.

CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND is published monthly at Pasadena, Cal.
Copyrighted, 1924, by M. Urmy Seares
Advertising: CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND, Pasadena, Col. 916. Los Angeles, MEtropolitan 5270. Subscription price for 1925, $2.50 per year.

The Los Angeles
Elizabeth Arden Salon
with
J. W. Robinson Co.

UNDER the direct management of Miss Arden and her New York staff, and offering the same specialized treatments that have made Miss Arden's other salons internationally known.

Seventh Floor

MARGARET CRAIG
ARCHITECTURAL PHOTOGRAPHY
Portraits by Appointment
Official Photographer for California Southland
3223 W. Sixth Street
Telephone 56254 Los Angeles

La Solana
A quiet, well-appointed small hotel on the West Side near Orange Grove Avenue.
Expert Service
Each menu is carefully planned and prepared every day.
Grand Ave. and Lockhaven St. Pasadena

The Lundblads
A Real Home in the Country
Open to Guests the Entire Year
Address Mrs. L. Lundblad
Saratoga, California

HOTEL GREEN
A well ordered Residential and Tourist Hotel of peculiar excellence. Open all year. Moderate rates. Apartments by the month.
The Green Tea Pot Reopened October 15
CHARLES B. HERVEY, Proprietor

LUTÉ SISTERS
Los Angeles and New York
HATS AND GOWNS
With Individuality
Order Trade a Specialty
2517 West Seventh Street
Los Angeles
DUnkirk 4631

Sales, Listings, Rentals & Exchanges
Stombs Realty Co.
346 North Central Avenue
GLENDALE, CALIF.
Telephone Glendale 4198

NOTARY PUBLIC
METROPOLITAN 5270
MISS MARJORIE FYFE
MISS ELLA GILBERT
PUBLIC STENOGRAPHERS
MULTIGRAPHING AND MIMEOGRAPHING
929 LOEW'S STATE BLDG.
LOS ANGELES

CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND
AN ILLUSTRATED MAGAZINE OF NATIONAL INTEREST

ARCHITECTURAL PROBLEMS IN SAN GABRIEL TOWN

By M. URMY SEARES

WHEN a century and a half has rolled over a certain occupied portion of old earth's surface, that spot acquires a meed of respect from civilization, no matter what race has built it. As in Egypt of old, art treasures hidden deep by their owners, are brought forth by any age discovering them and are placed in museums by connoisseurs, that all the world may know what the race has done in the past and, knowing, revere it.

In Europe, as we see in Paris, the buildings of the past are so well constructed that hundreds of years of use does not destroy them; and today the democratic life of this most beautiful of cities flows through its old palaces and churches with pride and appreciation of what its fallen kings and princes built.

No architect worthy of the name would even now presume to restore the war-wrecked towns of France without first acquiring a deep sympathy with the history of each place and a knowledge that would defer to the actual makers of each historic little town.

Architecture is the record of all peoples. Domestic or civic it speaks aloud the love of beauty or the lack of it, and tells the world what passions rule a race.

Interest and respect for all that is finest and picturesque in our California Colonial remnants are subtle things. The higher the culture of a people, the better the taste of individuals, the more they seem to revel in nature itself and to appreciate the simplicity of an architecture which fits in with its natural environment.

"It takes a high state of civilization," said a wise writer, "to build in a forest without destroying its beauty." We may well add that it takes the highest knowledge and skill to build among the ruins of another race and still retain for our own delectation the simplicity of life and all the beauty found in that inheritance.

San Gabriel is the lovliest ruin left to the County of Los Angeles. San Fernando, and the church and little plaza in Los Angeles itself, have rival claims; but to San Gabriel must go the palm for picturesque appeal and best preserved old Mission.

THE MOST PICTURESQUE SPOT IN SAN GABRIEL, THE LAST INTERESTING REMNANTS OF COLONIAL TIMES CLUSTER AROUND THE OLD MISSION

THE CONTINENT CAN SCARCELY BOAST A WALL MORE BEAUTIFULLY WEATHER-PAINTED THAN THE EAST FRONT OF SAN GABRIEL ARCHANGEL

Here, too, the Mission Play, that record of the padres, which still holds the interest of newcomers and Californians alike, has found a home, and through its spiritual appeal has held its own against iconoclasts.

How best to hold the charm of the old settlement and still to grow as every California town is fated to grow is the problem that confronts all who love San Gabriel. The progressive, up-to-date citizens realize the attraction the little city has for tourists and excursionists. They welcome anything that will emphasize this as a business asset or as adding to the fame of San Gabriel. But they do not wish to have their picturesque old adobes treated as hovels, nor do they admire the imitation architecture which they call "Mexican." San Gabriel is now an American town whatever else it has been as a Mexican colonial settlement. The beauty which remains from the Spanish occupation must be differentiated from the more recent Mexican occupation, and this ancient Mission town can survive as a unique and famous spot only by careful judgment as to what to preserve, what to put on a pedestal and what to build for present needs.

The Mission itself is well preserved and is used for services. Its bell tower is famous and made familiar on postal card and pamphlet. The church property surrounding it is filling up with schools and other paroch-

ON THE LEFT IS THE NEW ADOBE WALL OF THE MISSION PLAYHOUSE, ON THE RIGHT TWO HISTORIC ADOBES, ON SANTA ANITA STREET. THE INTERESTING THOROUGHFARE IN SAN GABRIEL

PICTURESQUE PHOTOGRAPHS OF SAN GABRIEL TOWN

By MARGARET CRAIG

Here the old adobes are the finest examples of domestic architecture left to us from Old Mission days.

THE ADOBES OF SAN GABRIEL ARE AN INSPIRATION TO ALL ARCHITECTS WHO ARE STUDYING TO BUILD SMALL HOMES APPROPRIATE TO OUR CLIMATE AND LANDSCAPE.

"LA CASA VIEJA" REMODELED BY FREDERICK A. EASTMAN OF THE OFFICE OF WITMER AND WATSON UNDER THE DIRECTION OF THE THE ORIGINAL OWNERS. THE REAR GARDEN IS DELIGHTFUL

chial buildings which could be made as simple and as beautiful as the church itself, lacking only the effect of time. But the architect who attempts this task must steep himself in the lore of ancient days and absorb its beauty of simplicity and not attempt to copy by rule of thumb. Long lines, beautiful curves and flat wall spaces must be his to conjure with before he attempts to build modern houses in Mission style.

THE HIPPED ROOF ADOBE IS HERE SEEN AT ITS BEST.

Above is a picture showing successful work in fitting the old to the new and progressive. The life of San Gabriel town flows through this street to a modern subdivision east of the new Mission play house. On the left is the adobe wall with mission tile coping, a charming note in the concession side of the Play House business. All business men who are thinking of establishing their business by taking advantage of tourist interest in mission architecture, should consult with Mr. McGroarty, who has studied the subject in order to write his delightful book about that period and is our best authority on its practical application. More accurate than the wall, however, is the little adobe cottage in the center of our picture. This is a genuine California colonial house remodeled by the owner, a decendant of Spanish colonials, and restored by an architect who has placed his skill and training at the service of history and art, rather than of modern expediency. This is the true spirit in which the colonial remnants as well as the devastated sections of Europe must be approached, if the beauty which the race has evolved is to be preserved in this age of hurry and hustle. Hurry and hustle are necessary if one is seeking money to live on—but those who have already secured enough to live on must buy plenty of time in which to do things right if this mad world is to be left worth living in after the money is made.

THE NEW MISSION PLAYHOUSE IS DESIGNED BY MULTIPLYING BY THREE THE DIMENSIONS OF SAN ANTONIO DE PADUA, CALIFORNIA'S MOST BEAUTIFUL MISSION FACADE IS FOUND ON THAT NORTHERN RUIN.

RECENT BOOKS—REVIEWS

By LOUISE MORGRAGE

THE BLACK GOLCONDA

By Isaac Marcosson. Harper & Brothers

The name Shell, which we see frequently on our gasoline stations, like the famous primrose on the river's brim, is the name Shell and nothing more, until after we have read this entertaining volume describing the development of the petroleum industry, during the last sixty years. In a vigorous as well as instructive treatise on this vital subject, the author has traced from the beginning the growth of the great oil corporations like the Shell, the Anglo-Persian, the Standard and others. In the course of this discussion he suggests a plausible motive for the often incomprehensible conduct of statesmen and diplomats. It is oil. When some important conference takes place, and we are made to believe that the leaders of governments are at last becoming altruistic, we will do well to hesitate before indulging in too much credulity. Their apparently solicitous regard for the welfare of humanity will very likely be due to their thirst for oil. This is most certain to be true, if they happen to be English.

Oil has come to be a vital necessity in the progress of all the greater nations of the earth, but especially in the case of the English government. Therefore the empire is stretching out greedy hands to clutch every region, where there is any possible chance of finding this important commodity. From the book we get the impression that the earth is a chess-board, at which British oil-magnates sit, silently and inscrutably planning their moves, giving up a pawn here and there, now and then making an apparent sacrifice, all for the purpose of checkmate in the end. As players in this game, the citizens of the United States have so far made a comparatively poor showing, owing perhaps to lack of the proper support from our government. England's treatment of her nationals differs decidedly from that accorded the people of this country by the United States when it comes to matters of commercial expansion. The British exclusion program, too, is the direct reverse of our policy favoring the open door. England after gaining control of territory, puts a fence around it until the time comes for her to need it, a method of procedure entirely foreign to our custom of thinking in the present only. These points count in this game of oil.

EDWARD LAWRENCE DOHENY, PIONEER OIL OPERATOR IN MEXICO AND CALIFORNIA, WHOSE CAREER IS SKETCHED IN THE BLACK GOLCONDA.

In commercial affairs and trade expansion, England has a close rival in Holland, for centuries the merchant country of Europe. To her belong the far-off tropical islands, Sumatra, Borneo, and Java, among the first regions of the world to furnish petroleum, thus causing the Royal-Dutch corporation which exploited it to become very powerful in the oil industry. Great Britain met this emergency with her usual astuteness, by effecting a consolidation of the two great companies, Royal-Dutch and Shell, whose storage tanks are now to be found always filled at every port in the world.

Brief sketches of the lives of some of the oil-barons in the book are as thrilling after their fashion, as the tales told of knights in armor in days of old. Rockefeller of the Standard is there of course; and it gratifies our local pride to find the name of our own Mr. Doheny high in the list of those bearing international renown. Indeed, while reading the account of his strenuous endeavor and shrewd foresight in those early days, many of us may understand for the first time, what a tremendous debt is owed this intrepid pioneer by the whole community for its rapid and prosperous growth of recent years. In fact most of the men responsible for this industrial masterpiece, appear to have possessed remarkable force of character, and a prophetic vision of the future, denied to the majority of mankind.

ZANE GREY, AUTHOR OF "THE THUNDERING HERD," LOOKING ACROSS HIS BELOVED DESERT.

THE THUNDERING HERD

By Zane Grey. Harper & Brothers

Some books of fiction may be compared to paintings, since in both, an imaginative haze softens the contour of scenes and characters. "The Thundering Herd"is no painting however, but a photograph. Through the medium of its pages, we see distinctly these men and women of a mid-west beginning to vanish in the early seventies; the great herds of buffaloes ranging over the vast unsettled plains; wild life of every sort, wolves, deer, antelope pass before our vision, as well as scattered Indians, savage and eager for the scalps of the white men, so wantonly bent on exterminating the valuable buffaloes. It is a story about the Pan-handle section of northern Texas, whither mobs of men were thronging, greedy for the wealth to be derived from the sale of the buffalo hides. There are plenty of thrills. The most exciting episode is a graphic account of a lone girl, guiding a span of runaway horses through a herd of traveling buffaloes, for what seems an interminable time. And we almost believe it. But that adventure fills the cup; what follows is wasted.

The remarkable feature connected with the publication of this novel is the variety of opinions regarding it, throughout the country, expressed by the literary critics, inclined in the past, to view this phenomenal best-seller with stern disapproval. Now it would appear that he is inspiring them to produce the best efforts of their craft. One example of these, a particularly brilliant analysis of Zane Grey's place as an author, is printed in the February seventh number of the highly intellectual "Saturday Review," under the title of "American Sagas." It is written by T. K. Whipple whose refreshing and original viewpoint as disclosed therein, will prove stimulating even to those who have never read a word of Zane Grey.

THE SHALLOW END

By Ian Hay. Houghton Mifflin Company

The spectacle of London going after its pleasures is so diverting to Major Beith's sense of fun, that he has made a book about it, in which with gay good humour, he has described different phases of this important side of London's life. He smiles with his Londoners, however, and not at them; we smile too when we read, for instance, his droll sketch of London, going in conscientiously for this new kind of night-life, sprung up since the war. Then we have London at the cinema, and it is not London that gets the worst of that either. In "Universal Uncles" we meet the sophisticated children of the present day, superficially amusing at least. Next this chronicler with mild irony gives us a view of London at its sports, both professional and amateur, and we continue to smile. The theatre, we expect, but auctions come somewhat as a surprise to those who have not realized their increasing popularity as a form of entertainment. In all these jesting trifles, light as thistle down, Major Beith keeps strictly to the surface. He knows it is but a step from fun to pathos, where he has no intention of landing us. His drollery is harmless; his victims will not be vexed, but like ourselves will read these little sallies in spare moments, and temporarily at least, provide themselves with a brighter outlook for meeting the more serious problems of living.

THE SEA GYPSY

By Edward J. Salisbury and Merian C. Cooper. G. P. Putnam's Sons

One morning about four years ago, Captain Salisbury started forth from Los Angeles harbor in the Wisdom, an 88-ton sailing yacht, as nonchalantly as one might set out on a stroll through woods and over fields, hitherto unexplored. His main equipment was a motion picture camera, for the purpose of recording the adventures which he hoped were in store for him. In these days,

(Continued on Page 27)

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA EN FIESTA THE YEAR 'ROUND

THE SERRA PILGRIMAGE ENTERING CARMEL MISSION, WHERE THE NEW SARCOPHAGUS OF FATHER JUNIPERO SERRA, WAS PLACED

SERRA PILGRIMAGE, HONORING THE 143 ANNIVERSARY OF THE DEATH OF FRAY JUNIPERO SERRA, LED BY FATHER MESTRES OF THE PARISH

THE MISSION PAGEANT OF SAN JUAN CAPISTRANO IS DIVIDED INTO SIX EPISODES, GIVING THE MAIN POINTS OF HISTORICAL INTEREST

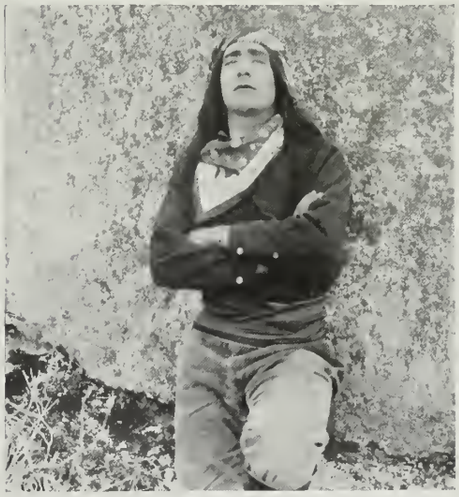
EACH EPISODE OF THE MISSION PAGEANT IS HISTORICALLY CORRECT AND THE WHOLE IS WOVEN INTO BEAUTIFUL AND INTERESTING DRAMA

MISS HILDRETH TAYLOR, OF PASADENA, AS A SENORITA IN THE SERRA PILGRIMAGE LAST OCTOBER

"BILL," ONE OF THE RIDERS OF THE SERRA PILGRIMAGE, A PICTURESQUE

FIGURE FAMILIAR TO HABITUES OF THE MONTEREY PENINSULA

MISSION PAGEANT DANCER, "MARTITA," FAVORITE OF THE PIRATE, HIPSOLITA, 4TH EPISODE



THE MISSION PAGEANT AT SAN JUAN CAPISTRANO WILL BE REPEATED THROUGHOUT THE SUMMER, BEGINNING IN JUNE

RAMONA BOWL, A NATURAL AMPHITHEATER IN THE SAN JACINTO FOOTHILLS, WHERE RAMONA PAGEANT WILL BE GIVEN APRIL 25-26, MAY 2-3, 1925

ROMONA AND ALESSANDRO, MARGUERITA AND JUAN CANITO LIVE AGAIN IN THE RAMONA PAGEANT, WHICH IS GIVEN BY GARNET HOLME, IN THE SETTING IN WHICH HELEN HUNT JACKSON WROTE THE FAMOUS NOVEL. THE CAST INCLUDES MORE THAN A HUNDRED PEOPLE DRAFTED FROM DRAMATIC CIRCLES

THE QUEEN AND LADIES OF THE "OLD SPANISH DAYS," SANTA BARBARA

DON CABRILLO IN THE FIESTA, "OLD SPANISH DAYS," AUGUST, 13-16, 1924

THE INTERESTING WORK OF THE COMMUNITY

Dwight Faulding, Photographer.

SCENE FROM "FANNY'S FIRST PLAY" BY GEORGE BERNARD SHAW, GIVEN BY COMMUNITY ARTS PLAYERS OF SANTA BARBARA AT THE LOBERO THEATRE.

IF you live in a neighborhood where a community theater flourishes,—and they thrive in practically any latitude and are totally impervious to longitude,—you are apt to be suddenly find yourself listening to a most convincing young person who assures you, without the trouble of a preamble, that you must positively be one of the cast of the coming production at the theater as you are absolutely the type for that drama.

It is really quite startling and yet in a way very satisfying to find someone so convinced of your ability to walk out of your identity as you see it and enter that which he holds out for you. It is almost like enjoying reincarnation, though generally the part you are asked to assume is far from what you hope may await you at the next turn of the wheel. However it does whisk you on a magic carpet to the land of make believe.

The suddenness with which this thing overtakes you rather leaves you breathless anyway and thereby more at the mercy of the director. Perhaps you have just plucked your mail from the box, and from the indifferent contemplation of the bills you note a letter from Mary which you know contains scarcely more of interest, bearing all the deadly details of the last family dinner party, wherein the maid burned the chicken, the lettuce was wilted, and why will people have plum pudding after the Christmas holidays are once past, from this, as I started to say you are rescued by a pleasant voice exclaiming, "Oh, good morning, I was in hopes I might find you, as I wanted to say how perfectly you would fit into the play we are casting now with the Community Players, and I want you to do the part of the neglected wife!"

But wherever you may be, shop, studio, street, musical, tea, or church, you can never be quite sure you are safe from the casting director, which forms one great distinction between community work and the professional. In the latter it is always the director who hides and the cast who seek.

Dwight Faulding, Photographer.

SCENE FROM LILIOM, FRANZ MOLNAR PLAY GIVEN AT LOBERO THEATRE BY COMMUNITY ARTS PLAYERS OF SANTA BARBARA. VINCENT DUFFEY AS LILIOM. IAN M. WOLFE AS THE SPARROW, EDNA JAMES AS JULIE drafted for a part at any moment and, what is more, convinced of your adaptability. The length of time taken for the conviction may depend on the force of the directing genius of the theater in question,

Thus you can readily see that while selecting a cast for a production may present difficulties to the community director, it certainly contains pitfalls for the citizenry. The director, as a rule, has an eye for all kinds of qualities and discerns in your cosmos traits of which you have no cognizance, or if you have, of which you trust the public has no knowledge, and he, without loss of time comes determinedly forward and announces you are just the person for such and such a part. Of course you may not be actually conscripted into the part, but the matter is so cleverly presented, your hidden ability so gracefully brought to the surface and exhibited to you that you are fully convinced you are depriving the world of a real pleasure in refusing to appear either as the policeman, the French maid, the butler, or even maphap, the lady or the lover, the villian, or the vamp!

Any pleasant afternoon as you proceed about your usual duties or pleasures, or both if you are so extremely fortunate as to have them coincide, a meeting with this aforesaid director may occur; just as likely as not while you are having tea, or in a shop perhaps completing your Spring outfit by the addition of nude hosiery, or maybe not so glamorous a purchase—merely the roast for dinner—you

Dwight Faulding, Photographer.

SCENE FROM LILIOM: VINCENT DUFFEY AS LILIOM, EDNA JANES AS JULIE, BETTY BARR AS LOUISE. NINA MOISE, PRODUCTION MANAGER. SETTINGS DESIGNED AND EXECUTED BY DAVID IMBODEN. PRESENTED IN JANUARY, 1925, BY COMMUNITY ARTS PLAYERS OF SANTA BARBARA

ARTS ASSOCIATION SANTA BARBARA

THE PLANS & PLANTING COMMITTEE

THIS VACANT LOT MIGHT HAVE HOUSED ANYTHING BUT SOMEONE WITH VISION CREATED THE DE LA GUERRA STUDIOS ON THE RIGHT

WHAT is the Plans and Planting Committee and what are its activities?

Even in our own Santa Barbara this is frequently asked, and it is with the hope of being able to answer that question that I am briefly reviewing the inception of the work, its aims and present activities.

In March, 1922, a group of public spirited men and women under the chairmanship of Bernhard Hoffmann, formally organized to "maintain the architectural traditions and safeguard the natural beauty" of Santa Barbara. Civic bodies throughout the country have sponsored the "city beautiful" idea, but nowhere has that movement received the impetus that it has here. The work has now become an institution in the life of the community and for a year and a half has maintained an office with full time secretary to carry on the routine of its many activities.

A word of explanation is perhaps necessary as to what is meant by "maintaining the architectural traditions." Santa Barbara is largely populated by people from every section of the United States and these settlers have brought with them as diverse architectural ideals as it is possible to imagine. Little regard was paid to the historical background nor even to the climatic conditions in their new surroundings. Consequently the simple beauty of the old adobes, the fascinating patios and soft-tiled roofs were fast giving way to commonplace commercial buildings suggestive of the middlewest and a bewildering array of every known residential type. Today a most striking change is manifest everywhere. The over-ornate is being replaced by the simple, and on all sides one hears praise of the Spanish-Colonial architecture, while the "Jazz" Spanish is as readily denounced as any other ill-designed type.

The following outline of the Committee's present activities speaks for itself of the growth and diverse interests:

I. Plans Branch—1. Continuous exhibitions at the office of the Committee. (Architectural, landscape and allied subjects.) Under this division of the work recognition is taken of the most notable examples of various classes of building in Santa Barbara. 2. Extension work High School Architectural Classes: (a) Lectures; (b) Informal class criticism by prominent architects; (c) Visiting of our exhibitions under their department head during class periods. 3. Student competition for the best design of a small house. Spanish-Colonial style. Open to students of High School and State Teachers' College. 4. Public reference library at office, composed of (a) Photographs; (b) Magazines—architectural and non-technical but relating to building; (c) Books and list of related works at Public and State libraries. 5. "Imported" exhibits. (Planned for the near future.) The Bertram C. Goodhue Memorial exhibit; California Landscape Architects' exhibit (courtesy of the Southwest Museum); Southern Chapters of the American Institute of Architects; (a) Loaning of exhibit material. Metropolitan Museum of New York to exhibit photographs of notable work here; "House Beautiful" has requested aid in securing photographs of Spanish-Colonial small houses for 1925 Building Annual. 6. Exhibits to stimulate civic interest. 7. Publication and sale of book of Small House Designs (non-profit). Sale of House Plans (non-profit). 9. Co-operation National Committee Restriction Outdoor Advertising (see California Southland, February, 1925). 10. Lectures. Free to the public.

II. Planting Branch—1. Children's Gardens Section (present enrollment approximately 200). 2. Home garden advice and competitions. 3. Flower festivals. 4. Distribution of free seed to children enrolled in Children's Garden Section. 5. Competitions and awards for Children's Section. 6. Story Hours. In co-operation with Recreation Center. Travel, nature and fanciful films and stories. The subjects on February 14 were: Pied Piper of Hamlin and Legend of Willow Pattern Plate. The attendance was over 600, including Children's Garden entrants and other groups.

GRACE STRONG GUE,
Secretary, Plans and Planting Committee.

THE ENROLLMENT OF THE CHILDREN'S GARDENS GROUP OF THE PLANS AND PLANTING COMMITTEE. HELD AT THE SANTA BARBARA RECREATION CENTER, SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 14TH, 1925

ABOVE: A TYPICAL BACKYARD IN A DOWNTOWN DISTRICT IN 1920.
RIGHT: OPPOSITE THE PLAZA—REAR OF STORES ON STATE STREET.
THE SAME BACKYARD LATER INSPIRED BY THE COMMUNITY SPIRIT

SOUTHLAND

Letters

"Blessed be letters—they are the monitors, they are also the comforters, and they are the only true heart-talkers."

AMONG my most cherished possessions is a sheaf of letters written by J. Smeaton Chase. They are marvels of choice diction, sentence artistry, and beautiful phrasing. Upon every page gleams the kindly and genial personality of the writer. To me these letters are as much a masterpiece as a rare painting or sculptured marble.

Like the fine art of walking, the art of letter writing is fast disappearing. Means of rapid transit are becoming more and more numerous, and there are other and quicker ways of communication than by letter. To compose a letter worthy of the name requires leisure, quiet, and opportunity for reflection, and these virtues are almost crowded out of existence by the hurry and confusion of the age.

The test of the worth of a letter is its ability to survive a second and a third reading. A letter that can be read and reread, cherished like the fragrance of old gardens, and finally laid away in the "lavender and old lace of memory" is a treasure indeed. This is the kind of a letter that is the result of careful and sympathetic thought, leisurely reflection and the placing of the writer in the presence of the person addressed,—a missive yielding inward glimpses of the soul of the writer.

The mission of a letter is not essentially to give news. It is to cheer and encourage, to give comfort and consolation, to offer sympathy and love, and to reveal glimpses of our inner selves at their highest and best.

A letter should read exactly as we would talk. It should be an exalted, glorified counterpart of the conversation that is impossible when space and distance intervene. The context should be cheery, brisk, and stimulating, revealing the writer's mood like the play of sunshine and shadow across an April sky.

Most of us write too often, before we have anything really worthwhile to say. It is a matter of plain duty, we think, to answer our correspondence promptly even if our replies are so hurried and sketchy that they fail to survive a first reading. Thoreau wrote to many of his friends but once a year, but what letters he did write!

That there are so few masters of the craftsmanship of letters is clearly evidenced by the joy with which the publishing of their correspondence is acclaimed. Think of the sheer delight in reading the letters of Emerson, William James, Thoreau, Stevenson, or John Muir! These reveal a spontaneity, a freshness, a charm that the studied and polished essay entirely lacks. No such intimate glimpses into the lives of great men, whether they be poets, essayists, or philosophers, are afforded us as are revealed by their letters. The beauty and worth of these treasures is that they were written without conscious thought that anyone except the receiver would read hem. Instead of the studied effort to please a capricious public, the labor of the bookmaker, there are the warmth and glow and play of mood that reflect the personality of the writer and delight the reader, portraying the real self as no other form of writing can.

What jeweled mosaics of thought are found in letters! Recently I have had the pleasure of reading the Life and Letters of John Muir. From th's storehouse of beauty and riches I have selected a few pearls of great price:

"Few lives are so beautiful as hers, and few could have had the glorious satisfaction, in dying, to know that so few words spoken were other than kind, and so few deeds that did anything more than augment the happiness of others."

"As the shadows lengthen in life's afternoon, we cling all the more fondly to the friends of our youth."

"Never mind—for, anywhere, everywhere in immortal soul sympathy, I'm always with my friends, let time and the seas and continents spread their years and their miles as they may."

ERNEST G. BISHOP.

How to Choose a Doctor

IN the January number of this magazine we endeavored to start a campaign which would place before the layman a view of the whole fraternity of physicians together with the latest cults and sects in adequate perspective. Two results followed this effort, and each throws its own helpful light on the subject. Hardly had the magazine appeared in Pasadena before we received a letter from the Superintendent of Pasadent's expert and scientific dispensary asking that a change made in her article on page 28 be corrected in our next issue. This is the first opportunity we have had to comply with this reasonable request and we pause here to do so. The words "in the East" were not in the original article signed by Miss Fisher, but were added by the writer of the editorial on the same subject, a native Californian extremely jealous of the reputation and good name of the state.

The second result was a flood of literature in all forms known to the propagandist, setting forth the virtues of osteopathy, chiropractics and the endless methods by which the shrewd and clever earn their living from the presence of disease.

Now, it is the province of the publicist to read all that can be said on each side of a subject and try to view it from all points available. So we have waded through this "literature."

It is true that in the critical act of chosing a physician for a loved one who is ill, neither of these incidents has either weight or influence. And yet, for the discussion in hand, they throw much light on the relation of the public to the practice of healing.

In the work of any scientific calling, the personal equation must be ferreted out, its weight determined, and, in accurate mathematical work, eliminated, before final results are announced. In many instances, accuracy becomes an obsession and, between pure science and its application to human needs and desires, there is "a great gulf fixed" by the aloofness of the scientific or professional man interested largely in research.

The layman must, therefore, discriminate between the great contribution which the honorable profession of medicine has made to the progress of humanity and to the health of the race, and that other element—the business of healing. He must also estimate a man by three distinct standards. Only a clear headed, broad minded member of the profession at its best can be allowed to interpret the attitude of the men who have taught the world what truth it knows about the art of healing.

Dr. George Dock, now resident in Pasadena, gave, while Professor of Medicine at Washington University, St. Louis, an enlightening paper before the Southern Medical Association's meeting at Memphis. We quote his definition of Physicians.*

By physicians we mean those who carry on the various activities of medicine, viz., the investigation, prevention, healing or alleviation of disease. Not by accident was the name used. As healing grew into a definite discipline worthy of cultivation, and was no longer merely the avocation of priests or magicians, those who devoted themselves to it were obviously students of Nature—physis—of life. Nowadays we call the study biology and we make a distinction between the biologist and the physician, but this is merely the result of specialization, as in an earlier time physiology was separated from physics. The frontier is vague and the same person may be at one time biologist, at another time physician, as we see in Pasteur studying yeast and Pasteur curing rabies, or he may be both at once as were John Hunter and Lister and many others. A healer, according to the dictionary, is one who heals. More accurately it should be "one who claims to heal." The name has been adopted by a certain cult, but it may be applied to all who claim peculiar curative results from some sepcial plan of treatment.

The idea of study, of investigation, was early associated with a recognition of the progressive, i. e., growing, the unfinished, character of medicine; of coming enlargement, of future improvement. Not less early, perhaps, came the perception of the need of constant criticism of results. "Life is short and art long, experience fallacious, judgment difficult," was written almost twenty-five centuries ago, and has remained as an axiom in medicine ever since. So medicine has grown and has become more efficient, and just as men's souls are tested by the stern realities of the battlefield, so has medicine been tested in the same way, in battle and pestilence, and has acquitted itself well.

*See Physicians and Healers, an Oration on Medicine, Eleventh Annual Meeting, Memphis, Tenn., November 12-15, 1917.

OPINION

The principal triumphs of medicine have been recounted many times and they are convincing enough. But the work on malaria and yellow fever at Panama, the checking of tetanus and gas gangrene, the change in the incidence of typhoid fever in camps and armies, one of the most serious military difficulties down to the Spanish and Boer Wars, yet fully mastered on the Mexican border and in hundreds of miles of camp in Europe, can not too often be reiterated, for they show as great an advance as the motor transport is over the man-carried packs of former armies.

* * * * * * *

Yet a striking fact, an extraordinary paradox, is that along with the progress in which medicine has thrown away all the relics of mystery and made its gains accessible to every one, counterfeits have not only sprung up, but they are making disciples to such an extent as seriously to imperil the effort of the medical profession to raise its standard. It is not enough to pass this over with the statement that it illustrates the "omnipotence of the irrational." Let me set forth some details of this situation.

Medical teaching in America began as the volunteer work of physicians and for almost a century continued so. Medical schools were organized and operated in the face of many difficulties. Abuses also arose. There were too many schools that could not have proper facilities. Chaotic hospital conditions prevented adequate clinical instruction. It was easy for schools even of the most rudimentary character to obtain classes and graduate doctors of medicine with unlimited right to practice. Physicians were the first to see the evils and to try to overcome them. Working in the profession, through the American Medical Association, the American Academy of Medicine, the Association of Medical Colleges and other organizations, standards were gradually raised. Connections with universities, for a long time purely nominal, became actual, and secured the university spirit, the spirit of research, the surest preventive of routine and stagnation. Later, the work of the Council on Medical Education of the American Medical Association hastened progress materially, and at an important epoch the expert investigation and the impartial report of the Carnegie Foundation for the Advancement of Teaching were of paramount assistance. The improvement in the standards of medical schools and of licensing boards had as an inevitable result a decrease in the number of medical schools and of medical students. Some schools closed their doors. Others, by combining and consolidating staffs and equipment, continued. The process of elimination and improvement, slow at first, acquired greater velocity after the formation of the Council on Medical Education, and in the twelve years of its activity the total number of schools listed by it was reduced by over 45 per cent, while the number of schools with improved educational standards increased 95 per cent. This would seem to indicate promise of a great advance in the quality of medical practitioners, but the new feature that I have indicated in medical practice has gone far to neutralize the results.

While the medical schools were being forced to improve or perish, other institutions for the training of medical practitioners were springing up under new names and already they have reached a significant number. And the danger does not consist merely in the replacing of poor schools by others free from the wholesome scrutiny of the Council. There is added a widespread demoralization by reason of numerous associated features with dangers that do not seem to me to be recognized in their true value.

* * * * * * * *

To what extent have these schools neutralized the effect of the elimination of weak medical schools? This can not be answered accurately. In the regular schools the number of students was reduced, by the raising of standards, by almost 2,000. How many are enrolled in the irregular schools is impossible to tell from the data at hand. These schools have often large and luxuriously got-up catalogs. They give half-tones of the faculties, pictures of fraternities, sororities, athletic clubs, scenery, office-buildings and offices, "comics," and other incidental material, but some do not list the faculties and almost none give lists of undergraduates or graduates.

* * * * * * * *

Preliminary education is never important and sometimes made light of. One school requires only "ability to read and write backed by common sense."

* * * * * * * *

Here then are indicated two of the three standards by which the layman must estimate his chosen physician. First, what school has he attended? Second, what contributions has he made to world progress in health? The third question is still to be discussed and is many sided: What skill has he in the art of healing? This question leads us far afield into the matter of personality as well as trained hands and well developed brains. It takes up the subtle art of salesmanship as developed by the new schools of healing and will perhaps prove that the loss of the old-fashioned family physician has much to do with the rise of the cheap healer.

The Flower of a Race

MRS. WILLOUGHBY RODMAN, on her return from an intensive study of social conditions in Europe, gave us a picture of the turn of Fortune's wheel which seemed appalling. Wherever she went she found the flower of Russian aristocracy scattered over Europe, driven from their homes, serving the people of all countries in hotel and restaurant, in garage or stable.

The reaction of this picture on the minds of the selfish, the untutored, the lowest strata of thinkers calls forth, we find, a remark such as this, "Serves them right for trying to lord it over the common people."

This attitude was evidently that of the very common-looking people who, after the war, sat for their photographs to be reproduced in the newspapers of America. Surrounding a table on which were piled the crown jewels of Russia, they registered—not the expression of men who understood the terriffic responsibilities of rulers—but rather was their expression that of men who said to the world, "Now we have them, and we are the leaders of Russia.

To America, which is at least one hundred years in advance of Russia in the development of Democracy, and which now constitutes the scientific laboratory of the world for the study of that subject, this exhibition of ignorance and selfishness was discouraging. What good could ever again come out of Russia if its leaders were so blind?

Holding onto the husks of royalty, they "murdered the prophets" and drove out their noblest citizens, and threw to the dogs outside their gates that which Russia had spent generations to develop—the concentrated essence of the very thing the people most need and for which they were themselves desperately but unthinkingly striving!

The American colonies have been through their own Revolution, but it was the aristocracy of England which led it. Trained to lead, trained in responsibility and square dealing, cognizant of what constituted the desirable things of life and conscientiously seeking first the Kingdom of God and His righteousness, they went forward in the progress of human interests. Knowing that jewels are worse than useless without nobility of character, these men deposed their English king by walking out from under his dominion, and left his crown jewels behind them.

For what purpose has Russia in agony and sweat trained her magnificent intelligencia, her aristocracy, her leaders? The best of them glory in service. Those who do not are deficient in the modernity of their social training; for service is the keynote of our age and only those who are trained can serve.

Mrs. Rodman's picture of European social conditions is not, therefore, so hopeless as it might seem. Cruel as the conditions may be for individuals, the best is being made of the situation. Highly trained and cultivated people are mingling with the lowly, and the sterling qualities of both will not be jeopardized by that contact. There is in the cultivated human being something which lasts through fire and pestilence. Democracy proves that these qualities of character exist in everyone, but everyone has not had leisure or leadership which developed the best and most worthy.

Always, hitherto, there has been an aristocracy for which the nation or the race sacrificed in order that within that race somewhere should be preserved the best characteristics which they knew.

Now, when—in America at least—everyone is called upon to develop those fine characteristics hitherto confined to the leisure class or their immediate associates, we are trying out all sorts of sources from which to obtain a general training by which every citizen may learn the duties as well as the luxuries of leisure.

The scattering of the seed of finer things among the peoples of Europe by means of its fallen aristocracy may be the forerunner of a harvest unheard of in the past.

CHAMPIONS ON CONCRETE, SWARD, SAWDUST AND SEA

ANY WEATHER IS GOOD WEATHER ON A CALIFORNIA GOLF COURSE, BUT FEMININE ENTHUSIASM MOUNTS HIGH WITH THE SUN, AS SHOWN BY THE SMILES OF THESE DEVOTEES OF THE GAME: MRS. JOHN SHEPARD, OF ST. LOUIS, MRS. HENRY BORDEN, MRS. T. L. FERGUSON, MRS. JOHN D. CAMERON, MRS. J. C. LINNEMAN, MRS. WILLIAM CARTER OF NASHVILLE, TENN., AND MRS. A. E. D. TRABUE, CHAIRMAN OF SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA WOMEN'S GOLF TOURNAMENT AT ANNANDALE COUNTRY CLUB, ALL POSSIBLE CONTESTANTS FOR CHAMPIONSHIP HONORS. ANNANDALE HAS OPENED ANOTHER AVENUE TO SPORT IN THE INTRODUCTION OF TRAP SHOOTING. AT PRESENT THIS IS CONFINED TO THE MEN ONLY, THE PRESIDENT, ROBERT M. MODISETTE, AND DR. PAUL HUNTER, THEIR GOLF CHAMPION BEING AMONG THE CRACK SHOTS

Golden State Limited Photograph Service.

LEFT TO RIGHT: W. S. KESSLER OF JACKSON, MICH., AND WALLACE T. MILLER OF LOS ANGELES ON THE COURSE AT ANNANDALE GOLF CLUB, PASADENA, IN JANUARY

Golden State Limited Photograph Service.

COLLECTORS seem to be on the increase everywhere and now a new type has been discovered—a collector of champions. Of course it isn't really a case of to have and to hold but he sees them, makes a note of when and where and treasures the memory. And why shouldn't he, it's a perfectly good idea, only with the ever increasing participation in sport he must be pretty busy just catching views, and he claims he never misses an opportunity. Unfortunately for him it isn't a case of once a champion, always a champion, not by any means, the field may change almost over night but at that he has found the proper location in which to add to his store.

Several pages of his precious note book must be filled with the results of contests for supremacy in southern California alone in the past few weeks. On the golf courses, tennis courts, polo fields, outdoors and in, the wars have waged among the humans, and out at the Ambassador all the horses walked, trotted, cantered, and jumped for the ribbons. Judging by the crowds which thronged the auditorium there was more than one collecter of champions there but we were all seeking equine, not human supremacy, during the Horse Show.

From the tennis tournament at the Huntington in Pasadena, made especially notable by the playing of Helen Wills, Olympic titleholder, to the annual mid-winter polo tournament at Coronado, March 1 to 20, where several championships will be played for, including the Pacific Coast All-American polo trophy, would be well worth the collector's while, and would give ample time to add all kinds and conditions of lesser stars to his list before the yachting season establishes itself in history with the San Francisco-Tahiti race scheduled for June, under the auspices of the Pacific Coast Yachting Association.

Another nice thing about that kind of a collector's hoard now as distinguished from the past is the diversification through sex. There are champions among the women in almost all lines of sport; while Helen Wills was gallantly defending her titles in Pasadena, four Pasadena girls set a new record in the quarter mile relay for women at the Los Angeles Coliseum track meet, and two world swimming records were broken at Miami Beach by women.

The two sports in which the honors are divided—perhaps not evenly but still divided—polo and yachting, in one case the man and the pony, the other the skipper and the boat, gives another bit of zest to one featuring champions. He must always take into consideration just how much in each victory is due the pony and how much the rider, particularly if the pony had apparent leanings toward the visiting team as happened at Midwick once this season, the pony kicking the ball through for the first score in the opening chuckker. Elmer Boeseke, Jr., of Santa Barbara, a member of the American team in the Olympic, whose field generalship stands out always, will modestly tell you that his success depends largely upon his mounts, nor do the famous four horsemen of Midwick, Carleton Burk, Teddy Miller, Eric Pedley, and Arthur Perkins, fail to give credit to their ponies. The rule applies equally at sea, a skipper might not capture a record unless speed were built into his craft, yet a good boat may be poorly skippered and an old tub brought up within speaking distance of the winning goal, under the careful and skillful handling of one who knows and loves every inch of the wood and canvas.

After all no matter how many champions we, as a nation, may produce that mark of supremacy is not half as much to be desired as a reputation for true sportsmanship. That we have now and there is no indication that we will ever lose it, nor can we so long as the true strain of American blood dominates.

MISS HELEN WILLS, NATIONAL AND OLYMPIC TENNIS CHAMPION, MADE HER FIRST APPEARANCE IN SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA AT THE HOTEL HUNTINGTON TOURNAMENT, IN FEBRUARY.

ERIC PEDLEY, OF MIDWICK, AND ONE OF THE QUARTET WHO WON NATIONAL HONORS LAST SUMMER BY TAKING THE UNITED STATES CHAMPIONSHIP. (INTERNATIONAL POLO SUBSTITUTE)

Golden State Limited Photograph Service.

Golden State Limited Photograph Service.

GROUPS FORM EVERY DAY TO EXPLORE THE MOUNTAIN PASSES, NOW MADE POSSIBLE BY THE OPENING OF NEW TRAILS

SADDLE HORSES IN OUR THIRD NATIONAL HORSE SHOW

IN commenting on the 1925 Los Angeles National Horse Show, Mr. W. S. Blitz, who came on from New York this year, as he did last,, to manage the show said that the quality of horses exceeded the most sanguine expectations. While the entries numbered over a thousand, the quality of the exhibition, as a rule, was of very high standard. The show by comparison, he thought, would hold its own with any prominent similar exhibition held in the East or Middle West, and would, in some instances, far exceed their records for success. Mr. Blitz was particularly struck by the keenness of the competition, the judges having no easy task in selecting the horses for the coveted blue ribbons. The high quality of the horses in the saddle clases particularly makes it doubtful if it could be surpassed in this country, that classification including, as it did, some of the noted equine champions of the United States. This section is making a name for itself in the ownership of good horses, particularly saddle horses, which fact, in the opinion of Mr. Blitz, was one of the most encouraging signs of the renewed interest in the horse as a companion in the pleasures of the day.

DAUGHERTY DARE, (CHESTNUT MARE) CHAMPION FIVE GAITED SADDLE HORSE, OWNED BY BENJAMIN C. MEYER. BLUE RIBBON WINNER AT 1925 SHOW

Now, that mile after mile of bridal paths are being opened, cleared and provided for, each week will see additions to the riding clubs, and a good saddle horse will be as much a part of the equipment of the present day home as it was before the advent of the motor car.

In that not so distant time a horse was a necessity rather than a pleasant luxury, and he took his rider over bad roads as well as good but then he did not have hundreds and hundreds of miles of concrete to cover. This fact has now been recognized by the highway builders everywhere and in every case where it is feasible, a bridal path has been provided along with the boulevards.

Los Angeles has had an active Bridle Path and Trails Association for a long time working in the interests of horse lovers, and now Pasadena has taken up the subject in a municipal way, opening up trails through the Arroyo Seco, which will join those of the Flintridge section, and making additions to old trails into the mountains. The bridle paths of the city of Pasadena were made possible by voluntary subscriptions, and they now line both sides of the Arroyo, joining at the Colorado street bridge, and extend into the upper Arroyo, above Devil's Gate dam.

New paths in Flintridge extend into the hills, and also into Sycamore Canyon; these paths connect with the Pasadena paths at Linda Vista on the south and near the Flintridge Riding Club on the north.

The fourteenth of the month celebrating the opening of the Flintridge Bridle Paths, a general invitation was issued to every one both in Los Angeles and Pasadena, interested in riding to join in the initial canters over the new trails, and we will begin to know again the beauties of the upper Arroyo, and some of the mountain districts.

Golden State Limited Photograph Service.

"BREAKFAST RIDES" FORM A POPULAR EARLY MORNING EXERCISE IN BEVERLY HILLS, CALIFORNIA. BEVERLY HILLS HOTEL IN BACKGROUND. THENCE TRAILS LEAD TO THE SEA

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA CHAPTER A. I. A. MONTHLY BULLETIN

AMERICAN INSTITUTE OF ARCHITECTS

THE COURTYARD OF ST. PAUL'S CATHEDRAL, WHICH RECEIVED THE DISTINGUISHED HONOR AWARD. JOHNSON, KAUFMANN AND COATE, ARCHITECTS. PETER HALL, GENERAL CONTRACTOR

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA CHAPTER

OFFICERS

David C. Allison
President

A. M. Edelman
Vice-President

David J. Witmer
Secretary

A. C. Zimmermann
Treasurer

EXHIBIT OF THE AMERICAN INSTITUTE OF ARCHITECTS EXPOSITION PARK, LOS ANGELES, CALIFORNIA

THE EXHIBIT OF ARCHITECTURE FOR 1925 at the Museum of History, Science and Art still remains in our minds although the actual exhibit is like the snows that Francois Villon sang about.

Somewhere, someone may know how many architectrual exhibits have been held in Los Angeles but such information is purely statistical and statistics are entirely irrelevant. The point is that a very important and successful architectural exhibit has just been completed. That such an exhibit was shown jointly with a most unique and enlightening display of work by Viennese school children in no way detracts from the great interest in architecture, as evidenced by the numbers who came to the museum. Actual figures show that for the two weeks beginning February 11, and ending February 24, 30,528 persons came into the museum. Figures sometimes mean very little, but in this case they do show an ever increasing interest and appreciation in architecture by the general public. It is of interest to note that during four weeks in 1923, approximately 44,000 persons attended, in 1924 about 53,768, and this year, had the exhibit extended over a period of four weeks, at the same average as the first night counted, there would have been 61,056 people there. This speaks well, both for the general public and the architects.

From authorative sources at the museum, the word comes that people were unanimous in their appreciation. This was greatly due to the manner in which exhibits were displayed. That an architectural exhibit should be considered as an architectural problem in design and hung accordingly, seemed a logical process of reasoning and a natural thing to do, but it was strikingly apparent that many considered it a happy departure from routine methods. The general scheme, it is remembered, was to follow the elementary theory of design, a major axis, brought out by a doorway or other natural element, flanked perhaps by distinctive exhibits of garden pottery, two minor axes where strong notes of color such as handsome oriental rugs or graceful pieces of furniture attracted the eye, between these, uniformly framed, were hung the features of the exhibit, the traveling exhibit of the Western Chapters of The American Institute of Architects on School Houses and nomination drawings for Honor Awards of the Southern California Chapter of The American Institute of Architects. Wherever strong notes of color were needed to complete the design, either on wall or standing free, pieces of unusual merit from the exhibit of craftsmanship and interior decoration were placed. Such great interest was shown in the model and drawing of the Administration Center, prepared by the Allied Architects Association of Los Angeles, that it was found necessary to have some one there to answer questions on this one exhibit alone.

It is out of the question to close without any mention of the children's exhibit and while this was in no way architectural, it was without question one of a very high character. It may be that many of those who came and admired the Institute exhibit were drawn there by the children's work just as at least one architect who came to see architecture, stopped fascinated and had to return another day to see his own work.

The influence of these architectural exhibits must be marked. Fifty thousand people cannot come into such an atmosphere and not undergo some beneficial change. Each year then an ever increasing number are becoming susceptible to the need of real architecture and when such numbers respond, as did this year, it is a very satisfying and gracious compliment to the profession.

THE Southern California Chapter of the American Institute of Architects expresses its appreciation of the privilege of using a valuable page in the Southland Magazine for the publication of bulletins and matters of interest to the architects and the public who are interested in things architectural. The Southland is doing many things to help raise the standard of architecture and its appreciation in Southern California. The members of the Institute as individuals give it their hearty commendation.

The Civic Center Plan

TWO evenings during the month were devoted to the study and discussion of the Civic Center Plans as presented by The Allied Architects and by Cook and Hall. Chapter members generally seemed intensely interested for they turned out for both meetings in goodly numbers. The discussion while warm at times was restrained and dignified and the entire atmosphere of the proceedings worthy of the gentlemen who took part in it on both sides of the question. The criticisms of the Allied Plan by Cook and Hall were ably answered and at the risk of being called biased we cannot but feel that the Allied Plan was greatly strengthened in its position by the attacks made upon it by these two worthy gentlemen. A scheme which has been thrashed out and kicked about by the best minds on the subject for a period of eleven months is not likely to be seriously damaged when in comparison with a scheme so apparently unstudied and hastily presented as was that of Cook and Hall.

The Chapter voted ten to one in favor of the Allied Plan. It is interesting to note that a majority of four to one was voted in favor of the Allied Plan by those members of the Chapter outside the Allied Architects membership.

THE February meeting of the Chapter was given over to the awarding of certificates of merit for the executed work of the year 1924. No meeting of the organization is of more significance than this and few evoke more general interest. As is the case with other professional men, architects receive little publicity as individuals, but their executed work when pointed out as of particular merit always produces public comment. There were about one hundred members and guests in attendance when the president of the Chapter, David C. Allison, arose to open the meeting. After some brief remarks introducing the subject of the evening's gathering, he said that architecture has always been the index of the art appreciation of any period in civilization and that the work being awarded would take its place in the record that California is writing in the architectural history of this country. He thoughtfully reminded us that the contractor takes a keen interest and pride in the work being done, and gave his presidential blessing on the clients who wisely allowed their architects a free hand in working out their respective problems. We only wish that some of our clients who want to know the color of the brass in every door knob could have heard what he had to say. Mr. John W. Mitchell was seated next to Mr. Allison and we were happy to learn that he was to present the honor awards. We knew that the work would be done with the cheerful grace that is always characteristic of that gentleman. We were not disappointed. Mr. Mitchell has long been a great friend of the Southern California Chapter and has marked its growth from the baker's dozen in the early days to the present organization with its hundreds of members. Mr. Mitchell stated that 1924 has been a great year in architecture and that the greatest advance has been made in the United States. He paraphrased the words of the ex-president of the Institute, William Faville, when he said that Southern California is recognized along with the environs of New York City as producing the most beautiful architecture in domestic work. After giving full credit to the jury of visiting architects who made the awards he emphasized the importance of the awards which had been made to craftsmen, and gave them great praise for the beauty of the work they have produced during the last year.

Many of the responses to the presentation of awards were enlightening. One gentleman whose firm was awarded a certificate as owners of a commercial building said there was great surprise in his office when it was learned that a creamery, his building, had been selected as the best example of commercial architecture in its class. Creamery men, it seems, have been emphasizing cleanliness rather than good architecture.

The response of Mr. Barhyte of the Los Angeles Gas and Electric Corporation was both amusing and interesting. Mr. Barhyte embodied the pride which the great corporation he represented, felt in possession of its new and beautiful building. It was another case where complete confidence in the abilities of the achitect selected produced a useful and distinguished example of architecture.

Mrs. A. S. Lobingier, responding for the Friday Morning Club, had so many witty things to say and said them in such rapid "concussion" that we were completely bewildered. At any rate if Mr. Allison had as much pleasure in his interview with Mrs. Lobingier as we had in the few minutes she spoke to us, Mr. Allison's fee was much too large. One often gets entertainment from clients, but it is of a far different sort.

The last award to be presented came as a pleasant surprise. The jury after long and careful consideration decided to give the highest honor possible to the architect of a particularly distinguished piece of work. We had already heard that the building committee of St. Paul's Episcopal Cathedral had given their architects no instructions except to design the best building they could produce for the allowed budget. All of us are familiar with the dignity and repose of the structure which grew out of those brief instructions. The Chapter is happy indeed that the firm of the retiring president should have been given the Distinguished Honor in Architecture. They have made a great contribution to the architecture of Southern California, and this is the highest honor their fellow architects can give them.

HAROLD O. SEXSMITH.

CALIFORNIA HOMES AND GARDENING MANUAL

ARCHITECTURAL CLUB BULLETIN

Information Wanted

NOTICE of meetings and copies of the Southland Magazine have been returned unclaimed from the last known address of the following club members. Will some kind soul let the secretary know where these strays hide themselves: W. Morely, Alfred A. Conners, George W. Donnell, H. J. Vaile, E. A. Bode, Eugene M. Layman, Harvey Wm. Greene, Irving L. Osgood, O. Rogelmair, Ralph O. Beattie, Robert M. Cassidy.

Several members have informed the new secretary of the club that there are men who have submitted application cards for membership and have never heard from them afterward. We are most anxious to get in touch with these men and see that they are properly taken care of.

Two Beaux Arts Medals

We were button-holed on the street the other day by none other than our good friend and fellow sufferer Gano Chittenden. He had discarded the hirsute adornment he was wearing the last time we saw him and really looked quite civilized again. He mentioned casually that he was on his way to play hand ball with Harold Lloyd. He also proudly produced two beautiful medals which he had just received for Beaux Arts work done in 1919 and 1921. One medal was for the best work in Class B Esquisse esquisse and the other for a Class A Project "The Entrance to a Church." We congratulate Gano.

Le Brun Traveling Scholarship

Lee Fuller is working on the final drawings for the LeBrun competition. Tiny Crawford tells us that Lee has the winning solution. Let's all hope he is right. What worries us is what Lee will do with his better half when he starts out to see the world.

Notes of the U. S. C. Atelier

The last meeting of the Architectural Society was one of the most interesting of the year. Dean White of the University of Illinois predicted a great future for the department. Mr. Bergstrom and Sumner P. Hunt discussed the proposed Civic Center for the city and county of Los Angeles and explained the grouping of the buildings. Dr. VonKleinsmid, President of the University, expressed his admiration of the far-sighted work of the Allied Architects Association in planning a project such as the proposed Civic Center, and spoke of the admirable co-operation of the many members of the Association.

Professor Lawrence, head of the Department of Architecture of the University of Oregon, is now in Southern California, and while here is investigating the work of the Department of Architecture of the University of Southern California with a view to placing it among the recognized schools of architecture.

Negotiations are now being carried on in an endeavor to get a chapter of the Tau Sigma Delta, honorary architectural fraternity, on the campus.

The department is having "La Nuit Boheme" in the form of a dance and entertainment on Friday, February 27th. It is to be a regular costume Bohemian affair.

The Seniors are now designing "a Municipal Auditorium" for the proposed Civic Center, while the Juniors are "burning the oil" (?) over a good sized high school plan. Mr. Harwood Hewitt and Mr. A. C. Zimmerman are the critics.

The Civic Center Plan

On Tuesday noon February third the Architectural Club was called together at a special meeting to consider the Civic Center Plan designed by the Allied Architects. The meeting was held in the Allied Assembly Room at 420 South Spring where the plan and model were on exhibition. After a discussion of the plan by Mr. Myron Hunt and criticism of it by Mr. Cobb there was general discussion by all the members present. The secretary of the club presented the following resolution for adoption by the meeting.

RESOLVED, that it is the sense of this meeting that the plan of an administration Center for the City of Los Angeles and the County of Los Angeles as prepared by the Allied Architects Association of Southern California, and as submitted to said city and said county, he, and is hereby approved and unqualifiedly indorsed by the Architectural Club of Los Angeles, and the Executive Committee of this club be, and hereby is authorized and instructed to present this resolution to the City Council and the Mayor of the City of Los Angeles, and to the Board of Supervisors of the County of Los Angeles and to urge upon them the prompt adoption of said plan as a working plan for said Administration Center.

The resolution was adopted without a dissenting vote and was duly presented to the City Fathers by our President, Julian Garnsey.

February 26, 1925.

The Architectural Club of Los Angeles,
Gentlemen:

We want to call your attention to the new Library of Architecture and Allied Arts which has recently been opened at 1101 Citizens National Bank Building.

This Library, which is for the use of the entire public as a reference library, consists of nearly 1000 volumes devoted, as its name implies, to architecture and the allied arts. To all architects and particularly the younger men who have not had the opportunity to collect many books, such material should prove of inestimable value, and it is hoped that its use will be general.

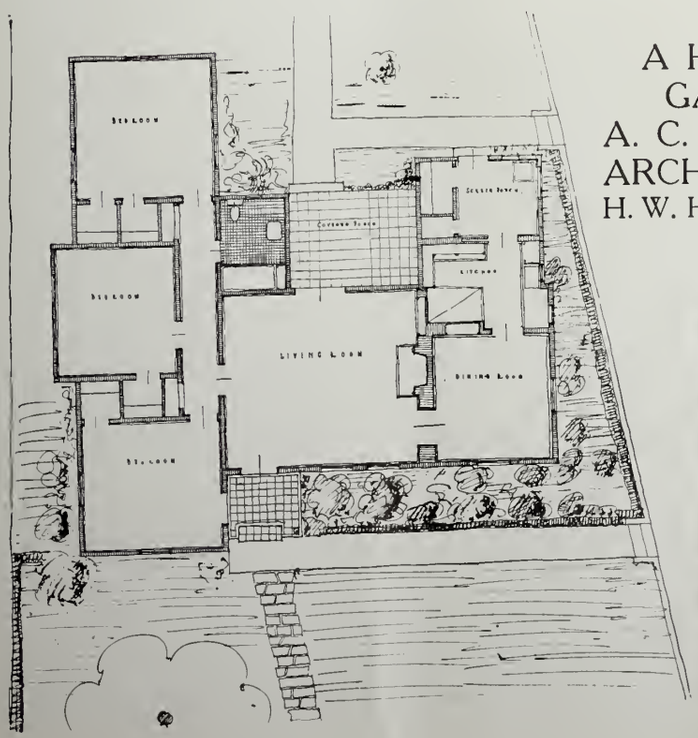
With this in mind, we extend a special invitation to the Architectural Club of Los Angeles to use the library at all times.

Yours very truly,

Board of Directors Allied Architect's Association.

By Edwin Bergstrom, Pres.
Miss Lillian Burkman, Librarian.

THE ARCHITECTURAL CLUB OF LOS ANGELES



OFFICERS

for 1925

J. E. Garnsey, President
Roy H. Kelley, Vice-President
H. O. Sexsmith, Secretary
Paul W. Penland, Treasurer

DIRECTORS

Walter S. Davis, Director
J. E. Stanton, Director
H. C. Chambers, Director

A HOUSE AND GARDEN BY A. C. ZIMMERMAN, ARCHITECT, A. I. A. H. W. HELLMAN BLDG.

SIXTH INTERNATIONAL PRINT MAKERS EXHIBITION

DURING the month of March there will be shown in the Gallery of the Los Angels Museum, the Sixth International Exhibition, gathered under the auspices of the Print Makers' Society of California. The three hundred and eighty-three prints on the walls represent the work of one hundred and ninety-eight artists from Australia, Austria, Belgium, Canada, Czechoslovakia, England, France, Germany, Italy, Japan, Sweden and the United States. As in etching, block-printing, engraving and lithography is eligible, the collection gives a comprehensive view of what is being done in the entire print world. In other cities there are frequent exhibits of etchings, exhibits of block-prints and exhibits of lithographs but nowhere else do all three mediums enter on an equal footing. We feel safe in saying that nowhere can there be found just such an exhibit as this, except from time to time in Expositions like the Panama-Pacific of 1915. It is a real clearing-house where the print makers of the globe may show their work.

Naturally the United States has the largest number of prints, as it is far easier and cheaper for our artists to send their pictures, but England runs a good second, with France not far behind. The Society has always attempted to keep an open mind and judge all work submitted, without reference to nationality or art movement. Even if we do not agree with a movement or school, work by some of its best exponents is shown. Our only requirement is that, each print must show technical ability in its production because we feel the necessity of emphasizing good craftsmanship as well as artistic interest.

The detail work in assembling such an exhibit is beyond the comprehension of anyone not directly connected with it. About a thousand letters of invitation must be mailed and for this the mailing list must be kept up to date. Artists are constantly on the move and this list is one of the problems we must meet. Two or three hundred packages must be received, opened and checked and notices sent of their receipt. Many of the packages must come through the Customs and red-tape has to be unrolled. Then comes the judging. With fifteen hundred to two thousand prints submitted, and room for only three hundred and eighty-three, the Jury must discuss, revise and reconsider for days. The same standard can not be applied to each nation as the viewpoints are far different and this complicates the work. Once selected the prints must be listed and those from abroad matted, and copy prepared for the catalogue. Then each artist must be notified as to the Jury action and a catalogue mailed to each exhibitor. This is all a labor of love and the result is only made possible by the wholehearted cooperation of all who have to do with the work. This is particularly so in regard to the Los Angeles Museum as, without their aid, we would not be able to shoulder the entire financial burden.

Space is limited at the Museum but we hope next year to use the new additions to the gallery and can make a more determined effort to see that ALL the world is represented. We have done our share in preparing this for you and, even if you lived in New York, Paris or London you could not find such an opportunity. We ask only in return that you go out and see it. That is the way you can repay us for what we have brought to California.

HOWELL C. BROWN.

SECRETARY OF THE INTERNATIONAL PRINTMAKER'S EXHIBITION

THE OUTPOST, AN ETCHING BY PETER MARCUS FROM THE GALLERIES OF CANNELL AND CHAFFIN

THE CHILDREN'S EXHIBITION

THE Cizek school is in Vienna and Vienna is a cross roads. Refugees from Russia come from the East, the people of northern Europe pass through going to the Balkan states and to Italy, the West goes East and the South goes North, therefore you have a population as varied in nationality as San Francisco or Los Angeles and the public are no more Viennese than all Californians are native sons. The majority are children of the common people. They range in age from five to twenty-three. Material, which is provided by the state is free and plentiful.

The Teacher, Franz Cizek, starts with the premise that the creative faculty is in every human being. Very well then, we will start at the roots of human endeavor and begin with the child. A child at five may be thousands of years old. He does not belong to any parent but to the entire human race, for in himself he retraces the growth of man. He holds in himself enormous ancestor gifts, that only the gentlest of teachers can keep from frightening into the background of the sub-conscious. So in his contact with his young people, Cizek effaces himself. He makes himself unimportant and his pupils almost as much so.

The pictures. They are the lives of your children and mine, put down exactly and mercilessly. There is beauty, great sadness, hardness, pity, love, joy. A child saw a hillside of homes with roofs of red, grey, blue and with unerring fingers it is there for you to see. You grip yourself for it is like one's own remembrance. Were you a little boy and did you have a pet—a puppy that scattered chickens and ducks, ran after the cat and then someone threw a stick at him and your heart stood still? Or perhaps you were a little girl and had a goat. Did you love flowers and did you peer into face of a daisy and say: "Little flower sister, I am just a little girl and you are just a flower, but aren't we happy on this windy, grassy field?" You put the flower with others in your big straw hat and went for a romp with the wind. These pictures are there. The great sadness of the war came and you see the soldier straining his mother to his boyish heart. It might be your brother and you the child looking on.

You cannot slip up quietly on the Cizek Exhibit and lose yourself. This is no ordinary exhibit. The pictures are ordinary, so ordinary that they grip you and tear your heart from its safe mooring. I tell you that the only international beings are children. It has been said that this Children's Exhibit has done more for the distressed country of Austria than the League of Nations. It is another Children's Crusade.

I am reminded by the Editor that Mr. Fred Meyers, director of the California School of Arts and Crafts at Berkeley, conducts a class on Saturday for Children from four to eighteen years of age that has much of the freedom of the Vienna school.

MARION HUGUS CLARK.

THE COLOR PLATES

The plates for the cover of this issue are made for Mr. Gordon B. Kaufman, architect, from a charming painting in tempera by Norman Kennedy, known to the local chapter as a mural painter, with an unusually fine sense of color and an expert in interior deocration, who works in keen sympathy with the architect of discrimination.

THE BEAUTIFUL ESTATE OF BENJ. B. MEYER, BEVERLEY. PAUL THIENE, LANDSCAPIST. JOHN MAYER, GENERAL CONTRACTOR. PHOTO. BY HAIGHT

A GENTLEMAN'S ESTATE ON CALIFORNIAN HILLS

By M. URMY SEARES

ON the hills which roll up from the Los Angeles plain, and in their little wooded canyons, there is a wide choice in logical situations for handsome estates. Fifty years ago wise residents of the city sought rest in their secluded little ranches above what is now a crowded foothill boulevard running from San Dimas to the sea. More recently the hill country between Hollywood and Santa Monica has been recognized as ideal for permanent homes where all the interests known to both country life and city, could be enjoyed under perfect conditions of climate and convenience.

High up above the beachward boulevards and looking out toward Catalina to the south, there rises on stately levels a handsome house and garden which we have taken this month to exemplify a complete hillside estate. When all the hillsides are covered with this sort of beautiful homes, the cutting and filling we now deplore will cease and the landscape picture resume its loveliness in wooded slopes dotted with white houses, masses of flowering plants and here and there the gleam of pergola or marble fawn upon its pedestal.

The handsome estate of Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin R. Meyer, may in all particulars be taken as an example of a proper treatment of our Califonia hills, shown in the accompanying illustrations of an actual estate, now so complete that it may be extensively photographed.

Several years ago these grounds were carefully studied and planned by Paul Thiene, the landscape architect whose success in this extensive and interesting estate is notable. Rising in gradual curving roads from the boulevard between Hollywood and Beverley, the approach to the house is well planted and every detail carefully designed. On the left at a turn of the entrance driveway are the garages, and from this point to the forecourt of the house itself the road is graced by a high wall draped with vines and surmounted by hill shrubs and trees which hide the gallery and casino from a first view.

THE APPROACH. JOHNSON, KAUFMANN AND COATE, ARCHITECTS. JOHN MAYER, GENERAL CONTRACTOR

The location of the residence was determined by the existence of a row of old olive trees and above this row of trees, and encircling each, a wall was constructed which is a distinctive feature of the grounds.

Cutting into the hillside, the grading for the house site left an embankment about thirty feet high. This was successfully treated by three terraces reached by a delightful stair-way along the wall, and through an interesting tunnel and pergola, or by a covered way, a part of the house over the service gateway shown on our cover.

In a canyon opening beyond the garages are the stables and ring, set in the hillside, which is covered with natural growth carefully encouraged.

As we approach the house, which was not begun until the general garden construction was finished and the planting well rooted, we pause to consider the building. Clay is our logical building material, and concrete, a plaything from the time of mud pies up to the building of houses and modeling of statuary.

The architects have chosen for this beautiful house in the Mediterranean style this logical successor of adobe, the hollow tile. The Los Angeles Pressed Brick Company has experimented for years and offers the Heath hollow tile as the best, fireproof and quake proof.

Gradually the conviction has grown that hollow tile is especially adapted to the needs of this climate, and through the improvements of the last fifty years it has come to be recognized as a factor with far greater merits than merely fire-proofing, for which it was originally recommended.

Heath hollow tile has stood the test of time.

Hollow tile may now be used in any construction in which brick may be utilized, the three basic points being strength, simplicity and utility. This construction lends itself admirably to every phase of architecture, being equally good in the pretentious homes of palatial proportions or in the clubs, or in the small house, simple in construction but exquisite in line.

To the west and south of the house is a wide expanse of lawn so necessary in any picture. Here are benches and terra-cotta vases at natural points of interest and we realize California's closeness to Italy in spirit when we are told that the Italian Terra Cotta Company furnished certain pieces of decorative terra cotta. A visit to the company's place on Mission Road is fascinating, and proves that this is a terra cotta town indeed. Our sculptors and garden enthusiasts are very fortunate to have these expert potters here in Los Angeles.

The Architect and the Landscapist who know where to go have indeed a wealth of expert craftsmen to call upon in furnishing their well-laid plans.

"The Ornamental Iron Works" may sound unfamiliar to the amateur, but the architect who has found Mr. Laszloffy and his beautiful designs and expert workmanship considers himself fortunate. All through this fine estate are rails and doors, railings and gates which culminate in the beautiful entrance portals, the art of this worker in iron.

Throughout the whole interior a masterly sense of fitness has dominated. Quiet reigns, heightened here and there by a sparkling bit of clear color, a hint of well designed metal or a rich massing of tones in oriental rug or tapestry.

Mr. Gordon B. Kaufmann, the architect who carried out the plans for the firm, chose skillfully, taking the best for his purpose in each room and finding the best in the contributing houses of Keshishyan, B. B. Bell and Marshall Laird, all on West Seventh street.

THROUGH THE GARDEN ONE COMES UPON LARGE TERRA COTTA JARS AND GARDEN SEATS FROM THE ITALIAN TERRA COTTA CO.

THIS EXQUISITE DESIGN IN IRON WAS EXECUTED AT THE SHOP OF A. LASZLOFFY, ORNAMENTAL IRON WORKS, 328 NORTH LAFAYETTE PARK PLACE, LOS ANGELES. DESIGNS BY THE ARCHITECT CAREFULLY MADE

A HAPPY FEATURE IS THE BREAKFAST ROOM DECORATED BY JOHN SMERALDI WHOSE DECORATIVE PAINTING AT THE ARCHITECT'S EXHIBITION LAST MONTH RECEIVED THE HONOR AWARD IN THE ALLIED ARTS. PHOTO. BY GEORGE HAIGHT

THE WESTERN TILE AND MARBLE COMPANY OF PASADENA ARE HERE REPRESENTED IN A TILE RECESS WITH DAINTY LITTLE STATUE

CORNERS OF THE HALL SHOWING FINE METAL WORK SCONCES AND FURNISHINGS, ALL CHOSEN BY MR. GORDON B. KAUFMANN, ARCHITECT

A UNIQUE FEATURE OF THIS HANDSOME HOUSE IS THE ARCHED HALL. PLASTER WORK BY NOLAN DUVALL

THE KEYNOTE OF THIS HANDSOME DINING ROOM WAS AN OLD CHINESE SCREEN, SHOWN ON THE RIGHT. THE PANELING AND DOORS AND THE GREAT DINING TABLE, WITH ITS CARVED CHAIRS, ARE FROM MARSHALL LAIRD, 2861 W. SEVENTH STREET. PHOTOGRAPH BY MARGARET CRAIG

Dignified and stately is the hall with its warm, deep quality in walls executed by Nolan Duvall in plaster that shows what can be done with surfaces left so cold and cheerless by workers in the old fashioned way.

Each sconce, or candelabra, each lighting fixture designed by the B. B. Bell Company, fits into its place quietly because it is cunningly devised and excellent in pattern. Notable is the manner in which the original designs have been made to express electricity of modern times in beauty equal to that of ancient days when candles were used.

So, too, is the furniture, the designs for which the architect selected and had made at the shop of Marshall Laird, 2861 West Seventh St. What deep satisfaction fills one's soul in finding right here in our own metropolis furniture that is made by a connoisseur to fit any room, no matter how costly or simple in design. When an architect who knows his art can draw upon such craftsmanship as this, there is no need to look to other centers of art and decoration.

But even if we wish to use the touchstone of New York in our furnishings, we can consult with the foremost exponent of all that is best in floor coverings and tapestries in the store of Mr. John Keshishyan on West Seventh.

John Mayer, General Contractor.

In such an extensive development as this, the architect and landscape designer must have the assistance of an experienced contractor who can take the whole plan and carry it through with competent skill. This the Meyer estate had in its general contractor, John Mayer of Pasadena.

ARCHITECTURALLY, THE HALL IS A FINE ATTRIBUTE OF THE HOUSE, WITH ITS STAIRWAY SET IN ONE SIDE. MANY CHOICE PIECES HELP TO MAKE IT BEAUTIFUL. PHOTOGRAPHED BY GEORGE HAIGHT

Below the stables, where prize horses help to make the name of this house famous, are the greenhouses, potting sheds and lath house, which supply the extensive hill garden, keep cut flowers for the house every day in the year, and renew the orchard trees. Mr. Thiene has demonstrated every type of gardening here. As we descend from the house on a warm March day, we walk along the parapet of the olive trees wall and find a little tea garden under the famous old pepper tree which was preserved by careful grading. If we do not feel like pausing to rest here, we follow down the easy steps set in the hill as though they had been there for ages and enter the level of the belvedere and swimming pool. Rare and beautiful plants surround this pool of reflections which brings the blue sky down into the garden and catches glimpses of all the lovely things of earth surrounding it.

At the rooms of the Western Tile and Marble Co., 386 Raymond avenue, such decorative garden pieces, small and large, are found. All the nurseries and hot-houses of southern California have been drawn on by this wise landscapist in making this strip of hill land exquisitely livable. Below the pool on another level is the rose garden with the wall between them, surmounted by a pergola and decorated with a wall fountain. Its house-like character has been taken advantage of by making here a little theatre in which films may be shown or musicals given. A sun dial tells the sunny hours at the opposite end where the formal garden drops away into the orchard.

The general plan from road to upper reservoir is on page 26.

HEWSON HAND CRAFT STUDIOS

Handwoven One Piece Dresses, Coats and Scarfs, Canadian and Candlewick Bedspreads

Dutch and East Indian Brass, Beads, Fine Pendants and Objects of Art in Great Variety

F. O. 6555
602 E. Colorado St.
Pasadena

DUnkirk 4909
2508½ W. 7th St.
Los Angeles

Wall Panels

"A mingling of patterns and echoes and themes,
That swim through his fancy like runaway streams."

"Anymay"

527 California Terrace, Pasadena
Phone Colorado 3655

S. M. Wershow
LADIES TAILOR
Riding Habits, Coats and Suits
Furs Stored and Repaired
7066 Hollywood Boulevard
Hollywood
GRanit 4254

FLORNINA
Gowns · Negligees · Accessories
Ready to Wear or Made to Order
95 South Los Robles Ave., Pasadena
Phone Fair Oaks 113

French and Italian Arts
Imported by
ELEANOR AND HOLLINGSWORTH BEACH

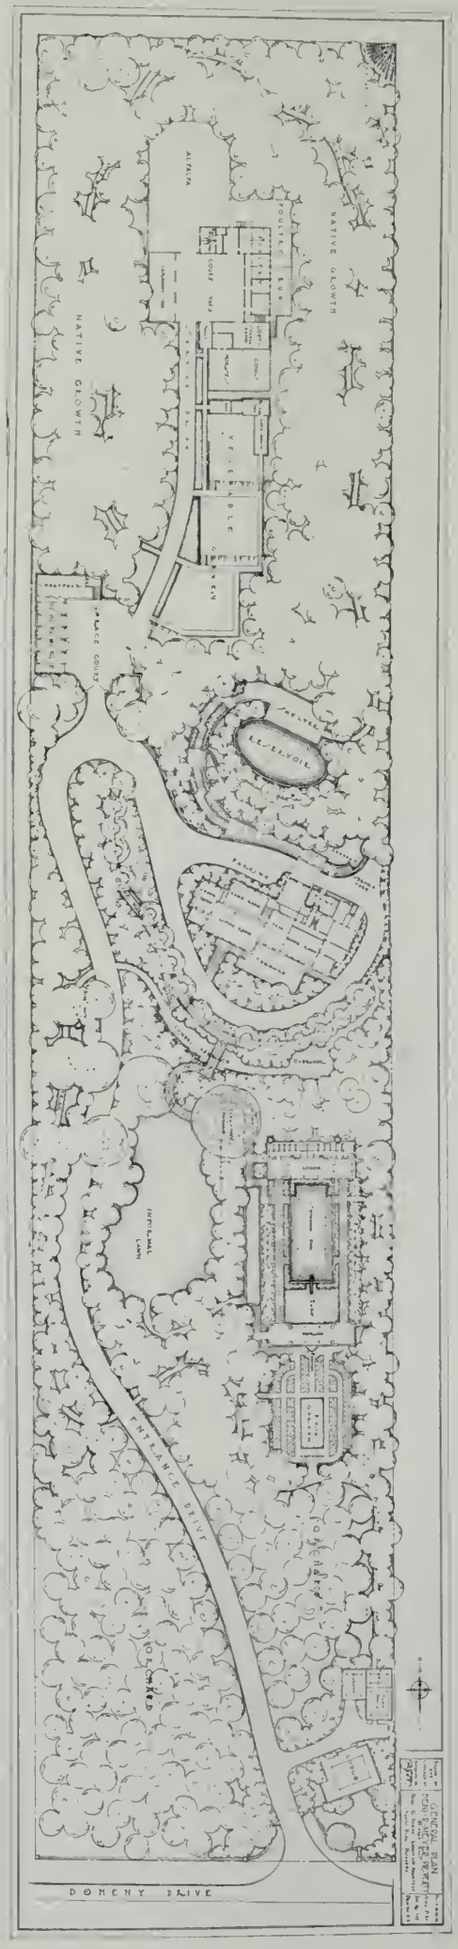
Italian Sports Hats — Antiques
Old Furniture — Brocades
Embroidered Linens — Old Prints
French Faience — Italian Majolica

Large Parchment Portfolios for Prints and Photographs

630 E. Colorado Street, Pasadena, California
Fair Oaks 6028

Antiques
JOHN W. CONDIT

Dealer in rare old pieces selected from private homes. Specialist in the proper restoration of heirlooms.



199 S. Fair Oaks Ave. Tel. F. O. 315
Pasadena, California

L. BIXBY-SMITH
Camera Portraits
Architectural Studies
2504 W. 7th St.,
Los Angeles, Calif.
Phone FItzroy 3542

H. O. CLARKE
General Building Contractor
388 So. Raymond Ave., Pasadena, Calif.
Phone Fair Oaks 537

GENERAL PLAN, BENJ. R. MEYER PROPERTY.
PAUL C. THIENE, LANDSCAPE ARCHITECT.

THE CALIFORNIA SCHOOL OF GARDENING FOR WOMEN

Offers a two years course in practical gardening, including the propagation and care of flowers, shrubs, fruit and vegetables, the laying out and management of small gardens as well as large estates. At Hayward, California (one hour by train or motor from San Francisco). Principal: Miss J. Walrond-Skinner, N.D., Hort., F.R.H.S. Tuition $250 per annum. Term begins Jan. 15, 1925. Only six students will be taken the first year. Write for information and make application now to the Principal, Hayward, California.

T. W. Mather Co. Inc.
PASADENA, CAL.

Dry Goods

Women's & Children's Wearing Apparel

Colorado Street at Marengo

MRS. CHARLES C. BELL
Orchard Homes and Villas
Mountainside Acreage
Rentals Near Good Board
SARATOGA - - CALIFORNIA

HILLER'S STUDIO
Official Photographer for California Southland
49 East Colorado Street
Pasadena, California
Albert Hiller Phone, Fair Oaks 155

Kinsey & Elliott
PLATINUM JEWELERS
Diamonds and Precious Stones
Hamilton and Longines Watches
Remount Her Diamonds in Platinum
Jewelry Manufacturing
303-4 Jewelers Bldg., 747 So. Hill St.
Los Angeles, Calif. Phone VAndike 1604

GEORGE · D · MAIGHT
159 · NO · MEREDITH · AVE ·
PASADENA · CALIFORNIA
TELEPHONE F · O · 5133
ARCHITECTURAL · PHOTOGRAPHS

BRADFORD PERIN'S OLD MASTER VERIFIED

FROM the Burlington Magazine for March:

"The photograph on Plate A represents a portrait in oil which came under my notice a few weeks ago, shortly after it was acquired by Mr. Bradford Perin, himself an artist, who, when he came upon it in an obscure place of sale, was at once attracted to it simply as an example of good drawing. At the time of its discovery the background, now unpainted canvas having a fine grain, was covered with dark pigment. This, however, came away immediately under the hand of the cleaner, which, of course, indicated its freshness. At the same time a repair in the canvas, not too skillfully done, appeared; it is visible on the photograph over the sitter's right ear.

"There was never any doubt of the picture being English, of the latter part of the eighteenth or the early part of the nineteenth century, and a comparison of it with the work of Lawrence during the early years of the nineteenth century convinces us that it is his work. The method of lighting, the tangle of steel-gray hair, the hard, square way in which the structure of the nose is indicated, the drawing of the mouth and even the scribbled indication of clothing about the neck, are all strong witnesses of authenticity. It is worth while mentioning also Lawrence's portrait of Thomas Moore, the Irish poet, exhibited at the Victoria and Albert Museum in 1868, of which, however, I have seen only a photograph. It would be superfluous to describe these or to discuss the obvious points of similarity between them and the newly-discovered portrait.

"At a first glance it might be supposed that the sketch as it now exists is a fragment of a larger work, but a certain nicety in the disposition of the brush-marks representing the coat and collar, in relationship to the rectangle of the canvas, makes it likelier that it is complete. There is a good deal of ground for the suspicion that it represents Lawrence himself. Undeniably the sitter has that steady, fixed look that all painters, except Madame Lebrun and one or two others, seem to adopt when engaged in the double task of painting and looking at their own faces. There is sufficient resemblance between this face and that of the self-portrait by Lawrence in the National Portrait Gallery to deepen the suspicion. On the other hand, we have to remember Sir Joshua's warning that artists frequently invest their sitters with their own "ugliness." Further, we have to note that if we are to accept the authenticity of a certain Lawrence self-portrait (again known to me only through a photograph in the Witt Library) which passed through Messrs. Sotheby's hands in 1918, showing the artist with a bald head at about thirty-five, approximately the age he would be when (about 1902-1904) he must have painted Mr. Perin's picture, the theory falls to the ground—except, indeed, we suppose that Lawrence, exercising the artist's license, gratified himself and deceived posterity by investing his head with the normal quantity of hair.

(Signed) R. R. TATLOCK."

A LETTER FROM NEW YORK

By S. BARTLEY CANNELL

New York, February 17, 1925.

My Dear Southland Editor:

New York is such a wonderful place, so many things to see and to do, that I must plead this as an excuse for not having written you at earlier date.

You will, I feel, be interested in what I have seen at the exhibits attended and we must not forget the sculptors, who, by the way, are not the least of this great city's art interest.

I am not going to attempt to give you what I might call a merry-go-round of exhibitions, artists and sculptors, but just touch the high spots—those things most outstanding in their greatness and beauty.

Zuloaga—what a magic name. One instantly thinks of Spanish dons; of Carmens; of beautiful sunny slopes stretching to the sea, and in his earlier exhibitions here that is what one saw. But in this, his latest exhibition—which, by the way was held at the Henry Reinhardt galleries—was Zuloaga, rather in a different mood or trying to express quite different thoughts.

The new paintings were somber, of very tonal qualities of color, many greens and drab grays, while even the flesh tints of his portraits were lacking in brilliance; at least to me.

Still a masterful draftsman—the works shown in this particular collection were far from the standard one would expect from Zuloaga. I wish to say here, however, that there were two or three outstanding paintings which were superb, and these in a measure made up for what appeared to be the flatness and uninteresting character of the others. For instance, the "Castillian Shepherd" (bought by the Carnegie Institute), a great work of art, masterly in every line, thoroughly convincing, and a picture long to be remembered. "The Nude with Red Comb," a wonderful piece of flesh painting modeled by a master, exhibiting all the great power of a big man.

His landscapes were uninteresting in color, very flat in their work, with almost no perspective. An exception to this, done some few years before, was the "Gypsy Dance Sevillia." What wealth of color, beauty of drawing, superb composition and wonderful massing of figures. Brilliant is the word that expresses the picture, and this painting to me represents Zuloaga.

There were fifty-two pictures in this exhibition and in size it was awe inspiring. Even though I did not approve of it all, still it would have been most interesting to have brought this great exhibition to Los Angeles; and I can hear you say, "Well, why didn't you?" Simply because, my dear lady, Mr. Zuloaga would not. He said he had one experience in California without selling one picture or receiving one commission, and nothing could induce him to attempt it again.

What a condemnation for our poor city. You can see what they think of us as an art loving and art buying community. A city of one million people and we have not even started a Friends of Art Association. When small places such as Aurora, Ill., and even our smaller neighbor, San Diego, have not only organized such a society but, in the case of Aurora, through this society and its efforts have acquired a collection of fine examples of the best living American artists that would do credit to a famous museum. But I must get on or you will think me not only prosy but tiresome. You see, I could not resist the chance to speak from my heart in regard to our backwardness in promoting art in our fair city.

There has just ended the Cenntennial Exhibition of some of the celebrated paintings and others of a very early period of the great George Inness. Inness—America's greatest landscape painter. What a joy it was to see them. Such examples of landscapes are seldom to be seen, and to see fifty of them at one time was almost overpowering in their beauty. Inness the poet, the dreamer, the realist, the draftsman, the great master colorist, are all shown here. Going from the Zuloaga to the Inness exhibition was like coming into bright sunlight from a dark room.

To think that we have not even a memorial to this great man or that we did not think enough of him even in New York to hold a centennial exhibition of his at the Metropolitan Museum! The greatest of America and surpassed probably by none in the world! We are a careless people. Not all, however, for was it not left to just a simple dealer—the Macbeth galleries—to put on at their own expense and with the aid of their many good friends a remarkable exhibition. While it was limited in size for lack of space to but thirty-one paintings, it more than made up in quality. How I wish you might have seen it and, like myself, reveled in it.

Art and painting, like time, seem to go on forever. Were I to attempt to tell you of all the artists and their work, of those I have seen myself, I am afraid you would throw this letter in the fire because you had not time to read it all. (To be Continued)

A MOVIE FILM, NO. III CONTINUED

By GEORGE DRUMGOLD

THIS positive print of a long reel which has been spliced together is like the film thrown on the screen at the theatre. There is another print made later on after the picture is cut and titled, called the "master print." This print is perfect in every detail.

The positive print then passes along to the polishing room, where it is run through a polishing machine, and one side of the the film is cleaned with alcohol and polished with felt brushes. From here it goes to the inspection room, where a long row of miniature projecting machines, each with its miniature screen about two feet square, are operated by girls who are expert in locating any blemish or fault which might appear in the print. These girls place the final O. K. on the print, which is then returned to the studio, in the case of an outside independent company, or to the projection room operator, in the case of studio laboratory on the studio lot. The print, which is called "rushes," is then run for the director's and cameraman's approval.

The ordinary daily "rushes" are seen on the screen by the producer, director and cameraman, within twelve hours after the exposed negative is delivered to the laboratory.

The cutting room is another interesting spot, and also one of the most important. This is the film's last stop before it leaves the studio and passes into the hands of the distributor and exhibitor. Good pictures are either ruined or made better in the cutting room, and often an apparently hopeless picture is moulded into a very excellent one by the film editors (cutters).

Many a well known star has been saved from everlasting shame by the clever manipulation of a sharp pair of scissors in the cutting room. A goodly amount of credit is due the film editor (cutter) of any successful picture. The title writer can also make his bow along with the editor, as cleverly written titles also help to put over an otherwise hopeless picture.

A cutting room consists of a well lighted and ventilated room, about 10 by 15 feet. Along one side, running the entire length of the room, is the cutting table. Upon this table the actual work of building a story out of short pieces of film, takes place. At various intervals along this table are stationary re-winds, or a geared bracket with a small handle for winding backward or forward. The standard sized reel of film slides on these brackets, and locks fast with a simple clip arrangement. These brackets are all of the same size, so that reels may be changed from one to the other. Between the rewinds, on the surface of the table, is a small piece of opaque glass with an electric light under it. As the cutter winds the film from one reel to another, it passes over this section of glass and enables the cutter to see the change of action in each tiny frame (or picture) on the film. In difficult matching of action, a magnifying glass is used. A patent film splicer, a measuring machine, glue for patching, scissors, metal clips and rubber bands are in their respective places upon the table.

Against the wall above the table are long tiers of metal racks, divided up into small slots, and each one is numbered, so that the cutter, in "breaking down" the scenes as they come from the laboratory, reads the scene number on the end of the film, breaks or cuts it at that point, rolls it up and places it in the slot with the corresponding number. When all the slots are filled, the entire story is laid out before them in the racks, from scene number one on. The scenes according to their continuity numbers are then spliced together, each scene left sufficiently long to allow for a second and third cutting. The close-ups and inserts (like telegrams, newspapers, money, etc.) are cut in at the proper place. After each small change in cutting, the film is taken into the projection room and run. In this way the cutter can see the effect of his changes on the screen.

The third cutting is called "sharpening" or frame cutting. This is the most difficult as it is the last to be done. The titles have been cut down to a proper reading length, and these are also sharpened on the final cutting.

The waste baskets are filled with scraps of film. These are called "trims" and are always saved in case a certain piece of action should be changed again. The finished print is the picture you see on the screen at the theater. The negative is then assembled in the racks and cut to match the finished print. From this negative many prints are made, and distributed through the film exchanges to the motion picture theaters of the world.

PAINTINGS OF THE WEST
STENDAHL GALLERIES
OF THE PACIFIC COAST
The Ambassador Hotel—Los Angeles Hotel del Coronado—San Diego

Angelus Lighting Fixture Co., Inc.
Designers and Craftsmen of
Lighting Fixtures, Lamps, Fire Tools, Console-Tables and Mirrors
746 So. Figueroa St., Los Angeles
VA ndike 2296

BOOK REVIEWS—Continued from Page 11

adventure is to be found only in the most remote and unfrequented parts of the world, so thither the Wisdom, called the Sea Gypsy for short, made her way, and the account of the places she visited, written by Captain Salisbury, assisted by Mr. Cooper in the part relating to Abyssinia, has made a very creditable volume of entertaining information and description.

Few people visit the Andaman Islands in the Bay of Bengal. Here England keeps her prisoners convicted of murder in India and Burma, and a stay of two weeks in this peculiar colony, where thousands are successfully governed by a handful of men, enabled Captain Salisbury to record for us some interesting facts. The yacht spent months wandering through the waters surrounding the East Indies, stopping occasionally at the larger islands of Sumatra, Borneo and Java.

In the Red Sea the brave little yacht broke down, and the accident together with unfavorable winds enforced a stay of some length at Jidda the port of Mecca. In his description of this picturesque and unfamiliar city, the Captain has done the best writing in the book; especially in relating the events taking place and in telling about the personages he met, he shows some genuine literary ability, which helps to excuse the somewhat sketchy character of the book as a whole.

MEMORIES AND FRIENDS (G. P. Putnam's Sons) By A. C. BENSON

In his book of memories and friends, Mr. Benson views from a college window the many friends who have walked with him along the road. With the sympathetic comprehension which runs like a thread of gold through these appreciations, he writes less as the schoolmaster, and more as though for each of them he is writing the memoirs of a brother. In the quiet, pre-war times he describes, he and his friends seem to have dwelt in a veritable house of quiet, from which they wandered at large beside still waters, or paused awhile in the orchard pavilion, where the minstrel dreamed of the reeds of Pan, and each soul was bared to the altar fire which inflamed and inspired them to high and devoted service. Some of his friends Mr. Benson accompanied even to the gate of death, yet saw that for them it was a place where no fear was, because they had lived by the love and trust that taught them to value alike the rod and the staff. In each clear study in personality, Mr. Benson reveals their separate individualities so well that it is numbered even as the leaves of the tree. One feels that they have reached the silent isle of perfection and peace, from whence escape the watersprings of joy and strength in which the finest souls have laved, even to that last mentioned and latest loved child of the dawn, Rupert Brooke, who prophesied so fearlessly "some white tremendous daybreak" for this sorry, war-spent world.

E. M. GREEVES CARPENTER.

The Assembly Tea Room
The In and Out-of-Town House of Los Angeles serves
LUNCHEON, TEA AND DINNER
INCIDENTALLY
The Very Choicest Food
Special Sunday Dinner 5 to 8
644 South Flower St., Los Angeles
Phone VAndike 7177

POIRETTE COMPACT
These Compacts are so constructed that they eliminate all brassiere difficulties and proportion off excess flesh into proper symmetrical lines—really reducing the measurements of the figure—the bust and hips—from two to four inches—and giving utmost comfort. The e garmerts can be laundered as easily as silk underwear. Made in all lengths.
Pasadena Corset Shop
HELEN B. FORD, Corsetière
308 E. Colorado St., Pasadena, Cal.
Opposite New First National Bank
Fair Oaks 3388

An Ideal School for Young Women
Cumnock School
COLLEGE WORK IN THE FOLLOWING COURSES:
Vocal Interpretation of Literature
Literary Appreciation Voice and Diction Short-Story
Public Speaking French Dancing
Dramatics Story Telling Psychology
Journalism
Art and Art Appreciation
An accredited High School and Junior School under same management
HELEN A. BROOKS, Director
5353 West Third Street Los Angeles
GRanit 3253 —TELEPHONES— GRanit 3353

ASSISTANCE LEAGUE OF SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

MONTHLY BULLETIN

"All for Service—And Service for All"

OFFICERS:

MRS. HANCOCK BANNING, President
MRS. EDWARDS LAUGHLIN, First Vice President
MRS. WILLIAM GIBBS MCADOO, Sec. Vice-Pres.
MRS. ERWIN P. WERNER, Third Vice-President
MRS. E. AVERY MCCARTHY, Fourth Vice-Pres.
MRS. JAMES REED, Secretary
MRS. J. WARREN TATUM, Treas.
MR. D. C. MACWATTERS, Auditor

OWING to economic conditions existing all over the United States at the present time, our calls on the Good Samaritan Committee of the Assistance League have been unusually heavy, especially during the months of January and February. The Community Chest supplies our Good Samaritan Committee with funds for emergency relief work, but having based our quota on the expenditures of last year we find our resources quite inadequate to meet the present demands upon them. This will require our supplementing these funds from the earnings of the Thrift Shop and the Location Bureau, making it imperative that we put forth still greater effort to build up these departments to meet this need.

The Good Samaritan Committee is carrying on the policy followed by the original Assistance League of Los Angeles established in 1906, which accomplished so much good work during its seven years' activity. This policy is one of ministering to cases in distress which do not properly come under the jurisdiction of other organizations. Not the least of this work being the securing of positions for those who find it impossible to ask or accept charity. So great are such demands that we are in process of establishing a special committee for this particular work. We feel that our greatest humanitarian and useful work lies in our being able to assist the genteel poor in our community—which requires the greatest delicacy and tactfulness on the part of our workers.

We are fortunate in having been able to employ a trained social worker to take charge of investigations and direct case work. This places this department of the League on a more professional basis. A close contact is maintained with the Social Service Department of the Community Welfare Federation, and all requirements made by them are fulfilled. Through our affiliation with the Federation we have become more familiar with the functions of the one hundred and twenty-five allied agencies and can act more intelligently in our disposition of cases. We still consider our department somewhat of a clearing house for ordinary cases, reserving our limited funds and energy for the more special ones which we feel we are peculiarly able to handle. By actual count there have been more appeals for assistance during January and February than there were during the entire year of 1924.

"Southern California" is no small part of our name, for we are proud of the fact that our usefulness is not limited to the immediate vicinity in which our Community House is located. Through our loyal members throughout Southern California we reach forth wherever there is need. In this connection our Wilmington Unit, which has recently been organized, should be mentioned. Through the establishment of a unit there Community Chest funds were made available for a much needed case work and emergency relief department. So far in this new unit we have centered all our attention on Good Samaritan work. Miss Montana Tuller is the chairman of the Wilmington Committee. A trained social worker is in charge of the case work under the direction of our Los Angeles office. In the short time it has been operating some very splendid work has been done.

To the pioneers in Los Angeles it is not surprising that in our Social Service Work we seldom encounter an old resident of California who needs assistance. Practically all of those we help are fairly recent arrivals from other States. It is to the attention of those fortunate ones who have come to our shores that we wish to call the plight of many of their fellow townsmen. It is with this in view that we are drawing the following pictures taken from widely different parts of the country and differing entirely in nature.

One rainy day last month there came to our Good Samaritan Committee a man of refinement and evident sensitiveness who made known to us that he was forced to come by the actual hunger of his children. He came here for his wife's health two and a half months ago. Now he was faced with the problem of his starving family and the dread of ejection for non-payment of rent. His little savings had dwindled away. He had had a good clerical position in the East with good pay. All day and every day since coming to California he had tramped the streets looking for work with which he was familiar and then any kind of work that would be the means of keeping his family. He did not wish charity, simply a chance to earn a living. Food was sent to the family, free medical attention given the wife, temporary work was procured for him and although it was not the work he was accustomed to he did it well. We later secured for him a permanent position in his own line and he is paying the League the money expended for him.

MRS. ISAAC HAMPSHUR JONES, VICE CHAIRMAN OF THE GOOD SAMARITAN COMMITTEE

MRS. WILLIAM GIBBS McADOO, CHAIRMAN OF THE GOOD SAMARITAN COMMITTEE

Again, we have a motherless lad of fourteen from Utah who had run away from his home. He was at the age where "working was his only friend". No one understood him, least of all his father. He fled to the railway station and rode the bumpers of a train which brought him to California with empty purse and emptier stomach. He fell in with bad company and one dark day was arrested with a little band of law-breakers. Although he had had no previous criminal record there was little choice for the Juvenile Court other than committing him to a state reform school where daily association with embryo criminals might have had sinister effect on this susceptible boy. It was at this point that the Good Samaritan Committee stepped in, secured a half rate ticket and sent the lad back to Utah to a sister who faithfully promises to look carefully after him.

A mother with seven little girls was widowed and left penniless in Pennsylvania. Her relatives scraped together enough money to bring her to California, her former home. Her aged father shared his meagre income with her. The state granted an allowance of $20.00 a month for the two oldest girls who were born in California. On this amount food for the seven was being purchased. In an outlying subdivision the father was able to secure a lot for a nominal price. Through the husband of one of our most active members and the generous response of a number of lumber companies sufficient building material was secured to put a small house on this lot into which the family moved. A kitchen garden and chickens add a small income and food to the family store.

These are only three of the many, for whom the aid of you home folks is greatly needed. How many times during the Community Chest Drive were the workers turned away from the homes of some of our wealthiest residents with the answer: "We give in our home town." We feel that the answer should go to them: "Yes, and to the few old residents of California, and especially Los Angeles, is left the task of holding out a helping hand to your fellow townsmen, who like you have come to bask in our perpetual sunshine." Oh that the boundary line may soon vanish and we may live up to that old doctrine: "All men are our brothers!" Then how different our old world will be and, truly, the blessed sun of California would shine more benignly upon us all.

We need your help, "Home Folks." May our asking be not in vain.

The interlocking of our various departments is brought out very clearly in this review of our cases. The Good Samaritan Committee helps to solve some of its family problems by placing children in the Day Nursery thus enabling the mother to add to the insufficient family income. From the racks of the Thrift Shop come the clothes which make it possible for the man or woman to look presentable when interviewing employers, or for the boy or girl to go to school in clothes which do not call forth the ridicule of their playmates. The mother who cannot leave the home finds in the Exchange a market for her handicraft. The Studio Tearoom has functioned as the magic table in the wilderness to many who have not been able to afford a real meal in days or weeks. We can call upon our Location Bureau to supplement our all too inadequate relief fund.

Every one of the departments is necessary. There is work for all and so varied in nature that each one can find her niche, being assured that she is vitally important to the whole.

PASADENA HOMESEEKER'S REFERENCE PAGE

DORN-SYKES CO.
REALTORS
Dependable Real Estate and Insurance Service in Pasadena for more than 22 Years.
30 So. RAYMOND AVENUE
PASADENA, CALIF.
Phone Fair Oaks 180

KATHERINE BASHFORD
LANDSCAPE ARCHITECT
810 CENTRAL BUILDING
TERRACE 9403 PASADENA

Alice Coleman Batchelder, Pianist,
Presents the 1924-1925 Series of Eight
Coleman Chamber Concerts
In the Music Auditorium of The Pasadena Institute of Technology
Agnes E. Lownsbery, Secy.
Telephone, Colo. 3414
695 Calaveras St., Altadena

The Mary-Isbel Shop
Nestle Lanoil Permanent Waving, Marcelling, Manicuring and Scalp Treatment.
20 South Los Robles Pasadena
Phone Fair Oaks 916
Pasadena's Most Exclusive Shop

Everything Worthwhile in Radio
The Radio Store of
Phone F.O. 3281
Paul Franklin Johnson
560-562 E. Colorado St.
PASADENA, CALIFORNIA

Books ... Toys
Gulck Stationery Co.
173 E. COLO. ST., Pasadena
Fair Oaks 39
Picture Framing, Artist's Supplies

The Gearharts
ETCHINGS AND BLOCK PRINTS
611 So. Fair Oaks Ave.
Pasadena

The Rose Tree Tea House
Luncheon, Afternoon Tea, Evening Dinner
CLOSED SUNDAY
ITALIAN LINENS, POTTERIES AND VARIOUS GIFTS SUITABLE FOR CHRISTMAS
ROSE TREE GIFT SHOP
167 North Orange Grove Avenue
PASADENA, CALIFORNIA
Telephone Colorado 5523

WE offer for investment of Personal or Trust Funds sound Securities returning highest rates consistent with safety.
WILLIAM R. STAATS COMPANY
Established 1887
Government, Municipal and Corporation Bonds
311 East Colorado St.
PASADENA, CALIF.
Los Angeles San Diego San Francisco

Decorating and Finishing Exclusive Furniture
W. G. Pesenecker
Interior and Exterior Painting
34 North Broadway
Phone Col. 5656 Pasadena, Calif.

OAK BEECH — Furnished Scraped
H. G. BENNETT
HARDWOOD FLOORS EXCLUSIVELY
524-26 SO. RAYMOND AVE,
COLO. 178 - PASADENA, CALIF.
MAPLE BIRCH — Laid Finished
Estimates Cheerfully Given
Old Floors Resanded and Polished

OHRMUND BROS.
Unit System of Heating
sets the Standard of the World
with
Superior and Distinctive Features
A Comfortable Home Must Be Properly Heated
PASADENA GAS APPLIANCE CO., INC.
901-3 East Colorado Street Fair Oaks 93

For STEAMSHIP RESERVATIONS
TO
HONOLULU, EUROPE, THE ORIENT
NEW YORK via PANAMA CANAL
ANY OCEAN TRAVEL
Agency for Thos. Cook & Son
Raymond and Whitcomb Co.
C. J. JONES STEAMSHIP AGENCY
294 East Colorado St., Pasadena
Phone Fair Oaks 8026

JAMES CINI & COMPANY
of Italy
Antique and Foreign Jewelry
Iatlian and French Novelties
390 E. Walnut St. Pasadena, Calif.
Fair Oaks 5583

Euclid Hat Shoppe
Exclusive Line of Dress Hats
Dobb's Sports Hats
Hats for Every Occasion
472 E. Colorado St. Pasadena, Calif.
Fair Oaks 3939

Superior Rental Service
HOMES, APARTMENTS, BUNGALOWS
In Pasadena's Exclusive Sections
MRS. MORRIS (Rentals Exclusively)
THE J. W. WRIGHT CO.
312 E. COLORADO ST., PASADENA

QUALITY SERVICE
THE ELITE
DRY CLEANERS AND DYERS
Plant: 797 So. Fair Oaks Ave.
Colo. 1349 Pasadena, Cal.

FRANK MELINE CO.
(Incorporated)
REALTORS
26 No. Euclid Ave., Pasadena, Cal.
Phone Fair Oaks 6260

Permutit Soft Water Saves Clothes
TROY LAUNDRY
In Business for Twenty Years
Pasadena, Cal. Phone C. 146
Alhambra 243-J

LAUNDERERS DRY CLEANERS
Royal Laundry Co.
461 So Raymond Colo. 67
Pasadena, Calif.

Choose your own architect from the representative styles shown in "California Homes" by California Architects. Price $1.00.
Address: ELLEN LEECH,
544 So. El Molino Avenue Pasadena, Calif.

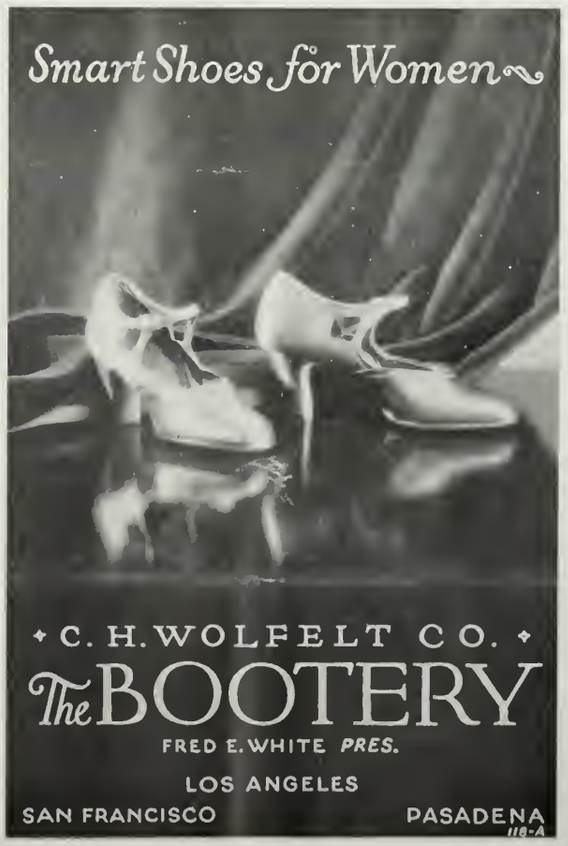
THE BATCHELDER TILES

We produce Tile for Fireplaces, Fountains, Pavements, Garden Pots---anything that is appropriately made from clay. :: :: :: :: ::

LOS ANGELES, CALIFORNIA



High Grade Saddles

$45.00

WHIPPY patter, straight head, square cantle, Wilson skirt, selected pigskin seat, leather lined felt panel, beveled edge and numbered stirrup leathers, English never rust stirrups, 3 fold leather girth. Immediate delivery.

In lots of 5, $35.00 each
In lots of 2, $40.00 each

THE "LITTLE JOE" WIESENFELD CO.
BALTIMORE, MARYLAND

Old English Hanging Corner Cabinet Showing 18th Century Chinese Porcelain Tea Services Made for the English Market

The Serendipity has a choice collection of old Worcester, Spode, Crown Derby, Coalport, and Mason—important sets in each instance

The Serendipity Antique Shop

26 and 30 South Los Robles Avenue, Pasadena, California

BRADFORD PERIN, Proprietor

CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND

THE ABODE OF GIANTS, IN RED ROCK CANYON
A WATER COLOR BY BESSIE ELLA HAZEN,
UNIVERSITY OF CALIFORNIA AT LOS ANGELES

CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND IS A COMMUNITY MAGAZINE OF GENERAL INTEREST, FEATURING SOCIETY AT WORK OR AT PLAY; ART, AND ARCHITECTURE, MUSIC AND DRAMA

No. 64 APRIL, 1925 25 Cents

MARY E. HAUAN
Partly-Worked Needlepoint Tapestry
Studio 26, de la Guerra Studios

EL PASEO SPORT SHOP
MRS. CHARLES O'DONNELL LEE, JR.
Sport Clothes, Hats, Evening Gowns
Children's Clothes
Studio 30, de la Guerra Studios

DORIS OVERMAN
Designer
Shades, Trays, Decorative Panels, Aztec Pottery and Lamps
Studio 27, de la Guerra Studios

MONCURE DEARDORF
Important Collection of Chinese Jewelry
Dealer and Expert in Chinese Works of Art
Studio 24, de la Guerra Studios

PACIFIC MUTUAL LIFE INSURANCE CO.
SANTA BARBARA BRANCH
101 EL PASEO DE LA GUERRA

DE LA GUERRA STUDIOS
SANTA BARBARA
THE LOVELY SHOPPING STREET IN SPAIN

SPUNWOVEN
"THE GYPSY SHOP"
Hand Fabrics
BETH AND IAN M. WOLFE
Studio 32, de la Guerra Studios

BROWN CALDWELL
MODERN ETCHINGS
Studio 102
El Paseo de la Guerra

GEORGE M. MILLARD (of Pasadena)
RARE IMPORTED BOOKS
Santa Barbara Associates
MR. EVERARD MEYNELL MRS. E. M. GROSSMANN
STUDIO 25, EL PASEO
15 EAST DE LA GUERRA STREET

MARINA FLINT
Kimonos, Chinese Suits, Bed Sacks
Suite 114, de la Guerra Studios

ELEANOR JOHNSON
Studio for the Voice
Suite 103, de la Guerra Studios

B. CROFTON ATKINS
Pipe and Tobacco Shop
And Men's Imported Clothing
Studio 29, de la Guerra Studios

LEE ELEANOR GRAHAM
Interior Decorator
de la Guerra Studios
23 East de la Guerra Street
Santa Barbara

THE POLK STUDIOS
MUSIC, DRAMA, DANCE
Gertrude Jeanette Polk
Artist Teacher of Vocal and Physical Expression
Henry Polk
Teacher of Piano, Voice and Pipe Organ
Suite 110, de la Guerra Studios

LA MANTILLA
Costume Designing and Remodeling
Studio 31, de la Guerra Studios

SANTA BARBARA ART CLUB
No. 15 E. de la Guerra Street
Free Exhibition of Paintings and Etchings
Open Daily 10 a. m. to 5 p. m.
Paintings and Etchings for sale

El Paseo Patio

Lunch Out of Doors or Dine
at
"EL PASEO"
23 E. de la Guerra St.
Santa Barbara

SANTA BARBARA COMMUNITY ARTS ASSOCIATION
FRANK MORLEY FLETCHER, Director
SCHOOL OF THE ARTS
Announcement: Term, February 2—May 16
Graphic and Decorative Arts, Drama, Music, Dancing, French
For further information address the Secretary, Mrs. Jeanne Auge, 936 Santa Barbara St. Santa Barbara, California

MARTHA
WATSON-KERBY
Exclusive Fashions for Women
GOWNS WRAPS SPORTS CLOTHING
2224 WEST SEVENTH STREET
LOS ANGELES
WESTLAKE SQUARE PHONE FITZROY 0823

Patio in the house of Harold Waldmann
MARGARET CRAIG
ARCHITECTURAL PHOTOGRAPHY
Portraits by Appointment
Official Photographer for California Southland
3223 W. Sixth Street
Telephone WAsh. 1653 Los Angeles

The Lundblads
A Real Home in the Country
Open to Guests the Entire Year
Address Mrs. L. Lundblad
Saratoga, California
Down the Peninsula forty miles from San Francisco

La Solana
A quiet, well-appointed small hotel on the West Side near Orange Grove Avenue.
Each menu is carefully planned and prepared every day.
Grand Ave. and Lockhaven St. Pasadena

SOUTHLAND CALENDAR

Announcements of exhibitions, fetes, concerts, club entertainments, etc., for the calendar pages are free of charge and should be received in the office of CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND, Pasadena, at least two weeks previous to date of issue, the 10th. No correction can be guaranteed if they are received later than that date. California Southland is published monthly at Pasadena, California. One dollar and twenty-five cents for six issues, two fifty per year. Addresses will be changed as many times as desired if notice is given before the first of the month for which the change is made.

Entered as second class matter, July 28, 1919, at the Post office at Pasadena, California, under act of March 3, 1879.

Clubs

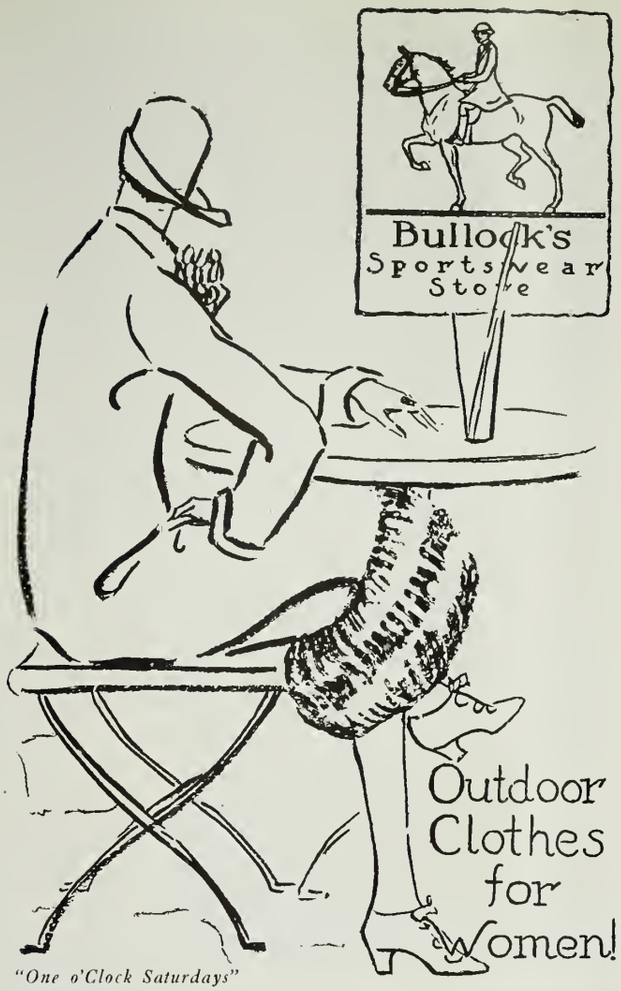
VALLEY HUNT CLUB:
The announcements for April include: The Cherry Blossom ball, a costume dinner dance on April 3.
Bridge luncheon, April 6, 1 o'clock.
The evening bridge and mah jongg party, April 24. Play begins at 8 o'clock and supper will be served after the game.
Sunday evening programs include a song recital by Alexander Kisselberg, baritone, April 5; an opinion on "The Age and Future of the University," by Dr. Henry N. Russell of Princeton, April 19; and "Our Passing Frontier," an illustrated talk by L. Houghton Cox, April 26. There will be no evening program Easter Sunday, April 12.

ANNANDALE GOLF CLUB:
Mixed Foursomes January 4th and alternate Sundays thereafter.
Every Friday is Ladies' Day.
The afternoon Bridge, Mah Jongg and tea parties have been resumed for the season. Tea will be served as requested and tables for cards are always available.
The usual Wednesday and Saturday sweepstakes each month.

FLINTRIDGE COUNTRY CLUB:
Tuesday is Ladies' Day and a special luncheon is served. In the afternoons informal bridge parties may be arranged, followed by tea.
St. Patrick's Day Dinner-Dance, Saturday evening, March 14.

LOS ANGELES COUNTY CLUB:
Ladies' Days, second Monday of each month.
Music during dinner, followed by dancing, every Saturday evening during the month.
Luncheon served from 11:30 to 2 .p m. on Saturdays.
Sunday night concerts during month.
Tea served as requested and tables for cards always available.

WILSHIRE COUNTRY CLUB:
Ladies' Days, third Monday of each month.
Dancing every second and fourth Saturday during the month.
A musical is arranged for each Sunday night in the month.



MIDWICK COUNTRY CLUB:
Ladies' Days, fourth Monday in each month.
Tea and informal bridge every afternoon.
Polo, Wednesday and Saturday of each week.
Dancing every Saturday night.
Buffet luncheon served every Sunday.
Match polo games every Sunday, preceded by luncheon parties, followed by teas, during season.

LOS ANGELES ATHLETIC CLUB:
Dinner dances, Tuesday and Friday nights of every week, Tuesday night informal; Friday night semi-formal. Plunge open to the ladies Tuesday and Friday of every week.

SAN GABRIEL COUNTRY CLUB:
A dinner dance is arranged for the third Thursday of each month.
On Friday of each week a special luncheon is served, with bridge in the afternoons.
Ladies play every day starting after ten a. m., and not before two p. m.

MONTECITO COUNTRY CLUB:
Provides an 18 hole golf course, two concrete and two dirt courts for tennis, bowls and croquet.
Tea is served and informal bridge parties arranged as desired.
A buffet supper is served every Sunday night.

LA CUMBRE GOLF AND COUNTRY CLUB:
Offers a course of eighteen holes, rivaling any in hazard and beauty. A recent purchase of additional acreage will provide an extended and even more interesting course.
Luncheon is served every day, and tea may be arranged as desired.

"One o'Clock Saturdays"

A. Schmidt & Son

Established 1869

The Solution of Your Gift Problem Lies in Our Collection of Antique and Modern Silver, Sheffield Plate, Fine China and Glass

2320 W. Seventh St., Los Angeles.
391 E. Colorado St., Pasadena.

Boston New York Washington

REDLANDS COUNTRY CLUB:
Golf tournament for men is held every Saturday. Monday the course is reserved for the women and a special luncheon served. Those who do not play golf or who have had a round in the morning, devote the afternoon to bridge or mah jongg. Every Saturday afternoon tea is served and the men from their golf and the women from their Bridge and Mah Jongg tables join, with one of the women members as hostess, for a social cup.

Art

LOS ANGELES Museum of History, Science and Art, Exposition Park, announces for April the sixth exhibition of works by Painters and Sculptors of Southern California. Until April 19 the exhibition of hooked rugs will continue in the gallery of the south wing. In this display of rugs are five panels depicting the invasion of England by the Normans and the subsequent Battle of Hastings, showing the possibilities of creating tapestries and wall decorations through the agency of a hooked rug. The Museum is open daily from 10 to 4, except Wednesday afternoons. Open Sunday 2 to 5 p. m. Admission free.

SOUTHWEST MUSEUM, Marmion Way and Avenue 46, Los Angeles: The Sculptors' Guild will continue their second annual exhibition through April 7. Through the courtesy of Clinton G. Clarke a series of photographs of the High Sierras will be shown, April 7 to May 7.

CANNELL AND CHAFFIN will show in their Los Angeles galleries, 720 West Seventh street, during April, in the main gallery, paintings by Chauncey F. Ryder, N. A., and the Print Room will be hung with his etchings. In the smaller gallery will be found examples of the work of the greatest among the living American and foreign masters. These shows will extend to April 18.
Opening April 20 and continuing through May 2, an unusually interesting exhibition of water colors by Taber Sears, coming direct from a New York gallery. And water colors by Dana Bartlett, which include a number of sketches made on his sketching trip in Europe last fall.

GRACE NICHOLSON opened her new art galleries, in connection with her Chinese Temple building, 46 N. Los Robles avenue, Pasadena, with a special exhibition of Indian paintings by J. H. Sharp, a member of the Taos Society of Artists, and also an exhibit of hand-wrought silver by George Jensen. The Sharp exhibition will continue until April 10.

THE ANNUAL exhibition of the Arthur Wesley Dow Assoeiation opened during March in the fine arts gallery of the University of California, Southern Branch, consisting of crafts, design, and paintings. The gallery is closed on Saturday afternoon and Sunday, but is open to the public at other times.

THE STENDAHL GALLERIES, Ambassador Hotel, Los Angeles, offer an exhibition of recent works by Colin Campbell Cooper, N. A., to April 14.

WITH the opening of the exhibition of representative paintings by the famous masters of French Impressionism the Biltmore Salon announees a permanent affiliation with the internationally known firm of Durand-Ruel, and other great galleries of the world, whose art treasures will henceforth be made available to the public of Los Angeles exclusively through the Biltmore Salon.

THE prize-winning prints of the Sixth International Print Makers' Exhibition are as follows: The Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce gold medal went to a group of two mezzotints and one drypoint etching by Leonard R. Squirrell, English artist. The silver medal offered by the Print Makers' Society of California was won by a drypoint portrait, "Mrs. Haberden," by Malcoln Osborne, English. Robert H. Nisbet's "The Hurrying River," took the William Alanson Bryan prize for the best etching by an American. Mrs. Samuel Storrow's prize of $50 for the best block print to "Port of St. Tropez," by John Platt, English. C. William Buma offered two prizes of $50 each; the one for landscape went to Roi Partridge, California; Stanley Anderson, English, took the figure prize.

THE Biltmore Salon exhibitions for the first half of the month include Armin Hansen, and Charles H. Russell, the last half of the month Aaron Kilpatrick will show in the larger display room, and the work of contemporary Dutch painters will be hung in the Galeria Real.

THE Partridge collection, consisting of tapestries, bronzes, French and English furniture, Chinese porcelain, antique jewelry and illustrated manuscripts of the 15th Century is now being shown in the studio on the corner of Colorado and Los Robles, Pasadena.

DR. WILLIAM ALANSON BRYAN, director of the Los Angeles Museum of History, Science and Art, is in Mexico City, having been commissioned by the board of governors to visit all the Latin-American capitals for the purpose of bringing the best examples of the work of the Mexican, Central and South American artists to a great exhibition of Pan-American paintings to be assembled in Los Angeles next fall.

THE atractive exhibition of works by modern French impressionists in the Biltmore Salon was brought to Los Angeles by J. Nilsen Laurvik, director of the San Francisco Museum of Art, each picture being selected by him, which assured a comprehensive collection.

ALSON S. CLARK is now sketching in old Mexico, which has been the inspiration for some of the best of his recent work. His itinerary includes Manzanillo, Guadalajarn, Mexico City, and neighborhood, and over to Cuernavaca.

MISS CAROLINE A. POWELL, member of the American Society of Wood Engravers, and an engraver, has presented to the Pasadena Public Library, a valuable collection of prints, comprising a thousand specimens. This collection will be stored until the completion of the new library, which will have a Fine Arts department.

GIORGE D. OTIS announces an exhibition of paintings in the gallery of Barker Bros., Broadway, between Seventh and Eighth, Los Angeles, March 30 to April 18.

HANSON PUTHUFF is exhibiting landscapes of California at the Southby Salon, 112 North Larchmont Blvd., for several weeks.

THE WENZELL GALLERY, 3002 Wilshire Boulevard, opened by the widow of A. B. Wenzell, will be permanent and is open every afternoon from 2 to 6 o'clock. Portraits, figures, and studies never before exhibited are being shown.

KATHERINE LEIGHTON has added a large wing to her studio at 1633 West 46th street, Los Angeles. Indian blankets cover the floor and the walls are decorated with Indian costumes and weapons, collected by her son Everett, who has made a study of Indian lore. Heavy curtains separate this room from the studio proper when Mrs. Leighton is at work, but they may be thrown together for social affairs.

ELLA HOTELLING TANBERG, President Emeritus of the West Coast Arts, Inc., made a sketching trip to Laguna Beach recently, the guest of Mrs. Lillian Ferguson.

DELL MEADOWS' studio at 1133 West 36th Place, Los Angeles, has been the objective point of several interesting clubs. During March the Wednesday Morning Club and the Lincoln Study Club were entertained. Miss Meadows read a group of her own poems on The Old South. Her studio is always open, where her paintings may be seen.

THE CURTIS STUDIO, 640 South Figuero street, Los Angeles, is now the property of Henry D. Myer and Adolfo di Segni and will be known henceforth as the Myer and di Segni Gallery.

SCULPTORS exhibiting in the present show at the Southwest Museum are: C. A. Betchelder Andrew J. Bjurman, Ella Buchanan, F. Tolles Chamberlain, Mrs. F. Tolles Chamberlain, Maud Daggett, Stefan Van Rufflairt de Vrient, Finn Frolich, Frank Ingeles, A. Lesovsky, Marguerita M. Meyer, Beulah May, Humberti Pedretti, Carlo Romanelli, Caetaino Scarpitta, Lora Woodhead Steere, Marguerite R. Tew, Frank Wamsley, Henry Winebrenner, Elizabeth Mason and Harold Swartz.

THE EISTEDDFOD at Oxnard, Ventura County, announces an interesting exhibition of art under the direction of Edwin C. Arnold, April 13-18. Los Angeles, Pasadena and Santn Barbara artists are expected to contribute.

ELMER and Marion Kavanagh Wachtel are on a sketching trip through the mountains and valleys of southern California.

KATHERINE LEIGHTON, Mrs. Mary Everett and Louise Everett have planned a sketching trip to the desert, near Palm Springs, during the Easter vacation.

ANOTHER addition to the art atmosphere of California—At the corner of Bixby road and Cota avenue, Long Beach, is found an interesting home of American Arts and Crafts called "Walp's Hobby House." Mr. and Mrs. Walp have spent much time in collecting genuine American antiques from the old Dutch homesteads of Pennsylvania and other eastern States. These include furniture, porcelains, silver, pewter, brass, wrought-iron, and textiles. They have been chosen with rare good taste and much apprecintion for their beauty as well as their value. Beside the arts and crafts, the walls are well adapted for the showing of pictures.

LILLIAN FERGUSON, of Laguna Beach, held last month an exhibition of her paintings in the art gallery of the San Pedro Public Library.

THE members of the Twentieth Century Club of Eagle Rock have been visiting the studios of artists as a means of studying the art of California. Saturday, March 21, they visited the studio of Nell Brooker Mayhew.

BESSIE ELLA HAZEN and Mrs. Howard Miller made a quick sketching trip to Red Rock Canyon last month.

LUCILE HINKLE holds an exhibition of water colors at the University of Southern California.

EVELYN NUNN MILLER, Secretary of the West Coast Arts, Inc., gave the art program for the meeting of the Women's City Club of Long Beach, March 27. Mrs. Miller has studied and paitned in Japan and the Orient.

JESSIE M. BUKMAN held an exhibition of twenty Provincetown sketches in her studio, 4570 West 1st street.

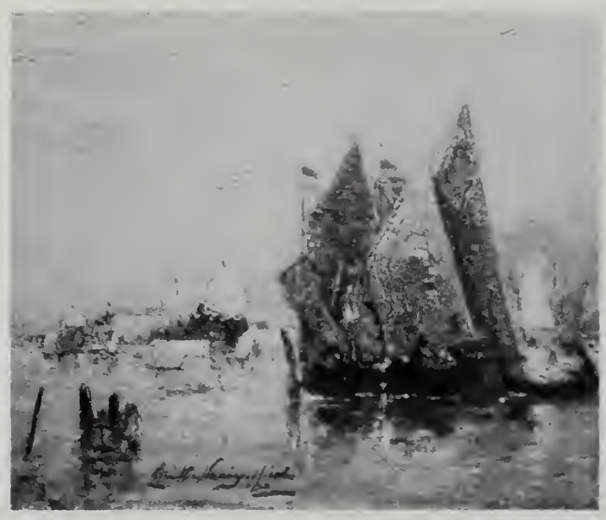
MAY and Frances Gearhart are showing etchings and block prints at the Friday Morning Club through April 3.

NELL WALKER WARNER, who was recently admitted to membership in the Cnlifornia Art Club is to have an exhibit of seventy-two pictures hung at the Tuesday Afternoon Clubhouse in Glendale for the month of April. Studies of the eucalyptus are among her best productions.

THE Laguna Traveling Exhibit has reached Glendale and is now hung in the Van Grove Studio, 337 North Brand Blvd., the headquarters of the Glendale Art Association.

Hotel Raymond
and
Golf Course

Season: Dec. 27th
to Late April



The only hotel in Pasadena having a golf course on its immediate property

WALTER RAYMOND
Proprietor

Clarence P. Day
Corporation

Engineers—Contractors

35 N. RAYMOND AVE. PHONE COLO. 1006
PASADENA, CALIFORNIA

AT ANCHOR, VENICE — By Dangerfield

Exhibition: Paintings and Etchings by Chauncey F. Ryder, throughout April; Taber Seares and Dana Bartlett, April 20-May 2.

Cannell & Chaffin, Inc.

Paintings :: Period Furniture :: Antiques

MARYLAND HOTEL
PASADENA

720 W. SEVENTH ST.
LOS ANGELES

Music

PHILHARMONIC ORCHESTRA of Los Los Angeles, Walter Henry Rothwell, conductor, will give the monthly Friday afternoon Symphony concert at 3:00, April 10, the Saturday evening concert at 8:30, April 11, and the popular Sunday afternoon concert at 3:00, April 5, in the Philharmonic Auditorium, Fifth and Olive, Los Angeles. These are the final concerts of the season.

PASADENA Music and Art Association, in the 1925 Artists Series, will present Marie Jeritza, prima donna soprano of the Metropolitan Opera House, Thursday evening, April 2, in the Pasadena High School Auditorium.

ALICE COLEMAN BATCHELDER, pianist, presents the two final Coleman Chamber Concerts of the series of eight, April 16 and April 30. The seventh concert, April 16, will be given in the afternoon at 3:30, and the assisting artists are the Philharmonic Quartet. The eighth concert will be presented in the evening at 8:15, at which the Chamber Music Society of San Francisco will appear. These concerts are given in the Music Auditorium of the Institute of Technology, Pasadena.

L. E. BEHYMER presents in the Philharmonic Artists Course Series Feodor Chaliapin, Russian interpreter of opera and songs, April 2; The Flonzaley Quartet, instrumental ensembles, April 3; Tito Schipa, lyric tenor of the Chicago Opera, April 7 and 16; and Frieda Hempel will present her Jenny Lind program, April 21 and 23.

AUDITORIUM Artist Series (George Leslie Smith, manager) will present Reinald Werrenrath, April 13.

THE sixth and last concert of the series to be given in Pasadena by the Los Angeles Philharmonic Orchestra, Walter Henry Rothwell, conductor, is announced for April 6, at 8:15, Raymond Theater.

LOS ANGELES Chamber Music Society will give the sixth and final concert of the season, April 17, in the Music Room of the Los Angeles Biltmore at 3:00 p. m. These concerts have alternated with the Friday afternoon concerts of the Philharmonic Orchestra.

WOMAN'S SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA of Los Angeles, Henry Schoenfeld, conductor, will give the second and last concert of the season, April 14.

LOS ANGELES Oratorio Society, John Smallman, conductor, will present Merle Alcock, Metropolitan artist, as the soloist at the third concert, April 25.

ANNOUNCEMENT is made that the Philharmonic Orchestra's concert for the hospital and benefit fund will be given Sunday afternoon, April 19.

THE LOS ANGELES TRIO, composed of May McDonald Hope, Messrs. Noack and Bronson, will give the sixth concert of the series at the Ebell Auditorium, April 30.

THE Hollywood Bowl Easter service will be impressive and beautiful. Alice Gentle is to sing the "Inflammatus" from Rossini's Stabat Mater; William Tyroler is to lead the augmented chorus in Handel's "Hallelujah Chorus"; Conrad Nagel is to read Van Dyck's "God of the Open Air"; the Davis Sisters, cornetists, are to announce the coming of the dawn from the rim of the Bowl, and the Hollywood Community Orchestra, under Jay Plowe's direction, is to play. There will be the singing of Easter hymns by the huge audience, led by Hugo Kirchhofer. And there will be present the Hollywood Children's Chorus of 500 voices, led by Mr. Kirchhofer, in "Christ the Lord is Risen Today."

THE Southwest Museum Morning Musicals will close the series with Frieda Hempel, soprano, April 23, in the Biltmore Ballroom, Hotel Biltmore, at 11 a. m.

PASADENA Light Opera Company will give the "Bohemian Girl," Tuesday and Wednesday, March 31 and April 1, at the High School Auditorium, Pasadena.

MRS. J. J. CARTER, president of the Hollywood Bowl Association tentatively announces that the summer plans for the bowl concerts do not include one director for the season but several, among them will be Fritz Ryner from Cincinnati, Rudolph Ganz of St. Louis, possibly Walter Damrosch; Sir Henry Wood from London, and Leopold Stokowski from Philadelphia.

CHARLES WAKEFIELD CADMAN, and Tsianina, the soprano, will return to California next month and have arranged a special program for women's clubs and schools. The program will feature Indian songs in the native tongue, also groups of songs using the idealized Indian themes for which Cadman is so well known.

AT the meeting of the directors of the Gamut Club, last month, L. E. Behymer was re-elected president; Ben Berry, vice-president, and Charles E. Pemberton, secretary. Mr. Behymer has been president for eight years, and Mr. Pemberton secretary for eighteen years.

PHILHARMONIC Auditorium, George Leslie Smith, manager, will present four weeks of light opera, beginning April 27, under the direction of Harry Carroll. The operas will be selected from the following list: Chocolate Soldier, Fortune Teller, Firefly, Naughty Marietta, Prince of Pilson, Erminie.

WALTER HENRY ROTHWELL, conductor of the Philharmonic Orchestra, has accepted the invitation to direct the Mozart Symphony at the Woman's Symphony Orchestra concert of April 14.

Announcements

PASADENA Community Players announce "The Kommunity Kaper," April 2-3-4, for members only. "Expressing Willie," by Rachel Crothers, April 13-18, for everybody, in the Community Playhouse. Coming in May, the opening of the new Pasadena Community Playhouse, now nearing completion.

THE Drama League, Pasadena Center, announces an interesting evening with William W. Ellsworth, who will talk about "Shakespeare and Old London," illustrated, Friday, May 1, at 8:15.

MRS. GEORGE BANNELL SAWYER will conclude her "Four afternoons with Great Painters," in the foyer of the ballroom at the Biltmore, Los Angeles; April 2, George Frederick Watts, and April 9, The Distinguished Artists of America.

ALINE BARRETT GREENWOOD will present her current reviews on world events, books, music, art and plays at the Shakespeare Clubhouse, Pasadena, 11:00 a. m., April 15.

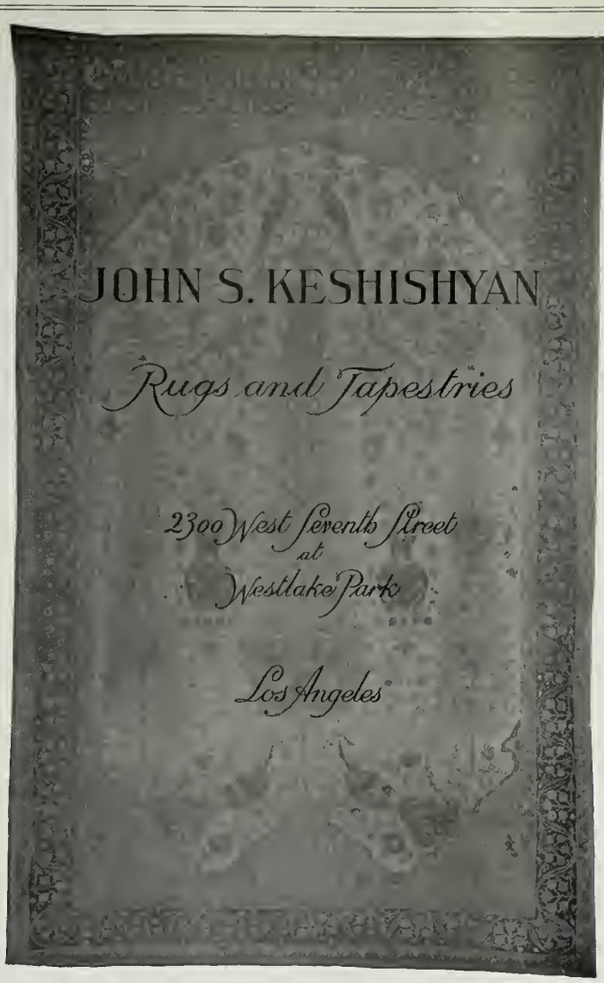
DRAMA LEAGUE members, Pasadena Center, will be offered during April a Spring course in poetry. Miss Hildegrade Flanner will lead the new poetry group.

THE Drama League of America, Francis Neilson, president, announces the Fifteenth Annual Convention of the Drama League of America and Little Theater Conference will be held in Cincinnati, Ohio, May 28, 29, and 30.

LOS ANGELES District Federation of Women's Clubs meet in convention at Santa Barbara, April 14, 15, and 16.

PET Animal Show, under the auspices of the Pasadena Humane Society, and in co-operation with the Kindness-to-Animals-Week, will be held at Tournament Park, Pasadena, April 18. Dogs, cats, ponies, monkeys, any kind of animal may be entered, and all types of birds, the only stipulation being that it must be a pet and must be well cared for. The prizes offered include silver cups, dog collars, cat baskets and lesser prizes and these will go to the pets showing the best care,—not to the best pedigreed animal.

ANNUAL Harbor Industrial Exposition will open in Long Beach, April 22.



SOROPTIMIST Club of Los Angeles presented the most brilliant program of the season the first Tuesday in March, when Mme. Tamaki Miura, the Japanese Prima Donna, for the first time in her career as an opera singer sang before an audience outside of her professional engagements. Mme. Miura gave three numbers, two being Japanese songs, one her own composition, and she also told the story of her London debut when she sang in Albert Hall, on the program with Adelina Patti.

The annual Spring Fashion Show was the last program in March, held in the Biltmore foyer and ballroom. There was a complete display of fashions for women, including negligees, all kinds of sportswear, ensembles, furs, afternoon and evening gowns, modeled in a most fascinating manner by beautiful girls.

MR. PERIN announces an exhibition of his much discussed portrait sketch by Sir Thomas Lawrence, beginning Monday, March 30, 1925, from 10 a. m. to 3:30 p. m., at The Serendipity Antique Shop, 26 and 30 South Los Robles Ave., Pasadena. Telephone Fair Oaks 7111; Bradford Perin, proprietor.

THE Trustees and Faculty of the College of the Pacific cordially invite you to be present on the occasion of the formal dedication of the buildings and the Harriet M. Smith Memorial Campus, at Stockton, California, March 30th to April 5th.

THE preliminary announcement of the Summer Session which the University of California is to conduct this year at Los Angeles shows over 200 courses arranged to interest teachers, social workers, nurses, business and professional men and women, and students. In a number of cases, departments have been enlarged by the addition of courses not offered hitherto at the Los Angeles session. This is particularly true of the foreign language department, philosophy, geography, economics and political science, art, and education.

B B Bell & Company

Lighting Fixtures
Fireplace Fittings
Lamps
Console-tables and Mirrors
Hope's Casements

2302 West Seventh Street
at
Westlake Park

Los Angeles

DISTRICT EISTEDDFODS will be held in eight or ten districts in Southern California in March and April, and the final contests in Los Angeles, May 16 to 24, 1925. A choral festival concert by the united choruses of all the districts will be one of the features of the final Eisteddfod in May. The chairmen of the various sections are: Choral committee, W. J. Kraft, of the U. of C., Southern Branch; piano, Adelaide Trowbridge Perry, of the College of Music, U. S. C.; voice committee, Mrs. Flora Myers Engel; violin committee, Davol Sanders, of the Philharmonic Orchestra; orchestra committee, J. Arthur Myers, director of the Glendale Orchestra; band committee, Arthur M. Perry, U. S. C.; drama committee, Mrs. Margaret B. Gillette, chairman; art committee, Charles F. Edson.

IN addition to a full sized copy of Michael Angelo's Moses which is now being made by Italian sculptors for early shipment from Italy for the enrichment of the art treasures of Southern California is due to arrive in April and will be followed, it is announced by Brazza's The Finding of Moses towards the end of the present year.

Santa Barbara

CAROLINE HAZARD'S water colors of California Missions, a gift to the public library about a year ago, are being shown there for the third time and, as on previous occasions, are very popular.

OSCAR COAST held a one-man show in the gallery of the Santa Barbara Art Club during last month, which included California and Arizona landscapes.

SANTA BARBARA Art Club, organized in June of last year, has about fifty active members, with many affiliated and honorary members. Three rooms in the de la Guerra Studios are rented for exhibition purposes. Officers of the club are: W. F. Kelly, president, Arthur M. Hazard, vice president, and John Gamble, secretary.

THE Spring Flower Festival of the Plans and Planting Committee of the Community Arts Association will be held in connection with the Santa Barbara Horticultural Exhibit in El Paseo de la Guerra, April 24-25-26. Professional and non-professional exhibits will be shown, together with the Children's Garden Exhibition. Prizes are being arranged for the showings. Two band concerts will be given in the City Hall Plaza, Saturday afternoon and evening of the Festival, under the direction of Arthur Bliss.

ART CLUB dates, de la Guerra Studios, are as follows: March 30-April 11—Douglas Parshall and Dan Sayre Groesbeck; April 13-April 25—William Otte; April 27-May 9—Adolph Brougier; May 11-May 23—Fernand Lungren.

Community Art Association of Santa Barbara
Calendar—April, 1925

April 3. Friday afternoon, 2 o'clock. School of Arts, 936 Santa Barbara street. Lecture by Frank Morley Fletcher. Subject: The Applied Arts—Writing and the Form of Letters. Illustrated by lantern slides. Admission by ticket, free on application to the Secretary.

April 12. Sunday afternoon, 3:30 o'clock. El Paseo. Popular Concert under direction of Arthur Bliss. Tickets 35c. and 75c. at Community Arts office, or at door.

April 16, 17, 18. Thursday, Friday and Saturday evenings, at 8:30; Saturday matinee at 2:30. Lobero Theatre. Community Art Play. "The Green Goddess," by William Archer. Mail order now. Tickets 50c., $1.00, $1.50, $2.00.

April 17. Friday afternoon, 2 o'clock. School of the Arts, 936 Santa Barbara street. Lecture by Frank Fletcher. Subject: The Applied Arts. Weaving and Pottery. Illustrated by lantern slides. Admission by ticket, free on application to the Secretary.

April 23. Thursday afternoon, 4 o'clock, 108 W. Yanonali street. Tree Planting. Children's Section of Plans and Planting Committee co-operating with Womans' Club, Horticultural Society, Garden Club, Parent-Teachers' Association and Little Gardens Club.

April 23. Thursday evening, 8:30 o'clock. Lobero Theatre. Members' Meeting. Members please secure free admission from Community Arts office by 5 o'clock April 23.

April 24, 25, 26. Saturday, Sunday. Spring Flower Festival of Planting Committee in co-operation with Horticultural Society. Band Concerts Saturday afternoon and evening, under direction of Arthur Bliss. Strolling musicians, singing and dancing by children. Admission free.

April Story Hour—Date and subject to be announced later.

Lobero Theater Offerings

April 4. Saturday evening, 8:30 o'clock. Flonzaley Quartet. Auspices of Civic Music Committee. Tickets, $1.00, $1.50, $2.00, $2.50, $3.00

April 26. Sunday afternoon, 2:30, Lobero Theater. Spanish entertainment, Mme. Real and company of dancers and singers. Mail orders now.

April 27. Monday evening, 8:30 o'clock, Lobero Theater. Spanish entertainment, Mme. Real and company of dancers and singers. Mail orders.

ALLIED ARCHITECTS ASSOCIATION OF LOS ANGELES

DESIGNERS OF

PATRIOTIC HALL

LOS ANGELES GENERAL HOSPITAL

ADDITIONS TO THE MUSEUM OF HISTORY SCIENCE AND ART

EXTERIOR DESIGN OF THE HALL OF JUSTICE

ARCHITECTURAL TREATMENT OF VIADUCTS AND BRIDGES OF THE CITY OF LOS ANGELES

ADMINISTRATION CENTER FOR THE CITY AND COUNTY OF LOS ANGELES

AN ASSOCIATION FOR FURNISHING ARCHITECTURAL SERVICE FOR PUBLIC STRUCTURES ONLY

Advertising Value

The value of a periodical as an advertising medium does not depend on the number of copies given away to tourists, nor upon the pretty pictures of any pretty girl whose photograph is for sale at a studio. To give value for value a magazine must be something more than a house organ for a group of advertisers. It must build up its clientele of readers and subscribers on the solid foundation of intrinsic worth and an indefinable influence.

California Southland employs no solicitors. It does not ask the long-suffering merchants and manufacturers of Los Angeles and its sister cities to add to their burdens by supporting more mushroom pamphlets, mendicant journalists or over-zealous outside-men employed by this city's throbbing, insatiable presses. By a careful selection of the best products obtainable for California homes and made by Californians if possible, this Home and Garden magazine offers to its discriminating thousands of paid-up subscribers and to the newcomers whose observant eyes detect its handsome covers on the newsstands—a list of the few necessary stores, shops and crafts that make possible a civilized, up-to-date home life in California. The merit of its contents is its only propaganda; for those who recognize merit become at once this magazine's staunchest supporters and friends.

Advertising Dept. California Southland.

California Southland can always be bought from the following dealers:

Gulck and Co., 173 E. Colorado St., Pasadena, Cal.

Herbert F. Brown, 190 E. Colorado St., Pasadena, Cal.

P. E. McCord and Son, 386 E. Colorado St., Pasadena, Cal.

Javis Prince and Hunter 49 E. Colorado St., Pasadena, Cal.

Fowler Brothers, 747 S. Broadway, Los Angeles, Cal.

Pacific Electric Station, 6th and Main Sts., Los Angeles, Cal.

Burns Brothers, 3920 W. 6th St., Los Angeles, Cal.

Mrs. J. P. Gilmore, 6733 Hollywood Blvd., Hollywood, Cal.

Vroman's Book Store, 329 E. Colorado St., Pasadena, Cal.

C. C. Parker Co., 520 W. 6th St., Los Angeles, Cal.

Bullock's Book Dept., 7th and Broadway, Los Angeles, Cal.

Robinson's Book Dept., 7th and Grand Ave., Los Angeles, Cal.

The Assembly Tea Room

The In and Out-of-Town House of Los Angeles serves

LUNCHEON, TEA AND DINNER

INCIDENTALLY

The Very Choicest Food

Special Sunday Dinner 5 to 8

644 South Flower St., Los Angeles

Phone VAndike 7177

PAINTINGS OF THE WEST

STENDAHL GALLERIES

OF THE PACIFIC COAST

The Ambassador Hotel—Los Angeles Hotel del Coronado—San Diego

English Road Bridle

Like Cut

$8.00

Made of selected butt stock, hook in stud, all hand sewn, square nickel buckles, caveson noseband. Gents' and Ladies' sizes. Complete with set of English Never Rust bits, including curb, bradoon, chain and hooks. With fancy patent leather front, $8.80.

The "little joe" Wiesenfeld Co.

Baltimore, Md.

Write for catalog. Special discounts to saddlery stores and riding academies.

PASADENA HOMESEEKER'S REFERENCE PAGE

DORN-SYKES CO.
REALTORS
Dependable Real Estate and Insurance Service in Pasadena for more than 22 Years.
30 So. RAYMOND AVENUE
PASADENA, CALIF.
Phone Fair Oaks 180

KATHERINE BASHFORD
LANDSCAPE ARCHITECT
810 CENTRAL BUILDING
TERRACE 9403 PASADENA

Euclid Hat Shoppe
Exclusive Line of Dress Hats
Dobb's Sports Hats
Hats for Every Occasion
472 E. Colorado St. Pasadena, Calif.
Fair Oaks 3939

Superior Rental Service
HOMES, APARTMENTS, BUNGALOWS
In Pasadena's Exclusive Sections
MRS. MORRIS (Rentals Exclusively)
THE J. W. WRIGHT CO.
312 E. COLORADO ST., PASADENA

The Mary-Isbel Shop
Nestle Lanoil Permanent Waving, Marcelling, Manicuring and Scalp Treatment.
20 South Los Robles Pasadena
Phone Fair Oaks 916
Pasadena's Most Exclusive Shop

QUALITY SERVICE
THE ELITE
DRY CLEANERS AND DYERS
Plant: 797 So. Fair Oaks Ave.
Colo. 1349 Pasadena, Cal.

Permutit Soft Water Saves Clothes
TROY LAUNDRY
In Business for Twenty Years
Pasadena, Cal. Phone C. 146
Alhambra 243-J

LAUNDERERS DRY CLEANERS
Royal Laundry Co.
461 So Raymond Colo. 67
Pasadena, Calif.

The Rose Tree Tea House
Luncheon, Afternoon Tea, Evening Dinner
CLOSED SUNDAY
ITALIAN LINENS, POTTERIES AND VARIOUS GIFTS SUITABLE FOR EASTER
ROSE TREE GIFT SHOP
167 North Orange Grove Avenue
PASADENA, CALIFORNIA
Telephone Colorado 5523

Decorating and Finishing Exclusive Furniture
W. G. Pesenecker
Interior and Exterior Painting
34 North Broadway
Phone Col. 5656 Pasadena, Calif.

OAK
BEECH
—
Furnished Scraped

H. G. BENNETT
HARDWOOD FLOORS EXCLUSIVELY
524-26 SO. RAYMOND AVE,
COLO. 178 - PASADENA, CALIF.
Estimates Cheerfully Given
Old Floors Resanded and Polished

MAPLE
BIRCH
—
Laid Finished

OHRMUND BROS.
Unit System of Heating
sets the Standard of the World
with
Superior and Distinctive Features
A Comfortable Home Must Be Properly Heated
PASADENA GAS APPLIANCE CO., INC.
901-3 East Colorado Street Fair Oaks 93

For STEAMSHIP RESERVATIONS
TO
HONOLULU, EUROPE, ALASKA, NEW YORK via PANAMA CANAL
Round the World Cruises
Agency for Thos. Cook & Son
Raymond and Whitcomb Co.
C. J. JONES STEAMSHIP AGENCY
294 East Colorado St., Pasadena
Phone Fair Oaks 8026

JAMES CINI & COMPANY
of Italy
Antique and Foreign Jewelry
Italian and French Novelties
390 E. Walnut St. Pasadena, Calif.
Fair Oaks 5583

J. R. BRAGDON & CO.
Real Estate and Insurance
15 So. Raymond Ave., Pasadena

Alice Coleman Batchelder
Pianist
Presents the 1924-1925
Series of Eight
Coleman Chamber Concerts
In the Music Auditorium of The Pasadena Institute of Technology
Tickets on sale at
Gulck's Stationery Store
173 E. Colorado St. F. O. 39
Hunter-Williams
49 E. Colorado St. C. 695

WE offer for investment of Personal or Trust Funds sound Securities returning highest rates consistent with safety.
WILLIAM R. STAATS COMPANY
Established 1887
Government, Municipal and Corporation Bonds
311 East Colorado St.
PASADENA, CALIF.
Los Angeles San Diego San Francisco

An Ideal School for Young Women
Cumnock School
COLLEGE WORK IN THE FOLLOWING COURSES:
Vocal Interpretation of Literature
Literary Appreciation — Voice and Diction — Short-Story
Public Speaking — French — Dancing
Dramatics — Story Telling — Psychology
Journalism
Art and Art Appreciation
An accredited High School and Junior School under same management
HELEN A. BROOKS, Director
5353 West Third Street Los Angeles
GRanit 3253 —TELEPHONES— GRanit 3353

MT. LOWE RESORT
America's Greatest Mountain Scenic Trolley Trip

5 TRAINS DAILY from MAIN ST. STATION
8.9.10 A.M. 1.30.4 P.M.
Round Trip Fare $2.50
For Literature and Information Address

A Most Delightful Journey.
Supplemented by Refreshment, Comfort and Ease at
Mt. Lowe Tavern
The Beautiful Mountain Inn.
An Ideal Vacation Place for a Day, Week or Month Where One May Enjoy Rest and Recreation
Hiking-Riding-Dancing-Tennis
and other amusements

PACIFIC ELECTRIC RAILWAY
O·A·SMITH Passenger Traffic Manager
LOS ANGELES

HOTEL GREEN
A well ordered Residential and Tourist Hotel of peculiar excellence. Open all year. Moderate rates. Apartments by the month.
The Green Tea Pot Reopened October 15
CHARLES B. HERVEY, Proprietor

The Biltmore Salon
Los Angeles Biltmore
PAINTINGS
ETCHINGS
BRONZES

California Southland

M. URMY SEARES - - - - - Editor and Publisher
ELLEN LEECH - - - - - - - Managing Editor

NO. 64, VOL. VII. APRIL, 1925

CONTENTS

	PAGE
IN RED ROCK CANYON, CALIFORNIA.....Cover Design (From a Watercolor by Bessie Ella Hazen)
SOUTHLAND CALENDAR.....Ellen Leech	3, 4, 5
FLINTRIDGE AND PASADENA RIDING TRAILS	9
BIRDS IN APRIL.....Theresa Homet Patterson	12
RECENT BOOKS—REVIEWS.....Louise Morgrage	13
THE WORK OF THE COMMUNITY ARTS ASSOCIATION	14-15
A NEW YORK LETTER.....S. Bartley Cannell	16
THE REDWOODS.....Woodbridge Metcalf	17
SOUTHLAND OPINION	18-19
AUSTRALIA.....Claude Simson	18
EXTRACTS FROM A PAPER BY DR. GEORGE DOCK	19
WOOFEL BIRDS HUNT IVORY EGGS.....Claude G. Putnam	20
A PAGE OF HORSES BY THE CHATEAU STUDIOS	21
ARTS AND CRAFTS SOCIETY.....Mary Hugus Clark	21
BULLETIN OF THE LOS ANGELES CHAPTER, A. I. A.	22
GRACE NICHOLSON'S CHINESE TREASURE HOUSE (Marston, Van Pelt and Maybury, Architects—Clarence P Day Corporation, Constructors)	23, 24-25
THE LANDSCAPE WORK OF STUART CHISHOLM	26
BULLETIN OF THE ARCHITECTURAL CLUB	27
THE NEW BUILDING, LOS ANGELES GAS COMPANY	28
A PORTRAIT BUST BY MAUD DAGGETT	31
BULLETIN OF THE ASSISTANCE LEAGUE	33
UP THE VALLEY AND DOWN THE COAST, HOTELS AND CAMPS	34

Official Organ of the Architectural Club of Los Angeles, California
Official Organ of the ASSISTANCE LEAGUE of SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA,
Presents the interests of The Community Arts Association of Santa Barbara, and is sent East by many of its eighteen hundred members.

CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND is published monthly at Pasadena, Cal.
Copyrighted, 1924, by M. Urmy Seares
Advertising: CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND, Pasadena, Col. 916. Los Angeles, MEtropolitan 5270. Subscription price for 1925, $2.50 per year.

J. W. Robinson Co.

BOOKS

ROBINSON'S remarkable collection of Rare Books, bound in England, merits attention from the erudite. It covers a wide range of subjects—and includes bindings of such beauty as to make them art treasures of unusual value.

Many new ones, selected in the Rare Book Shops of London, are now being bound and will be received within a short time.

FIRST FLOOR

Kievits Galleries
Vista del Arroyo Hotel
PASADENA
Huntington Hotel
Tableaux Modernes
américain, européen
Objets d'Art exclusifs

Marshall Laird
Authentic Reproductions of Fine Furniture
2861 West Seventh Street
Los Angeles
California
Phone DUnkirk 6015

SUMMER SCHOOL

Word has just come to the local office of the State University Summer Session that Arthur Shepherd, Assistant Conductor of the Cleveland Symphony Orchestra, Cleveland, Ohio, has accepted an invitation to become a member of the faculty at the Summer Session to be held at the Southern Branch from June 27 to August 8.

Information about the varied courses to be given under thirty departments of the University of California in Los Angeles this summer may be obtained upon application to the down town offices, 815 Hillstreet Bldg., Los Angeles, which is open daily.

IMPORTANT NOTICE
Cultured young woman desires position as traveling companion to young girl or older woman planning European trip. References exchanged. Address—Traveling Companion, California Southland, Pasadena, Calif.

NOTARY PUBLIC
METROPOLITAN 5270

MISS MARJORIE FYFE
MISS ELLA GILBERT

PUBLIC STENOGRAPHERS

MULTIGRAPHING
AND MIMEOGRAPHING

929 LOEW'S STATE BLDG.
LOS ANGELES

CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND
AN ILLUSTRATED MAGAZINE OF NATIONAL INTEREST

OVER THE HILLS AND FAR AWAY TO LOITERLAND

Income tax, budget, consignment, and bills
We forfeit them all—and away to the hills.

By ELIZABETH ST. JOHN WHITING

IN the little old city hall of Pasadena there is hung a new map, and it shows not only the extensive plans for the center of the city, but in green ink around its outer edge runs an undulating strip of new Park land. This green printed strip is widest in the northwest section where the Arroyo opens out into a great playground, and Flintridge comes down from its heights to skirt the edge of town. Here, in Pasadena's great natural park-way, the Arroyo Seco lands are now being prepared for all the outdoor life which civilization loses in its first pioneer stage. Beyond the civic golf-links and swimming pool, Flintridge has without doubt set the pace in that return to the finest form of real Californian life which the inrush of homeseekers, the building of civic centers, the providing of food, water and clothing for the multitude, and our duties as host to a torrent of tourists have combined to submerge in the daily round of a work-a-day world.

Lost sight of in the pioneering and preparation for living, the true function of California as a place of abode finds its best illustration in the sequestered homes which face the green border around Pasadena's busy shopping center.

Paved streets, concrete sidewalks, tall office buildings, have preempted the center of town and driven the residence district farther and farther out into the pleasant fields and orchards to the east and south, and lead now to the development of that delightful hill country beyond the Arroyo to the west. Meanwhile, that wise forethought which held the best minds of the community steadily fixed on a green border around Pasadena, has now attained realization on the Arroyo Seco side, and the life of the people who know how to live begins to flow through the green park way. On motor trips up the Arroyo into the mountains and around the sports center of Brookside Park and the Stadium built by the Tournament Associa-

PART OF THE GREEN STRIP SURROUNDING PASADENA. FLINTRIDGE, WITH ITS NEW BRIDLE TRAILS AND ROADS

SOME HOW-DO-YOU-DO'S AND GOOD BYE'S

By THERESA HOMET PATTERSON

A GOOD BREAKFAST NOOK FOR RUBY-CROWNS AND THE CHATTERING BUSH TITS

When earth was finished and fashioned well,
There was never a musical note to tell
How glad God was, save the voice of the rain
And the sea and the wind on the lovely plain
And the rivers among the hills.
And so God made the marvelous birds
For a choir of joy transeending words,
That the world might hear and comprehend
How rhythm and harmony can mend
The spirits' hurts and ills.
—From "The Choristers" by Bliss Carmen.

APRIL mornings are so precious; every one of them holds a thrill. It is the month of warblers, those rain bow colors set to perpetual motion. Some are coming, some are going and some just stopping over. The Audubon Warbler will give you the greatest thrill and he has been here all winter. He has come out in Spring feather, in a style approached only by the Myrtle. Where did he stay when these new clothes were being made? You will not know him. I took him to be a perfect stranger and got out my bird books to prove it. I did the same last year. In the Spring a bird's fancy does not turn lightly to love but is transformed by it. Watch the rose hedges. Watch the willows and the ground and the sky! and listen. One can not afford to talk much lest he miss the love lyrics which fill the air these mornings.

The Ruby-crowned Kinglet has set March to music but we have to say good-bye to him right now. His song is one of ecstacy so high pitched that one has to be near to hear all of it, and doubtless it is for that reason that so few know it. The uplift and gladness of spring is in that song and whenever I hear it there's always something sings in me. The quality of the tone is so rare that once it is identified there is no mistaking it. I attributed the song to the Warbling Vireo when I first heard it in the East. One morning he came singing into the dewey bushes before me and showed me his ruby crown. That settled it. He keeps his jewel covered much of the time, but the sight of it never fails to thrill me. One morning after making war on the scale in the pepper tree a Kinglet flew into the grape fruit tree where he hovered over one of its golden balls like a humming bird, showing his ruby and singing with such sweetness, such ecstacy! He has all the virtues of fine voice, fine feathers, graceful manner and useful life. He is always busy destroying insects (for his stomach's sake is admitted.) May all the Kinglets have a pleasant summer in the high Sierras and bring the children safely home with them in September.

The Mocking bird does not migrate. He likes Southern California for the year around and disappears only for moulting or some short trips. The absence of my Mocker up to January fifteenth was cause for alarm. For many years he has staged his dramatic concerts and interpretative dancing on a certain telephone pole. I was away for some weeks and returned full of fear that I would not find my old friend, but the very first morning with the rising of the sun he mounted the cross-piece, and then with one jubilant outburst of song took his old position on top of the pole. On Friday, March the thirteenth, he began tossing himself and his song in air; then dancing over the cross-piece all without taking breath. With Scrouge he was "light as a feather, happy as an angel."

The following morning his singing was more jubilant and rapturous as he shuttled from pole to cypress hedge scarcely pausing at either point. His excitement was fascinating. Ah! A lady Mocker flew into the hedge. Her eye was shy, her body motionless. My Mocker perched modestly near her and sang his whole repertoire. Then he sang great circles of joy round and round her. Still singing, he came with a straw in his mouth and presented it to her. Did he bring it as sort of a cornerstone for the home he hoped she would share? I think it was his way of telling her how he would love her and help her in building. It was a drama in real life and tragic too, for another Mocker dashed in and my Mocker was left songless over the suddenness of the Lady's departure.

We have had a regular Robin fest this winter. They swooped down on Pasadena early in the fall and made themselves perfectly at home. Carmelita was headquarters where they used the tips of the tallest trees for lookouts, or receiving stations by which they could keep in touch with Robin-World. Any way they refuted the statement so often made that Robins here are not friendly like Eastern ones. There wasn't a lawn in Pasadena that they did not visit individually or in companies. And as for bird baths they filled them so full there was no room to spatter. With heads cocked on one side, they listened for worms, and it is a crack-shot who can hit his game without seeing it. It has been a happy sight seeing our dear Robin-red-breasts eating and bathing at our doors in such friendly fashion and singing with all the sweetness, if not the volume of the Eastern ones. I watched one in the top of an oak, his breast illumed by the sunlight, as his song sweet and liquid flowed like a benediction on the day. Then he chuckled, chirped with one high note and three lower ones, much as they do when coaxing the young ones from the nest, and finally he gave one hilarious scream and was off. Any one needs to have lived in the East to appreciate the Robin where he comes up as spring's advance agent. He is a prophesy. He is something of a prophet here if you can interpret his rain song and the movements of his tribe.

HORSE AND RIDER LISTEN TO A MORNING CONCERT. COULD THAT BE A ROBIN?

WHERE THE YELLOW WARBLER SWINGS HIS CRADLE "AND TUNES HIS MERRY THROAT."

After being deluged all winter with Robins it seemed impossible that any one could ask if we have them here or make the bold statement that we have not. Each has happened. One lady telephoned "My lawn is covered with birds which look like Robins. Could they be Robins?" They have liked us so well this year that some may try an all-year residence. But they will probably go on thinking they can't breathe after the middle of April at less than 5000 feet. They nest as far south as the San Bernardino range. It is hard to break one of nature's habits.

If birds are to save themselves these radio days, they will have to develop a wire sense. I found two Waxwings victims of a new aerial. Looking at them I knew with Hudson that of all living things, birds were made most beautiful.

I saw a cherokee rose bobbing in the hedge where there was no wind. In the shadow of the foliage I spied a Gambel Sparrow eating the petals—fancying it sort of a pink lettuce and having as much difficulty as some humans do with salad. These White-crowns sing with all the contentment of a babbling brook. Beside color and perfume and song, our hedge has two secrets. The Towhees are keeping one and the Song Sparrow the other and they will stay with their secrets, but the White-crowns are singing "Good-bye."

Even before this goes to press a P. S. must be added. The secret is out, in the hedge the babies have spread their wings. I don't know whether providing for a family has worn on father, or whether he thinks silence is golden after hearing the continuous performance of a radio in the neighborhood, but he is mute.

Birds Arriving—Black-Chinned Hummer, Costa Hummer, Rufous Hummer, Texas Night Hawk, Ash-Throated Flycatcher, Bullock's Oriole, Arizona Hooded Oriole, Black-headed Grosbeak, Western Blue Grosbeak, Lazuli Bunting, Western Martin, Rough-winged Swallow, Phainopepla, Western Warbling Vireo, Least Vireo, California Yellow Warbler, Long-tailed Chat, Russet-backed Thrush.

Migrants, Those Who Just Stop Over—Dusky Poor Will, Vaugh Swift, Calliope Humming Bird, Olive-sided Flycatcher, Western Wood Pewee, Western Flycatcher, Trail Flycatcher; (May 1) Brewer Sparrow, Black-Chinned Sparrow, Barn Swallow, Cassin Vireo, Calaveras Warbler, Black-throated Gray Warbler, Townsend Warbler, Hermit Warbler, Macgillivary, Golden Pileolated.

Departing—Western Vesper Sparrow, Oregon Vesper Sparrow, Western Savanna Sparrow, Gambel Sparrow (White crown); Golden-crown Sparrow, Western Chipping Sparrow, Lincoln Sparrow; (May) Thurber Junco, Desert Sparrow, Dusky Warbler, Audubon Warbler, Pilpit, Ruby-crowned Kinglet, Hermit Thrush (May), Robin.

RECENT BOOKS—REVIEWS

By LOUISE MORGRAGE

LATER POEMS

by BLISS CARMAN.
SMALL MAYNARD AND COMPANY.

In our present world of free verse, distracted politics, futuristic art, liberal standards, communistic and socialistic doctrines, this volume of poems comes as a voice from the quiet and peaceful past. Like the flowers in an old fashioned garden, the verses seem to cast a delicate perfume upon the passing breezes. They remind us of pastel shades in colors. A poet writes because he must and he has accomplished a part of the mission thrust upon him by an inscrutable Providence, if through his poetry, he awakes in the reader's mind vague inexplicable longings, or stirs up memories, often sad, it is true, but still "dear as remembered kisses after death." In many of his poems Mr. Carman has attained this ideal. He has an unusual gift for interpreting nature's moods and shows himself strongly influenced by that mysticism, which is the very essence of the poet's art. Occasionally, in certain poems, occurs a slight roughness, interrupting a stately marching cadence, just as we find ourselves swinging along to its rhythm. Perhaps this enhances all the more, the sheer loveliness of lyrics, such as those on the seasons, and spring in particular. Altogether we admire these verses so much, that we may well look forward to the poems promised us by Mr. Carman, since we know they will be inspired by the natural beauties of California.

BLISS CARMAN, AT HIS DESERT RETREAT, WHERE HE IS PREPARING A NEW VOLUME OF POEMS

A YEAR OF PROPHESYING,

by H. G. WELLS. THE MACMILLAN COMPANY.

Up to the present time, Wells has to his credit, nineteen novels, fourteen fantastic and romantic tales, four books of short stories, and twelve books on questions of the day including the famous history. Readers of any one, or several or all of these, know what to anticipate when a new work by him is announced. Most fortunately they do not expect graces of style, else they would be doomed to disappointment. Invigorating and radical opinions, surprising and startling parallels, astonishing and bold personalities; all these however they look forward to finding, and in this latest volume their expectations will be realized to the fullest extent. Never has Wells been more enlivening. He is passionately concerned with the relations between men and governments, and individual conduct, and within the range of these subjects has discovered many phases. Could Terence have projected his vision two thousand years into the future, he surely would have had H. G. Wells in mind when he wrote that famous line: "Homo sum; humani nihil a me alienum puto."

"A Year of Prophesying" deals almost entirely with European affairs. Wells is out of all patience with a world gone wrong. He scolds and denounces, and he has no hesitation about mentioning the names of those he considers culpably responsible for these distracting conditions. But he is not the man to be content with uttering platitudes; in uncovering all the sore spots of Europe, he is ready to apply in every case, his own particular brand of healing ointment, in the shape of suggestions, which if followed would bring drastic changes in European life. Among other things, he would abolish tariffs, passports, small nations, Parliaments, the classics and kings, although he goes easy with kings. Having upset nearly every human institution, he is convinced he could bring the millenium to a suffering world.

Doubtless many of his readers will entertain a sense of injury at the sight of this juggler tossing their pet theories up in the air like so many colored balls. But they may receive compensation and forget their own annoyance in the amusement derived from viewing the feats he performs with the other fellow's theories. And he is never vituperative, nor does he violate the rules of good taste in his personal remarks. At least we see it that way; however we are not Mr. Winston Churchill.

H. G. WELLS. PHOTOGRAPH BY G. C. BERESFORD

TALES OF HEARSAY

by JOSEPH CONRAD. DOUBLEDAY PAGE & COMPANY.

Without doubt many persons at Conrad's death had read every book he had published, and were sorrowful because there would be no more. For these especially welcome will be this short volume of four stories, issued posthumously, under a title previously chosen by him and indicating the form of presentation, a favorite one with Conrad. Since the first tale dates from '84, and the last was written just before his death, we might naturally anticipate a marked difference in style between the two, as well as a gradual development in the two intervening, of that distinctive manner which he has made so famous. On the contrary there is no evidence of it; each narrative is a polished gem of style and thought, and in all alike appear the same possibilities for discovering new and unsuspected qualities upon re-reading. A sincere admirer, R. B. Cunningham-Graham in the preface has paid Conrad an appreciative tribute, phrased so gracefully that it has a value all its own, and does credit to the work to which it is the introduction.

A STUDY OF MODERN DRAMA

by BARRETT H. CLARK.
D. APPLETON & CO.

The publishers describe this as a "Handbook for the study and appreciation of the best plays of the last half century European, English, and American." Within certain limits, it is comprehensive and should prove of value to students of the drama, or those desiring a good reference book on the subject. Representative and well established playwrights in each country of Europe and in America, have been selected for discussion, with an analysis of the most important plays written by each one. There are short biographical sketches, lists of plays, of editions, and of reference books in every case. At the end the most helpful books on the subject, which have been written in English, are listed and there is a complete index. The author has written many books hitherto on the subject of the stage and his studious observations enable him to speak with authority.

OLD ENGLISH

by JOHN GALSWORTHY. CHARLES SCRIBNER'S SONS.

This is a perfect jewel in the way of dramatic achievement. Mere talent may accomplish much with youthful characterizations; genius alone is able to select tottering old age as a focus upon which to direct the rays shed by the warmth of human sympathy. This is what Galsworthy has done with his masterly conception of an aged man, who up to his very last breath, plays the part of a Louis XIV in his own niche of our modern world. The play is written in the inimitable Galsworthy style, apparently so easy and simple, but fraught with meaning deep as ocean's farthest floor. Each line contributes its individual quota to the revelation of the speaker's character as a whole, which in turn takes its subordinating place with reference to the superb protagonist.

We may consider ourselves most fortunate that the drama has been published for us to read, since its production on the stage in New York, has given rise to a diversity of opinions as to its quality. For the reader there can be no question about it; the play should take a place among the brilliant examples of dramatic literature.

HURRICANE

by OLGA PETROVA, THE FOUR SEAS COMPANY.

The authoress of this play undoubtedly has talent; but she is not a successful dramatist, because she is first of all a reformer. No reformer can make good plays, unless we except a genius like Ibsen. Apparently not the feeling for artistic craftsmanship and development, but only the thought of the message she is burning to deliver, has been the impelling motive for Petrova in writing the drama, "Hurricane." This is the reason as we read, we are merely interested, without being further impressed or convinced.

THOMAS THE IMPOSTER

by JEAN COCTEAU, D. APPLETON AND COMPANY

This book reminds us of Carlyle's French Revolution, not so much because of a similarity of style, but because some knowledge of French characteristics is essential for a better comprehension of the story. The narrative proceeds with a series of flashlights, as it were, presenting to the reader who has a sufficiently quick and receptive mind, some very illuminating scenes. Always in these, the light hovers about the figure of the hero, youthful, naive, very unmoral, but delightfully human. Lewis Galantiere, in translating this adroit and artistic bit from the French, has retained the original flavor most successfully, so that we feel its atmosphere.

The flashlights, we might mention incidentally give some remarkable photographs of scenes in France, during the war. Altogether this is a book of such distinctive quality, that we do not hesitate to recommend it most enthusiastically to the discriminating readers, who do not wish to waste precious time over worthless stuff.

THE INTERESTING WORK OF THE COMMUNITY

A PORTRAIT BY FRANK MORLEY FLETCHER.

THE Santa Barbara Art Club is a youthful but flourishing institution which has yet to reach its first anniversary. On June ninth of last year a group of men representing the various pictorial crafts met to consider the matter of affiliating for the promotion of Art in Santa Barbara. This was the genesis of the present Art Club, whose object is to give artists a chance to show their work, to form a link between artists and art lovers, and to further the development of pictorial art as a personal and civic resopnsibility. The Club has about fifty Active members as well as many Affiliated and Honorary members and its ranks are constantly increasing.

In July three rooms were rented in the de la Guerra studios for exhibition purposes. Members' exhibits, non-members' showings, and the work of individual members have filled the calendar of the year to date. The members' winter exhibition comprised thirty-four paintings, including portraits, landscapes and figures in oils, pastels and water colors.

Special exhibits of the work of Arthur Hazard, Cleveland Coxe, Edward Borein, Thomas Moran, John Gamble, Clarence Matei, Colin Campbell Cooper, Douglas Parshall and Oscar Coast have been held. Two weeks showings of the work of the following are scheduled for the spring: Dan Sayre Groesbeck, William Otte, Adolph Brougier, Fernand Lungren, Carl Borg, and E. T. Jewett. Officers of the Club are W. F. Kelly, President, Arthur M. Hazard, Vice President, and John Gamble, Secretary.

Represented on this page is the work of several of the most eminent of the Santa Barbara group who are also prominently connected with the School of the Arts.

The Spring Flower Festival of the Planting Committee of the Community Arts Association will be held this year in connection with the Santa Barbara Horticultural Exhibit to take place in El Paseo de la Guerra on April 24, 25 and 26. Professional and non-professional exhibits will be shown, together with the children's Garden Exhibition which each year attracts widespread interest. Prizes are being arranged for the showings and it is expected that the cooperation of these two organizations will result in a flower spectacle of unusual beauty. The Music Branch of the Community Arts Association will also cooperate with the committee by two band concerts to be given in City Hall Plaza. These will take place on the Saturday afternoon and evening of the Festival under the direction of Arthur Bliss. Strolling musicians will play in the patio of the de la Guerra studios, and there will be singing and dancing by groups of children.

On April 23 at 4 P. M., a Tree Planting ceremony will take place at 108 W. Yanonali Street, on the grounds of the Demonstration House which is being erected by the Better Homes Committee of Santa Barbara for exhibition during the National Better Homes Week, May 11-17. The ceremony will be an expression of interest in small home gardens. Organizations cooperating in the Planting are the Children's Garden Section, Plans and Planting Committee of the Community Arts Association, Woman's Club, Garden Club, Horticultural Society, and Little Gardens Club.

CATHEDRAL AT SEGOVIA, SPAIN, BY COLIN CAMPBELL COOPER, INSTRUCTOR IN LANDSCAPE PAINTING AT THE SCHOOL OF THE ARTS, COMMUNITY ARTS ASSOCIATION.

A book which has come to the library of the Plans and Planting Committee is of unusual interest to all who are interseted in city building. It is Lewis Mumford's "Sticks and Stones", published by Boni and Liveright, New York.

Mr. Mumford begins his history of American architecture with the time "when good building was almost universal." He strikes a brave, clear note when he speaks of our Colonial ancestors as prolonging for a little while the crumbling traditions of the dignified community life of the medieval village, whose architectural remains we are now sending our young architects to Europe to copy.

Later in his chronological review, the author dwells upon the effect of our World's Fair upon our architecture and says: "It seemed for a while as if the architect might take the place of the engineer as city planner, and that the mangled regularity of the engineer's gridiron plan, laid down without respect to topographic advantage or to use, might be definitely supplanted in the remodeled central districts and in the new extensions and suburbs of the American city."

"MOUNTAIN LAKE" BY FERNAND LUNGREN, CHAIRMAN OF SCHOOL COMMITTEE, SCHOOL OF THE ARTS.

CORNER OF EXHIBITION OF OSCAR COAST'S PAINTINGS HELD AT ART CLUB, SANTA BARBARA, MARCH 16-23.

ARTS ASSOCIATION SANTA BARBARA

AN event which merits an asterisk in the Community Arts calendar was the concert of original compositions given by two Santa Barbara composers in the Lobero theatre on the afternoon of March 3. This was a special performance of Chamber Music works written by Henry Eichheim and Arthur Bliss and played by solo artists from the Los Angeles Philharmonic Orchestra. Henry Eichheim is an American violinist and composer who has made his home in Santa Barbara for several years. He is well known in Eastern musical circles as he was for twenty-five years first violin of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and his compositions have been played by the leading symphony orchestras in the East as well as in London. Mr. Eichheim contributed to the afternoon program his Quartet for Stringed Instruments, written in 1895, and his "Malay Mosaic," just recently completed. The former has had many hearings in the East, and is full of rich and reminiscent passages of a singular beauty. It was delightfully played by the Los Angeles Quartet.

HENRY EICKHEIM, AMERICAN COMPOSER.

The "Malay Mosaic" is a composite of Burmese, Javanese and Hindu motives which Mr. Eichheim discovered and developed during his frequent trips to the orient. The work displays a most interesting harmonic play and interplay of themes. The sad, exotic and strange colors of the orient are merged into a composition of a thousand lights and shades. It is interesting to hear that the "Malay Mosaic" had its New York premiere two days previous to the first hearing in Santa Barbara. It was there played at the International Composers' Guild by the Philadelphia ensemble under the baton of Stokowski.

VAN DER VOORT ENSEMBLE, SCHOOL OF ARTS. LEFT TO RIGHT MARGARET ELLISON, ANTONI VAN DER VOORT, MARGARET NEAL, ANNE WALDRON, VIOLINS; FRANK FISCHER, VIOLA, HARRY KAPLUN, CELLO.

The contribution of Arthur Bliss to the program was a little suite of musical sketches called "Conversations." This young English composer has won a name for himself in England and America by the brilliancy and originality of his orchestral compositions, among which are "Melee Fantasque," "Colour Symphony and Piano Concerto." He was at one time Professor of Music and Conducting at the Royal College of London, and has led his compositions with the most eminent English and American orchestras. He recently conducted the Los Angeles Philharmonic Orchestra in the performance of "Melee Fantasque," which was given both in Los Angeles and Santa Barbara. Mr. Bliss is director of the Music Branch of the Community Arts Association.

The group of short pictorial pieces entitled "Conversations" contains "Committee Meeting," "In the Wood," "In the Ballroom," "Soliloquy" and "Subway at Times Square." These were originally written to fill in a quarter of an hour of witty conversation at a smart London reception. Everything from the brain of Mr. Bliss has a sparkle, a rush and a quick flare of color. "Conversations" are no exception. They are brisk and brilliant with imagery, full of vigor and originality. The first note is like a fuse which touches off the themes and they spurt, whiz and flash to a rocket-like finish.

The following players from the Los Angeles Philharmonic Orchestra interpreted the music: Violins, Sylvain Noask, Henry Svedrofsky, Morris Stoloff; Viola, Emile Ferir; Cello, Ilya Bronson; Bass, Ernest Huber; Flutes, Andre Maquarre, Jay Plowe; Oboes, Henry De Busscher; Cor-Anglais, O. W. Hoffman; Harp, Alfred Kastner. Ethel Roe Eichheim played the piano score for the "Malay Mosaic" with Henry Eichheim conducting.

An Extract from

Progress for the Provinces

By WALTER PRITCHARD EATON

in McNaught's Monthly

In August, a long distance from Broadway, a theatre was opened, and a production made which excited no comment from the New York press, but which were possibly of great significance in the history of our stage. The theatre was the old Lobero Theatre in Santa Barbara, rebuilt and restored in the Spanish mission style, with a stage mechanically equipped in every modern detail, and owned by the people of Santa Barbara, through their Community Arts Association. The play, mounted and acted by the amateurs of the city, was Beggar on Horseback, which was still a success on Broadway. Nor was this a mere single performance. The play ran for two weeks to crowded houses. It was offered to the people of the city, not as an amateur stunt, but as regular theatrical entertainment. For the first time, something approximating simultaneous production has been achieved in America.

RUDOLPH FRITSCH AND HIS VIOLIN CLASS AT THE SCHOOL OF THE ARTS. A VITAL PART OF THE COMMUNITY ARTS ASSOCIATION.

ARTHUR BLISS, MUSIC DIRECTOR OF COMMUNITY ARTS ASSOCIATION, GIVING A LESSON TO HELEN GOODFIELD, YOUNG PIANO TEACHER AT SCHOOL

THE SECOND INSTALMENT OF OUR NEW YORK LETTER

By S. BARTLEY CANNELL

A PAINTING BY RICHARD MILLER, PAINTED IN THE GARDEN OF DR. AND MRS. ADELBERT FENYES, PASADENA.

AN APPRECIATION PUBLISHED FOR AN EXHIBITION AT THE CASSON GALLERIES, N. Y.

IT was in a miscellaneous exhibition of paintings by New York artists, held at the Boston Art Club, in the winter following the Armistice, that the writer first saw a Chauncey Ryder landscape. It made an unforgettable impression upon him. The canvas was not large in comparison to some on the walls, yet in bigness of conception, in truth and in sheer beauty there was not one to compare with it. There was nothing unusual about the scene. A wide road led from the foreground to a small white farm-house nestled among the trees in the middle distance, and finally was lost to view in the foliage beyond. A grey, fathomless sky cast an even light from above. It seemed extraordinary that a motif so commonplace in itself should yield such an abundance of poetic suggestion.

For motifs Mr. Ryder has not far to go. Surrounded on every side by mountainous hills, green valleys, verdant pastureland, brooks, ponds, trees, woodland paths and all that makes up nature as found in New England, it is these he has painted. In the full development of his maturer power he has put into his pictures the result of forty years of study and observation. His process has been from realism to poetry. It is of the actual scene that he has given us. Yet it is more, since you perceive it colored and transformed into something that is of the artist himself. Breadth of treatment his paintings have; call it impressionism if you like, but impressionism carried only to a logical conclusion. Twachtman, in a few of his later landscapes, carried his style to such an end that they became unintelligible, beautiful though the result. Mr. Ryder, on the other hand, has held on to the balance wheel. He has sensed the right proportion between the real and the unreal, between detail and vagueness. Noticeable in all his paintings is the simplicity and balance of his composition—a harmony of colors in which there is no disturbing note—a delicate adjustment of strength and tenderness.

As Mr. Ryder's subjects are varied so is his treatment never quite the same; still there are certain general features of his pictures that occur sufficiently often for the layman to recognize a Ryder at a glance. The so-called Ryder green the writer has mentioned, and that is often enhanced by a no less lovely sky of a peculiar white-grey toality. In composing a picture the artist has a fondness for the vertical line in opposition to low horizontal mass. These verticals take the shape of exquisitely painted trees not quite bare of foliage. These straggly clusters of foliage are painted as a flat tone and form a pattern against the sky, and when the trees are located in the distance, are only a shade darker in value. The trunks and limbs are noticeable by a judicious accent. The whole effect is to give to the tree forms an airy lightness, a gossamer-like quality that stimulates the imagination.

It was at the suggestion of Bolton Brown, the New York lithographer, that Mr. Ryder was induced to take up lithography. He had seen several of Mr. Ryder's pencil landscape motifs hung in the National Academy show and immediately recognized their importance. He urged Mr. Ryder to redraw them on stone, so that his work might have a wider acquaintance, and the artist consented. The drawings are made solely from a painter's standpoint, not intended to be anything but a working model for his large oil landscapes, but they are nevertheless sufficient in themselves.

The treatment of his lithograps is similar to that of his pencil drawings—very broad strokes painted rather than drawn. The faculty of putting, in even as small a surface as 5 inches by 7 inches, a scene that contains all the elements of a great picture is amazingly rendered. Instead of seeing an actual drawing of trees, mountains, etc., you get the visual impression that they are there. The technique of his drawings is the last thing you will observe or ponder on. His skill lies not in the dexterity of his crayon or pencil stroke, but in the representation of nature through such means. Further, it lies in the qualities of delicate suggestion of spaciousness, of subtle mystery of imagination, and in the finer, truer phases of nature found in his work.

—S. C. W.

A FEW days ago I had the pleasure of an hour's visit with MacMonnies. Not MacMonnies in his old studio, surrounded by hundreds of casts and numerous figures in all states of completion or just starts, as the case may be, but MacMonnies in a new studio, evidently made of an old stable. Just the four brick walls, with especially built roof of glass, and in that one group fourteen feet high, probably three-quarters completed, representing three continuous years of work. Think of it. Not another thing has that great sculptor done during that time but his work on that group. One of his brother sculptors told me a few days ago that he was doing it as a matter of love and affection for France, and of his country, Old France. Whatever the reason, which after all does not concern us, he has produced another world's masterpiece. It is stupendous; and when completed, which I believe is to be next June—it will be taken to Paris by himself, and there, under his own supervision, the final great statue, fifty feet high, is to be cut out of stone. The subject of the group is to represent America's appreciation and feeling for the suffering of France and her people during the late war and particularly the great battle of the Marne. This statue is to be given by the people of the United States—public subscription for which has already been completed—in memory also of that great gift which France made to us of Bartholdi's Statue of Liberty.

I must not forget another fine sculptor, some of whose work I am going to have the good fortune to show in both Pasadena and Los Angeles galleries. I am speaking of Edith Parsons. You will remember her, I know, or at least her work—the famous duck babies which created such a stir at the Panama-Pacific Exposition in San Francisco in 1915.

A PAINTING BY GUY ROSE, PASADENA. THIS MODEL POSED FOR "SEPTEMBER MORN" IN HER EARLIER YOUTH AND WAS A FAVORITE MODEL IN PARIS. MR. ROSE IS ONE OF THE FEW SOUTHLAND PAINTERS WHO HAVE MASTERED THE HUMAN FIGURE.

alone as she has done many things equally as fine, and in this part of the country equally as well known. Her work will, I feel sure, be greatly enjoyed by lovers of sculpture in our city.

I have just come from a visit to my old friend Chauncey F. Ryder and I am going to enclose for you a little booklet about him which was written as an appreciation of this great painter's work. Really as a foreword to his first one-man exhibition to be held in Boston. Think of it—this great painter's work is in such demand that he has never found it possible to give a one-man exhibition in the "Hub of America" before. Although we in Los Angeles have had two fine exhibitions of his work both in our galleries. You see, I am taking a little flattery to myself, and to add to this I want to tell you that he could not even then supply enough pictures for the Boston show without calling on his New York dealer for the majority of them. I think I am somewhat to blame for that, as he had agreed a year ago to save enough of his late things to allow us to make another exhibition in Los Angeles, and he would not let them have the pictures which were mine. They are now on the way to California and you are going to have a treat when you see them, as they truly represent some of his greatest and latest work. His brother painters consider him one of the very finest if not the finest of the living landscape painters.

The Metropolitan Museum has just finished a new wing to house a fine collection of Colonial furniture, paintings, silver, glass and other arts of the period which is of great historical and artistic interest. One must see this to understand thoroughly its magnitude.

I have seen the work of many other painters—ultra modern, fairly modern, and academic—from Hassam to Arthur B. Davies. The exhibition of the Allied Artists at the Academy—a fairly representative exhibit of living men. The annual 25x30 show at the Salmagundi Club and the exhibit of the last work of our late friend George Bellows, which was assembled by Mrs. Sterner and shown at the Durand Ruel galleries.

Prints old and new, from Rembrandt to the living men, and one exhibition of that great master Whistler. The finest exhibit of etchings by him it has ever been my privilege to see. Hardly a great example missing. Think of it, rooms with walls literally crowded. This was held at the Kennedy galleries on Fifth Avenue.

I must not take any more of your good time, in fact bore you with this art twaddle of mine. I have enjoyed myself most thoroughly and am coming back to Los Angeles full of ideas. Come in when you can find time and we'll have an old-fashioned chat about both the old and the new.

Most sincerely yours,

S. Bartley Cannell.

SPRING IS HERE, CALLING TO THE YACHTSMEN IN NO UNCERTAIN TONES, AND AS THE CALENDAR OF EVERY YACHT CLUB IS FULL, EACH MAN WILL BE BUSY ANSWERING. REGATTAS AND RACES, WITH NEW RULES TO COVER MOTOR BOAT RACING, WILL INCREASE THE INTEREST IN THAT CLASS AND THE SAN FRANCISCO-TAHITI RACE WILL COME AS A SPLENDID CULMINATION TO THE SPRING SEASON.

WHITTAKER'S FOREST AVAILABLE TO CAMPERS

By WOODBRIDGE METCALF, Associate Professor of Forestry, University of California

ABOUT ten miles from Badger, Tulare County, on the main road to Big Meadows, is situated an area of 320 acres of timberland known as Whittaker's Forest. It lies in the heart of the Big Tree country about midway between Sequoia and General Grant National Parks and within a mile of the "Redwood Bowl," which is said to contain the densest acre of Big Trees extant. The general region is known as Redwood Mountain and the tract in question is advantageously located across the "Red Hill" auto road at an elevation of fifty-five hundred feet. The area was partly cut over during the years 1874-1879 when the Hyde Mill was operating on the property, but it now contains a very representative stand of forest trees of the central Sierras, and, what is more interesting and important, some excellent second growth stands of the Big Tree (Sequoia gigantea).

The clearing at the old mill site is ideally situated as a camping spot near a beautiful little stream of clear, cold water which flows quietly for some distance through the property and then flings itself in a filmy spray over a boulder strewn and moss-bedecked granite ledge. The Redstone Ranger Station of the Forest Service is less than a mile away, and a small saw mill and summer resort is situated up the valley about the same distance. Truly, Whittaker's Forest is a beauty spot which many people of the state should visit and enjoy. It is available at all times as a camping spot and at the same time is yielding data of great significance to foresters, lumbermen, and others interested in the growth and life history of the most ancient species of tree now inhabiting the globe.

Most people suppose that the giant Sequoias are no longer producing fertile seeds and so are in danger of extinction when the well known massive trees shall have succumbed to the attacks of time. Here on Whittaker's Forest may be seen thousands of Sequoias in all the vigor and slender beauty of early youth—from tiny seedlings less than three feet high to thrifty stands which at fifty years of age raise their slender tapering crowns to heights of seventy to eighty feet where they engage in vigorous competition for light. These youngsters of this mighty tribe are very different in appearance from their hoary progenitors and it is well worth a trip to this region to make the comparison, as in spite of the old logging operations there are still standing on Whittaker's Forest one hundred and ninety-five veterans eight feet in diameter or over, each of which contains upwards of 30,000 board feet of lumber.

The forest property was given to the University of California by Horace Whittaker or "Old Whittaker," as he was familiarly known in Tulare County, "For forestry investigation and research connected with that branch of instruction as taught in the University of California." That was in 1910, and the old man must have been gifted with prophetic foresight, for it was not until four years later that the Forestry Division of the University was organized and the first courses given. As soon as possible after the division was started the boundary lines were surveyed and blazed, and several sample plots were laid out in which each tree was marked with a numbered galvanized iron tag and its diameter and height carefully measured. After a lapse of six years these sample plots were again visited by Professors W. Metcalf and E. Fritz and a second measurement of each tree was made and recorded. Comparison of the two sets of figures for one of the quarter acre plots indicates how severe the competition is among trees in a dense young stand, and what a small percentage of those that start on a given acre are able to reach maturity. When first examined the trees in this plot were approximately 31 years of age; there were 1428 trees per acre of which only 23% were in a dominating position in the stand. These principal trees averaged 5.3 inches in diameter and 30 feet high and contained approximately 60% of the volume of all the trees which totalled 2142 cubic feet per acre—a little over 23 standard cords.

Six years later these same dominant trees averaged 8 inches in diameter and 44 feet in height, while the increase in size of the intermediate and suppressed trees was proceeding at a very slow rate due to excessive overcrowding. At this time over 65% of the total volume per acre of 3090 cubic feet (over 34 cords) was contained in these few dominant trees. Practically all of the others must eventually be crowded out of the stand, but so tenacious are they of life, and so slow is the natural thinning process that only twelve trees per acre had died during the six year period.

PLANS AND PLANTING BRANCH OF SANTA BARBARA COMMUNITY ARTS ASSOCIATION

THE Plans and Planting Committee has as its objective the development of a more beautiful city with more attractive homes and gardens. The Plans division is concerned with the architectural end, the Planting committee with the landscape end. A brief synopsis of the work of the Planting Committee for the past year (Oct. 1923-Sept. 1924) is here outlined by the chairman, Miss Sophie Baylor.

"The Planting Committee has just ended a year of activity and accomplishment—340 children's gardens were supervised with comparatively few failures. Seeds, bulbs and plants were distributed among these gardens. Some plants were donated, but most of them grown by Robert Morrison, garden supervisor, in a lath house built for that purpose. The result obtained by this work among the children is very satisfactory. One sees everywhere the gay little gardens, and at the Flower Shows the children's sections are always a delight, and blue ribbons are plentiful.

There were also 61 entrants in "The Home Gardens" Contest, when small cash prizes and "Honor Certificates" were distributed. The members of the committee who acted as judges for this contest were surprised and delighted at the originality and charm of these little gardens. Twenty-six "landscape jobs" were also planned and executed, and eighty detailed sketches furnished. The Committee feels this to be a distinct contribution to the "Better Homes" movement, and the effort to help beautify the city.

SOUTHLAND

Facts Versus Fiction, Australia

TALKING together, an American, said to an Australian, "I'd like to see Australia break away from England." "Why? queried the Australian." "Oh, I don't know," was the reply.

"Ah! that's it," rejoined the Australian, "you have been fed up with yellow stuff that has clogged your mind with worthless matter."

No Australian, except unusually crude specimens, would ever harbor such addled ideas. Australians stand now in their great island continent, free to work out their own destiny, with no barriers but dim vision or neglected opportunities.

Australia is one of a complete inseparable Brotherhood of Nations—a sovereign democracy, having a splendid system of national education for inspiration.

They have every chance to develop superb standards of virile citizenship, all material, unlimited space, to make a glorious land of model homes—resting upon the imperishable principles of Truth, Justice, and Humanity. Britannia, in bestowing Australia to the Australians, made the most peerless gift in history, with all its magnificent possibilities, added the crowning feature of her life—the Britannic Constitution. This most flexible model, adapted for every contingency, was wrought by untiring energy, fought for with undaunted courage by their ancestors of all degrees.

Loyal Australia embodied in her star-emblazoned flag—the Union Jack—a true symbol, proudly proclaiming the ties of blood, language, and due expression of eternal gratitude.

The mighty arms of the old motherland protect Australia from outside interference or aggression. Even those who shut the mind's eye, and refuse to see the great traditions, the success of the people; the most dissatisfied; the grossly materialistic, know this great and indisputable fact. Breaking away from the brotherhood of nations would be like a terrible leap into the dark—towards the unknown horrors of anarchy—a destructive wish only existing in the bemuddled brains.

Australians have the commanding power of the ballot in their hands, to uphold all good, to redress all evil, and they would not tolerate any supreme court of judges ruling laws passed by intelligent elected representatives in their Parliament, as unconstitutional.

The laws are the work of their legislators and after the assent of the British Parliament is given (a formality), it is up to the judges to administer the law as it stands—at the people's wish.

Advanced laws have been registered in Australia long before similar ones were passed in Great Britain.

Every Australian worthy of the name upholds the law, and respects the highly educated judgment of its cultivated exponents, yet as a true democracy the people stand supreme. No rigid constitution blocks the path of progress.

The titles of the governor general and governor are out of date misnomers. They act as British consuls—connecting links between the old land and the new. The social sets revere them as ornamental heads to their castes, much as the old mariners were taken with the gilt figures on the ships' prows in bygone times; they play their parts with much aplomb, but otherwise are entirely outside the actual hurly-burly of everyday life.

Australia is a land looking to all countries past and present for her ideals; comparing all, assimilating the best. She views with admiring eyes many American standards, and has always maintained a friendly, brotherly feeling for the people of the United States. A citizen of the States can land in Australia without changing his language—free to follow his pursuits, within the law, and enjoy social life with people akin to himself, as freely and easily as an Australian can adapt himself to the life of America.

Let us cherish this wonderful medium of communication, this supreme language of ours, that Shakespeare crowned with his genius, and preserve it as a classic, free from trash and accumulated vulgarities, that it may become the key to unlock all minds and bring about universal understanding.

Can anyone in his senses find a reason why nations striving to follow Christ's teachings, speaking the same language, having similar ideals and standards, seeking their own well being and the welfare of the world, should be kept apart from fulfilling their greater destinies, by the wicked propaganda of hidden scheming associations, or crafty, vain individuals?

The world is looking eagerly towards those who speak the master tongue, for leadership—not for breaking up great combinations into lesser parts, but for building up greater ones, under humane conditions, holding in subjection commercial greed, insane racial hatreds, all evils that retard humanity and prevent it from rising through a true education to a life of Peace and Prosperity.

CLAUDE H. SIMSON.

Choosing a Doctor, II

BEFORE discussing the third vital factor which may guide us in the choice of a physician, we here continue the quotations from Doctor George Dock's papers, begun in the March number.

In "Physicians and Healers," a pamphlet written during the war and still extant, this eminent physician and teacher records his personal observation and investigation of those schools which were ignored when the Carnegie Foundation for the Advancement of Teaching appealed to our leading universities to raise their standards of medical schools or cut off the schools altogether.

Schools outside those teaching under the wholesome scrutiny of The American Medical Association have since been studied by Doctor Dock to estimate the extent to which their students have taken the place of those eliminated from the collegiate medical schools. He says:

The figures for 1916-'17 give 458 men and 80 women students in the 9 homeopathic schools,—a total of 538. The four eclectic schools show 243 and 20, respectively; total, 263. But whereas these sects are declining in importance, some newer varieties are more than taking their places. Three osteopathic schools alone, out of nine, report a total of 898 matriculates. Two chiropractic schools out of twenty claim 40 and "500-600," respectively. One such school claims 4,000 graduates. "In 1895, there was only one chiropractor. In 1916, there were not less than 8,000." Osteopathy, about 25 years old as a college industry, claims about 6,000 graduates, and a student body second in size only to that of the "allopaths."

Have these thousands of healers taken up their work as the result of any or all the reasons that attract young men and women to medical schools or are there other compelling forces? One can not go far in a study of the catalogs of irregular schools without coming to the conclusion that certain unusual stimuli are at work.

* * * * * * * *

Some catalogs of regular institutions have rightly been criticised for exaggeration, but the worst of them are models of restraint compared with the lurid "literature" of the healers of all kinds, reminding one of the promises in the popular magazines to prepare any one for all sorts of callings up to traffic manager or captain of industry. For years, not only in America, but in other countries, youths have been discouraged from crowding into the medical profession. The small income has been pointed out, and the fact that the chief reward of the calling is the service that can be rendered. In contrast to this, we find emphasized in the catalogs of healers the "ease and enjoyment," the high social position, the large incomes.

"Be your own boss and not a servant for others." "Appian (?) Way to health and knowledge."

There is an extensive system of lures for students, such as intimate follow-up letters, fac-simile letters from graduates telling of their rapid acquisition of large incomes, offers to meet students at the station, to give rebates for early registration, or for man and wife. One of the most extraordinary offers is that of regaining a good part of the tuition (fee) from clinic practice.

* * * * * * * *

But it may be said that the new schools, at least the osteopathic, chiropractic and all the odd "pathies" that have sprung up in the last quarter century, must use novel methods because they are new and different. Or it may be said that style in publicity matter is a question of taste. Whatever explanation may be accepted, one should not fail to recognize what kinds of minds are likely to be attracted by such methods.

A more important fact is that all these new schools base their right to existence chiefly on the claim that they have entirely new and superior methods of healing. They assert that medicine at present is an outworn superstition, that from an intrenched position opposes the growth of new and better modes of healing. Comparisons are made with medicine and opposition to discoveries like the steamboat. These arguments are vigorously presented on many sides, and deserve thoughtful and impartial discussion.

OPINION

The suggestion that new discoveries in healing are discouraged by the medical profession is quite far from the truth. Medicine of today is made up of an immense body of facts, gathered not only by physicians but by others. It is idle to discuss the relative values of contributions by those in and out of the profession, and it is freely admitted that additions of value in therapeutics have come from non-medical, even ignorant people. On account of the liberalism of medicine all through the historical period, on account of its biological methods and its irrepressible tendency to grow in all directions whenever opportunity offers, we are not ashamed of, but glory in, the acquisitions that have been made, and do not knowingly conceal our indebtedness to the discoverers. We took the cinchona and the lobelia of the American Indian and in the former case we long called it Jesuit's bark, admitting the services of those who brought the drug into commerce. We took the water cures of peasant or priest and in this case the process was more complex because all that Priessnitz or Kneipp applied had been known and used, and written about, by physicians long before. We took the massage of Chinese or Swedes, of a Swedish Army officer as well as of Swedish physicians. We took the vaccines of a dairymaid and of Pasteur, and the X-rays of Roentgen. We not only applied these and others, but we tested them out; we added to the scientific features and perfected the clinical application. Preachers, teachers and farmers all dabbled with vaccination before Jenner. By Jenner's truly scientific methods and assistance the traditions of the dairymaids became part of medicine over the civilized world within a decade, though it required nearly a century more to make it really effective. In adopting all these possible acquisitions we make mistakes not rarely. We often are over-optimistic. At times we are unduly critical. At least it seems so when we see the slow development of the practice of asepsis. But it must not be forgotten that in the beginning all of these novelties are incomplete; and criticism and investigation are not only useful but in most cases essential. They are part of the biologic method. To the dogmatist, however, such a spirit is all wrong, and he expresses horror and indignation at the freedom with which physicians modify their practice with the advance of science.

But so it is, and a physician ardent for the improvement of the practical side of his work can not look with anything but kindly interest upon the discoveries made, or supposed to be made, by any one, and he will encourage the discoverer to develop his work. If the physician has a keen historical sense he will at such announcements feel a pang of regret at the disappointments in store for both discoverer and prospective patient, but he will observe with tolerant sympathy the developments of the novelty, and regret as much as any one its not-unexpected partial or total failure. In most countries such things are soon appraised and if there is any vaue in discoveries they will be adopted. Only in the United States do other factors enter and play an important part, and these other factors exemplify what I think is a defect in the democratic system at present as applied to medicine and medical education. The difference depends upon our laws regulating the practice of medicine and those relating to the foundation of teaching institutions. The laws regulating practice are not ideal laws based upon principles universally recognized, nor are they the results of growth from long experience and varied precedent. Neither are they the productions of far-sighted law-givers like Hammurabi, Moses or Napoleon. They are legislative enactments obtained with great effort by medical organizations, contested at all times by all the forces in opposition to ordered medical life, such as irregular practitioners, patent medicine makers and venders, and all who profit from legal chaos and medical ignorance. In the beginning the licensing laws are imperfect and unsatisfactory, because of their sources and opposition. It may take a generation to get even a fairly good statute, and when this is done the results depend largely upon the altruism of one or two individuals, the president and secretary of the licensing body, hampered by the indifference or the open or concealed opposition of those who should follow up infractions of the law.

The origin and growth of the licensing laws explain all the faults and weaknesses of the enactments. They often give the impression of having been made for anything else than for securing well-educated physicians, and this impression is hardened into obvious fact in the provisions made in many states for the licensing of sectarian practitioners. Practically all state boards of licensure in the early stages, some of them even after many years, have lower standards than the best schools, sometimes lower even than the poorest. This, of course, delays the natural extinction of weak schools. Until within the past few years no state exacted real tests of the fitness of applicants, but required only a written examination that could be and often was prepared for by a system of cramming. The special menace of the irregular school is that it takes advantage of the situation, and by reason of its methods can begin and long continue with less equipment and lower standards than a school on the usual plan.

Such is the situation still, although this pamphlet was written in 1917. Whatever is good in these new methods of treating the human body has had time to be taken over into the general body of the profession and practiced or recommended by all of the best physicians. If it is not so recommended it is better left alone. "A little knowledge is a dangerous thing" and before we entrust the "temple of the living God" to anyone to pommel, we should know what is the matter with us. An inflamed appendix can be broken by very slight massage. A broken bone may need quiet, instead of quirks and jerks. Thus all the knowledge that has come down through the ages, all the improvements of modern science, surgery and research are concentrated in the one great profession and become the property of the race as a whole. Properly guarded by the people as their heritage, this knowledge will be at their command through organized clinics, dispensaries and hospitals. No such knowledge is the private property of any "healer." It belongs to all and is at the service of the poor and rich alike.

Society a Unit, Hands Off

THE Brotherhood of Man has been preached since Christianity first swept over the civilized portions of the earth and made them a unit in progress. During the whole of the Christian era the advancement of the race has dragged along its lowest types with it and it has rapidly reached out to "Greenland's icy mountains and India's coral strand," never daring to call the world better unless all nations and tribes are embraced in that universal word.

Like leaven in a lump of paste, this fundamental thought of the Founder of Christianity has worked in little groups, implanting the idea of brotherhood, raising the mass it lay buried in until that mass touched other masses and the whole might be leavened.

Nations have concentrated upon their own self-development; individuals have followed this progressive method; yet always the spirit of betterment has been the Christian spirit which teaches mankind to attain God and love one's neighbor as one's self at the same time.

The tribal instinct in man is so strong that no doubt can remain in the mind of the serious student of man's progress as to its fundamental use in that progress. Called together by mutual interests, likes and dislikes, the fraternities and clubs, the nations and confederations, are but nucleii for unity of the whole mass.

Every individual learns brotherly love from having brothers, and then, as his power for loving is fed, he realizes, through those closest to him, the fact that all mankind contains the capacity for brotherhood. In the parable by which the Great Founder of Christianity taught His own first group this ideal, the housewife "hid the leaven in the lump." No doubt she kneaded it vigorously at first, and surely vigor is needed by the missionaries who "go into every tribe and nation to spread the gospel of brotherhood and love. But after the batter is mixed; after the loaf is raised, it takes careful handling on the part of the baker to keep it light and full of hope.

The active force of Christianity is constantly on duty to keep brothers really brothers and no stirring up of democratic demonstrations will do any good. Tender ties will be broken. The deepest affection can only be cultivated between congenial spirits, and any attempt on the part of officialdom to break up this in the name of "Democracy" will prove a disastrous leveling down instead of building up the Kingdom of God in all hearts.

This fundamental teaching is embodied in the basic commandment to fill the heart, the mind and the soul with love to God and to divide the result with our neighbors.

But "who is my neighbor" is a thing I must myself decide before that love will flow out to the rest of mankind. One's neighbor is not the one who may happen to sit next to him on trolley or at desk. There is a subtle magnetic force in leaven that seeks "that which has need of it." Thus does the brotherhood of man become a reality—"not by might or by power, but by my spirit, said the Lord."

WOOFEL BIRDS HUNT IVORY EGGS

By CLAUDE G. PUTNAM

SCIENCE tells us that many years ago, when the great dinasaur was a puppy and cavorted over our vast plains, there lived on the Channel Islands, off the coast of California, a strange and powerful bird. This bird was known to live on the ivory nut of the Woof Poof tree, now extinct as well as the bird. There is every reason to believe that some of the eggs of this early bird are still to be found hidden by the action of time in the rocky crevices of the islands where they were in the habit of nesting. In this cause a few scientific yachtsmen who love the "big open places" and are interested in research work, banded together, calling ourselves "Woofel Birds" after this great bird of the islands and sea, and have visited San Clemente Island, Santa Catalina, and the coast of Lower California in search of eggs without discovering even a hint; but, like all men of the sea, we still live in hopes, —and hops. Working on the theory that the winter rains might have washed the sand away, possibly revealing a nesting place, we decided to try our luck on San Miguel.

THESE SCIENTIFIC RESEARCHERS SEEM PARTICULARLY AT HOME ON THE BOUNDING MAIN.

Spring Street was awash from the overdue spring rain the night of Friday, the 6th of March, 1925, but the faithful ones of the tribe answered the call of two notes in spite of Old Man Pluvius and a falling glass. Shirley, Doc, Bob Paulsen, Tim, Commy Bill, Robbie, Art and myself constituted the bunch of birdies, and the Vaquero, a two-masted, Diesel-driven yacht, was to take us on the cruise and true to sea-going form, was all ready to cast off when we clambered aboard at two bells of the first watch at San Pedro.

After the Captain gave us the once over and the dunnage was piled on deck the lines were cast off and we slipped out into the night, facing a fair sou'wester and a lumpy sea. Doc put in, "When you can see Catalina so plainly after dark you can count on a real blow next day." The dope was correct in lots of ways, but as far as we were concerned, it was all cock-eyed for Saturday broke as clear as a bell and fair flat seas running. Smugglers was astern of us by 6 a. m. Plenty of pelicans, but no Woofel Birds in sight.

AN UPSIDE DOWN BURGEE IS AN INVITATION TO PIRATES OF THE SEA.

Not having our burgee on board and color time soon coming, Paulsen, the Captain and myself set about making one out of an old sail and a pot of black paint. Doc was chosen to hoist it and he did—upside down at first, which caused a riot among us. But she did look pretty when finally she floated proudly out, right side up, from the fore truck.

KING "PUT" AND THE THIRSTY KID.

Our first stop was to be at Santa Rosa Island wharf which was made on schedule at 9 a. m. The mayor and the population were all out on the dock to welcome us, nine people in all and one goat.

Doc, Robbie, Shirley, Art, Paulsen and I started out over the hill to hunt mushrooms and, believe me, we got 'em. They were as big as pie plates and as thick as barnacles on the bottom of a seagoing hack. We soon filled a grain sack with them. Shirley worried himself sick thinking they were toadstools, but later we noticed him pass his plate three times for helpings.

All hands had a hankering for mussels and abalones, so the skipper took us down on the ship to Mussel Shoals and anchored. Hunting abalones is a lot of fun, the poor creatures are stuck to the rocks and can't dodge. All you have to do is to stick an iron under them and give them a twist, and off they tumble. A minus tide had uncovered their hiding places and within thirty minutes we had our bags filled and in the Dinghy.

We filled away for San Miguel and a sheltered cove, arriving long before dark, stirring up millions of birds when the hook went down. While the boys fished, Bob and the chef shook out the meanest dinner you could imagine. Here's the menu: Shrimp salad, fricaseed chicken, fried mushrooms, steamed mussels, fried abalone, oven - brown spuds, canned pears, loud cheese and black cigars.

Sunday morning was clear and bright and after hot cakes all hands went ashore to initiate our new clubhouse, presented by Bobbie Brooke. Two of us painted her up proper while the bunch sat on the sand and criticised; there are lots of people like them in the world. After ceremonies, exploring the island was in order, so over the hills we puffed and sweat to meet the inhabitants, which consisted of a man and his wife and babies. They said they had lived on the island for twenty years, but were ignorant of Woofel Birds or eggs.

Paulsen and I borrowed the two saddle nags and galloped over the rolling sands to round up the game for the boys on foot to shoot. Nine-tenths of the island is drifting sand and the balance is covered with ice plant and not even a bush. Pinkey shot two red foxes and the other boys used up a lot of ammunition without registering any hits, like the Mexican navy, but to hear them tell it the island is strewn with carcasses of wild boar and sheep.

There was plenty of evidence of early Indian inhabitants; we found broken stone food grinders, kitchen middens and one skeleton, but nothing we could take away as a relic. We all had a wonderful time ashore, even if we discovered no Woofel Bird eggs. But what if we didn't find the eggs—everybody seemed doubly content that we still have the goal in prospect. Now on the tedious evenings that must be spent ashore we can add to the entertainment a profitable discussion as to the advantages of anticipation over realization.

We left San Miguel at the first dog watch Sunday, and ran as close to Santa Cruz as safety would permit. It was generally agreed that Santa Cruz was by far the most beautiful of all the Channel Islands and we talked of coming there on our next migration.

At 4 a. m. Monday the Vaquero was snugly moored at her slip at Pedro and after a fine go at the hot cakes we all departed—back to the great city of noise, jam, confusion, jay walkers and traffic rules.

Thank God, some of us can gt away from it all once in a while and enjoy the greatest thing we have—Nature.

NEW CLUB HOUSE, GIFT OF BOBBIE BROOKS, AND DEDICATED TO THE FABLED BIRD AND HER ADHERANTS.

GOOD SPORTSMANSHIP THE GOAL OF TODAY

PHOTOGRAPHS BY CHATEAU ARTS

CARLETON BURKE, CAPTAIN OF THE MIDWICK TEAM, SAVING THE GOAL AFTER COMING FROM THE OPPOSITE END OF THE FIELD JUST AS THE BALL WAS ON LINE.

MR. WIGMORE ON BALL, ELMER BOESEKE, JR., OF SANTA BARBARA, WHO PLAYED SO BRILLIANTLY DURING THE RECENT TOURNAMENT AT CORONADO AND PEBBLE BEACH, ON THE RIGHT.

ONE engaging show has followed another, of every sort, kind and condition throughout the Spring months; when it isn't animals it is clothes, and when it isn't fashions it is motors. And besides these exhibitions which were frankly and openly shows, we have had displays of prowess in tournaments on the golf course, tennis courts, and polo fields. To all this was added a kite flying contest—flying from Elysian Park to Elysian fields,—and offering another reason for upward gazing when it becomes more necessary every day to watch your step.

While the golf and tennis clubs were staging their tournaments polo was in full swing, first at Coronado then at Pebble Beach, the riding clubs were still talking of the success of the fourth annual horse show and not being willing to settle down to following the trails, even if a number of new ones were provided, without some celebration, a gmkhana was arranged and thoroughly enjoyed by members and visitors alike at Flintridge.

All the stunts were clever but none so vividly brought the old-world charm into our present day life as the entrance of the incomparible Nola Pagri in her imported Viennese carriage, drawn by the noble charger, "Rabbit," and accompanied by her small friend, Jean Marble, who after encircling the ring twice, throwing kisses to her enraptured audience, gracefully alighted and congratulated Mr. Robert Leonard on his skill in a previous event, at the same time encircling his neck with a beautiful wreath of cabbages, emplanting, with verve yet restrained passion, a chaste salute on the top of his shining head, before floating away again leaving us bereft. Only to a select few was it vouchsafed to know the lovely Nola as our own "Monte."

But now in April after all the pampered pets of the equine, dog, and cat world have had their entrances and borne proudly off the coveted ribbons of cerulean hue, comes the real, genuine show of the year, the Pet Animal Show. In this show any breed of fish, flesh or fowl may be entered, provided only it be a pet and bear evidence of being the object of love and affection. It may readily be seen that this easily ranks first in sporting events as no entrant is judged for conformation or performance but as its appearance indicates care and attention, which puts the prize winning possibilities straight up to the owner and imposes a life of cleanliness on the pets.

"LITTLE BILLY," OWNED BY JANE AND MARTHA WOODIN, GUY WOODIN UP.

These shows are always interesting because of the diversity of the classes of pets and the keen rivalry in every class. As no pet is barred a prominent place may be given that bit of banality, the guinea pig, cherished by only two classes, the small boy and the prying, probing surgeon, while nearby may be a patient burro,—one creature in which patience long ago ceased to be a virtue. Dogs rank first in point of numbers, which is as it should be, closely followed by cats but the hare and the tortoise may be noted, as lots of youngsters are interested in rabbits and those small turtles, about as big as a dime, make engaging pets. The squawks of Polly may completely drown the notes of a beloved canary,—the combined efforts recalling the story of the child who thought she was being taught to be kind to all God's screechers!

A group of fond mothers discussing the cleverness of their various offspring is far surpassed by the small boys when allowed to explain how much sense Duke, Laddie, or Pal has shown on many and sundry occasions. And numberless little girls will argue for hours on the superior claims to intelligence shown by the cats. So it seems the most logical thing in the world to have all these pets collected in a show at least once a year and watch the outcome. As the Dodo said to Alice in regard to the caucus-race, "the best way to explain it is to do it."

MRS. W. P. ROTH, OF SAN FRANCISCO, WHOSE LIGHT GIG PONIES WON BLUE RIBBONS AT THE FOURTH ANNUAL LOS ANGELES NATIONAL SHOW.

MRS. LOULA LONG COMBS, OF KANSAS CITY, WHOSE ENTRIES IN THE LOS ANGELES NATIONAL HORSE SHOW WERE INVARIABLY IN THE RIBBONS.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA CHAPTER A. I. A. MONTHLY BULLETIN

HAROLD O. SEXSMITH A. I. A.
Editor

MANY of us have had opportunity to travel abroad and many of us, thanks to bygone ages, have brought back much of architectural value from which our clients are now benefitting. Few of us, however, can give out in the form of speech the things we have seen and learned in our travels. It is the good fortune of the Southern California Chapter that a few, at least, of its membership do not come in this catagory. Windsor Soule of Santa Barbara is one of these elect ones who have had choice experiences abroad and can tell of them in a most fascinating manner. There were perhaps seventy-five members of the Chapter who gathered at the March meeting to hear him tell of his experiences in traveling overland through Spain. His talk was an informal one interspersed with anecdotes of an amusing nature. He also brought along many new lantern slides which were rich in architectural inspiration. His trip covered about six thousand miles of Italian, Spanish, and French territory. The entire journey endured Spanish hotels, six thousand miles of stopping, climbing in and out, and filling kodaks,

The lantern slides were quite as inspiring as the talk and brought to those who saw them many refreshing suggestions for the treatment of detail in the design of Latin buildings. Several Chapter members voiced the hope that Mr. Soule would find it possible to produce some of his pictures in book form for most of it is of hitherto unpublished work and is particularly applicable to Southern California work. The Chapter is most grateful to Mr. Soule for his valuable contribution to the better understanding of Spanish domestic architecture. We hope also to have the privilege of publishing on the Bulletin page some cuts of the slides which were shown during his talk.

PATIO OF THE FLINTRIDGE COUNTRY CLUB. OUR BEST EXAMPLE OF MISSION ARCHITECTURE. MYRON HUNT AND H. C. CHAMBERS, ARCHITECTS.

was made in an Italian Fiat car purchased in Turin. His remarks about the sturdy Fiat and the great factory where it is made recalled war time experiences to the writer who spent several days in that same factory making arrangements for the purchase of chassis for United States Army ambulance bodies. The Fiat well merited its praise by Mr. Soule. Those who contemplate a trip in Italy, France, or Spain could do little better than follow his suggestion of purchasing a car with the idea of returning to the starting point to sell it after the journey. The overland route is the only real way for an architect to travel. He is such an eccentric critter that he can never be satisfied with the ordinary methods of European locomotion. Entrancing views from train windows become an aggravation to him when he has no opportunity to stop and sketch and chin in pigeon English with wondering natives. We are certain that Mrs. Soule, who accompanied her husband on the journey, must be most patient and indulgent to have

IT will be the desire of the editor of this page to include each month material which will be informational as to the architect's duties and obligations to his client. The following is an extract from the Ethical Documents of the American Institute of Architects.

The Canon of Ethics

The following canons are adopted by the American Institute of Architects as a general guide, yet the enumeration of particular duties should not be construed as a denial of the existence of others equally important although not specially mentioned. It should also be noted that the several sections indicate offenses of greatly varying degrees of gravity.

It is unprofessional for an architect:

1. To engage directly or indirectly in any of the building or decorative trades.

2. To guarantee an estimate or contract by bond or otherwise.

3. To accept any commission or substantial service from a contractor or from any interested party other than the owner.

4. To take part in any competition which has not received the approval of the Institute or to continue to act as professional advisor after it has been determined that the program cannot be so drawn as to receive such approval.

5. To attempt in any way, except as a duly authorized competitor, to secure work for which a competition is in progress.

6. To attempt to influence, either directly or indirectly, the award of a competition in which he is competitor.

7. To accept the commission to do the work for which a competition has been instituted if he has acted in an advisory capacity, either in drawing the program or making the award.

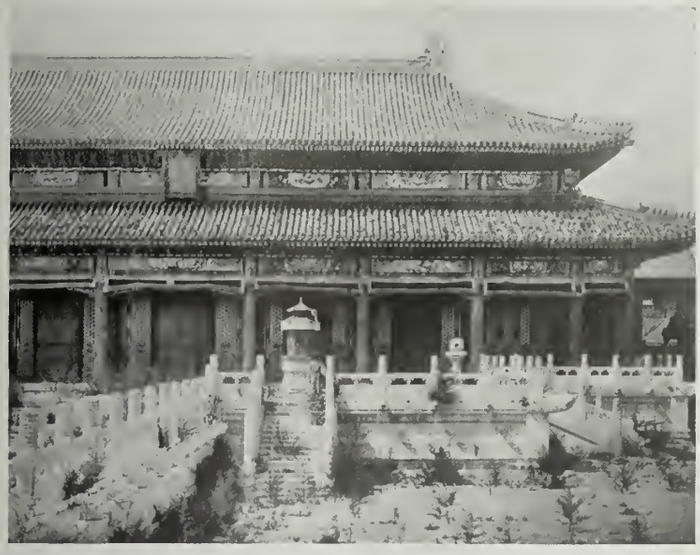
8. To injure falsely or maliciously, directly or indirectly, the professional reputation, prospects or business of a fellow architect.

9. To undertake a commission while the claim for compensation, or damages, or both, of an architect previously employed and whose employment has been terminated, remains unsatisfied, until such claim has been referred to arbitration or issue has been joined at law, or unless the architect previously employed neglects to press his claim.

10. To attempt to supplant a fellow architect after definite steps have been taken toward his employment, e. g. by submitting sketches for a project for which another architect has been authorized to submit sketches.

11. To compete knowingly with a fellow architect for employment on the basis of professional charges.

Every member of the Southern California Chapter American Institute of Architects subscribes to the above Canon of Ethics as one condition of his becoming a member. These Canons are the result of fifty years of professional experience and have been gradually evolved for the one purpose of bringing to owner, architect, and contractor the fairest business relationship possible. The various phases of these eleven articles will be discussed in this bulletin from month to month.



GRACE NICHOLSON'S TREASURE HOUSE OF ART

MARSTON, VAN PELT and MAYBURY, Architects. CLARENCE P. DAY CORPORATION, Construction Engineers

IT is with great hesitancy that I approach the subject of Chinese Art as expressed in an American building. As the English writer, Laurence Binyon, says in his fascinating book, Painting in The Far East, "I write with diffidence on the subject [architecture of the Orient] but so far as I understand it, I would say that it was conceived in a different spirit from our own; that a building was regarded less in itself than as a fusion of man's handiwork into Nature, the whole surroundings of the scene making part, and perhaps the chief part, of the architect's conception."

Yet in California we breathe the same air of the Pacific, and it may be that the spirit of the Orient has had its effect upon us; for assuredly the true Californian architect, unlike the Englishman, has conceived of his handiwork as fused into the landscape around it.

Further delving in Mr. Binyon's delightful book gives us the key to the question why Chinese art and architecture fit in with our own in a satisfying way not true of either the Buddhist or the Mohammedan. For "Chinese Art," he tells us he "believes was fully developed before Buddhism brought in its new store of motive and imagery." And again—"To China, then, rather than to India, we must turn to find if not the parent Art of Asia, its earliest mature flower in painting, and from this earliest epoch onward, while the other countries of Asia yielded but scattered evidence of their schools of painting, China has left a continuous record of famous artists.

PHOTOGRAPH SHOWING THE ROOF LINES AND BALUSTRADE, PEKIN.

PHOTOGRAPH FROM MISS NICHOLSON'S COLLECTION, SHOWING GROTESQUES COPIED BY THE BUILDERS IN SHEET METAL

CHINESE ARCHITECT'S DESIGN FOR CORNERS. AN INSPIRATION FOR ARCHITECTS.

. . . The great original Art tradition of Europe has its home in Greece; the great original art tradition of Asia has its home in China. Each race is pre-eminent in its feeling for harmony and rhythm, the foundation of all art." Even a closer communion between Greek art and this earliest Art of China is set forth in an account of Dr. Sven Hedin's investigations in the sand covered cities of Khotan where police notices written in Chinese are found sealed with a Greek seal, the image of an Athene or a Heracles. Alexander the Great had been in Turkestan before his death, in 323 B. C., and "had carried the arts and civilization of Hellas far into the East."

The bamboo and the lotus flower form motives of Chinese detail in architecture, and we have not yet used them as motives in California. But we understand them as a language, and the dragons and grotesques set on the outside of the house to frighten away ugly spirits are identical in origin with the gargoyles of European Cathedrals though their forms are those of oriental inventive genius.

SOURCE OF MAIN ARCHWAY, GRACE NICHOLSON'S TREASURE HOUSE.

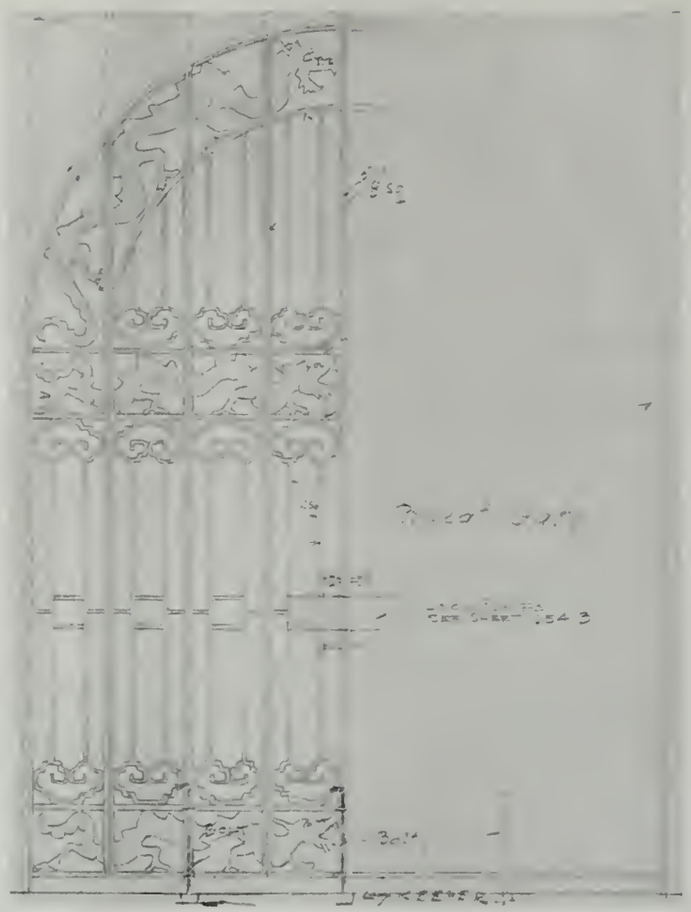
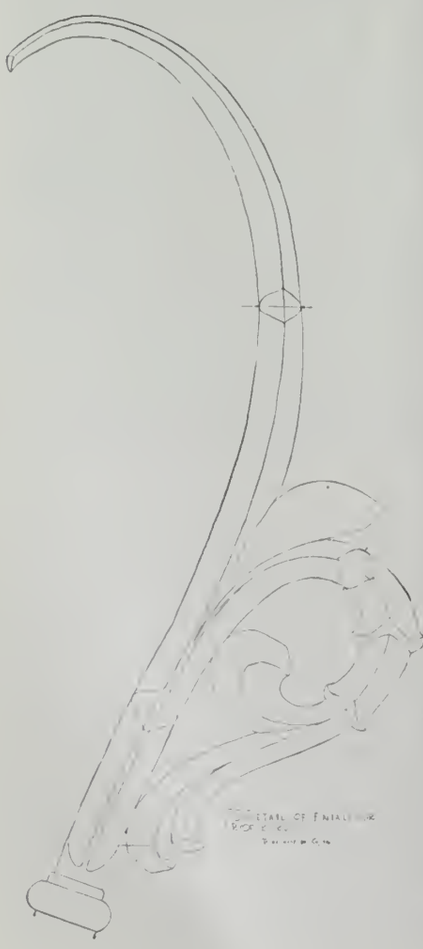
Tracing these relationships between the Art of China and our own, we begin to realize more fully what has been accomplished here in Pasadena by the combined effort of owner, architects and craftsmen in the realization of a long cherished ideal now nearing completion.

In her treasure house of Oriental Art, Miss Grace Nicholson has for years been collecting. She has seen the fine collections of Indian Art of the West sent as gifts to Eastern museums. She has given freely of her knowledge to those who have visited her for information and she has placed in the museums of the country authentic art objects collected by her buyers in the Orient. All the while, led by her conviction that the Art of China is most valuable to us because of its fundamental kinship to our own ideals in the Greek and is therefore to be the most enduring in its appeal to Americans, she has made a sincere and profound study of this branch of her business and has collected the sources of inspiration by which the new building has been designed and erected.

Scores of photographs, taken under Miss Nicholson's direction in China and sent to her carefully listed and numbered, have been used by the architects in their conception of this Chinese temple structure set down in an American city to make its skyline more cosmoploitan and infinitely more beautiful.



Infinite pains and careful, patient application have mastered the cumulative difficulties, until American architects and constructors and craftsmen have put into local materials the applied art of old China as indicated by the four photographs here reproduced.



Here then we show also a few of the designs made by the Architects, Marston, Van Pelt and Maybury, in their latest and most architecturally interesting business structure so different from their residences, which have set the pace in decorative plateresque, Spanish and Italian houses in appropriate environment of California.

When the plans and general design of a building are decided upon, the details must, to be consistent, grow out of these inner ideals and fundamentals of the edifice. No more enlightening scheme of discussion of the relation between the architect and the ideas within the mind of the client could be found than that illustrated in this article. To gather together her ideas in tangible form and present them to the chosen architects was the great task of the originator, and this task was performed with striking force and originality. To express these ideals in drawings and working plans was the work of the architects, Marston, Van Pelt and Maybury, whose record in handsome mercantile buildings has taken the name of Pasadena far and wide and made it famous for unique small stores. Enquiries have come from remote towns to this magazine on the subject of this work by this firm.

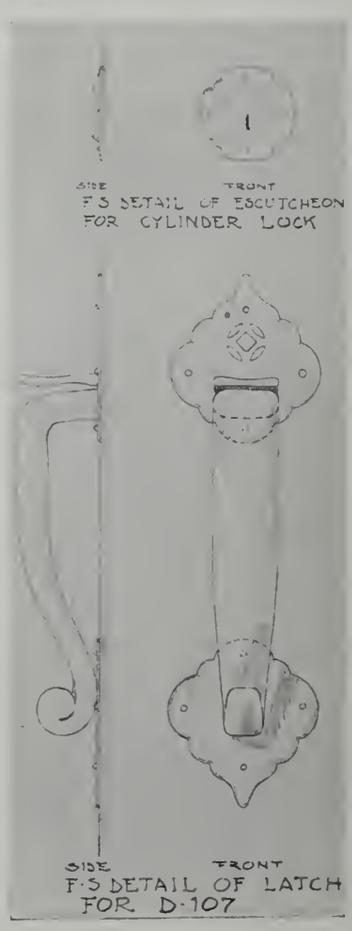
So the practical work of building an American store in the form of a Chinese architectural model was entrusted to Marston, Van Pelt and Maybury with confidence that the traditions of American building would be embodied in this unusual structure.

As a source, the ancient Chinese art and architecture are much more fitted for our streets than the Mohammedan or the Buddhist. These latter Oriental forms have had little effect upon the original Chinese architecture which through centuries has maintained its own chief characteristics. In construction, the one-story Chinese houses and temples are as sound as the Gothic or the modern American steel frame building. The roof is, with the Chinese, the chief thing. It is held up by short, wooden columns and the walls are but filling between the uprights. On the roof are the main ornaments and under the eaves are found delightful grilles. Ornament is used as it was by the craftsmen of medieval times. The Chinese, Miss Nicholson tells us, made their grotesques originally to frighten away evil spirits and if they succeed in making something uglier than that which they fear they are satisfied. For us who feel doubly grateful to this student-collector for all the joy she has given us in objects of art and now in this beautiful building, this appropriate expression of her long study of Chinese art is a constant source of pleasure.

Many of the ornaments used on this building are parts of Miss Nicholson's collection; the porcelain figures, the perforated tiles in the grilles, the carved wood, and of course the designs are taken from the dragons, the juii and the lotus leaves and buds which fascinate the shopper as well as the school children who pass Miss Nicholson's treasure house each morning and absorb from the fascinating genre she puts in her windows more of the art and history of China than their elders ever dreamed of in their philosophy.

The dragon guards the gate, but the ju-i offers a welcome to all of goodwill, and its meaning conveys even more in its wishes of good fortune and long life. With delightful restraint, and yet adequately the architects have expressed in their design for the wrought iron door these two symbols and have bound the whole together with the same simple bars that make up the screens and window frames. This restraint is the chief characteristic which strikes one who seriously studies this building.

It is far and away the most interesting and beautiful commercial building Pasadena can boast. No skyscraper, no ordinary office building can compare with it. That is the amazing thing about it—its appropriateness to its use and its setting.

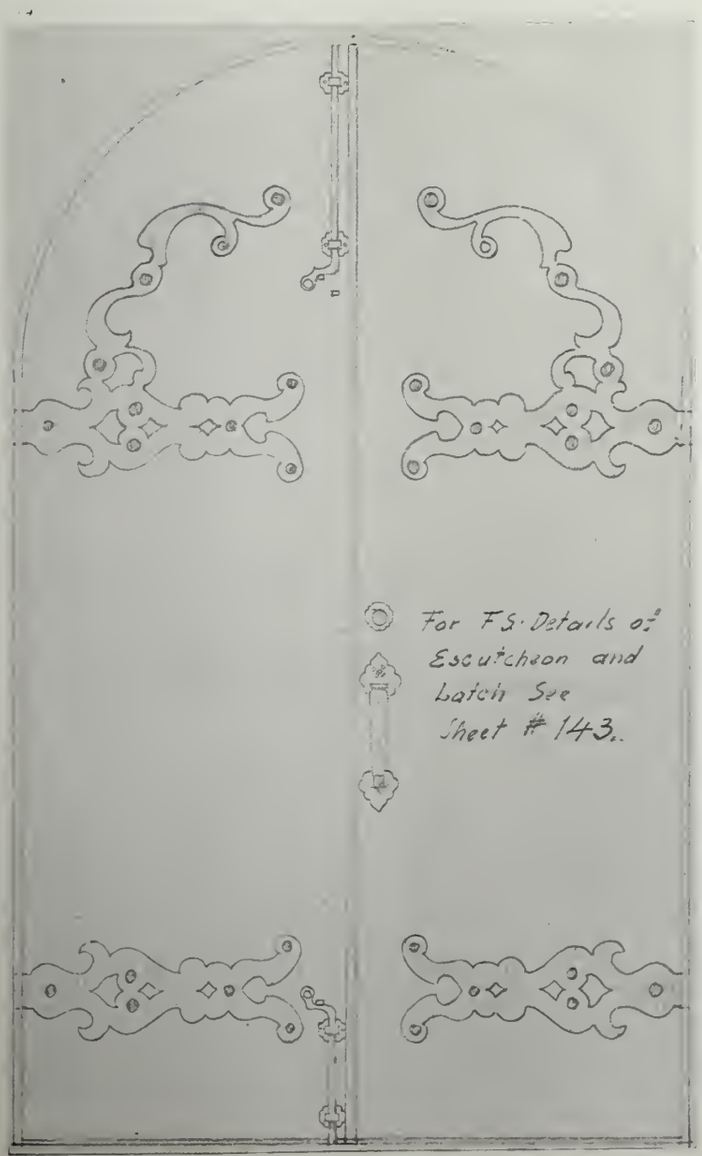


Pasadena is an unsual town, chosen by thousands of tourists and Eastern people for their winter home. It should have planned a beautiful shopping street like the Marina of the Panama-Pacific Exposition at San Francisco, instead of putting up ordinary skyscrapers that would do just as well in any other town. Imagine what a distinctive handsome street Colorado street might have been made if restrictions had kept the stores to six or seven stories and each building had been designed to express its purpose as this building on Los Robles avenue does. However, let us be happy that this tremendous task of collecting and interpreting Chinese building into American building has been done by a Pasadena resident using Pasadena architects, contractors, and craftsmen.

The difficult problems arising from the adaptation of these designs to American building have been met superbly by the Clarence P. Day Corporation, the General Contractors. Ohrmund Brothers, known in Pasadena as partners in the Pasadena Gas Appliance Company have done an amazing piece of work in the finials of the roof—made of copper, and in other decorative ornaments which grew out of this unusual piece of architecture. They have executed these designs in a way that gives deep satisfaction not only to those concerned in the house personally, but to every passerby and lover of good art well executed.

The unique designs for the hardware in Chinese symbolism, carefully applied to American doors and windows, were made in Pasadena by West and Company, South Raymond Avenue. How simply and effectively the great iron hinges of the fireproof doors carry out the motive of the whole house! Latch and escutchen designed and executed especially for this building emphasize what has been said of the reserve and beauty expressed in all of thes interesting designs. They show in detail that beauty in art, of whatever nationality, is universal when interpreted and carried out by capable contractors.

Concrete, that plastic material so devoid of character unless used by an artist, has under the expert direction of these leading engineers and constructors been made into a thing of beauty.



On the floor of the court, which will be just double the size it is in the present stage, there are the famous flagstones of the William Smith Company, 555 South Fair Oak Avenue. These flags were invented by this company after months of hard research and trouble to reproduce in stone the softly colored flags of the Atlantic border. Flagstones from this company were used by Mr. Kaufmann in the fore-court of the Ben Meyer house in Beverly, and reproduced with appreciation by the artist of our cover for March, Mr. Norman Kennedy. They are truly an inspiration to the artist who paints gardens. So, too, the balustrades and post designed like great lotus buds to grace this beautiful court have been made from the architect's drawing here reproduced, by William Smith, Architectural Stone Company of Pasadena. This court will be made the subject of a future article when gold and lacquer have added color to the beauty of this most beautiful of Pasadena's treasure houses.

THIS PHOTOGRAPH, TAKEN BEFORE THE BUILDING IS FINISHED, SHOWS HOW SUCCESSFULLY THE BUILDER, C. P. DAY CORPORATION AND THE SHEET METAL WORKERS, OHRMUND BROS. HAVE CARRIED OUT THE CHINESE ROOF.

These drawings are from the office of Marston, Van Pelt and Maybury

1

The finials, executed by Ohrmund Bros., Pasadena

2

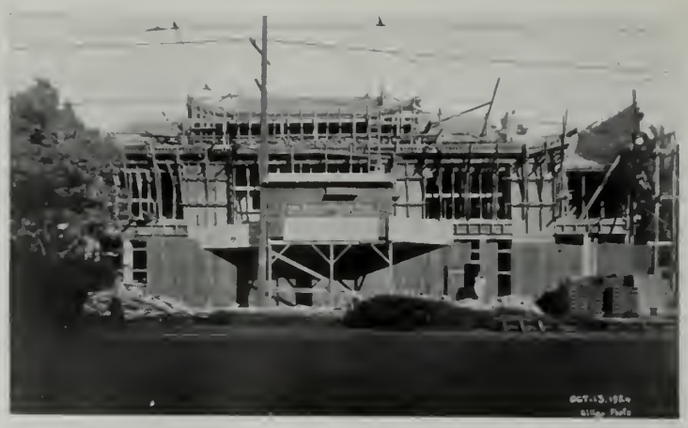
The wrought iron door, made at the City Ornamental Iron Works, Los Angeles

3 & 4

Hardware Designs executed by West Company, Pasadena.

5

Concrete flags and balustrades made by Wm. Smith, Architectural Concrete, Pasadena



CLARENCE P. DAY CORPORATION

Engineers and Constructors

Architects may plan and owners approve, but unless we have good construction and skillful execution of the drawings the work will not be lasting or satisfactory.

Those who have watched this interesting building take shape during the past months have been struck by the thoroughness and solidity of construction. The Clarence P. Day Corporation, Engineering Constructors for the Nicholson building, have been known in Pasadena as leading engineering contractors for many years, and this handsome structure is a monument to them as builders of sound masonry and reinforced steel work. In its solid construction this building reminds old San Franciscans of one which was built of huge blocks of stone brought from China as ballast in the early sixties. It stood the shock of earthquake, and fire, which rushed over it on the corner of Pine and Montgomery streets, and still stands, useful to this day. So will this well built treasure house, whose spirit is also "out of China" 'cross the sea, stand when the transient and poorly built structures now cluttering our towns have passed in the reconstruction which is sure to come as taste improves and experts only are allowed to plan, design and build our cities.

CLARENCE P. DAY CORPORATION AT WORK ON THE REINFORCED CONCRETE OF THE NICHOLSON HOUSE, ON LOS ROBLES AVE., PASADENA

One of Pasadena's long felt wants has been an art gallery down town where one man exhibitions can be given. This Miss Nicholson has seen and has met this need in an art gallery where J. H. Sharp is now showing his fine Indian paintings.

When the new Chinese temple treasure house is made complete and balanced by the second unit, when the gold and lacquered trimmings are set in place and the color applied, the glow and beauty of ensemble will perhaps make us forget the work of all who have contributed to this remarkable building. So we here record the skill and craftsmanship and sound construction embodied in it.—M. U. S.

BRIDLE TRAILS AND HOMES IN THE FLINTRIDGE COUNTRY

(Continued from Page 11)

IT cannot be said too often that "it takes a high state of civilization to live with Nature and not despoil it." Man in his conquest of natural country is often ruthless, and leaves a trail of destruction behind him. Long study and careful planning are necessary if the natural beauty of California's southland is to be retained in the rush of homebuilding.

The cities are now being remodelled to suit more perfectly the environment they grown up in. Los Angeles has the best possible guidance in that direction. All of her citizens who are best fitted by education and training to build a beautiful city have joined together to see that the best plans are used. It is the Allied Architects Association which has called the attention of all citizens to this matter. One hesitates to think what our administration center might have been if these public spirited men had not entered the tourney and given the city the benefit of their combined knowledge and experience. To these men, who fortunately are citizens of Los Angeles County themselves, should be entrusted the entire situation of evolving architectural beauty out of chaos.

There is, for our residences, schools and country life, as well as town life, much pleasant, rolling land still available. Taught by experience with California's sliding soil our landscape architects and city planners now prove themselves equal to the problems that always arise when man disturbs the face of nature. In Flintridge, the necessary roads curve around the highest hills and much thought has been put on this phase of the matter. Nevertheless scars and cuts occur and building on the most feasible sites will bring its meed of change in soil foundation.

At this point comes in the necessity of finding a landscape architect who has the necessary knowledge of engineering as well as one who can adapt the smallest garden to California's trying conditions.

Residents in Flintridge have chosen Mr. Stuart Chisholm and entrusted to him the responsibility of making the immediate environment of their handsome homes livable.

Mr. Chisholm has had a wide training in this country and in Europe. He has visited the older countries and studied the results of this homebuilding which the race has been doing for centuries.

Architects and owners who work with one thus trained can safely leave the matter in his hands.

Around the Flintridge homes which this landscapist has treated will grow up that necessary formal garden which unites the hard lines of a house with the soft lines of nature; and wide sweeping lawns stretch between this formal part and the surrounding groves of native oak and sycamore. The native shrubs of California's canyons border the home lawns and appropriate planting of other shrubs and trees lead nature kindly by the hand up to the stately Italian cypress pillared against the architectural design and fitting it unmistakably.

All the knowledge that our race has garnered in the past in older countries will of necessity be called upon to save this beautiful green strip around Pasadena from the destruction which is going on in other sections of the Southland. The only way that homebuilders can help as individuals is to follow the example of the founder of Flintridge and find the best experts available and entrust each problem to some one who knows how to solve it here and now.

SKETCH FOR A GARDEN IN FLINTRIDGE. STUART CHISHOLM, LANDSCAPE ARCHITECT, 830 SOUTH FIGUEROA STREET, LOS ANGELES.

Angelus Lighting Fixture Co., Inc.

Designers and Craftsmen of

Lighting Fixtures, Lamps, Fire Tools, Console-Tables and Mirrors

746 So. Figueroa St., Los Angeles

VAndike 2296

CALIFORNIA HOMES AND GARDENING MANUAL

ARCHITECTURAL CLUB BULLETIN

An Invitation

The office of the Club Secretary has received an invitation from the Board of Governors of the Los Angeles Museum of History Science and Art. The Board has very kindly invited all Club members to meet the painters and sculptors of Southern California on the occasion of their sixth exhibition. Unfortunately the bulletin will be published too late for this announcement to reach members in time, for the reception is to occur on Friday, April third. However, all club members will be glad to learn that the exhibition of painting and sculpture will be on view during April. All should avail themselves of the opportunity of seeing this delightful exhibit.

The Small House Plan Service

Mr. Koetzli of the Small House Plan Service writes us asking that members of the club who have perspective drawings and plans of small houses, send them in for reproduction in the Sunday Times. Such drawings should be put in Mr. Koetzli's hands for approval by the Small House Committee of the Club. A written statement should accompany drawings stating whether designer would be willing to complete working drawings for the house. A short description of the important features to be stressed in a write-up should also be included.

Beaux Arts Institute of Design Prize

The two best designs in Class "A" Project number five will each receive a prize of five hundred dollars this year. The prize is to be used as a scholarship at the Fontainebleau School of Fine Arts. Detailed description of the conditions of the competition are posted on the belletin board at the Atelier, Allied Architects' Drafting Room, 420 South Spring. All draftsmen eligible for Class "A" work should be interested in this program.

Small House Plan Service

The amount of small home building is enlarging daily, and there is a great opportunity for the small home designer to increase his fame by submitting sketches to the Small House Plan Service. His design will be published in the real estate section of the Los Angeles Times. Two types of homes are wanted. One to cost about $3000 and consisting of a living room, kitchen, breakfast nook, two bedrooms and bath. Another type of house which is most popular is one of two bedrooms and bath, a den which can be used as a bedroom if necessary, living room, dining room, and kitchen.

The Small House Plan Service is located at 600 Metropolitan Building, Broadway at Fifth. Club members please respond.

THE ARCHITECTURAL CLUB OF LOS ANGELES

OFFICERS

for 1925

J. E. Garnsey, President
Roy H. Kelley, Vice-President
H. O. Sexsmith, Secretary
Paul W. Penland, Treasurer

DIRECTORS

Walter S. Davis, Director
J. E. Stanton, Director
H. C. Chambers, Director

UNIVERSITY OF SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA AND ATELIER NEWS ITEMS

The Administration of the student work in the Department of Architecture at U. S. C. is controlled by the Allied Architects Association, whose members give freely of their time to assist young men studying the architectural profession.

SENIOR DESIGN PROBLEM

Much interest in the Civic Center plan has been created among the students of the department. They have followed the scheme closely as it developed and have become its ardent boosters. Therefore, there was no lack of enthusiasm when it was announced that the Seniors in architecture were to be given as a class problem, the design of a great building for the Civic Center.

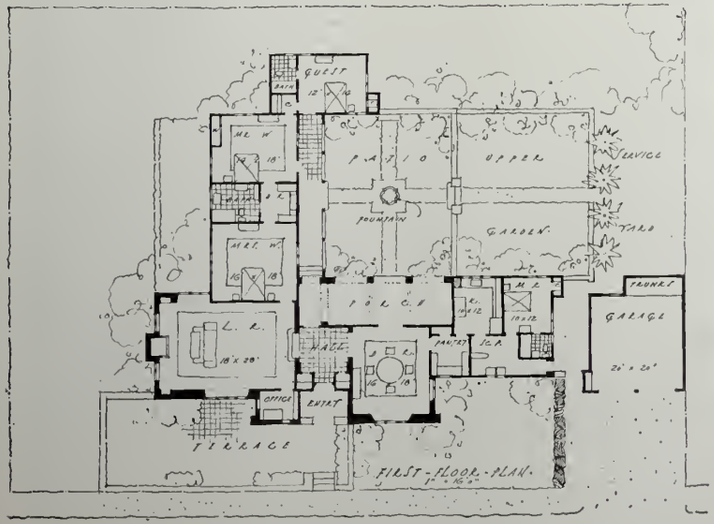
CO-OPERATION PAR EXCELLENCE

The Allied Architects' Association has fathered the Atelier of the Los Angeles Architectural Club and provided a comfortable drafting room where the men may work. The members of the Association have likewise helped as critics and patrons. Such a spirit is contagious. Consequently, when the Seniors of the department of architecture needed help, the Atelier members came to the rescue on the last project and "niggered" for them like good fellows. The unwritten law among all architectural students is that such favors are to be reciprocal. If this spirit is perpetuated it will be difficult at "charette" times to distinguish the University and Architectural Club Atelier from one another. Long live the spirit. The last Senior program was "A Municipal Auditorium for the City of Los Angeles, to be located in the proposed Administrative Center." Mr. Harwood Hewitt acted as patron. During the next five weeks the Seniors under Mr. Sumner M. Spaulding as patron, will design "A Country Villa."

The Juniors, under the guidance of Mr. A. C. Zimmerman, have just completed the design of a Junior High School. The results were excellent. The new Junior problem is to be "A Salt Water Pumping Station at Santa Monica." This interesting and unusual problem is to be given by Mr. Lloyd Rally.

During the month Mr. Myron Hunt spoke to the student body at the university. His subject was "The Development of the Garden." The lecture was profusely illustrated by colored slides.

JESSE STANTON JOINS THE MOVIES



It was announced at the last meeting of the American Institute of Architects that Jesse Stanton has joined the staff of Gladding-McBean. All we have to say is that terra cotta will soon begin to look up. We are sorry to see Mr. Stanton leave the Legitimate and take to the movies, so to speak. However, we know his abilities and we know he will strengthen an already splendid organization.

Later rumors have reached us as we go to press. Mr. Stanton has stepped into a very strong position where his abundant talent carries the architectural terra cotta designed by our best firms straight through the factory to completion. He will shortly go to Europe for the Tropico Potteries Branch of The Gladding-McBean Company.

To the Members of the Architectural Club:

California Southland is running in its Home and Garden Department, plans and garden designs made by members of the Architectural Club of Los Angeles. Beginning with the March number we combined the Club page with the Home and Garden page. We are making this change because it is on the latter page that our six to ten thousand readers look for plans when they are building.

It is our intention soon to enlarge the Home and Garden Department and we hope to have something eventually from every member of the Club for publication in its pages. By this means the Department will be made most effective in presenting good domestic architecture to the community, persistently, month by month.

THIS house is of modified Spanish design, fitting a hillside lot overlooking the cliffs and bay at La Jolla. Bedrooms and dining room open on to a patio garden with a view of Mount Solidad. The floors in the porch, terrace, hall, and living room are of tile. Built as a residence for Harry W. Ward by Winchton Leamon Risley, architect, 736 South Flower Street, Los Angeles.

NEW OFFICE BUILDING OF LOS ANGELES GAS COMPANY

JOHN PARKINSON & DONALD B. PARKINSON, Architects

A WROUGHT IRON GATE, EXQUISITE IN DESIGN AND WORKMANSHIP, FROM THE WROUGHT-IRON STUDIOS.

ON Tuesday evening, February 17, a group of perhaps one hundred and fifty persons were seated at dinner in the banquet room of a tea shop in Los Angeles. Two-thirds of those present represented the great building industry, the architects and contractors. The remaining third were the owners or representatives of owners of buildings which had received "Honor Awards" as being outstanding examples of last year's quota of Southern California architecture. Every year a jury of distinguished architects is called in by the Southern California Chapter of American Institute of Architects, to select the Honor Awards in all classes of construction. One building is chosen by them in each class.

The Chapter has very wisely decided that the three factors to the completion of any truly fine piece of architecture, must all be recognized. Certificates of merit were therefore awarded to Owner, Architect and Contractor. The building designed by John and Donald Parkinson for the Los Angeles Gas and Electric Corporation was selected by the jury as being the outstanding example in class for the year 1924.

The president of the Chapter, in presenting the certificates, expressed a hope that those receiving them would respond with a few remarks. From the first few words of Mr. Barhyte, who represented the Los Angeles Gas and Electric Corporation, it was evident that that great organization is justly proud of its new possession and the honor bestowed upon it. His word revealed the very great esprit de corps which brought about the necessity for larger accommodations for public service. He was the personification of the spirit which is evident the moment one steps through the portal of their new building on Flower street. Every employee one meets seems to have a sense of ownership in the new home and unconsciously drops into use of the first person plural when speaking to the stranger.

This spirit of pride in work well done has actuated all those whose efforts and abilities have made the building possible. The architects who designed it and the craftsmen whose skill is manifested there rightfully claim an equal share with the owner whose wisdom gave them freedom to create a useful and beautiful building.

The great stone arches of the front entrance are a striking feature of the design. The great wrought-iron bracket lamps at either side of the entrance arches were designed by Mr. H. C. Frost of the Roberts Manufacturing Company of 827 South Hill street. His creation was inspired by sketches made by the architect in Italy. They are of the finest Italian Rennaissance iron work. The Roberts Manufacturing Company are responsible for work of this high type on many of Southern California's most distinguished buildings, and Mr. Frost's genius has added much to their success.

The vigorous bold scale of the lamps by the Roberts Company finds a pleasing contrast, as we enter the portals of the lobby, in the work of Frank Weingartner of the Wrought Iron Studios, 420 Bernardo street. In the exquisitely designed and wrought gates, Mr. Weingartner has revived the spirit of the medieval craftsmen. Close examination shows every minute piece as carefully formed as if it alone were the chief element of the design. The revival of the use of wrought iron, especially in Southern California, has made it possible for craftsmen such as Mr. Weingartner to produce work which compares in merit with the cherished iron work of Latin Europe. It is always a pleasure to talk to craftsmen in iron, for they invariably are completely absorbed in the tradition of their craft and have high hopes for its future.

Another craftsman whose work has added its charm to the building is Emile Maloof of the E. A. Maloof ompany, 307 South Vermont. His consummate skill and sensitiveness in the design and execution of lighting fixtures has brought him many clients among those who are seeking for the best that can be produced in this difficult craft. Examples of his work are found in the elevator lobby, the ante rooms at the front of the lobby and in the executive rooms on the ninth floor. No adequate conception of his great versatility can be had from the accompanying illustrations. A visit to Mr. Maloof's studio will prove a delight and a surprise to one interested in beautiful craftsmanship.

The interior of the lobby, the executive rooms and many portions of the special decorations were executed by two young artists whose unusual abilities in all forms of decoration have set them apart as craftsmen of the highest order. The work of Herman Sachs and Joseph Konde is sought by many architects, for it is known that their basic knowledge of design and color theory will bring the beautiful and dignified effects that every architect seeks. Mr. Konde, a graduate of the New York Art Academy and Art Students' League, was formerly a pupil and worker with the famous Hugo Ballan. Mr. Sachs, the son of an artist father whose name is a byword in European art, is a graduate in art of several European schools, and organizer of successful arts and crafts movements in Munich. His studies have carried him through most of the Mediterranean countries and he has executed work in Germany, Russia, Bulgaria, and other countries. The versatility of both men is indicated by the fact that their work includes the design and execution of tapestries and embroideries, batik and printing of textiles, jewelry, ceramics and glass mosaics. They are co-authors of a book on anatomy for artists. Their studio at 6948 Washington Boulevard in Culver City contains a wealth of decorative materials from their skullful hands.

H. S. McClelland, one of Los Angeles' foremost and experienced heating and ventilating contractors, was selected by the architects to install the most modern equipment that has been devised. The heating is both by direct and indirect, steam being supplied by five gas fired boilers. The lobby floor and three floor levels are heated in cool weather by clean, humidified, warm air, which not only obtains very healthful conditions, but makes possible lower room temperatures with the same degree of comfort, and brings about a considerable saving in fuel. This system is so arranged that in warm weather cool, fresh air is supplied to these floors. The garage is so ventilated that all gases are removed and the air kept fresh. Mr. McClelland was responsible for the successful operation of the entire system.

ONE OF THE BEAUTIFUL BRACKET LAMPS, WHICH ADORN THE EXTERIOR ARCHES OF THE ENTRANCE. DESIGNED BY H. C. FROST OF THE ROBERTS MANUFACTURING COMPANY.

THE DIRECTORS' ROOM, SHOWING WORK OF THE COMMERCIAL FIXTURE COMPANY, IN THE FINE OAK PANELING. JOHN PARKINSON AND DONALD B. PARKINSON, ARCHITECTS.

Some writer on building construction has compared the mechanical equipment of a building to the nerves of the human body. It is a happy comparison for surely neither body nor building will function properly unless its "nerves" are of the best. In a great organization such as is housed in this great building there is constant need for instant inter-communication. This has been provided by the installation of the most modern type of inter-communicating telephone known as the "Dictograph." Batteries of these efficient little instruments may be seen on the counters in one of the lobby illustration accompanying this article. There's no operator, no busy wire. The man Higher-up sits at his desk, and yet is "all over his plant," keeping every man at his best, through the Dictograph.

He gets one or half a dozen men at once—holds conferences, gives orders, gets information—all without calling a single man from his department.

And not only does the Dictograph keep the Executive in touch with his men, but it gives every department instant, automatic communication with every other department. The Dictograph is represented in Los Angeles by Mr. Leroy C. Bishop, Pacific Mutual Building.

A story of this great building would be incomplete without mention of the painstaking work of the Commercial Fixture Company whose shop at 6000 South Park Avenue is one of the best equipped and busiest in Los Angeles. Their craft is quite as venerable as that of iron working and likewise they are quite as proud of it. No one could talk long with Mr. H. R. Baker of the Commercial Fixture Company without feeling behind his quiet modesty the self reliance of a true craftsman. The oak paneling and much of the other wood work in the building was installed under the watchful supervision of Mr. Baker and his associates. The most careful design on the part of architect will come to naught in the hands of a poor craftsman. This is especially true of fine wood work where the improper cutting of subtle moulding curves will take the life and character from the design. The work of the Commercial Fixture Company has carefully retained the intention of the designer and has left the woodwork ready to be enhanced and beautified by the skill of the painter and decorator. Modern painting materials have greatly advanced and at the same time greatly complicated the painter's art. The color schemes selected by the architects were skillfully interpreted by the painting contractor, Robert P. Tuttle, 2827 West Pico. Mr. Tuttle's craftsmanship has brought out the satiny beauty of grain in oak paneling and trim. Throughout the building there is evidence of his intimate practical knowledge and thoroughness.

The visitor to the building should not fail to visit the basement lobby where, through plate glass windows may be viewed the great electrical switch board. This board is a part of the electrical work performed by the firm of George L. Patterson, 646 Maple Avenue. The board is considered by electrical engineers as a model of efficient and economical design. Mr. Patterson's organization laid thousands of feet of conduit and miles of wire all controlled from this great board. This firm was also responsible for the fabrication of the flood lighting fixture which may be seen running across the building at the third floor line. On this building the flood lighting fixture has been made a decorative feature. The lights are in a metal and glass trough behind the fixture and are made to reflect both up and down.

By featuring the work and the abilities of local craftsmen the Southland hopes to draw its readers to the work shops of Southern California where products of every description are being manufactured at our door enriching our community. We have taken the "trade at home" slogan to heart and hope to do our bit for the upbuilding of this great commonwealth.

A GLIMPSE OF THE CONSUMMATE ART IN DESIGN AND COLOR, OF HERMAN SACHS, AS SHOWN IN HIS DECORATION OF THE CEILINGS OF THIS BUILDING.

THE PRESIDENT'S ROOM, IN WHICH CAN BE SEEN A BIT OF EMILE MALOOF'S ARTISTIC WORK, IN AN ELECTRIC FIXTURE.

INTERIOR OF MAIN LOBBY, A STRIKINGLY HANDSOME AND IMPRESSIVE FEATURE OF THIS SPLENDID BUILDING, SHOWING ON COUNTER, THE BATTERIES OF THE DICTOGRAPH, THAT MOST WONDERFUL OF WONDERFUL INVENTIONS, INSTALLED BY MR. LEROY C. BISHOP.

IN THIS CORNER OF THE LOBBY CAN BE SEEN A VENTILATOR AND TWO HEATERS, PART OF THE CLEVER HEATING SYSTEM INSTALLED BY H. S. McCLELLAND.

VIEW OF THE LOBBY, SHOWING THE SKILLED WORKMANSHIP OF ROBERT P. TUTTLE IN PRESERVING AND EMPHASIZING THE BEAUTY OF THE WOODWORK THROUGH THE MEDIUM OF HIS PAINT.

PHOTOGRAPHS ILLUSTRATING THIS ARTICLE BY VIROGUE BAKER.

ARTS AND CRAFTS OF CALIFORNIA

TERRA COTTA AND THE WORK OF MAUD DAGGETT, SCULPTOR

NEW YORK is far away and the casting of statuary is an onerous piece of work, so it befits us to investigate the means near at hand whereby the work of our talented sculptors may be put into permanent form.

For several years Miss Daggett has taken her garden pieces, fountains and portraits in clay to the Italian Terra Cotta Company of Los Angeles where she has worked directly with the experts who are there.

Results have now been tested for a length of time which gives confidence in this medium. Its softness and color, its adaptability to garden conditions and its delicate human feeling are largely the result of this sculptor's superb talent; but all lovers of art are interested to encourage this art in California.

The accompanying portrait bust of Mrs. Harrison Riley has been exhibited lately in the house of the artist and her sister in Pasadena where the gifted founder of the Drama League gave a reading to the delight of her friends of Chicago and California.

In the gardens of the Southland terra cotta statuary is most appropriate. Miss Daggett's fountain in the garden of Mrs. Finkbine, Oak Knoll, has weathered beautifully, and become a distinct feature of the place.

In the hill-set garden of Mrs. Harry Gray on Orange Grove Avenue, the goose girl fountain which appeared in the Salon when Miss Daggett was studying in Paris has been set between wall and lily pool and seems as much at home as though it had been there always.

PORTRAIT HEAD OF MRS. HARRISON B. RILEY. MAUD DAGGETT, SCULPTOR.

ARTS AND CRAFTS SOCIETY

By Marion Hugus Clark, Secretary

A CALIFORNIA day. Eighteen holes of golf just finished. The car parked in front of a new house belonging to a friend of a friend. The open door and the sound of busy workmen inside was irresistible. Intruders should expect to be repulsed, but we were fortunate in coming at that gentle hour when a house is almost finished and there is the peace of honest achievement. The head carpenter was proud of the work and glad to show us the ice-box in which one hundred pounds of ice would last a very long time, the snug but smooth drawers, the corner fireplace in the guest room.

It was a beautiful house. The owner had a good architect and conscientious workmen. This triangle of owner, architect and workmen had contrived a page for the interior decorator, just as the vacant lot was a page for the architect after the owner had bought it and decided to build. My contemporaries will remember a beautiful book of Elbert Hubbard's called: "The Perfect Book." It contained not a word written or printed. Probably most of us feel that reverence for the blank page and hope that we will make a worthy use of it. It was honest use that Herman Sachs made of the walls of the Los Angeles Gas and Electric Company.

As we looked through the house and saw its possibilities for beauty, we wondered what would happen to the well proportioned walls after the decorator had finished and the family had moved in. They might even choose velour curtains. It was a desparate thought and I straightway sought the owner, whom I found sitting out by the garage. Probably the garage held more peace than the house for an owner that has yet to think of paint, curtains and furniture. He was a courteous young man, willing to listen to any suggestions I might make but tired. He said that if the ones I recommended would be quick about it and send in their bids, he would consider them. It was sad. Beauty cannot be ordered over the telephone. You don't say, I want fifty dollars worth of chair beauty. Most fifty dollar chairs are hideous. There is a beautiful one that costs less than three dollars. Neither can a decorator be hurried. He must consider his page and the people who are to live with it.

It is here that well organized Arts and Crafts societies should help. The architect, the tile maker, the interior decorator, the curtain and lamp-shade maker, the silversmith, the sculptor, the weaver, the bookbinder, workers in wood and iron. Each for the good of his own art, considering his art first, his client second, himself last and finally with sympathy for the other arts, working all for each and each for all.

Mrs. Willoughby Rodman addressed the Arts and Crafts Society at a special meeting held in their rooms at 2508 West Seventh Street on March 31. The subject was Arts and Crafts in the Balkans. Miss Anito Delano, the chairman of the Entertainment Committee, also secured musicians who played Balkan music. Miss Marguerita Brunswig has charge of the Social Committee, which served coffee.

THE COLOR PLATES

ON our cover for April is a three-color reproduction of a water color by Bessie Ella Hazen, a member of the Faculty of the Art Department of the University of California at Los Angeles.

She was born in Canada and studied for some time at Columbia University, New York. She belongs to the California Art Club and the Printmakers' Society of California, and has received several honors, namely: Second Prize for Water Colors, Arizona State Fair, 1917; Prize for Monotypes, Arizona State Fair, 1917; Honorable Mention for Black and White, Arizona State Fair, 1920.

A Southland painter, she belongs also to the California Water Color Society, the Arthur Wesley Dow Association and the Art Teachers' Association, and is president of the West Coast Arts, Inc.

Water color is a most difficult medium in which to record the beauties seen by a true artist, yet it is decidedly appropriate for California landscape. Miss Hazen handles her brushes with great skill and interprets the color and delicacy of the desert with feeling and sympathy. Some of her recent work, on exhibition at the Los Angeles Museum of History, Science and Art is listed as follows:

Rock Castles of Mexico.
In Mexico.
Evening.
Sunset in Imperial Valley.
Laguna Headland
Sunrise at Boulder Park.
At Mountain Springs.
Sunlight and Shadow.
Mount Kendrick, Arizona.
Santa Cruz Island.
Mojave Desert.
Laguna.
At Pebble Beach.
Point Lobos.
San Francisco Peaks, Arizona.
In San Diego.
The Shipyard.
Near Carriso Gorge.
The Castle of Macbeth.
Spring.
In Redondo.
Carmel Pine.
Portugese Bend.
Rocks and Ocean.
Sunrise at San Jacinto.
The Pines of Asilomar.

FAIRYLAND

FAIRYLAND is not in story-books alone, when there is a green-decked pavilion set in readiness for Titania's train. Here, where high trees wave their shimmering branches and the pale moon looks from her lofty throne, the magic setting is ready, and Puck creeps forth from the woodland with his regal Oberon. Titania's fairies pass in gorgeous splendor, and innocent mortals fall victims to the trap of magic set to catch up fairy plans. Peter Pan did not ask too much when he made the children pledge belief in fairies, for on the outdoor stage it has been proved that fairyland exists. —From Mills College Annual.

AN INVITATION

You and your friends are cordially invited to attend the formal opening of Offices and Studio of

HARRY HAYDEN WHITELEY, Architest.

Wednesday, April 8th, 1925,
11 A. M. to 10:30 P. M.

320 Madison Avenue,
Culver City, Calif.

Welcome to call and Browse

Rare & Art Books

First Editions
Early Printing
Autographs
Americana

Books Notable for Printing Illustrations and Binding.

Dawson's Book Shop
627 So. Grand Ave.

Catalogues sent on request:—

FOR SALE

Handsome antique mahogany sideboard, wonderful carving.

Present owner bought it from the late Marquess of Anglesey. Price $1000.

Fair Oaks 8244

COSTUME SHOP
of the Assistance League
5604 de Longpre Ave., Hollywood
Have you a costume you would like to see in the movies? Give it to the Hollywood Thrift Shop
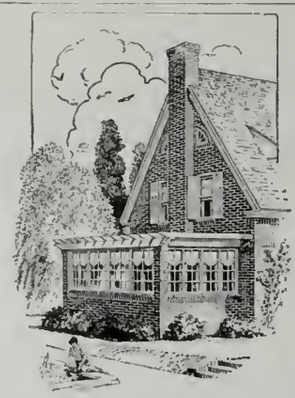
of the Assistance League

S. M. Wershow
LADIES TAILOR
Riding Habits, Coats and Suits
Furs Stored and Repaired
7066 Hollywood Boulevard
Hollywood
GRanit 4254

FLORNINA
Gowns · Negligees · Accessories
Ready to Wear or Made to Order
95 South Los Robles Ave., Pasadena
Phone Fair Oaks 113



THE CALIFORNIA SCHOOL OF GARDENING FOR WOMEN
Offers a two years course in practical gardening, including the propagation and care of flowers, shrubs, fruit and vegetables, the laying out and management of small gardens as well as large estates. At Hayward, California (one hour by train or motor from San Francisco). Principal: Miss J. Walrond-Skinner, N.D., Hort., F.R.H.S. Tuition $250 per annum. Term begins Jan. 15, 1925. Only six students will be taken the first year. Write for information and make application now to the Principal, Hayward, California.

Antiques
JOHN W. CONDIT
Dealer in rare old pieces selected from private homes. Specialist in the proper restoration of heirlooms.
199 S. Fair Oaks Ave. Tel. F. O. 315
Pasadena, California

L. BIXBY-SMITH
Camera Portraits
Architectural Studies
2504 W. 7th St.,
Los Angeles, Calif.
Phone Fitzroy 3542

H. O. CLARKE
General Building Contractor
388 So. Raymond Ave., Pasadena, Calif.
Phone Fair Oaks 537

Plan Your Home Now!

GET the most attractive book published on building a home —"The Story of Brick." It tells you the things you want to know. It is read in the schools. Send for your copy today. No charge.

"Bungalow and Small House Plans." Four booklets showing 3 to 4-room, 5-room, 6-room and 7 to 8-room houses. Each, 25 cents. Entire set, $1.00.

"The Home of Beauty" with 50 charming designs of 6-room houses. Sent for 50 cents.

Complete plans on all these houses available at nominal prices.

"The Home Fires" tells how to build a real fireplace and shows many attractive fireplace designs. Sent for 25 cents.

These booklets published by the American Face Brick Association, of which we are a member, may be obtained at our display room on the sixth floor of the Frost Building.

"The Standard of Quality in Clay Products"
L·A·Pressed Brick Co
ENTIRE SIXTH FLOOR..... FROST BLDG
Second and Broadway .....n... TRinity 5761
LOS ANGELES 161

FROM MILLS COLLEGE ANNUAL

EL CAMPANIL

VEILED in the morning mist, half hidden among the protecting trees, the clock-tower seems to withhold its clear-tongued message and the hours, quarters, and halves, ring out modestly and with unassuming clarity. But when the sun has warmed away the mist, and the trees have shrunk back to their natural green reserve, the Campanil raises its voice in richer, warmer friendliness. Its voice rings with a mellow fluency, and the whole campus is aware of its urging, pulsing personality as it sounds the morning into afternoon, and the afternoon into evening. And at last, when the day's work is finished and weary mortals have slipped away in dreams, the tower stands tall in the silver moonlight, faithfully tolling the changeless cycle of hours.

THE EUCALYPTUS PATH

WHAT part of the campus is more truly a place of worship than the eucalyptus path, a living temple and growing cathedral? In the vaulted roof of swaying branches, quiet birds find places for their nests, and bees gather from tasseled blossoms the honey for their queens. Little mortals, passing carelessly or thoughtfully along the cloistered way, find inspiration in the high-arched trees which stand as symbols of beauty. Sunshine, slanting through the tapered leaves, falls in dappled splendor fairer than "storied windows, richly dight, casting a dim, religious light." Unseen and unheard, but deeply felt, there falls on all who pass that way a peaceful benediction.

LAKE ALISO

EACH spring a vast supply of liquid emeralds is stored carelessly in a hollow of the hills, where all who will may see the mass of jewels sparkling in the sun or lying cold and green under the sheltering sky. Some call this pool of loveliness an ordinary lake, but those who know it better prefer to think of it as an enchanted mirror where lofty trees may look down quietly into their clear reflections. Upon its jewelled surface, small boats may glide serenely, and at times the magic waters will cast a spell over unwary being and make them plunge exuberantly into the refreshing waters. All this is April at Lake Aliso.

T. W. Mather Co. Inc.
PASADENA, CAL.
Dry Goods
Women's & Children's
Wearing Apparel
Colorado Street at Marengo

HEWSON HAND CRAFT STUDIOS
Handwoven One Piece Dresses, Coats and Scarfs, Canadian and Candlewick Bedspreads
Dutch and East Indian Brass, Beads, Fine Pendants and Objects of Art in Great Variety
F. O. 6555 — 602 E. Colorado St. Pasadena
DUnkirk 4909 — 2508½ W. 7th St. Los Angeles

MRS. CHARLES C. BELL
Orchard Homes and Villas
Mountainside Acreage
Rentals Near Good Board
SARATOGA - - CALIFORNIA

HILLER'S STUDIO
Official Photographer for California Southland
49 East Colorado Street
Pasadena, California
Albert Hiller Phone, Fair Oaks 155

French and Italian Arts
Imported by
ELEANOR AND HOLLINGSWORTH BEACH
Italian Sports Hats — Antiques
Old Furniture — Brocades
Embroidered Linens — Old Prints
French Faience — Italian Majolica
Large Parchment Portfolios for Prints and Photographs
630 E. Colorado Street, Pasadena, California
Fair Oaks 6028

GEORGE · D · MAIGHT
159 · NO · MEREDITH · AVE ·
PASADENA · CALIFORNIA
TELEPHONE F·O·3153
ARCHITECTURAL · PHOTOGRAPHS

ASSISTANCE LEAGUE OF SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

MONTHLY BULLETIN

"All for Service—And Service for All"

OFFICERS:

MRS. HANCOCK BANNING, President
MRS. EDWARDS LAUGHLIN, First Vice President
MRS. WILLIAM GIBBS MCADOO, Sec. Vice-Pres.
MRS. ERWIN P. WERNER, Third Vice-President
MRS. E. AVERY MCCARTHY, Fourth Vice-Pres.
MRS. JAMES REED, Secretary
MRS. J. WARREN TATUM, Treas.
MR. D. C. MACWATTERS, Auditor

ORDINARILY, things do not just start, as did Minerva, our first feminist, who sprang so adroitly from her august parent's massive brain, but as a rule are preceded by a sequence of events. Our Assistance League and Film Location Bureau are no exceptions to this rule.

During our recent war, when every avenue for securing funds for our Great Cause was being evolved in the Los Angeles Red Cross Shop, use was made of the homes of some of our workers by the cinema companies, the money accruing going into the great fund for Red Cross. Many of our overseas veterans, since returned, have mentioned the thrill of joy they experienced, when worn, tired and homesick, sometimes ill in hospitals, or far away in the North Sea with our fleet, they would attend a cinema and there see their beloved California homes, gardens—in some instances the lads' own homes,—ranches, orange groves, mountains and hills, flash before them on the screen. And nothing all the kind, thoughtful ones at home could have done to alleviate the dreariness of their lives could have been more effectual than this one thing, though we did not realize that we were doing other than acquiring funds for our Red Cross work and that in reality the blessing would be twofold in its benefit to our lads across the sea.

After the war, when our local charities so needed resuscitating, our President of the Assistance League decided to revive the old Assistance League and incorporate the plan for relief work which had formerly been used, under the name of the Good Samaritan Committee, and she conceived the idea that what had been done in a small way regarding the use of homes for filming by the cinema companies, could be done in a more comprehensive manner and made into a remunerative source of income to finance our Good Samaritan work and aid toward assisting our various charities, most particularly the children's charities.

She believed that in Los Angeles and environs there are splendid opportunities for revenue which have been untouched; that these opportunities may be used to help finance charities already organized, as well as cases of individuals, and develop an organization which will meet the broader demands of an enlarged community.

After formulating the plan, advice was sought from some of our most important film directors and celebrities, including Cecil De Mille, Wm. De Mille, Jesse Lasky, David Wark Griffith, Harry Lehr, Douglas Fairbanks, Dustin Farnum, Wm. Farnum, Lois Webber, Winifred Kingston, Marion Fairfax, and many others, men and women who have been ever ready in our community to aid in all good works.

When the filming industry in Los Angeles first started, inhabitants of the city were most lenient in permitting the use of their homes for the filming, but unfortunately the privilege had been abused by some of the comedy companies and in consequence the majority of homes had been withdrawn. So the plan presented by the Location Bureau met with a warm response, this being an excellent way to solve their difficulty in securing locations, and the cinema companies promised to cooperate in every way with the Assistance League to safeguard the property of their patrons.

Plan of Film Location Bureau—Locations, the term used by the film companies for the use of homes, small or large; gardens; business houses; ranches; driveways; old barns; gates, etc., for filming pictures. When the home, estate, etc., is listed with our Film Location Bureau the owner may state to what purpose the proceeds accruing from the use of same is to be designated, with the understanding that 30 per cent shall go to the Assistance League to carry on overhead charges and aid in various welfare works of the League, viz.: aiding shut-ins and cripples and giving them work; in carrying on the work of the Woman's Exchange; the Tiny Tim Fund (this means endowing a bed for a crippled child in perpetuity) and the Building Fund for our Children's Day Nursery. It must here be stated that the Community Chest gives us funds for the operating expenses of the Day Nursery and also the Good Samaritan Bureau. When the owner does not designate a particular charity he or she desires to aid, the entire amount goes toward the welfare work of the League as specified.

WORKING ON ONE OF THE EXCLUSIVE LOCATIONS OF THE ASSISTANCE LEAGUE.

To safeguard our patrons, a contract is signed by the film companies when using properties through our Film Location Bureau, which definitely prescribes number of days property may be used, sum of money to be paid, and responsibility for all damage, if any should follow the use of property.

Through the funds accruing from the Location Bureau, supplemented by various entertainments, the League distributed to worthy charities in 1922, $2,781 which brings the total distribution of funds to charities during the first two years and ten months' existence of the Assistance League, ending December 31, 1922, to $37,088.67, or an average of $1,090.61 per month distributed to charities.

We have demonstrated that not only will the Assistance League be aided by securing all locations possible and listing same with the Location Bureau of the League, but that this plan is the easiest way of raising the largest amount of funds for any particular charity that is possible and with least effort. When you compare this method of raising funds, to the wear and tear on women giving benefits and entertainments, selling tickets, etc., which take days and weeks of labor on the part of so many, not to mention the expense, it is hard to see why members of the various charities do not make use of the Location Bureau more frequently than they do.

There is another angle which must not be forgotten, and that is the happiness derived in sharing something beautiful one may possess with others not so fortunate. God has been good to you and given you a home, a beautiful garden, and perhaps a picturesque cottage, a quaint barn, a factory, a ranch, and any of these can do their bit in the community to help the many who need assisting. Then still another angle: think of the desolate, lonely ones, whose only home is a back hall bedroom, where the sun never shines. The evening at the cinema they can have their little hour of joy, living in their imagination in your sun-kissed garden, wander through your shady grove, and rest beside your cool fountain.

Do not your possessions seem much more precious in the thought that you are sharing your joys and bringing happiness into so many gray lives, and with so little trouble on your part. On the contrary it will be a most interesting experience as we have found it so many times, in giving our homes and gardens to be filmed. We double our blessings when we give them away! Being a true Californian, I must not neglect the booster's angle and state that the cinema has penetrated to the farthest confines of earth and through this medium, more than any other, will the charms of our southland be revealed to the world.

The personnel and the organizers of our League consist largely of the women who organized and carried on the Red Cross Shop. Our efficient chairman of the Location Bureau, Mrs. Edwards Laughlin, who accomplished such brilliant war work as head of the Jewelry Department of the Red Cross Shop, (the department alone turning in to Red Cross, some $12,000), is also Vice-President of the Assistance League, and aided in organizing this work in its early beginnings. Assisting her is Mrs. Wm. B. McLaine, whose untiring energies have done much toward the readjusting of this department, and with a splendid committee behind them, we are looking for big things from the Film Location Bureau.

Our needs are great and our avenues for securing funds are limited. By listing your property, or securing locations from your friends, by sending to the Community House at 5604 de Longpre Avenue your discarded clothes and jewelry, you are aiding us feed the hungry, care for the sick, secure situations for the discouraged workers, help the little children, and spread blessings far and wide. Only that little moment of thoughtfulness on your part, will mean so much, to so many. Will you do your part?

UP THE VALLEY

IN answer to inquiries regarding a trip north, CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND wishes to advise visitors to California to motor up the valley and down the Coast roads. A pleasant breeze from the Bay meets one travelling up the Valley and makes the trip delightful in all months. In Fresno, the Californian, a new, up-to-date hotel has been built like the accompanying picture of the Los Angeles Biltmore, the beginning and end of the Californian trips; but in Fresno the court opens to the north and all rooms receive this bay breeze. In each room also are instructions for those who would motor to Yosemite and all the fine mountain resorts, for which Fresno is the starting point.

We cannot begin too early to ask strangers in this two season climate always to break their matches before throwing them away in California.

THE LOS ANGELES BILTMORE ON PERSHING SQUARE

DOWN THE COAST

THE country as host to the town has always been taken for granted among city dwellers; but nowhere in the country has the idea developed more fully than in the smaller California communities. In the Southland of California the idea has been made the most of by promoters of that much subdivided territory; and their clever ingenuity has found means to attract out onto the newly developed land a multitude which spends its time upon the highway and which looks upon "home" as "a place to park the family while the car is being painted."

In that part of the state which was settled by home-loving people long before the automobile revolutionized country life, however, the countryside has attained two distinct functions; that of sheltering delightful country estates for established families, and that of offering retreats for tired city workers. Nearness to the metropolis, as well as unusual scenic attractiveness, has made the district down the San Francisco peninsula, into Santa Clara and Santa Cruz Counties, of unusual interest to those Californians who know how to use the country to the best advantage; and the mountains of Santa Cruz hide hundreds of exclusive vacationists who respect that delightful retreat and work always to preserve it from fire and careless usage.

The million or more people who have come to southern California during the last two or three decades have been so dazzled by the sunshine and so confused by the substitution of two seasons for the four opportunities for factory sites and new towns like Torrance in the South. On the right pleasant home-sites and villa tracts stretch away up into the hills and over the mountains to the Pacific Ocean. As far down the peninsula as San Mateo one may go by bus or trolley for a ten cent fare and many are the homes small and large now being built there.

At Palo Alto, seat of Leland Stanford Jr. University, transportation for the peninsula hinges. Trains go on to San Jose or to Los Gatos and Santa Cruz and down south. The Coast line, to San Luis Obispo, has made its summer rates to suit the weekend tripper and empty the city on vacation days.

From Palo Alto the stages and trolley lines take up the refrain and carry commuters and visitors to clean little cross-road towns or more pretentious shopping centers.

A map of the Santa Clara Valley shows all roads radiating from San Jose, the County seat, situated about half way between the Mt. Hamilton Range with its high pastures and its great Lick Observatory, and the Santa Cruz Mountains along whose foothills run the roads and trolley lines to Los Gatos and Saratoga. Out from the County seat runs an electric interurban making a loop to include both towns and a wealth of orchard and garden. On the direct route to Los Gatos, one passes through Campbell, a valley town where fruit is packed and shipped. The Campbell Country Women's Club spon-they grew up in, that they have not yet grasped the whole of the state as a unit, nor do they think in terms of California naturally. Many in their search for variety have found Old Monterey, Del Monte, and Carmel-by-the-Sea. They have attended a church conference at the Y. W. C. A. Camp, Asilomar, and have, perhaps heard of the town of Santa Cruz across the Bay of Monterey.

But of that delightful, intimate stretch of country south of San Francisco and north of Santa Cruz they know practically nothing; nor is their itinerary planned to give more than one day to San Francisco and its Presidio. This is no tourist country. Attractive for those to whom the sign-plastered stretches of typical tourist lands have grown intolerable, it must be known intimately through letters to its devoted admirers and home makers before it can be judged as a district in which to settle. One may, nevertheless, catch glimpses of its beauties and hidden retreats when motoring or trolleying along the many fine suburban lines. Little is seen from the steam cars, and that little is uninterpreted unless one follows the tourist privilege and asks questions as did a young girl who on her first tour with her parents asked questions continuously from Del Monte to San Jose of a native seated beside her. "Where are you from?" she asked at last, surprised that any one should know so much about the country. "I was born here," replied her cicerone. "Ma," exclaimed the girl, calling across the aisle to her parents, and pointing to her seatmate, "Pa! She was born here." Yes, there are in the Santa Clara Valley many thousands who were born in California and whose children were born in the same home that they were. Naturally they cling to these homes and do not care to sell them.

Yet room is being made for selected newcomers who have the proper credentials and who will respect the customs of the countryside and not set fire to the forests or grazing land.

Travelling down the peninsula from San Francisco by train, trolley or motor, one notes first the great development of the industrial district of South San Francisco running across the line into San Mateo County. Hundreds of little holdings for industrial workers prove that the city is still holding its reputation as a place where everyone owns his own home. Farther south along the bay shore are countless sors concerts for the community and lately gave an Urmy memorial program of song and verse. So one catches glimpses by daily paper of the genial life of the people. Notable in this way is the annual pageant play at Los Gatos. A visit to that town during preparation for the event is more enlightening than a mere seat in the audience on the night of the pageant. Mrs. Kathleen Norris lives in Los Gatos and appeared on the winding street with a bevy of small children for whom she was hunting costumes in the local department store. Mrs. Young (Ruth Comfort Mitchell), champion always for the American Indian, and now especially indignant over the religious persecution our Indian Commissioner is forcing upon the United States Government, always dresses as an Indian in the yearly pageant. An interview with Wilbur Hall, author, producer, and leading man in the play, brought out his opinion that the pageant is California's natural form of expression and his firm conviction that this big art will find a place in every town and village. Starting with the first little community pageant in Hollywood, Mr. Hall has seen twenty towns take up the production of pageantry. He now affirms that a summer school course in Pageantry at the University of California would combine playground work with art, and teaching the essentials of pageantry production would develop native talent in every little town. That the University Extension work in rural districts will soon consider this idea of Wilbur Hall's is assured, and its aid to contentment for country communities is endless.

From Los Gatos the trolley flies past many a charming country-seat. The new site for the Los Gatos-Saratoga Golf Club, (now opening its new rolls to members), is on the right, its rolling hills overlooking the whole valley and promising much to future residents.

Nippon Mura Hotel in delightful Japanese architecture is set near Austin Corners, and is well worth investigating by home seekers. It makes a fine point of entry to the best life of the place.

As we near Saratoga we pass the entrance to Villa Montalvo, country-seat of James D. Phelan; and nearby is the old Hume Ranch now being subdivided. In Saratoga, a charming cross roads village good board and lodging can be found at "The Lundblads" and at The Inn; and one may learn all about rents and sales from Mrs. C. C. Bell.

The Ideal Investment

70,000 people have chosen Edison Stock as an investment combining the features of Safety

Good Rate of Return
Ready Marketability
High Collateral Value
Excellent Reputation

Continuous Dividends for 16 Years

Edison 7% Cumulative Preferred

PRICE: $105 cash, or
$106 at $5 per share per month

Ask at any Edison Office

Southern California Edison Company

Important Louis XV Cabinet of inlaid Rosewood and Mahogany, mounted in Cuivre Doré, copied from the one designed by Schlodtz in 1739 and now in the Bibliothêque Nationale. Rococo at its height.

One of the recent importations of

The Meyer and di Segni Gallery

Antique Furniture, Paintings, Fabrics, Marbles, and Bronzes

640 South Figueroa Street Los Angeles

VAndike 2936

YOU WILL ENJOY A VISIT TO OUR GALLERY

Choose your own architect from the representative styles shown in "California Homes" by California Architects. Price $1.00.

Address: ELLEN LEECH,
544 So. El Molino Avenue Pasadena, Calif.

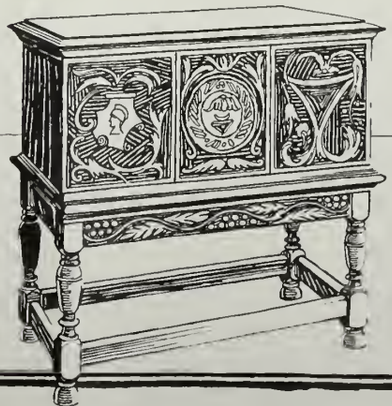
THE BATCHELDER TILES



We produce Tile for Fireplaces, Fountains, Pavements, Garden Pots---anything that is appropriately made from clay. :: :: :: :: ::

LOS ANGELES, CALIFORNIA

THERE is no more fitting complement to a beautiful home than a phonograph or radio from The Music Lover's Shop.

The standard and Art models of Victrolas & Imported Art Cabinets that are shown here offer unparalleled opportunities for selection.

RICHARDSON'S INC
The Music Lovers' Shop
NOW~at 730 West Seventh St.

MR. BRADFORD PERIN'S NEW ROOM IS ATTRACTING WIDE ATTENTION FROM ARCHITECTS BECAUSE OF ITS TILED CEILING.

The Serendipity Antique Shop

26 and 30 South Los Robles Avenue, Pasadena, California

BRADFORD PERIN, Proprietor

FAIR OAKS 7111

CALIFORNIA'S HOME AND GARDEN MAGAZINE

CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND

CALIFORNIA STATE LIBRARY

A California Idyl. From a painting in oil by Arthur M. Hazard.

No. 65 MAY 1925 25 Cents

ALLIED ARCHITECTS ASSOCIATION OF LOS ANGELES

DESIGNERS OF

PATRIOTIC HALL

LOS ANGELES GENERAL HOSPITAL

ADDITIONS TO THE MUSEUM OF HISTORY SCIENCE AND ART

EXTERIOR DESIGN OF THE HALL OF JUSTICE

ARCHITECTURAL TREATMENT OF VIADUCTS AND BRIDGES OF THE CITY OF LOS ANGELES

ADMINISTRATION CENTER FOR THE CITY AND COUNTY OF LOS ANGELES

AN ASSOCIATION FOR FURNISHING ARCHITECTURAL SERVICE FOR PUBLIC STRUCTURES ONLY

NATURE permits no incongruities in her combinations of color. And the kiln interprets Nature with sympathy and tact. The variegated colors created in the fire of the kiln show wide range from tile to tile, but Latin Tile roofs always hold one of Nature's most appealing tints—a soft rose overtone. Under any sky, and in all lights, the singular beauty of these tile roofs is compelling and refreshing.

E. P. GAVIT HOUSE, MONTECITO, CALIFORNIA. REGINALD D. JOHNSON, ARCHITECT

LATIN ROOF TILE

GLADDING, McBEAN & CO.

General Office: 660 MARKET STREET, SAN FRANCISCO

TROPICO PLANT: GLENDALE, LOS ANGELES COUNTY, CALIFORNIA

LINCOLN PLANT: LINCOLN, PLACER COUNTY, CALIFORNIA

For information regarding PASADENA, her surroundings and living advantages write to the CHAMBER of COMMERCE, 100 So. Raymond Ave., Pasadena, California

Cumnock School

Los Angeles

Fall Term Opens October 6th
Summer School Starts June 16th

An old California day and resident school with splendid new buildings. 31st year. Reservations now being accepted.

School of Expression (College grade), specializing in Voice; Diction; Literary Interpretation; Story-telling; Public Speaking; Dramatics.

Academy—an accredited Junior and Senior High School in class A.

Write for Catalog.

Helen A. Brooks, A. M., Director, 5353 West Third St.

THOMAS FRANKLIN POWER
ARCHITECT
AND
ARCHITECTURAL ENGINEER

DUNKIRK 1442

2615 W. SEVENTH ST.
LOS ANGELES

WE offer for investment of Personal or Trust Funds sound Securities returning highest rates consistent with safety.

WILLIAM R. STAATS COMPANY
Established 1887
Government, Municipal and Corporation Bonds

311 East Colorado St.
PASADENA, CALIF.

Los Angeles San Diego San Francisco

The
Serendipity Antique Shop
26 & 30 SOUTH LOS ROBLES AVENUE
PASADENA
BRADFORD PERIN, Proprietor

Mr. Perin begs to inform the friends of the Serendipity Antique Shop that beginning May 1st he will have a carefully selected stock of the best and that he will be glad to furnish estimates for redecorating their residences

IMPORTED FABRICS

SOUTHLAND CALENDAR

Announcements of exhibitions, fetes, concerts, club entertainments, etc., for the calendar pages are free of charge and should be received in the office of CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND, Pasadena, at least two weeks previous to date of issue, the 10th. No correction can be guaranteed if they are received later than that date. California Southland is published monthly at Pasadena, California. One dollar and twenty-five cents for six issues, two fifty per year. Addresses will be changed as many times as desired if notice is given before the first of the month for which the change is made.

Entered as second class matter, July 28, 1919, at the Post office at Pasadena, California, under act of March 3, 1879.

Clubs

VALLEY HUNT CLUB, Pasadena:
The formal season at the Valley Hunt Club closed with May, after which time no programs are arranged. The tennis court and swimming pool offer the outdoor attractions during the summer, and individual parties, both afternoon and evening, are arranged as desired.

ANNANDALE GOLF CLUB, Pasadena:
The afternoon bridge, Mah Jongg and tea parties have been discontinued for the season, but tea will be served as requested and tables for cards are always available.
Every Friday is Ladies' Day.
The usual Wednesday and Saturday sweepstakes each month through the summer.

FLINTRIDGE COUNTRY CLUB:
Tuesday is Ladies' Day and a special luncheon is served. In the afternoons informal bridge parties may be arranged, followed by tea.
St. Patrick's Day Dinner-Dance, Saturday evening, March 14.

LOS ANGELES COUNTRY CLUB:
Ladies' Days, second Monday of each month.
Music during dinner, followed by dancing, every Saturday evening during the month.
Luncheon served from 11:30 to 2 .p m. on Saturdays.
Sunday night concerts during month. Tea served as requested and tables for cards always available.

WILSHIRE COUNTRY CLUB:
Ladies' Days, third Monday of each month.
Dancing every second and fourth Saturday during the month.
A musical is arranged for each Sunday night in the month.

MIDWICK COUNTRY CLUB:
Ladies' Days, fourth Monday in each month.
Tea and informal bridge every afternoon.
Polo, Wednesday and Saturday of each week.
Dancing every Saturday night.
Buffet luncheon served every Sunday.
Match polo games every Sunday, preceded by luncheon parties, followed by teas, during season.

LOS ANGELES ATHLETIC CLUB:
Dinner dances, Tuesday and Friday nights of every week, Tuesday night informal; Friday night semi-formal. Plunge open to the ladies Tuesday and Friday of every week.

SAN GABRIEL COUNTRY CLUB:
A dinner dance is arranged for the third Thursday of each month.
On Friday of each week a special luncheon is served, with bridge in the afternoons.
Ladies play every day starting after ten a. m., and not before two p. m.

MONTECITO COUNTRY CLUB:
Provides an 18 hole golf course, two concrete and two dirt courts for tennis, bowls and croquet.
Tea is served and informal bridge parties arranged as desired.
A buffet supper is served every Sunday night.

LA CUMBRE GOLF AND COUNTRY CLUB, SANTA BARBARA:
Offers a course of eighteen holes, rivaling any in hazard and beauty. A recent purchase of additional acreage will provide an extended and even more interesting course.
Luncheon is served every day, and tea may be arranged as desired.

REDLANDS COUNTRY CLUB:
Golf tournament for men is held every Saturday. Monday the course is reserved for the women and a special luncheon served. Those who do not play golf or who have had a round in the morning, devote the afternoon to bridge or mah jongg. Every Saturday afternoon tea is served.

The two-piece dress of crepe de Chine, after the originals of Chanel and Lanvin. The smartest dress for summer days and summer sports. In the "chalk" shades.

Bullock's
Broadway—Hill and—Seventh
Los Angeles

"One . . O'Clock . . . Saturdays"

Where the Treasures of a Collector May Be Purchased as Gifts

A. Schmidt & Son

For Fifty-six Years Importers of Antique and Modern Silver, Sheffield Plate, Fine China and Glass.

2320 W. Seventh St., Los Angeles
391 E. Colorado St., Pasadena

Boston New York Washington

Art

LOS ANGELES Museum of History, Science and Art, Exposition Park, announced the prize winners of the Sixth Exhibition of Painters and Sculptors of Southern California, held in the Art Gallery during April, as follows: Mr. S. Macdonald Wright won the Mr. and Mrs. William Preston Harrison Prize with his composition "Yin Synchromy." This prize was open to all artists, regardless of the medium used. Miss Margaret Bruton, with her painting, "The Barmaid," won the Hethel Prize offered for the best single figure composition. Mr. Henri deKruif was awarded the Harrison Gray Otis Prize given for the best landscape. His subject was "Inspiration." To Mr. Conrad Buff, with his painting "Desert Motive," went the Huntington Prize, awarded to painters or sculptors who have previously never received a prize in the Museum. Honorable mention was given to Miss Maude Daggett for her bit of sculpturing, "Portrait of George Jr." Miss Gertrude Little, with her miniature, "Lilies," also received honorable mention. These prize winning paintings and pieces of sculpture, as well as one hundred and two other art subjects, will remain on display at the Museum until April 30.

May 4 to June 28, Russian art exhibition.

Three recent lithographs by George Bellows were purchased by the Los Angeles Museum for its permanent collection a short time ago.

STENDAHL Galleries, Ambassador Hotel, Los Angeles, announces: In the first gallery—An Exhibition of Painters of the East and West. This group of painters, Horatio Walker, Frederick Waugh, N. A., Colin Campbell Cooper, N. A., Bruce Crane, Gardner Symons, I A. Couse, Armin Hansen, William Wendt, Guy Rose, and Hanson Puthuff. Each of these men are represented with the typical fine example of his work.

In the second gallery—A group of European Artists including Rosa Bonheur, J. J. Henner, Julien Dupre, Bernard de Hoog, and Hugo Konig.

In the third gallery—A collection of recent works by Haldane Douglas.

Coming important shows: William Wendt, Edgar Payne, Gardner Symons.

PAINTERS' and Sculptors' Club, which is now located at Seventh and Westmoreland streets, Los Angeles, announces that ninety paintings by members of the club are offered the public at a bidding sale. The club rooms are open until ten o'clock in the evening.

PRINTMAKERS' Society of California will continue their exhibition of prints in the Art Gallery of Barker Bros., Los Angeles, to May 9th.

FRIDAY Morning Club will hang the exhibition of French impressionists on their walls, beginning May 1, through the courtesy of the Biltmore Salon.

BRADFORD PERIN, of the Serendipity Antique Shop, Pasadena, announces that his much discussed painting by Sir Thomas Lawrence may be seen any day by appointment.

DAVID ANTHONY TAUSZKY is again in Pasadena, after a profitable and pleasant stay in New York.

MAURICE BRAUN and Hazel Boyer Braun shared a program with Lita Horlocker at the Monrovia Woman's Club last month, showing a group of Mr. Braun's paintings, and Benjamin Brown's "Witchery of Winter," the painting which was purchased by the combined Women's clubs.

A MEETING of "Allied Arts," Art, Music and Drama, has recently been inaugurated in Glendale under the auspices of the Glendale Art Association and is held the last Sunday night of each month in the Van Grove studio, 337 North Brand boulevard. At the April meeting, Mrs. Max Lynn Green, presented her one act play, "If the Shoe Fits," which won second prize in the contest held by the Los Angeles district of California Federation of Women's clubs. Music selections were by Milford C. Jackson, baritone; and Edith Sinclair Lemans, soprano; Baroness Ottily de Ropp, of Russia was a speaker.

JENABE FAZEL, Persian Poet and philosopher, will speak before the Glendale Art Association, Sunday afternoon May, 3 at the Van Grove studio. The annual election of officers of the association will take place at this meeting.

JOHN W. COTTON, etcher, painter and worker in aqua-tints, left recently for Coachella Valley where he will spend several weeks sketching and painting.

MRS. ROY A. BALLAGH, president of Glendale Art Association has returned from a week's trip to Santa Barbara, where she enjoyed sketching and painting, bringing home several finished pictures.

CANNELL and Chaffin will show in their Los Angeles galleries, 720 West Seventh Street, during May, exhibitions as follows: Paintings by D. Sayres Grosbeck; Paintings, decorative panels and screens by Irving Manoir, May 4 to 16 inclusive. The last half of the month the galleries will be given up to an exhibition of carefully selected examples of the work of the foremost artists of California.

ARTHUR HILL GILBERT'S picture, "Rain and Sunshine," recently exhibited in the Biltmore Salon, has been hung on the line at the National Academy of Design, New York.

THE Writers' Club of Hollywood held an exhibition, during the last half of April, of the famous drawings in gouache by A. B. Wenzell. Mrs. Wenzell conducts a gallery exclusively devoted to the Wenzell drawings and paintings at 3001 Wilshire Blvd., Los Angeles.

THE Biltmore Salon will hold during the first half of May, an exhibition of the work of Katherine Leighton, and during the last two weeks the paintings of Hanson Puthuff.

NELL WALKER WARNER of Glendale and Paul Lauritz held a joint exhibition last month at the Tuesday Afternoon Club, Glendale, both showing recent California landscapes.

WILLIAM RITSCHEL has returned from his round-the-world trip and is now in Carmel.

THE Contemporary Club of Redlands held a reception and private view of specially selected western paintings from the collection of the Biltmore Salon during the last week in April.

UNDER the auspices of the Ebell Cluh of Long Beach, and the L. B. Delphian Society an exhibition of paintings from the collection of the Biltmore Salon will be held May 8-19.

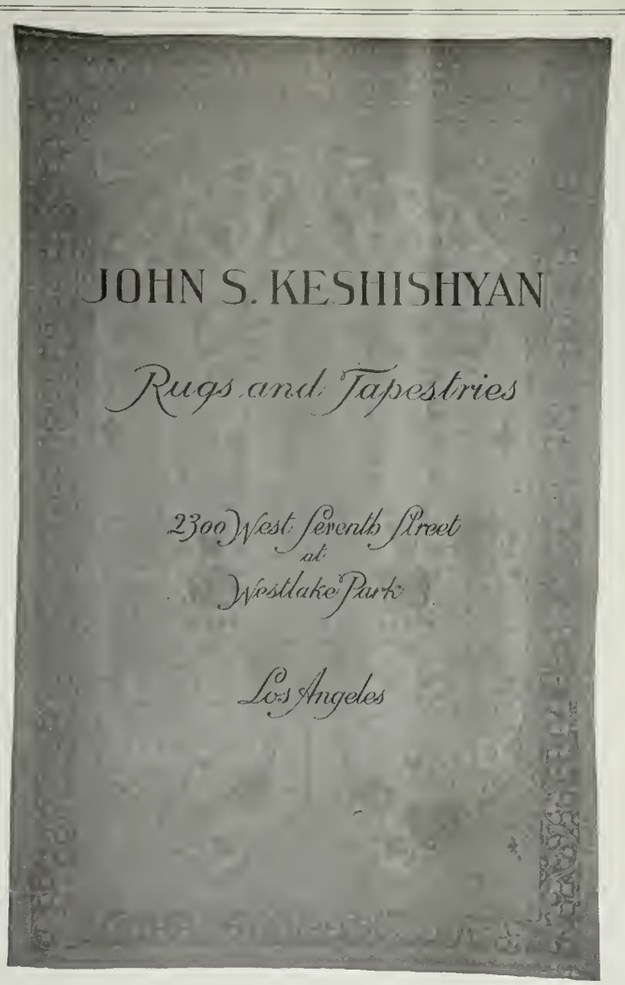
LAURA M. D. MITCHELL is in Riverside, where she has a commission to paint a miniature of the young Frank Miller Hutchings, son of DeWitt V. Hutchings, and grandson of Frank Miller.

THE Whittier High School announces an exhibition of paintings, through the courtesy of the Biltmore Salon, May 11 to May 17.

GARDNER SYMONS, who will exhibit at the Stendahl galleries during the month, is sketching at Laguna Beach and renewing his old friendship with William Wendt.

C. H. BRUECKNER, of the Biltmore Salon, installs exhibitions on request of the various clubs and schools, and speaks on art appreciation and the educational work that is being done by the Biltmore Salon.

BESSIE ELLA HAZEN, president of West Coast Arts Incorporated, and a teacher in the art department of U. C., Southern Branch, has received two congratulatory letters from President Campbell of Berkeley, one upon her winning the first prize in realistic painting at the annual exhibition of the Southern California Art Teacher's Association held at the Los Angeles Museum earlier in the season, and the other on the signal triumph of four of her pupils who carried off the major prizes in furniture design and interior decoration at the recent Corona Mundi International contest held in New York City. The work was judged entirely on its merits with no knowledge of the names or addresses of the contestants.



PORTER BLANCHARD, president of the Arts and Crafts Society, has recently received three rather tremendous commissions, even for a descendent of several generations of silversmiths. He has had orders for two complete sets of flat, handwrought silver for wedding presents—one to go east and the other to fill the chest of a prominent Pasadena bride-to-be. The other is a silver tea-service—also a wedding present.

THE West Coast Arts Incorporated had the more recent work of their members on exhibition at the MacDowell Club during the month of April. Some extremely good work was shown. Among the larger oils, Irine Bowen Robinson's "Dahlias" and Nell Brooker Mayhew's "Sky Blue Waters" were perhaps the most interesting from the standpoint of strength and decorative quality.

THE Pasadena Society of Artists, a recently organized club which started with twenty charter members and now has a membership of over a hundred, has been holding its first annual exhibition during the month of April, at Carmelita Gardens. The society, composed of Pasadena painters and sculptors, made a very creditable showing in this their first exhibition of any kind, and plans to strive toward a higher standard with each succeeding exhibition.

Music

THE Philharmonic Orchestra, Walter Henry Rothwell, conductor, closed the sixth season with the Philharmonc Orchestra Benefit, April 19. This orchestra, founded and financially sponsored by William A. Clark, is recognized as one of the foremost orchestral bodies in this country. During Mr. Rothwell's trip last summer to the musical centers of Europe he added to the library of the Philharmonic Orchestra about forty orchestra scores, most of them new to Los Angeles, and it is interesting now to note that during the past season the orchestra performed fifteen works entirely new to Los Angeles, and eight other compositions were heard here for the first time under Mr. Rothwell's direction.

B B Bell & Company

Lighting Fixtures

Fireplace Fittings

Lamps

Console-tables and Mirrors

Hope's Casements

2302 West Seventh Street

at

Westlake Park

Los Angeles

GEORGE LESLIE SMITH, manager of the Auditorium Artist Series, at the close of a successful season, announces the following musical attractions for next year: Josef Hofmann, pianist; Edward Johnson, tenor; Felix Salmon, 'cellist; Cecilia Hansen, violinist; Maria Kurenko, soprano; Margaret Matbenhauer, contralto; Thamar Karsavina and her ballet; Olga Samaroff, pianist; Vincente Ballester, baritone; London String Quartet and the San Carlo Opera Company.

THE Eisteddfod contests to be held in Los Angeles are to take place, May 16 to May 24, and will include contests in violin, piano, voice, and choral organizations and school orchestras and glee clubs. Registrations may be made up to May 8, through Miss Caldwell of the art and music department of the Public Library. Detailed information about the contests also may be secured from the library.

THE series of symphony concerts at the Hollywood Bowl this summer will be opened by Director Reinald of the Cincinnati Orchestra, who will direct during the first four weks. Arrangements have been made for Ethel Leginska to direct two concerts—which probably will be the first time in America that a woman has conducted in a regular series of open air symphony concerts. Howard Hanson, of Rochester, N. Y., who recently conducted his own "Lux-Aeterna" here, has been secured for one concert, and Walter Rothwell, director of the Philharmonic Orchestra, has been asked to lead two concerts.

NATIONAL Music Week for 1925 will be from May 3 to 9. For this second national celebration, 357 cities and towns have already signified their intention of participating. Last season 460 conmmunities officially participated in music week observances and 233 joined semi-officially. It is expected that 1000 cities and towns will take part next spring.

ARTHUR FARWELL was honored by a musical birthday festival in April, given under the auspices of the Los Angeles Opera and Fine Arts Club. The program featured a number of Mr. Farwell's own compositions.

THE Spinet Club of Redlands has just closed its thirty-first season. It has presented Gauthier, Denishawn Dancers, Maier and Pattison, and Spalding. In spite of a small financial deficit the season was a fine artistic success and a large list of guarantors have assured a concert course next season.

AN interesting feature of the musical life of Redlands the past season has been the organization of the Redlands Community Music Association. Not only has it provided a means of self-expression through the weekly community "sings," led by Gage Christopher, but it also has engendered a spirit of discrimination in musical appreciation through the weekly artist concerts. The remarkable thing about these concerts is that they are free. A voluntary offering is taken and the response has been gratifying.

Pomona College, Claremont

THE MAY MASQUE, a dramatization of one of Grimm's fairy tales, interspersed with dances and pantomime, was given in the open air theatre by the women's physical education department on the second of May.

REGINALD POLE, well known producer of plays, has just returned from New York to lecture and produce plays at Pomona College. On succeeding Wednesday evenings he is lecturing on (1) Beethoven and Wagner; (2) Three Great Americans; 1(3) Rupert Brooke and the Modern Spirit in English Poetry, and (4) Shakespeare and the Joyous Wisdom, the latter lecture in Bridges Hall on May 13.

SHAKESPEARE'S "Anthony and Cleopatra" with all its forty scenes only slightly cut will be presented in Bridges Hall by the Pomona College students, coached by Reginald Pole. The play is given without scenery as plays were given in the college halls during Shakespeare's day.

POMONA COLLEGE, Claremont, California, is offering this year for the first time, a summer session giving courses to meet the needs of teachers and students seeking the master's degree as well as of undergraduates. The announcement lists 34 teachers and 75 courses, and calls attention to the fact that the large new dormitories are open for summer session students. There will be special opportunities for the study of Spanish, Music and Drama, besides professional improvement courses in Education and a wide selection of the usual college subjects. Pomona College is favorably located at the foot of "Old Baldy" (elevation 10,080 feet), 66 minutes from Los Angeles and has on its campus of 450 acres all facilities for pleasant social life and recreation as well as for study.

SOUTHLAND Calendar will endeavor to include in this Claremont Section of its current pages a record and announcement of cultural and professional items regarding the district east of Los Angeles County in Southern California and also the San Gabriel Valley.

Announcements

LELAND S. CURTIS will hold his first one man show of paintings in the galleries of Barker Bros., Los Angeles, May 11 to 30.

THE Free Lance Art League will give its third annual exhibit from May 1 to May 31 at the MacDowell Club, 462 North Western Avenue. There will be an opening reception at the exhibit on Sunday, May 3, from 3 to 5 p. m.

PASADENA Community Players announce the opening of the new Pasadena Community Playhouse on May 18, with the first production on any stage of Victor Mapes' modern American comedy, "The Amethyst." This is said to be as amusing as the author's famous "The Boomerang," "The Hottentot" and "The New Henrietta."

POTBOILER THEATER, 930 South Grand Avenue, Los Angeles, beginning May 4, will give Andreyev's "The Life of Man" for two weeks.

DOUGLAS DONALDSON announces there will be but one class this year in his summer school, including both beginning and advance students, with separate problems assigned to each. The school opens July 6th, ends August 7th. The Donaldson Studio, 4960 Melrose Hill, Hollywood.

SOROPTIMIST CLUB meetings at the Biltmore, each Tuesday throughout the month have been of more than usual interest. April 7, Isobel S. Chappell, Analyst, gave a talk on "Bargains." April 4, Harold J. Stonier, of the U. of S. C., spoke on "Public Speaking." April 21, Henry Hotchenor addressed the club on the "Making and Unmaking of Personalities." April 28 was a "Surprise Meeting" for members only.

FRIDAY MORNING CLUB, Los Angeles, announces that Mrs. O. P. Clarke will be the next president of the Friday Morning Club to succeed Mrs. Florence Moore Kreider. As there was no contest for any office the board decided at a meeting in April to dispense with the formality of an election.

WOMEN'S ATHLETIC CLUB of Los Angeles was formally opened April 29. Mrs. Robert J. Burdette is president of the club.

JUNIOR CHARITY BALL will be given May 2, at the Vista del Arroyo, Pasadena, for the benefit of the Pasadena Children's Training Society building and repair fund, items not included in the budget allowed by the Community Chest.

FRIENDLY GIANT By Hanson Puthuff

Cannell & Chaffin, Inc.

Paintings :: Period Furniture :: Antiques

MARYLAND HOTEL
PASADENA

720 W. SEVENTH ST.
LOS ANGELES

THE WILLIAMS SCHOOL, 449 North Madison Avenue, Pasadena, California, announces a Series of Lectures, to mothers and others interested in the subject of Character Building Through Speech Reeducation, by Mrs. Edward W. Scripture. Course of ten lectures, beginning June 6th; five days each week, four o'clock in the afternoon. Ten dollars. For information address Mrs. Edward H. Williams, 449 North Madison Avenue, Pasadena, Calif. Telephone F. O. 5243.

Santa Barbara

THE two art club exhibitions to be held during May are May 1-9 Adolph Brougier; May 11-23 Fernand Lungren.

Community Arts Association of Santa Barbara

May 1, 2. Friday evening, 8:30 o'clock, Saturday afternoon, 2:30 o'clock. Special Festival Performances of Mendelssohn's Elijah under direction of Arthur Bliss. Lobero Theatre. Tickets 50c to $1.50.

May 7, 8, 9. Thursday, Friday, Saturday evening, 8:30 o'clock, Saturday matinee, 2:30 o'clock. Community Arts Players in "Outward Bound," a play by Sutton Vane, at Lobero Theatre. Tickets 50c-$2.00.

May 9. Saturday morning, 11 o'clock, Recreation Center, Children's Story Hour, under auspices of Plans and Planting Committee. Stories told by Maude Morley Fletcher. Moving Pictures.

May 9. Saturday morning, at 12 o'clock, School of the Arts. Audition of Scholarship Pupils in Music.

May 10-17. Better Homes Week—Plans and Planting Committee co-operating with many other civic organizations.

May 16. Saturday evening, at 8 o'clock, School of the Arts, Children's Recital. Those interested may obtain free admission cards from the secretary of the school.

May 18-23. Student's exhibition in Graphic, Decorative and Plastic Arts, 130 E. Ortego St., from 10-5 daily.

May 19. Tuesday evening, 8:30 o'clock, Lobero Theatre. Member's Meeting. Members are asked to secure free admission cards from Community Arts office by 5 o'clock, May 19.

May 23. Saturday afternoon, Plaza Del Mar. Spring Flower Festival. Dancing by children from School of the Arts. Selections by Clerbois Junior Orchestra. School Children's Chorus.

Lobero Theatre Offering

May 4. Modern Entertainment, Dwight Fiske and Paul Leyssac, 8:30 o'clock. Management Glen Morrey.

THE

FIRST NATIONAL BANK

OF SANTA BARBARA

The Oldest National Bank in Southern California

MARY E. HAUAN
Partly-Worked Needlepoint Tapestry
Studio 26, de la Guerra Studios

EL PASEO SPORT SHOP
MRS. CHARLES O'DONNELL LEE, JR.
Sport Clothes, Hats, Evening Gowns Children's Clothes
Studio 30, de la Guerra Studios

DORIS OVERMAN
Designer
Shades, Trays, Decorative Panels, Aztec Pottery and Lamps
Studio 27, de la Guerra Studios

MONCURE DEARDORF
Important Collection of Chinese Jewelry
Dealer and Expert in Chinese Works of Art
Studio 24, de la Guerra Studios

PACIFIC MUTUAL LIFE INSURANCE CO.
SANTA BARBARA BRANCH
101 EL PASEO DE LA GUERRA

DE LA GUERRA STUDIOS
SANTA BARBARA
THE LOVELY SHOPPING STREET IN SPAIN

SPUNWOVEN
"THE GYPSY SHOP"
Hand Fabrics
BETH AND IAN M. WOLFE
Studio 32, de la Guerra Studios

BROWN CALDWELL
MODERN ETCHINGS
Studio 102
El Paseo de la Guerra

GEORGE M. MILLARD (of Pasadena)
RARE IMPORTED BOOKS
Santa Barbara Associates
MR. EVERARD MEYNELL MRS. E. M. GROSSMANN
STUDIO 25, EL PASEO
15 EAST DE LA GUERRA STREET

MARINA FLINT
Kimonos, Chinese Suits, Bed Sacks
Suite 114, de la Guerra Studios

ELEANOR JOHNSON
Studio for the Voice
Suite 103, de la Guerra Studios

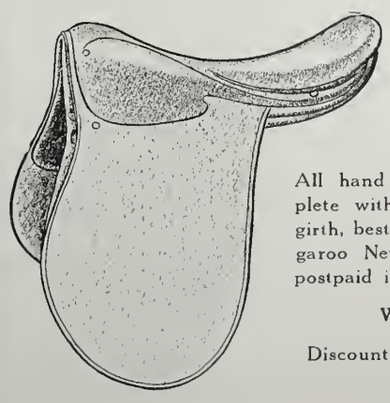
B. CROFTON ATKINS
Pipe and Tobacco Shop
And Men's Imported Clothing
Studio 29, de la Guerra Studios

LEE ELEANOR GRAHAM
Interior Decorator
de la Guerra Studios
23 East de la Guerra Street
Santa Barbara

THE POLK STUDIOS
MUSIC, DRAMA, DANCE
Gertrude Jeanette Polk
Artist Teacher of Vocal and Physical Expression
Henry Polk
Teacher of Piano, Voice and Pipe Organ
Suite 110, de la Guerra Studios

LA MANTILLA
Costume Designing and Remodeling
Studio 31, de la Guerra Studios

SANTA BARBARA ART CLUB
No. 15 E. de la Guerra Street
Free Exhibition of Paintings and Etchings
Open Daily 10 a. m. to 5 p. m.
Paintings and Etchings for sale



El Paseo Patio

Lunch Out of Doors or Dine
at
"EL PASEO"
23 E. de la Guerra St.
Santa Barbara

SANTA BARBARA COMMUNITY ARTS ASSOCIATION
FRANK MORLEY FLETCHER, Director
SCHOOL OF THE ARTS
Announcement: Term, February 2—May 16
Graphic and Decorative Arts, Drama, Music, Dancing, French
For further information address the Secretary, Mrs. Jeanne Augé, 936 Santa Barbara St. Santa Barbara, California

HYDE PARK SADDLE, $85.00

A Better Saddle Isn't Made
A Better Saddle Can't Be Made
Make me prove it

All hand sewn, throughout, complete with best three fold leather girth, best stirrup leathers and Kangaroo Never Rust Stirrups. Sent postpaid in U. S.

Write for catalog

Discount to Riding Schools and Saddlery Stores

The "Littlejoe" Wiesenfeld Co.
Baltimore, Md.

Patio in the house of Harold Waldmann

MARGARET CRAIG
ARCHITECTURAL PHOTOGRAPHY
Portraits by Appointment
Official Photographer for California Southland
3223 W. Sixth Street
Telephone WAsh. 1653 Los Angeles

The Lundblads
A Real Home in the Country
Open to Guests the Entire Year
Address Mrs. L. Lundblad
Saratoga, California
Down the Peninsula fifty miles from San Francisco.

La Solana
A quiet, well-appointed small hotel on the West Side near Orange Grove Avenue.
Each menu is carefully planned and prepared every day.
Grand Ave. and Lockhaven St. Pasadena

Mt. LOWE
"Earth has no finer view to show"

Mt. LOWE TAVERN and Cottages
Enlarged and Improved

at the terminus of this World-Famous Trip afford a most delightful retreat for a long or short sojourn at reasonable rates

5 Trains Daily at convenient hours - from Main St. Station Los Angeles

$2.50 Round Trip Rate

For information and Reservations apply

Pacific Electric Ry.
Information Bureau Phone MEtropolitan 5400 - TRinity 3661

HOTEL GREEN

A well ordered Residential and Tourist Hotel of peculiar excellence. Open all year. Moderate rates. Apartments by the month.

The Green Tea Pot Reopened October 15

CHARLES B. HERVEY, Proprietor

The
Biltmore
Salon

Los Angeles Biltmore

PAINTINGS
ETCHINGS
BRONZES

California Southland

M. URMY SEARES - - - - - Editor and Publisher
ELLEN LEECH - - - - - - - Managing Editor

NO. 65, VOL. VII MAY, 1925

CONTENTS

PAGE

A CALIFORNIA IDYL ..... Cover Design
(A painting in oil by Arthur M. Hazard)
SOUTHLAND CALENDAR ..... 3, 4 and 5
THE GROWTH OF A COMMUNITY PLAYHOUSE IDEA.... Ellen Leech 9
RECENT BOOKS—REVIEWS..... Louise Morgrage 12
SOME CALIFORNIA GARDENS..... Monica Shannon 13
HISTORIC SANTA BARBARA AND HER COMMUNITY ARTS..... 14-15
SOUTHLAND OPINION 16-17
MAY BASKETS..... Theresa Homet Patterson 18
UNCLE JOHNS EASTER SERVICE AT CATALINA..... 19
BULLETIN OF THE SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA CHAPTER
Harold O. Sœsmith, A. I. A...... 21
COMMERCIAL ARCHITECTURE BY MORGAN, WALLS AND CLEMENTS 22
ARTS AND CRAFTS SOCIETY..... Marion Hugus Clark 23
CAPTURING SOME OF CALIFORNIA'S ROMANCE..... R. E. Coate 24
THE CALIFORNIA DATE GARDENS..... Eleanor Hoffmann 25
BULLETIN OF THE ARCHITECTURAL CLUB..... 26
A HOUSE BY FITCH HASKELL, ARCHITECT..... 27
BULLETIN OF THE ASSISTANCE LEAGUE..... 29
SPORTS FOR ALL THE PEOPLE AT LONG BEACH..... 30

Official Organ of the Architectural Club of Los Angeles, California
Official Organ of the ASSISTANCE LEAGUE of SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA,
Presents the interests of The Community Arts Association of Santa Barbara, and is sent East by many of its eighteen hundred members.

CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND is published monthly at Pasadena, Cal.
Copyrighted, 1924, by M. Urmy Seares
Advertising: CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND, Pasadena, Col. 916. Los Angeles, MEtropolitan 5270. Subscription price for 1925, $2.50 per year.

The Los Angeles
Elizabeth Arden Salon
with
J. W. Robinson Co.

UNDER the direct management of Miss Arden and her New York staff, and offering the same specialized treatments that have made Miss Arden's other salons internationally known.

Seventh Floor

The Dean Iris Gardens
Moneta
California

WHY send East or elsewhere for your Irises when one of the choicest collections is at your door?

We have been specializing in Irises for some 12 years and are in a position to advise what ones are best adapted for California.

Unless you have seen some of the choice varieties introduced the past few years you are not aware what pleasure is in store for you if you start an Iris collection.

Our seedling San Gabriel is conceded to be one of the finest introductions of recent years, both among European and American hybrids. Many of our California Iris fans say if they could have but one Iris, it would be San Gabriel. One of the large growers on the Atlantic Coast catalogues it as "one of the world's best irises".

There are still quite a few Irises in flower if any care to visit the gardens to make their selections.

To locate us by auto, drive south on Western Ave. to our sign, S.E. corner of Market St., Moneta, or if coming by Riverside-Redondo Blvd., turn south on Western at Olive St. Gardens 2 blocks east of Western on Market & Conn Sts.

The Dean Iris Gardens
Moneta, California

THE MANSFIELD SHOPS
Pasadena and Los Angeles

Interiors designed and executed —
Embroiderie —
Textiles—

Drexel 1747

J. R. BRAGDON & CO.
Real Estate and Insurance
15 So. Raymond Ave., Pasadena

NOTARY PUBLIC
METROPOLITAN 5270

MISS MARJORIE FYFE
MISS ELLA GILBERT

PUBLIC
STENOGRAPHERS

MULTIGRAPHING
AND MIMEOGRAPHING

929 LOEW'S STATE BLDG.
LOS ANGELES

CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND
AN ILLUSTRATED MAGAZINE OF NATIONAL INTEREST

THE GROWTH OF A COMMUNITY PLAYHOUSE IDEA

By ELLEN LEECH

"What things we have seen done at the Mermaid; heard words that have been so nimble and so full of subtle flame."

IT has now become so much the rule to expect every project to burst forth fully panoplied,—not from the head of Jove, but from the purse of capital, that we are inclined to forget that the majority of our prized possessions, particularly community or municipal blessings are the result of the slow growth of years, and of the efforts, usually, of a group who recognize the needs of the people long before the majority realize there will be such a necessity.

Life of the drama on this coast has always been a precarious one; for many years stock companies occupied the theaters, with an occasional visit of some well known star, though rarely supported by the Eastern cast in its entirety. Therefore, to avoid stagnation along these lines a Tuesday Morning Drama Class was organized in Pasadena in 1912, with Mrs. J. B. Durand as Chairman, for the avowed purpose of studying and reading the best plays of each year. It was later found desirable to join the Los Angeles Center of the Drama League of America, which necessitated augmenting the number by fifty, as one hundred members were required, and finally in 1916 the Pasadena Center was formed. Miss Sybil Jones was the first president, with Dr. Robert Freeman, Mrs. H. I. Stuart and Mrs. Myron Hunt as vice-presidents, and Miss Louise Congor as secretary.

THE STAGE TOWER OF PASADENA'S COMMUNITY PLAYHOUSE, WHERE GREEN STREET IS CUTTING ACROSS EL MOLINO AVENUE.

To this early Drama Class, however, Pasadena owes its Community Players and the new Community Playhouse, as the Drama Class was still functioning as an independent body when Gilmor Brown came to Pasadena with his Savoy Players to present such plays as were usually given in stock theaters at that time. Although the entertainments were desirable the patronage was not sufficient to allow a continuance without definite support and realizing this the Class decided to back the project with their entire approval and in order to assist financially suggested the sale of subscriptions, in the amounts of five and ten dollars, these to apply on admissions, and in this way the first impetus was given towards a community theater.

With the organization of the Pasadena Center in 1916 a Play Contest section was installed and it was announced that the play winning first place would be presented by the Savoy Players. The first play to gain the coveted award was "The Scapegoat" by Mrs. Walton Wood of South Pasadena. With every year since the contest has grown and has included a number of dramatic successes. The prize for the best play is now $100.

In 1917 an Amateur Players Section was formed, under the direction of Mrs. Arthur Palmer, and all members of the League interested in the study and production of plays invited to join. From this nucleus it was soon possible for Gilmor Brown to recruit amateurs to replace his Savoy players and thus gradually eliminate all professional players from the cast.

During the moving years of the war both the Drama League and the Community Players carried on along their educational lines but with modified strength as other interests claimed the time of the members. The players did their utmost, however, to offer entertainment and relaxation to the home workers during the moments of leisure vouchsafed them.

These naturally lean years brought a deficit to the Player and in order to attempt to wipe this out by the introduction of more business-like methods the Community Playhouse Association was formed and articles of incorporation filed in 1918, under which title the Players continue to function.

Through the succeeding years the Drama League has held and shown an unceasing interest in the Community Players, aiding and abetting in every way possible that the theater might hold to its ideal of the presentation of drama, rather than become merely a shop where amusement is produced and sold. This protectorate, however, has never been more than that, the two bodies functioning entirely separately; the Community Playhouse Association under a Governing Board, with revenue-producing memberships, and with nine standing committees, named by the president, to handle various phases of the playhouse work.

When the lot on South El Molino was purchased and a building program discussed it was evident that a separate corporation must be organized in order that, under the requirements of the law, the property could be vested in a legal ownrship. Thus the Pasadena Community Guild was incorporated in 1924, as a stock corporation with preferred and common stock. A provision was made, as is usual, that the common stock could retire the preferred stock and thus in the ownership of the common stock rested the potential control if not the immediate ownership of the building. This common stock, however, can not be purchased by private individuals but all donations received by the Playhouse are used for the purchase of common stock on the condition that the common stock so purchased shall be issued to a trustee for the benefit of the Playhouse corporation; the subscription blank used for this purpose carrying its own explanation, "For the purpose of maintaining an ownership of the property for public good and not for individual gain."

THE NEW PLAYHOUSE BEHIND ITS HANDSOME PALM TREES ON EL MOLINO AVENUE. A THEATRICAL PHOTOGRAPH BY GEORGE HAIGHT. THE COURT AND AUDITORIUM WERE FIRST DESIGNED BY ELMER GRAY, ARCHITECT, AND SINCE ITS INCEPTION ALL THE TALENT OF THE TOWN HAS BEEN AT ITS SERVICE. CARRIED TO A UNITY OF COMPLETION BY DWIGHT GIBBS, ARCHITECT, ALSON CLARK, ARTIST, E. A. CHEESEWRIGHT, T. W. SMITH AND FRANK H. SELLERS, REPRESENTING THE COMMUNITY GUILD.

Under the limitations of Cali-

MISS SIBYL ELIZA JONES, THE FIRST PRESIDENT OF THE PASADENA CENTER, DRAMA LEAGUE OF AMERICA, A PLAYWRIGHT AND COMPOSER.

GILMOR BROWN, NOT ONLY THE DIRECTOR OF THE COMMUNITY PLAYERS BUT RECOGNIZED AS THE EXPONENT OF THE BEST IN TRAINING.

J. W. MORIN IN WHOSE HANDS HAS RESTED, THROUGHOUT THE WHOLE GROWTH, THE LEGAL INTEREST OF THE COMMUNITY PLAYHOUSE.

fornia law trusts may not exist indefinitely with the exception of those for charitable and specific educational purposes, and twenty-five years is the prescribed limit for this trust indenture. During this period the trustee shall be subject to control by an Advisory Board and a majority of the directorate of the Playhouse Association but at the end of the twenty-five years unless there is a change in legislation, the common stock must be transferred to the Playhouse Association, whose charter has more than forty years to run and can then be renewed.

In substance then what seems a complicated mechanism of two corporations and the trust is merely an attempt to stabilize the stock voting control, and administer the property for a period of twenty-five years, relieving the Playhouse of the heavier business details until such time as it feels capable of controlling property worth over four hundred thousand dollars.

In case we are inclined, some of us, to hold the Community players in too home-like an estimation it may be well to give the view of a visitor as contained in the following letter from Maurice Browne, head of the Maurice Browne Players and director of the Theater of the Golden Bough at Carmel-by-the-Sea, California.

Editor of Southland,

Pasadena, California:

A week or two ago you asked me if I would put into the form of a letter some of the things I had said to you in conversation about the work of the Pasadena Community Players, and Mr. Gilmor Brown. I have delayed doing this until I had seen the production of their Annual Frolics.

During the last two or three weeks I have been present at Playhouse performances of "Heritage," and the Frolics and at a Playbox performance of "The Tragedy of Nan." In brief, the impression made on me by these three productions,—tragedy, drama, and burlesque mixed with fantasy—is that no "little theatre" group known to me in this country is doing better work and singularly few as good. American Little Theatres for the most part have suffered from two curses: They have lacked variety, and, when they have done good plays, they have too often done them inadequately. The three productions of Gilmor Brown named above—put on as I say within a period of two or three weeks—show extraordinary variety not only in the choice of material but in its handling; and the handling shows mastery. I do not mean that the three productions were perfect; they were far from it; in each of them there were blank and sometimes bad moments; but that very fact showed by contrast how good their good moments and their general average were.

Gilmor Brown's production of "The Tragedy of Nan" was, without qualification, the best production of that exceedingly difficult and beautiful play that I have seen (this opinion was shared by Miss Van Volkenburg and Mr. Robert Nichols, the English poet, who attended it with me).

THE STAIRWAY TO THE MUSIC ROOM WHICH AWAITS COMPLETION.

"Heritage," with a not very good first act and a markedly poor fourth act, showed in the second act, on the part of author, director and players, admirable team-work, and in the third act reached heights that I have only seen surpassed in this country by the New York Yiddish Theatre in its best days when Ben-Ami was at its head. The Pasadena Community Players have shown me so much good acting in the past few weeks that it is invidious to mention anyone by name, but I feel I must pay special tribute to Miss Belle Mitchell for her flawless piece of character work in "Heritage;" Miss Ada Gleason, too, and one or two of the others were hardly less good. Acting of such a calibre, is, unfortunately, not usually associated with "little theatres."

The Players' Frolic showed that they could laugh at themselves—and at the public and, mirabile dictu, at their backers—without strain, bitterness, or self-consciousness. It was spontaneous fun and it was good fun, with, as the best burlesque always has, moments of beauty in it.

Presumably these three productions are more or less typical of the work of the Community Players. If that is so, especially now that they are just about to move into their new theatre, to which there is none superior that I know of in the United States, they can challenge comparison—and pretty light-heartedly at that—with any similar American organization, let alone with any on the Pacific Coast. In New York, any theatre-lover, as a matter of course, regularly makes a Sabbath day's journey to the wilds of Grand Street to see the new show at the Neighborhood; as often as not he doesn't know what he is going to see, but he knows he is going to see a good show; similarly in Los Angeles I find myself making a similar journey to the Pasadena Playhouse, with the same feeling, and as a matter of course.

Very sincerely yours,
MAURICE BROWNE.

FOLLOWING the growth of an idea through years of experience and trial we find invariably that the tangible thing, the thing which has persisted through change and growth, lodges year by year, month by month, day and night, through sunshine and shadow, in the heart of some individual. Growth means change and sustenance from new sources; and as the Community Playhouse has be-

MISS ELEANOR BISSELL IS NOW, AND HAS BEEN FOR THE PAST EIGHT YEARS, PRESIDENT OF THE PASADENA CENTER OF THE DRAMA LEAGUE.

ALSON CLARK, PAINTER, ETCHER, CRITIC IN THE SCHOOL OF ART IN PASADENA, WHO HAS GIVEN OF HIS TALENT IN THE DESIGN OF THE TOWER.

CAPTAIN PAUL PERIGORD, OF CALIFORNIA INSTITUTE OF TECHNOLOGY, PRESIDENT OF THE COMMUNITY PLAYHOUSE ASSOCIATION AND ALSO PRESIDENT OF THE COMMUNITY GUILD.

come a vortex for community interests in the arts of human expression, and takes on tangible form it has reached out through the community and has found here and there rich stores of experience in the multitudinous talent, latent, quiesant and retired, existing in this cosmopolitan, but decidedly American population of Pasadena. It follows, therefore, that Pasadena is a prolific and unusually fine field for the working out of this democratic American ideal. These results now become apparent in the actual building of the Community Playhouse. One cannot take a photograph of an idea as it exists in the mind of its possessor; but if one who loves his fellow men and wishes to give to his community from out his store of talent training, wealth, or skill in any line, will build a Community Playhouse, not only can a photograph be taken of his idea but it can be presented to the waiting world which just now is eagerly asking: "What is democracy and is it worth saving?"

Southern California has been called the laboratory of community life as well as the land of heart's desire for the individual home. The combination is dynamic; new ideals of home are developing, new forces in community effort are being released.

The very fact that our population is mobile and, as the chemist would say, "in solution," has left it free to crystalize around that which most interests the individual with brains and talent. Every citizen and every newcomer is welcomed to work.

The atmosphere of the community is that which is breathed most generously by the amateur and the connoisseur, but the core of the whole thing is highly professional in its art and training.

The test of the quality lies in the quality of the people who have finally brought about the realization of these ideals. Foremost in the actual business of building the playhouse and bringing it to its present perfection as an up-to-date theatre is Mr. Frank H. Sellers, whose tireless attention to contracts and details has the gratitude of the whole community.

At the little cupboard of an office, 83 North Fair Oaks Ave., where the playhouse interests have centered during most of these years of growth, and where during each day discussions of advancement of the work proceeded, one finds a list of the present governing board for 1924-1925.

The Governing Board of the Community Playhouse Association: Paul Perigord, president; Mrs. Robert A. Millikan, vice president; Joseph C. Sloane, secretary; Guy R. McComb, treasurer; Miss Eleanor M. Bissell, Clinton C. Clarke, Mrs. Phillip Schuyler Doane, Mrs. George E. Hale, James W. Morin, George A. Mortimer, Mrs. Frank H. Sellers.

Others have served on this board in previous years, but upon this year's members has fallen the brunt of securing the funds for the new playhouse and building it.

THE INTERIOR OF THE STAGE TOWER AND THE STAGE OF THE NEW COMMUNITY PLAYHOUSE. NEAR THE BRIGHT LIGHT AT BACK IS THE MODEL SWITCHBOBARD, TWO WORKMEN GIVE THE SCALE.

The volunteer workers and players have come from every section and from every class. The players occasionally have stage aspirations but more frequently volunteer simply as a community duty but emerge, through the skillful coaching of Gilmor Brown, with an enviable record.

The community co-operation extends beyond the players and the footlights as it encompasses the working committees, the play readers, the property and wardrobe committees, and, when the building plans were announced, artisans from every part of Pasadena offered their services.

Due to the fact that many of the leading experts, engineers, architects and specialists donated their services wholly without compensation, and many of the contractors supplied material and labor at actual or almost actual cost, the Guild has been able to erect and furnish the building so cheaply that those bankers and financiers, who have been charged with procuring a large part of the funds to erect the structure, consider that for every dollar of cash expended there has been put into the building one dollar and twenty cents of actual value.

Among the artists, architects, engineers and experts who have rendered such signal service in making the building unique for beauty, efficiency of operation and economy of construction, so that it stands in a class by itself, are Alson S. Clark, artist; E. J. Cheesewright, decorator; A. Dwight Gibbs, architect, associate for the interior; Elmer Grey, architect for the building; Elliott Lee Ellingwood, engineer for the heating and ventilating; Prof. Vern O. Knudsen, specialist in acoustice, University of California; Claude D. Seaman, electrical and stage equipment engineer; Prof. Clifford M. Swan, specialist in acoustics, Harvard University.

Among the contractors who have by their conscientious work carried through the splendid construction of the building, and which they did with little or no profit to themselves, are Winter Construction Company, general contractors; Anciano Stone Company, slate flagstones; C. W. Cole & Company, stage illuminating equipment; Electrical Products Company, stage electrical equipment; Frabric Studios, stage rigging; Thomas Hannibal, stage curtain and

(Continued on Page 20)

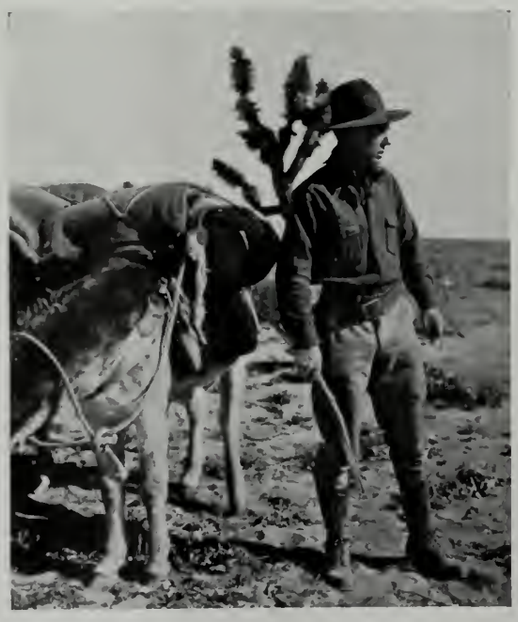
RECENT BOOKS—REVIEWS

By LOUISE MORGRAGE

CHRONICLES OF THE GARDEN,
by MRS. FRANCIS KING,
CHARLES SCRIBNER'S SONS.

The person who loves making gardens an artistic pursuit and one of the ways of gaining open sesame to the regions of aesthetic enjoyment, will draw inspiration from Mrs. King's talks about gardens and gardening. While her book is most certainly not an instruction manual for beginners, even they may profit by its suggestions, and the person who is gifted and possessed of some practical experience, will read and use it with enthusiastic appreciation.

Mrs. King is more than a mere garden devotee; every page of her book reflects the gracious personality of a woman of culture, able to illustrate her points by constant allusions to other and kindred subjects. It is true that she dwells in a far colder clime than this, but being a cosmopolitan, she has written for the pleasure and profit of garden lovers in all parts of the United States, as well as the countries of Europe. She shows her breadth of vision, by her method of discussing the culture of different blooms in widely varying environments, with other interesting matter regarding them. In the chapter on daffodils, we learn that a celebrated grower of this beautiful flower in England, demands, and what is more, receives a hundred guineas a bulb; another horticulturist is now well on the way toward producing a red daffodil. The same chapter contains also a discussion of the recent action of the Federal Horticultural Board at Washington, forbidding the unlimited importation of narcissus bulbs after January, 1926, the results of which Mrs. King thinks will be more serious than garden lovers realize. In still another chapter and one of the most delightful, she gives a charming description of Santa Barbara gardens, and every Californian reading it must surely become more awake to the possibilities for the creation of beautiful surroundings in his own state.



THE PROSPECT FROM THE UPPER TERRACE OF PEPPER HILL, MONTECITO, SANTA BARBARA
FROM THE "CHRONICLES OF THE GARDEN," THROUGH THE COURTESY OF CHARLES SCRIBNER'S SONS.

A chapter which should be of value, takes for its subject, the arrangement of garden accessories, paths, steps, and the placing of seats and statuary, in combination with shrubbery and flowers, again adapted to a wide range of locality. The appendix contains a number of reproductions of small houses with suggestions for a garden planted to suit each one, the plans for which may be obtained on application to the editors of McCall's Magazine. Throughout the book are illustrations of lovely gardens, taken from many parts of our own and foreign countries.

THE LONG GREEN GAZE,
by VINCENT FULLER, R. W. HUEBSCH, INC.

This claims to be a novel novel, and we consider its claims well merited. Given a murder done with poison, the theft of a priceless emerald, ten persons to suspect, and we are off. But are we? While, like a hound with his nose to the ground, the reader is in hot pursuit of the solution, now and then, in fact eight times, a cross word puzzle is tossed at him as a check to throw him off the scent. What the cross word puzzle fan does under such a strain, we do not know. We looked at once to the end of the book for the answer. On the fly-leaf, the author acknowledges the assistance rendered him by friends. We know what they did; they gave him physical support, whenever spasms of mirth overcame him, while writing this yarn.

HENRY HERBERT KNIBBS, ON ONE OF HIS TRIPS EXPLORING THE DESERT.

TEMESCAL,
by HENRY HERBERT KNIBBS, HOUGHTON MIFFLIN COMPANY.

The turbulent and opera bouffe Mexico of recent years has lacked nothing that the swashbuckling age of Louis XIII of France had to offer a gay, debonair and self-respecting hero, in the way of opportunity for a picturesque career. But it takes the eye of a reincarnated Dumas to recognize that truth, and Mr. Knibbs apparently has it, since he has used this country with rare felicity, as a setting for the riotous adventures of an irresistible person called Temescal. Temescal is a composite character, uniting the subtle wits of an Aramis, the lofty courtesy of an Athos, the physical courage of a Porthos, the charmed life of a D'Artagnan, a faint soupcon of Miss Hull's Sheik, the shrewd Yankee humor of an Artemus Ward, with a few extra qualities thrown in by the obliging author. We must also state that this remarkable hero matches a Sir Galahad in virtue of unsullied purity. There is a heroine, too, almost as unusual, but she being herself alone, can be compared to no character in fiction.

This paragon Temescal goes adventuring over the vast spaces of a Mexico which the author's richly colored and impressionistic prose renders into a land of glamorous enchantment; a land presented so alluringly that we wonder no longer at the numbers of Americans, to all appearances sane, who allowed themselves to be drawn, unresisting, as if by a powerful magnet, into its rocky-recessed mountains and deserts, finally disappearing in the dim purples of the shadowy beyond. This view of Mexico may be true or false; we do not know, nor do we care, since it is too enticing. However, we are sure that Temescal is no book for the stern realist; but the reader with a dash of poetry in his soul, will forget for a few delightful hours that romance belongs only to a dim and distant past.

25 SHORT PLAYS,
EDITED BY FRANK SHAY,
D. APPLETON & COMPANY.

One method of improving the intellectual and artistic taste of a community, and also of promoting social fellowship, is the production of plays, in which young and old alike may join forces. No educational influence is more helpful to the elusive pursuit of culture, especially in the case of the younger generation, whose powers of appreciation of good drama will be fostered by the study necessary for acting parts in the best plays. Perhaps this is why so many authorities on the subject have taken to compiling anthologies. In this particular one, Mr. Shay has included plays only that are short and unusual, since he has garnered them from the corners of the earth we think of as queer. Some names such as Schnitzler, Maeterlinck and Chekhov are of course, familiar, but few know Ghose, a playwright of Burma, or Hsiung of China, or Biro of Hungary. Each country is represented by one play on this order, and brief information concerning its writer is contained in notes at the end of the book, together with lists of other plays.

EVERYDAY ART,
by AMI MALI HICKS,
E. P. DUTTON AND COMPANY.

A book like this, setting out to discuss the application of artistic principles to everyday life, in what may appear to be its less important aspects touches such a variety of subjects that it can do little more than make suggestions regarding each one. As far as they go, these are sensible and valuable since they may inspire many who hitherto have not thought at all along this line, to start doing it now and so discover unsuspected ways of making their surroundings more enjoyable. This book will appeal especially to those having slender resources and so obliged to depend on their own ideas for home decoration. Mrs. Hicks chats easily and pleasantly on many phases of our daily life. Turn to Page 28

WINTER GARDENS OF MONTECITO

By MONICA SHANNON

NOT all garden-magic in Santa Barbara is hidden away in the friar's garden at the old Franciscan Mission, where, as if it were not full enough of mysticism and memories of tawny Spanish days, fogs steal in and put mantillas over the pomegranate trees. There has been other wonder working in gardens on the slopes of Montecito (Little Wood), oak-clad land, going up from the Channel surf to the magnificent Santa Ynez mountains.

The bosky nature of Montecito, its delightful sloping ways, downward to the western sea and upward to significant peaks, makes it alluring for jardinage. And, having many qualities of the Italian hills, where Lucullus created the first lavish garden, it gives itself easily to terrace-making and the enchantment of vistas.

Here, Mr. Henry Dater of New York has a garden without encircling walls, which still gives so complete sense of seclusion, that it is hard to believe in neighboring estates and highways close at hand. For once beckoned inside by the cocoanut palms, bowing along the entrance with the sensuous grace of Andalusians, there is no sign of homes or highways. Dim olive groves, lustrous oaks and sycamores make a luxuriant landscape through which a mountain peak or luminous bit of sea breaks with unexpected beauty.

Knowing that Paradise is but another word for enclosure and that garden signifies seclusion, one is captured by this garden-paradise. Its good green garden, a place of marble and water and hedges and peace, drops from terraces brilliant with Hibiscus, those strangely seductive flowers from tropical islands.

The closeness of the mountains, the mellowness of the country, the exotic fragrance of the garden and the distinguished Spanish house with its pools of Moorish tiles, raise again the magic of Az-Zahra, that incomparable place near Cordova, built by a Moorish Kalif for the fairest and most capricious of his concubines.

THE BLUE GATE WITH CYPRESSES

FROM CHRONICLES OF THE GARDEN, BY COURTESY OF CHAS. SCRIBNER'S SONS, AND THE PERMISSION OF MRS. COBB, OWNER OF THE GARDEN.

Any lover of diversity and provocative contrast will turn with pleasure to the shaggy hill-side, belonging to Mr. David Gray, which was converted into a primeval garden by Charles Gibbs Adams in collaboration with that large-handed, wholly unaccountable woman, — Mother Nature. Eve might wander back into this garden without being unduly astonished:

"Picture that orchard sprite,
Eve, with her body white,
Supple and smooth to her
Slim finger tips,
Wondering, listening,
Listening, wondering,
Eve with a berry
Half-way to her lips."

Mr. David Gray spent all the years he has had dreaming and planning for this house and garden. When it became possible, he opened a great Hope Chest and took out one idea after another. The house seems to be still growing up out of the ground. Part of it is well below the level of the garden, the windows climbing up nearly to the roof to look out on the tufty, shadow-dappled courtyard. Ferns and simple mountain flowers crowd curiously about the windows.

The hill-side is broken by boulders and cooled by oak and bay and eucalyptus trees. The eucalypti stirred by the ocean air look like slim, nude dancers in dark draperies. There are also a number of slender young madronas, their trunks startlingly carmine among the soft green sage brush, wild lilacs and tree lupins. But at night one leaves the trees, which tell as craftily as Scherazade, stories of the great mountains and sea which they partially hide, for the cactus garden with its sorcery of red deserts. Here tunas, century plants and aloes add a grotesque fascination to the Southern nights and make the sea with its exuberant slopes seem a mirage of mad splendor.

So successful is the garden craft on this great hill-side, that it is almost impossible to tell where the woman in the cast stops and the landscape-architect begins. If asked how he came to manage Mother Nature so adroitly, the garden-master would probably repeat:

"She planted things but not in rows,
Just where her errant fancy led;
I laughed at her with loud 'ho, ho's'
Until she blushed a rosy red."

If, as it has been said, the real beauty of a garden is symmetry, falling of sunlight and shade, contrast of straight building lines with undulating foliage and the wedding of house and landscape, then Mrs. Henry Stephens' winter garden at Montecito is a thing of fine craftsmanship. Devotees of preludes and approaches, especially when leading to charming houses, will respond to her foot-path, hidden by hedges of Pittosporum (Victorian Box) making the air a thing of wonder with its fragrance, which seldom clings to the rippling leaves, preferring travel on any breeze promising adventure. From this reticent pathway, one comes suddenly upon the Italian farmhouse, facing on either side voluptuous and diverse landscape; on one hand, simple hills, climbing down like brown, brightly clad peasant girls to a friendly sea, and on the other, lush verdure of the Santa Ynez range.

The house opens from a great porch-room on to a terrace, looking across the Pacific to the Channel Islands, captivating in their wild beauty, where the audacious Juan Rodriguez Cabrillo went ashore just fifty years after Columbus came to America.

THE GOOD GREEN GARDENS OF THE DATER ESTATE, SANTA BARBARA, CALIFORNIA.

HISTORIC SANTA BARBARA AND THE WORK OF

"THE FIRST NATIONAL GOLD BANK" OF SANTA BARBARA, AS IT WAS FIRST KNOWN WHEN CALIFORNIA WAS ON A GOLD BASIS, SHOWN IN BUILDING IT OCCUPIED FROM 1876 UNTIL 1913

HOW much, in what endless ways, we are indebted to the adventurous souls of the universe, and yet how prone the world has always been to view them with scorn, and how many proverbs have been evolved to prove their lack of virtue. From earliest childhood not one of us has escaped being reminded that a "rolling stone gathers no moss",—though in infancy we rarely had the temerity, if the acumen, to ask why the desirability of amassing moss. Even yet its commercial value is not evident to most of us, and the career of many a keen young discoverer has been blighted by the repetition of that and similar proverbs.

To those souls born with the spirit of adventure has been entrusted much of the growth of the world, and when this adventuring body is endowed with a constructive mind and a love of the beautiful its contemporaries and posterity are the gainers thereby.

The story of the growth and advance of the entire Pacific Coast is of compelling interest, no less from the commercial than the artistic and social side. Santa Barbara offers, perhaps, the most vivid example, as naturally any mention of Santa Barbara brings to mind soft languorous days, perfumed with flowers, gay with laughter and tinkling music, to be closely followed by hardier days, no less romantic but of a far different type.

A portion at least of the commercial advantage of Santa Barbara was due to the interest of one Mortimer Cook, a soldier of fortune, who at the close of the war with Mexico took his discharge from the army and worked his way up the Pacific Coast. Enthralled by the beauty and charm of Santa Barbara he resolved to make it his future home and return at the first opportunity. The chance came to him, rather he made the opportunity, returned and opened a private bank, which became, two years later, the First National Bank of Santa Barbara.

This bank, which grew out of the dream of a lover of adventure, has always been closely identified with the growth and development of Santa Barbara and was the first bank in the State, south of San Francisco, to take out a national charter. At the time this charter was obtained California was on a gold basis and the name of the bank was "The First National Gold Bank", the circulation being known as "Gold Notes", which commanded a premium until the resumption of specie payments. The original charter was dated March 23, 1873, and has been extended to the present time, and as in its incorporation the assets of the private bank of Mortimer Cook were taken over he was made the first president.

The long life of this bank has been an honorable one, full of valuable experiences, such as comes from safely passing through great panics, like those of 1875, 1893 and 1907. It is very proud of the fact that it is one of the few banks in the country which did not issue script in 1907.

The first home of the bank was at the corner of Ortega and State streets but in 1876 it acquired its own building at State and Canon Perdido streets, which was occupied until the completion of the present building, into which the bank moved on Admission Day, September 9, 1913. The interior of th s has been enlarged and remodeled several times as the business grew and increased.

The structure is a fine example of Roman Doric architecture. The exterior is of granite-cement stone, with the vaults and basement of reinforced concrete. The entire lot is occupied by the bank's building and devoted to its business. Its growth is evidenced by the steadily increasing resources, which in 1880 were $66,000.00, as compared to $5,000,000.00 today. From time to time, to meet the increased demands of the community, the bank has added departments, such as Trust, Bond, Savings, Escrow, Exchange, and Collection, so that today, in the scope of its business, it compares with any of the largest banks in the country.

The three pictures illustrating this article show the First National Bank corner in 1883, 1903 and 1923, and it is very interesting to notice the development in each of those twenty-year periods. In the first picture there are nothing but horse-drawn vehicles, including the old-fashioned horse car. In the second picture the horseless vehicle is just beginning to poke its nose into the scene, while in the third the horse has completely disappeared and the street is entirely given over to automobiles and trolley cars.

The interests of the bank are Santa Barbara interests and while architecturally it does not follow the Spanish school it is so good in form and line that it conforms in spirit with the work which is being done in Santa Barbara in not only restoring the old adobe buildings wherever possible but in developing a harmonious skyline, and a general scheme of conformity architecturally not attempted, as yet, by any other California town but which influences the thought of all.

THE BANK IS STILL "AT HOME" ON THE SAME CORNER OF STATE AND CANON PERDIDO STREETS IN 1903 BUT STATE STREET HAD CHANGED VERY MUCH

ITS MODEL THE COMMUNITY ARTS ASSOCIATION

THE PRESENT HOME OF THE FIRST NATIONAL BANK OF SANTA BARBARA, ON THE SAME CORNER, BUT IN ITS LATEST BUILDING OF ROMAN DORIC ARCHITECTURE, THE EXTERIOR IS OF GRANITE-CEMENT STONE, WITH THE VAULTS AND BASEMENT OF REINFORCED CONCRETE

IN the block just south and east of this historic point on State Street and Canon Perdido lies the most interesting section of Santa Barbara as an historic, Californian town. Here is situated the old Spanish plaza always the heart of any town which has a heart as its chief functioning organ, rather than a mere backbone with radiating streets.

Santa Barbara is fortunate in having both a backbone of sound finance and business, and a heart with circulatory system reaching out to her finger tips among her trees and gardened homes.

Warm and sunny is the heart of this old Californian town and well preserved today her spirit of genuine hospitality reaching back into the storied past and the "splendid idle forties" for inspiration and romantic charm.

For six months past these pages have been devoted to the setting forth of the structure and spirit of this remarkable revival of the nearly submerged beauty of a precious California town.

With the completion of the Lobero Theatre, a part of the building progam of the Community Arts Association and the home of Santa Barbara's Community Players, there came an opportunity for a genuine Spanish Fiesta such as only Santa Barbara could give. To quote from the September, 1924, SOUTHLAND in its description of this glorious week of merry making:

Santa Barbara knew the opportunity when it came and the knowledge was universal, everybody recognized it. First, there must be color, and immediately the streets were hung with the red and yellow of Spain and the red, white and blue of the States. Then the costume idea, and each one wanted not only to use the colors of Spain but to have an authentic reproduction of a stated province,—you see Santa Barbara really knows what is correct and you feel happier if you are quite in the picture. Young and old sorted out their treasures and appeared in gowns and mantillas, or capes and trousers, historically correct and very beautiful. * * * The senors and caballeros with their long floating capes in red, white or black were most intriguing, while the gypsies with their gay bandanas worn skin tight around the head, the loose ends falling with such insouciance from behind an ear, seemed to prove a latent spark of the old pirate in every man whether at sea or ashore. Nor is it an indication of an unshared lawlessness for equally apparent were the feminine followers of the open road; here was to be found the gypsy who wore her dagger one moment as an ornament in her abundant hair, the next concealed in her shoe. * * *

To understand the wonderful success of the celebration you must get the spirit of it,—a genuine big masquerade party with Santa Barbara as the hostess,—and as you would accept the hospitality of a friend and know that all gathered under the roof were friends, so here the same feeling prevailed, everybody smiled and was glad, gay greetings were exchanged by passers-by who found a smile contagious, and everywhere were cries of delight at this costume or that, "Fine! I love your hat!" or "Where did the lovely cape grow?" Don't you think we should thank Heaven for a spot where this is still possible? * * *

In November of last year a definite arrangement was made with the Community Arts Association of Santa Barbara to give additional publicity to the interesting community work it is doing so that every member on its list of nearly two thousand might see that work as a unit and thus aid in its intelligent accomplishment.

That the important contribution which this venture in community conservation and "growth in grace" is making to the nation might be rceorded beautifully and referred to by other community enterprises, each subscriber to the Association's roster has been asked to send his copy, when read, to interested friends in Eastern cities. As a result, the sound and fruitful research and the delightful harvest of beauty in community character as well as community arts have been placed in permanent form and distributed throughout the country in public libraries and in the files of social service workers and colleges.

The Encyclopedia Brittanica which barely mentions Fra Junipero Serra and does not even index that gallant explorer, Juan Batista Anza who colonized California for his king by means of expeditions from Sonora, records the founding of Santa Barbara as a Spanish presidio in 1782.

As we go to press word comes that the Community Arts Association in its deeply rooted devotion to the life of Santa Barbara has probed to this far distant date and has just obtained possession of the site of the Presidio and will rehabilitate the Commandante's house (1784) as a nucleus for its new group of buildings to house the School

This fascinating story will appear with ilustrations in the next issue of this bulletin, told by Arthur Meeker, Jr.,

THE HEART OF SANTA BARBARA, EL PASEO, DE LA GUERRA STUDIOS, J. OSBORNE CRAIG, ARCHITECT.

SOUTHLAND

American Ideals

THOMAS JEFFERSON, statesman and exemplar of democracy in the United States, is to be honored by America on July 4, 1926, the one hundredth anniversary of his death. It is planned to dedicate his home, Montecello, as a public monument. This anniversary comes at a time when the newly acquired masses of population in the United States find themselves bereft of the national ideals with which they came to America and still unable to determine what are the democratic ideals America so boastfully claims as her own.

Actions speak louder than words, and the noise made by the acts of politicians and ward-heelers drowns out completely the words of wisdom poured into the ears of new citizens and their children by overburdened, undertrained teachers who have themselves picked up an inspiration where they could and are teaching primarily to further improve their own station in life. Thus does our public school system, founded by statesmen who aimed at an educated democracy, endeavor to pull itself up by its own bootstraps and so continually level down our citizenry to a debased mediocrity.

It is difficult to make, out of this mass of seventy million free citizens from every nation under heaven an educated republic such as formed the ideal of the few people who made up the nation one hundred years ago. Yet it must be done. It is a harder job now than it was in Jefferson's day and can only be accomplished as Jefferson accomplished his own century's work.

What Jefferson did for the United States is embodied in the epitaph which he wrote for his own tombstone.

President Alderman of the University of Virginia writing in the New York Times, calls this epitaph a great epic poem:

"Here was buried Thomas Jefferson,
Author of the Declaration of American Independence,
Of the Statute of Virginia for Religious Freedom;
And the Father of the University of Virginia."

The Father of Free Education from the primary school to the university in America; the author of a bill in his own state legislature to free the souls of men from intolerance and the originator of the Declaration of Independence, that tremendous piece of "copy" which has been repeated over and over during the past century and has passed from mouth to mouth through "Greenland's icy mountains and India's coral strand" until the oppressed and enslaved of all nations have answered its summons and are here waiting to be formed into the kind of a republic which Jefferson foresaw.

Time, indeed, that this nation lifted up Thomas Jefferson on its shoulders and carried him triumphant through the streets of every city from coast to coast. Time, indeed, that his tenets of democracy were studied and made the ideals of every citizen.

For the democratic ideals of Jefferson are fundamentals and will fit into every age. Dr. Alderman calls him "a glorious, intelligent radical" who knew where he was going all the time, and "the greatest liberal who has ever appeared in American history."

Quoting Pasteur's definition of democracy: "Democracy is that order in the state in which every man (and now he would say 'every woman') has a chance to make the most of himself, or of herself, and knows that he has the chance," President Alderman calls Jefferson "the first great American Democrat"; and adds "he would have gone to the stake to insure liberty and freedom to all men."

"Abraham Lincoln," to quote Dr. Alderman again, "that lonely, patient genius of democracy, the present titular saint of the Republican party, into whose homely face Saint-Gaudens has carved the struggle of the people to higher things, had the habit of quoting Thomas Jefferson more often, perhaps, than any other statesman." And he closes his paper with the closing words of Lincoln's letter written in honor of Jefferson's birthday celebration, April 13, 1859: "All honor to Jefferson—to the man who, in the concrete pressure of a struggle for national independence by a single people, had the coolness, forecast and capacity to introduce into a merely revolutionary document an abstract truth, applicable to all men and all times, and so to embalm it there that today, in all coming days it shall be a rebuke and a stumbling block to the very harbingers of reappearing tyranny and oppression."

The Windows of Westminster

IN subtle contrast to these outspoken ideals of democracy as "a government of the people, for the people, by the people," one reads with keen interest the exposition of English Conservatism set forth in the sketches of British statesmen drawn by "The Gentleman With a Duster" in "The Windows of Westminster."

Passing before us in review, these prominent leaders are compared with exponents of socialism in England. Their sweet reasonableness in wanting to keep the British Empire intact and to maintain "that robust sturdiness, that genial good nature and lovable tenderness which characterized the old Tory, who in politics expressed himself or themselves in doing things for the people, are lauded.

But if, as is so often said, England is more democratic in its government than the United States, it must be that ideals are fundamentally different; for "government by the people" has no room in it for leaders who want to do things for the people and will not trust the people to govern themselves. "You can trust the people if you train them," was Jefferson's thesis. And if Britain can train her farflung colonials so splendidly she can certainly train and trust her own.

There is in our own land an element who would "do things for the people." This attitude is fatal to progress; and yet noblesse oblige—those who know how are under obligation to lead. Wise indeed is the statesman who can lead without letting it be known.

Contributions of Science

BEFORE a Valley Hunt Club audience which listened intently to connect every new thought with something already learned and thus to grasp some inkling of the structure of the universe, Professor Russell, head of the Department of Astronomy at Princeton University, gave a superb resumé of the recent knowledge gained by physicists and astronomers on this subject.

Delightfully he led his hearers through the Grand Canyon of the Colorado River to place in their hands a measuring rod with which to sound the depths of time and space. The age of the earth as shown in the time it took to lay the rocks at the bottom of the sea, sand-grain by sand-grain; the time that it took to wear down these uplifted rocks as mountains into a level plain; the time it took to erode, sand-grain by sand-grain, the great canyon of the Colorado out of a solid level plain: all these ages were set before us in correct geological order, and the millions of years thus used to form the earth's surface led the listener out into the eons of eternity and space.

Having thus established the age of the earth, according to the geologists' estimate of the millions of years it took to create a planet fit for human life, and noted the fact that the rocks show only a record of animal life as written in shells and not of the probable shelless precursors, the astronomer launched his audience into space to study the life history of the solar system and the myriads of blazing stars that make up our known universe.

Here he dipped into the work of the astronomer in studying the numbers and the constitution of the individual stars. Professor Russell has had much to do with the latter problem, and with the English astronomers Eddington and Jeans, has made valuable additions to our information in regard to this fascinating subject.

Sketching merely the subject of number to give us a glimpse of the extent of the known universe, the speaker informed his audience on the work of the Mt. Wilson Observatory at Pasadena, where a catalogue of the stars is being compiled and the results of long years of study, recording photographs, and measuring the light of stars give results on the structure of the stellar system.

OPINION

To gain an idea of the age of our solar system an estimate is made of the time it would take to round up the sun's orbit after a possible passing of another star which could have raised so great a tide that the pieces which formed the planets may have been drawn off from the sun's original mass.

The existence or age of the sun before this occurrence took us into the question of why the stars continue to shine. Here the physicist functions in the field of radio energy. Rapidly and brilliantly Dr. Russell described the general theory of contraction and expansion in the life history of a star, dealing with forces so tremendous "that only the nuclei of the atoms are small enough to hold so much energy."

Touching on the Einstein theory of relativity in its accepted meaning, the speaker mentioned the turning of mass into energy and measured the life of a star by the period in which it might consume its own mass, setting free the stupendous energy with which it continued to shine.

Bringing us back to earth by a comparison of our petty lives with these eons of years, the speaker closed one of the most lucid scientific addresses heard here and illustrated in his command and presentation of his subject the broad and yet intensive way in which true men of science think and work.

The Universal Use of Hospitals

FOLLOWING the line of thought we have been pursuing in these pages, we turn for the time from the practice of healing the sick as a personal vocation to consider what the community has to offer its citizens.

In the little village of the past where everybody knew everyone else and cared when neighbors were ill, certain women, motherly and deft, developed skill in nursing, and aided the village doctor. The old type family physician, who is now so much regretted by the family if not by the profession is, one hears, coming back into his own after a swing of the pendulum to extremes of specialization. "Speed the day," say all the mothers, who have passed with their crying children from specialist to specialist and have longed for a friend who knew what to do for earache or a sore thumb.

But this age of specialization has certainly worked out some definite problems pertaining to the organization of the profession as a whole, if not as satisfactory as was the village doctor when he functioned as guide, philosopher and friend.

In answer to a question put to the Red Cross office in our town, we were sent to the Dispensary with its municipal character on one hand and its nearness to the experts at the hospital on the other, just as we might have been directed to the postoffice or the public library.

Surely this is a great advance in community efficiency when the best that the age affords in knowledge of the human frame and the cure of its ills is put at the service of rich and poor alike through the functioning of the Red Cross, the municipal health department and the non-profit hospital through the devoted work of unselfish public-spirited and kindly women who establish dispensaries, preventoriums, and every thing else they can devise to serve their neighbors as the kindly women of the old village life served theirs. The splendid service of a professional clinic, the expert care of the trained nurse and the establishment of great, finely functioning hospitals in our cities have come to take the place of the family physician just as the public schools take the place of the tutor or family governess.

The efforts of Los Angeles to catch up with its own growth and supply its citizens with this modern service is aptly set forth in this timely statement received as we go to press:

Shortage in hospital facilities in Los Angeles hits the workers hardest, because they are the great majorities in number and consequently require the largest amount of accommodation.

Therefore, those who earn their living in trades, shops, offices, counting houses and the like—people who work for wages and salaries—are particularly interested in the success of the Non-Profit Hospital Campaign appeal which is now under way.

The object of the appeal is to raise $2,500,000 by public subscription and donation, beginning May 18, for the erection of the Woman's Hospital and the new Clara Barton Memorial Hospital. Both institutions will be conducted on the non-profit and non-sectarian plan. That means that the cost of hospital care in them will be without profit—at a rate according to the ability of the patient to pay. To those who make from $100 to $200 per month, these institutions with a total of five hundred beds will be a special boon.

Los Angeles is short over three thousand beds. Nearly one thousand people needing hospital attention are turned away from the local non-municipal institutions every month. The lack of beds has become a menace. The shortage has placed Los Angeles the lowest in hospital facilities of any city of its rank in the United States. For instance, the average number of beds in ten of the largest cities is four beds to every thousand inhabitants. This figure includes Los Angeles, which has only 1.7 beds to every thousand. There should be five thousand non-municipal beds here and we have less than two thousand.

The campaign for the two hospitals has been amalgamated to save the expense of two drives. The organization for the appeal is being done by volunteers and one hundred per cent of the money raised during the campaign will go to the Combined Hospital Fund.

Los Angeles is protected against a great fire by its ample water supply and splendid fire-fighting equipment. The city is also fortified against criminals by an efficient police department. Nor has the municipality stinted itself in providing its educational system and parks and recreation spots. In fact, in this regard, no city in the country can boast of better, and few of equal, advantages.

It is, therefore astonishing that Los Angeles has permitted its hospitalization to fall to a point where the shortage has become a real menace to the welfare of the city. But such is the present situation if we are to take the statements of leading physicians and surgeons who are conversant with conditions which they see every day in their practice in and outside the hospitals. The lack of accommodations at the non-municipal hospitals is such now that it is impossible to take care of the city's sick. Twenty-seven are turned away every day according to authenticated statistics. This is about eight hundred a month and ten thousand a year.

This situation is partly explained by the remarkable growth of Los Angeles in the past few years. The expansion has outdistanced the hospital facilities. Development of the hospitalization, therefore depends now upon speedy and efficient action.

The Adventure of Prayer

PRAYER is being with God. You can't choose at all about it, except just in choosing to be with Him. Perhaps He will take you up on the mountain with Him. Perhaps He will take you into the night with Him, or into the mist where you will not be able to see Him. Perhaps you will be with Him in pain, or in exaltation, or in happiness, or in tiredness. He just says: "Come to Me"; and you say: "I will," or "I will not."

You make no stipulations, that is not your part: you know that He wants you, and you know what kind of wanting that is by the Manger and the Cross.

You know that if you say you will not come He does not leave off wanting you, so you imagine what that means. You know that if you come to Him He will ask you to help Him about the Kingdom, that He will in the end give you that work for it that no else can do.

You will find that He will ask you to do things which you can do if you forget about yourself and the sort of person you thought you were, or He may ask you to face death or complete shame as He does Himself. And all the time you will fail Him so often that by and by you will have no self-confidence left, only a growing confidence in Him instead, because He does not fail you.

And prayer must be fearfully difficult, because it isn't easy to be with God, although it is simple. It means that some things must go, like pride, unkindness, and self-indulgence, and self-importance. But all the same it is a choice which the best part of you wants, so that the most glorious souls in all the ages do choose the Adventure of Prayer.

The Challenge.

BIXBY PARK, LONG BEACH, CALIFORNIA, WHERE STATE REUNIONS AND SCHOOL PICNICS ARE HELD.

MAY BASKETS

By THERESA HOMET PATTERSON

ALL the birds in the April list of arrivals may be found nesting in May. Nature has put color into the plumage, and joy into the heart which expresses its self in rapturous, exhuberent music, filling the air with gladness. He that hath ears to hear let him hear. And he that hath eyes let him find birds' nests—not to disturb but to admire and marvel over. There is something about a nest and its eggs which make us feel very tender and sensitive to the beauty and wonder of creation. The way the nest is woven, or carved, and curved and moulded and padded and ornamented and harmonized with its surroundings furnishes happy diversions and study for our walks. There are many types: the log cabins laid up with sticks, the adobes, the grass and fibre baskets and the pine needles, the original pine needle baskets; the Verdin's hut of briars with the thorns all pointing toward the entrance; the cave dwellers home, the woodpeckers excavation, rock crannies, the simple depression in the sand and many more. The padded nest always suggests more tender parents—the luxurious softness of moss, feathers, plant-felt, hair, spider webs, and thistle down. The eggs are pearly white, Robin's blue, earth tinted, and sky blue, speckled and spotted and shaded, and those of marvelous traceries like the Bullock Oriole's which with all their fanciful decoration lie at the bottom of a deep covered, swinging nest where even the mother cannot see them unless her eyes are sharp as Robins' ears. Surely it is to find Gods' own handwriting on the wall of the embryo Oriole's home! Who will find the Rosetta stone which will be the key to its translation.

There was a deal of leafy gossip in a flowering shrub and I decided the Bush-tits must have some of the Hummer's taste for honey, and, I might add, of the Linnet's for they have been pulling out those tiny white cornucopias and nipping off the honey end. One day to my unbounded astonishment I saw the Bush-tit basket swinging in the shrub just high enough to miss the auto top. In using my ears instead of my eyes I had missed the joy of seeing the weaving right under my window. A bird-lover can not be reconciled for such a loss. Then I knew the chatter had been no idle gossip but happy planning—"Isn't it beautiful," "Ah don't you just love it," "Where shall I place this dearie?" I am sure it was only the camouflaging that kept me from seeing the nest sooner. It was built in a mossy shrub, completely covered with green moss little vegetable fibres, fine as hair, and strings and threads binding it all together. No other bird so delights in decorating her home with such a variety of beautiful bits, a flower, a moths wing, a spider web, and in this case they had caught in some of the white flowers which formed a plume-like canopy over the home of the artist. The heavy wind storm, tossing the long willowy branches to which it was stayed, had crumpled the nest, and I was rejoicing that the little birds had flown, which was a conclusion with little foundation. I took the nest down some days later to see if it contained the feather bed which these busy mites like to provide for their babies. It took me some time to find the opening and to separate the tunnel-like entrance. My finger-tip touched feathers but not of a feather bed. It was the poor little mother herself trapped by the storm in her own nest when she entered to lay the first egg. This dear little friend of mine perishing right at my door! I felt guilty of murder not only of the mother but of the half dozen little ones which would have swelled the band of workers so valuable in this land of black scale, and so cheery and interesting in our gardens. They must have called for help but I did not understand. In the bottom of this deep pensile nest lay the one white egg on a cushion of moss and down so fine that it might have been from the coat of a Persian pussy. No, the little birds had not flown as I had thought—it had cost the mother her life when she went in to lay the first pearl in the jewel case.

Hudson writes of finding three little girls in a park feeding the birds, the eldest showing such evident pleasure in casting the bread about so that all might share. She chatted about the different birds to her little companions and when Hudson drew near and questioned, she told him the names—the real ones if she knew them, otherwise the names which she thought fitted them, as the golden duck because its feathers shone like gold in the sun. Then he told her of birds she had never seen. After listening intently she pressed her hands together and said "Oh, I do so love the birds." This picture remained with him for days for he too loved the birds. "It seemed to me that life was not life without them; that I was growing sick and all my senses dim; that only the wished sight of wild birds could medicine my vision; that only by drenching it in their wild melody could my tired brain recover its lost vision."

A baby nine months old is succeeding very well with her first word, which is "bird." She is delighted with bird pictures, her eyes follow the birds in their flight and she listens to their songs. She will be wiser at four than the little girls who said "Those are Juncos," repeating it after a lady and placing the emphasis on the "are." The lady asked her how she knew and her reply was "What could they be but Juncos!" If what we know best we love best we can be sure these children will be conservationists of this important trinity of birds, wild flowers and trees.

I heard the danger signal of the Song Sparrow and looked out just in time to see the Mocker hurling himself at a Cow-bird which was sneaking along the hedge to see if there was a nest where she could deposit an egg. If they know this bird to be a villian why don't they know her egg, or at least the young bird and thrust it from the nest before it crowds out the rightful family. The Cow-bird usually selects genteel and petite foster parents for her children such as the Piliolated Warbler, but I have seen the Song Sparrow on tip toe feeding the young monster which she had hatched. They pick on the Least Vireo habitually and Dawson tells of seeing one irate mother drag the Cow-bird from the nest. Her anger must have given her strength to deal such justice.

LOOKING TOWARD THE EAST OVER THE SHOULDER OF CATALINA ISLAND, WHERE THE EASTER SERVICE WAS HELD AT SUNRISE BY THE RIGHT REVEREND W. B. STEVENS, COADJUTOR BISHOP OF THE DIOCESE OF LOS ANGELES, WITH THE CROSS REFLECTED IN THE STILL WATERS OF THE RESERVOIR.

The Gambel Sparrows have said "Goodbye." How we shall miss their rounds of joy which repeated by the hour never grow monotonous. Their winter pals—the Golden-crowned Sparrows—make the long, long trip to northern British Columbia and Alaska to nest, every bird doubtless returning to the identical spot of other years just as when they come here for the winter. They take their traveling all in one dose and when they're here they're here! Bird banding has proven that they live in a circle of small radius on this end of the line. As birds look as much alike as the proverbial two peas it wasn't possible to prove that the same birds returned from year to year but when a bird wears his own number it is no longer guess work. Those wishing for new worlds to conquer might establish banding stations in the polar regions.

Bird banding is carried on under government supervision and no one can place the tiny numbered bracelets on birds without permit. Every bird's record is sent to Washington. So far there is no class feeling among the birds so honored but there is no telling what kind of exclusive societies their grandchildren may create, such as Daughters of the B. B.'s or Sons of—what would be a good name?

AT LAGUNA BEACH

N. Bruce Robinson, Los Angeles

A crescent moon, a crescent bay,
In that enchanted light Laguna lay
A beach of dreams.

* * *

When I embark upon the Sea of Slumber,
With sail unfurled for those far distant lands,
Oh may I see no wreckage from the past,
Cast high upon receding sands.

But may the port be veiled in velvet darkness
And all the light be in the wave-tucked foam.
I need no lamp or star to set my compass.
Upon the sea all roads lead home.

Swift be the course, as homing wings the swallow,
With Spring the prize and wine-cool winds to race.
How can I wait to cast my eager anchor,
With you upon the landing place?

THE SUNRISE SERVICE AT CATALINA

OF all the thousands of citizens who in this modern, Christian country arose on Easter mornng to take part in some service, none chose a more impressive spot than Catalina. Surrounded by Pacific waters, touched by the morning light as the sun performed his daily miracle from out the eastern, level horizon, the jeweled island thronged with people who had come to worship, to adore, or merely to be there in diffidence and awe.

On the main land, thousands more were in attendance at the churches, on Mt. Roubidoux, in the Bowl at Hollywood where broadcasting stations sent the matin music to hundreds of shut-ins who could not bow the knee before a risen Lord.

Hope for the future of the race is in that wide flung service. Few of those who climbed the mountains Easter morning may have observed Good Friday, yet each had had his own dark day; and the Man of Sorrows knows no fine, hair-splitting creed, but understands.

Through their own suffering leaders of this great throng have risen to heights of leadership. What will they do with all this mass of eager listeners who look to the church, to science, to philosophy, to answer questions which arise in every soul?

At Catalina Bishop Stevens held a service and the wisdom of the ages carefully preserved and made available to modern life flowed from his lips in the beautiful ceremonial of the Protestant Episcopal Church in America.

Over this land, lead in days agone by Spanish padres, the Indians from tribes below our borders fill the churches of the Roman Catholic faith; and mingling on the air all songs and prayers rise in glad unison as the dawn breaks on each new, Christian, Easter morn.

THE PROCESSION OF CHILDREN LED BY "UNCLE JOHN" DAGGETT OF THE TIMES RADIO STATION, IN THE GROUNDS OF THE ST. CATHERINE HOTEL ON CATALINA ISLAND, EASTER MORNING 1925.

THE GUILD
INCORPORATED
EL PASEO DE LA GUERRA
SANTA BARBARA, CALIFORNIA

PUBLISHERS
CRAFTSMEN

THE GUILD IS RECEIVING MANUSCRIPTS FOR PUBLICATION.....PREFERABLY MATERIAL OF A PICTORIAL NATURE, BOOKS ON THE OUT-OF-DOORS, NATURE BOOKS, GARDEN BOOKS, BOOKS OF TRAVEL AND THE FINE ARTS.

MATERIAL OF GENERAL INTEREST WILL BE PUBLISHED TO ORDER AND PLACED UPON THE MARKET.

THE PLAYHOUSE

Continued from Page 11

drapes; Wm. L. Haven, acoustical treatment; J. Hokom Company, sprinkler system; W. E. Langstaff, general electrical contractor; E. O. Nay Company, heating, ventilating and plumbing; Era Petersen, decorator; Roberts Manufacturing Company, hand wrought lighting fixtures; Safety Electrical Products Company, stage switchboard; Watkins Plaster Company, staff ornaments; C. F. Weber Company, theatrical chairs; West & Company, finished hardware.

The best minds of the community have been for months and still are interested in the actual building of the Community Playhouse. Begun as a vital necessity, realized by those nearest to the weekly round of management, the project has been accumulating momentum and material until the talent of the town is concentrated in the social and artistic center now nearing completion on El Molino Avenue.

That the project is on a firm financial basis is vouched for in the personnel of the building committee of the holding corporation. Mr. Frank A. Sellers, as chairman, has so crystalized the various forces and so utilized the talent volunteered that not only have large funds been adequately handled, but money saved by volunteer work has been economically used for needed changes and improvements. Mr. T. W. Smith of the First National Bank of Pasadena has supervised also in the details of contracts, both of these public-spirited men acting for the Community Guild, of which the general board is Captain Paul Perigord, Mr. Hiram Wadsworth, C. J. Hall of the Pacific Southwest Bank, W. D. Lacey, T. W. Smith, Dr. James McBride and Frank H. Sellers, with Mr. Morin as consulting attorney.

With great interest we penetrated the mysteries of the theatre tower and basement, sharing with Mr. Sellers an eager pleasure in the perfection of appliance and modern equipment. Never before had we realized why a stage tower is necessary in a two-story building used as a theatre, or why theatre buildings in commercial centers are only partly available for offices.

Here the tower has become the main architectural feature, sharing only with George Washington Smith's beautiful white tower of the Lobera Theatre in Santa Barbara the distinction which is its due. Growing out of the internal use and necessity of its construction, criticized by the best architectural acumen, and carried to completion by Mr. Dwight Gibbs, architect, and Mr. Alson Clark, artist, whose study of decoration and architectural skyline has been at the service of the Playhouse for months, this tower stands for much in the community, the value of which will develop year after year.

H. O. CLARKE
General Building Contractor
460 S. Fair Oaks Avenue Pasadena, Calif.
Phone Fair Oaks 537

L. BIXBY-SMITH
Camera Portraits
Architectural Studies
2504 W. 7TH ST. LOS ANGELES, CALIF.
PHONE FITZROY 3452

Lenz HAT Studio
643-645 East Colorado St.
Pasadena, Cal.
Near the New Community Playhouse
Phone Fair Oaks 573

Glazed Tiles from Old Mexico
Only 78 years ago California was Mexican Territory. Today, it is still Mexican in architecture, climate, scenic beauty, atmosphere. Enhance this natural charm with the color and glint-of-reflected-sunlight obtainable with Spanish-Mexican tiles.
Imported and stocked by
Talavera Importing Co.
CARE CHEESWRIGHT STUDIOS, PASADENA.

NO. 121—TALMAGE VASE

Beautiful Garden Pieces in Sculptured Terra Cotta
Italian Terra Cotta Co.
W. H. Robison
1149 MISSION ROAD
Opposite County Hospital
Phone Lincoln 1057 Los Angeles

BULLETIN OF SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA CHAPTER A.I.A.

April Meeting of the Southern California Chapter A. I. A.

HAROLD O. SEXSMITH, Editor

THE profession of architecture has suffered several grevious losses in a comparatively short time. Henry Bacon, designer of the Lincoln Memorial, Louis Sullivan, Bertram Goodhue, have passed away in the midst of busy lives. Their work and their ideals are a living force in the lives of hundreds of Institute members who have felt their influence. The Southern California Chapter is distinguished in having as members several architects who knew Mr. Goodhue intimately. Of these men, Mr. Carleton Winslow was associated with him on the construction of the new Los Angeles Public Library at the time of Mr. Goodhue's death. Mr. Winslow is now supervising the construction of this great building for Mr. Goodhue's successors.

It was most appropriate that, as Mr. Goodhue's long time friend and associate Mr. Winslow should be called upon to bring to the Chapter, personal incidents from the life of his departed friend. Mr. Winslow has caught the viril spirit of the man and imparted it to his hearers in a fascinating manner. His account of the steps in the design of the new library and the lines of reasoning which led Mr. Goodhue so unerringly to his conclusions, were most enlightening. Always rational and intensely individual, Bertram Goodhue brought to any style of architecture a marked personal quality which betokens the height of architectural skill.

We close with a quotation from a most beautiful tribute to Goodhue, which was written by Ben Lubschez and published in the Journal of the A. I. A. in May, 1924:" Bertram Goodhue accomplished much and left the world richer and more beautiful for having lived and worked in it. Always a rational iconoclast, always growing, every new thing he did was fresher and better than the last. He had just reached that ripeness of experience when he seemed ready to forsake the last lingering tendency to follow tradition, ready to create out of that vision and imagination which scholarly regard for tradition had ripened and matured, and with his profound sense of beauty and the fitness of things as a guide, when his earthly career was ended with a suddenness the shock of which will remain for many a day."

THE NEED FOR INCREASING THE APPRECIATION OF FINE ARCHITECTURE

THE few influence the multitude. Those artists who have the knowledge and the skill bear the responsibility of arousing others to a fuller appreciation of the beautiful.

In our midst we have exceptional talent among our architects. If they were allowed free rein for even six months, they could transform our city into one of rarest beauty. Examples of their skill are, undoubtedly, becoming more numerous, but how can a city be pictorially intriguing, when there are ten thousand commonplace buildings to one that is wonderful.

The majority of people, when they observe an architectural creation look but cannot see. They see a door or a window in the structure that they would like to imitate, but they have not the ability to analyze from the standpoint of the great principles of art, as for instance the rhythm as manifested in the colonnades, the subtle chiaroscuro as shown in the roof tile shadows, or the fine regard for well spaced fenestration. Consequently, the popular taste for the best in architecture, and in all arts that accompany it, cannot be expected, until the discriminating taste on the part of the public is cultivated.

People can be awakened to the realization that each architect has a particular style, as individual as that of great painters. When we take the trouble to interest the people in architecture, and guide them in their appreciation, then we will have marvelous skylines to our cities, and vistas through our streets that great artists will want to use as subjects for great paintings.

MARGARET CRAIG.

AN INTERESTING HOUSE BY PIERPONT DAVIS. PHOTOGRAPHED BY MARGARET CRAIG, ARCHITECTURAL PHOTOGRAPHER.

THE Canon of Ethics of the A. I. A., Article 3: "It is unprofessional for an architect to accept any commission or substantial service from a contractor or from any interested party other than from the owner."

Many years ago, before the A.I. A. was organized and a code of ethics had been adopted for the profession, it was more or less common practice for manufacturers of building materials to offer architects a certain percentage of the cost of such building materials to specify their use in certain buildings. It is a regrettable fact that such offers were generally accepted and, as a rule, the man who offered the most had his product specified without regard to the selection of the best thing for the owner's interest. This was one of the abuses that led the high-minded men of the profession to organize the A. I. A.

Unfortunately for the profession, there are today architects who do accept commissions and favors from manufacturers and material men.

It is the endeavor of the A. I. A. to include all architects worthy of the name in its membership and to set up a standard of practice through its code of ethics that will enable any one desiring to erect a building to select any architect with the feeling that this architect is not only capable but absolutely honest. An owner wants to feel that his architect can and will advise him to the owner's best interest in every way and that the architect will be absolutely impartial in making decisions all the way through the work.

If a professional man does not inspire confidence, how can he expect to secure clients? Imagine the state of mind of a client who finds that the architect, whom he has selected and in whom he has the greatest trust and confidence, is receiving commissions from the metal lath manufacturer's agent, the heating contractor, or other material men.

Of course the manufacturer's agent and material men are going to have their opinion of such architects and the profession is bound to feel the effect of these opinions.

There are achitects who, while they will not accept monetary commissions for material men or manufacturer's agents, and who feel themselves perfectly ethical, yet are willing to expect and ask real services and substantial favors from such men. They cannot see and will not admit that such services and favors are one wth money commissions.

It is a sad commentary that most people will allow themselves to think that they are able to get something for nothing, and particularly in the case of architectural services. They will let a designer and builder tell them that their building plans will cost them nothing or that the building plans will amount to 1½% or 2% of the cost of the building. Again, they will employ a certain architect because he charges only a very small fee. It is just such designers, builders and architects who accept commissions and favors from material men and manufacturer's agents and owners pay these commissions in every case in the increased cost of the material, the poorer quality of the material and the lower quality of the workmanship secured.

The American Institute of Architects is doing more and more each year in educating the public to use the services of architects. If the people will only consult architects and demand evidence of integrity as well as ability, it will not only be unprofessional and unethical for architects to accept commissions from contractors and other interested parties other than the owner, but it will be impossible for such architects to remain in business.

ASSOCIATED GENERAL CONTRACTORS OF AMERICA
SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA CHAPTER

Los Angeles, Cal., April 21, 1925.

To the Architects of Southern California.

Gentlemen: We are sure you will respond with your hearty cooperation when a reasonable request is made for standardization of some of the practices in the contracting and building business. Our immediate problem is to obtain building plans in time properly to prepare contractors' bids. Some architects have assured us that they consider the accompanying schedule of time required for preparation of bids as being not only reasonable but a minimum for careful work such as we wish them to receive. We will appreciate your assistance in establishing this better practice.

Yours very truly,
E. EARL GLASS, Exec. Sec.

Class	To $25,000	$25,000 To $50,000	$50,000 To $100,000	$100,000 To $200,000	$200,000 To $400,000	$400,000 To $700,000	Over $700,000
Class of Structure	NUMBER OF DAYS
A—Theatres, Large Schools, Clubs, Hospitals, Banks, Churches	8	10	12	14	16	22	30
A—Hotels, Office Buildings, Apartments	7	8	10	12	14	18	24
A—Factory and Loft Buildings, Warehouses	7	8	9	10	11	16	20
C—Theatres, Schools, Churches, Clubs, Banks, Hospitals	9	9	10	11	12	18	....
C—Apartments, Flats, Office Buildings, Stores	7	8	9	9	10	16	....
C—Warehouses, Garage Buildings, Factories	7	7	7	8	8	.....	.....
D—Residences, Flats	6	8 to 12	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....
D—Sheds, Warehouses	6	8 to 10	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....

TWO BUILDINGS, MORGAN, WALLS & CLEMENTS, ARCHITECTS

A VIEW OF THE FEDERAL BANK IN WHICH MAY BE SEEN THE CEILING DONE IN CELOTEX, SUPPLIED BY GEORGE L. EASTMAN COMPANY AND ARTISTICALLY DECORATED BY ARENZ-WARREN COMPANY. ALSO THE BEAUTIFUL WINDOW GRILLS IN WROUGHT IRON, THE WORK OF J. C. KUBIC

SOUTHLAND Magazine has on several occasions brought to the attention of its readers the many architecturally beautiful commercial buildings to be found in and around Los Angeles. Some of these buildings through publication in eastern magazines have received nationwide publicity after Southland had called attention to their merits. Many of the finest of these have been designed in the office of Morgan, Walls, and Clements, architects.

The building for the Gotfredson Truck Corporation, here illustrated, is a further example of their skill and ability in the design of commercial structures. Southland was especially desirous of an opportunity to "write up" this fine piece of work because it exemplifies the results that may reasonably be expected when Owner, Architect, and Contractor are in hearty cooperation.

The Southern California Chapter of the American Institute of Architects have long recognized this need for cooperation among these three important factors in every successful building. Every year the Chapter brings in a jury of noted architects from other cities. This jury selects the best building in each class of stucture. The Owner, Architect, and Contractor are each given "Honor Awards" by the jury.

The Gotfredson Truck Corporation is the happy possessor of this year's award to owners of buildings in its class. H. M. Baruch was the contractor to whom went the award for excellence and integrity in constructing the building.

A SECTION OF THE GOTFREDSON TRUCK CORPORATION GARAGE, SHOWING THE STRONG, WELL DESIGNED ROOF TRUSSES—THE WORK OF WILLIAM J. SUMMERBELL

A GLIMPSE OF THE ORNAMENTAL PLASTER AND PERFECT IMITATION CAEN STONE PANELS INSTALLED BY J. B. RICKERT & SON

Carrying out a previously announced policy of fostering and encouraging home industries, Southland desires to call attention to the excellent workmanship and efficient service rendered in the erection of this building by several concerns. Their service, it will be seen was quite diversified, but its very diversity will evidence the solution of a problem which has concerned our Chamber of Commerce for some time; namely, the securing for Los Angeles of a great variety of industries. The first firm whose material found a place in the building is the Hammond Lumber Company of 2010 South Alameda Street. Their hurrying trucks are seen so frequently in these days of building activity that the words Hammond and lumber are almost interchangeable. One seldom thinks of lumber without the word Hammond in front of it. There is a reason for such an association of ideas. Perhaps it is their courteous and efficient service and the consistent excellence of their product.

There is one craftsman whose work deserves much consideration for he has made possible the more general use of cement as a floor material. Robert B. Lammens, 3716 Arlington Street, has developed a process of staining cement floors which is finding ever widening use. Chemicals are used which react upon the cement and upon each other to produce the desired colors. These colors range from light creams and buffs to deep rich reds, leather browns and purples. The effect of the chemicals is to harden greatly the wearing surface. The colors are absolutely fast and penetrate the surface of the floor for some distance. One of the first large floors to be installed by this process was that of the University Club Lobby. In spite of the hardest usage this floor is even more beautiful than when first put down and shows no signs of wear. Since that time its process has been very greatly improved. All the sales room floors in the Gotfredson building were stained by this process. The cost is only a few cents per square foot.

THE DISPLAY ROOM, GOTFREDSON TRUCK BUILDING. A VIEW OF THE ACID STAINED CEMENT FLOOR—THE ROBERT B. LAMMENS PROCESS

Another interesting industry which has developed in Los Angeles is shown in the illustration of the Gotfredson Garage. All the roof trusses were designed and fabricated by a specialist. Mr. William J. Summerbell of 754 East 29th Street, is responsible for this work. The clean cut and well studied form of the trusses are evidence of high mechanical and engineering skill. Many architects have availed themselves of this specialized service because they have found Mr. Summerbell thorougly competent, and anxious to cooperate, and able to save money for both owner and architect through economies in design.

Further illustration of the varied abilities of the architects, Morgan, Walls, & Clements, is another Honor Award building, the Federal Trust and Savings Bank in Hollywood. There are three craftsmen whose work on this building we are anxious to commend. The interior decorating was performed by the Arend-Warren Company Incorporated, 2121 West Pico. An evident pride in work well done and an apparent basic knowledge of their craft has set these men apart as craftsmen of the highest order. Los Angeles architects are fortunate in having such men upon whom they can call for work of the best type.

The modern plaster worker has developed the technique of his trade to such a high degree that it requires the highest intelligence on the part of the craftsman to grasp all of its phases. A thorough knowledge of materials is requisite coupled with wide experience in their use. J. B. Rickert & Son, 322 South Citrus Avenue, are craftsmen of this order. Not only were they the contractors for the exterior plaster but they also installed the ornamental plaster and the imitation Caen Stone which latter work is done so beautifully that few people are aware that it is other than the genuine stone imported from France.

The ceiling of the banking room is treated acoustically with a remarkable material known as Celotex. Celotex is composed of bagass or sugar cane fibre. The ceiling decorations are painted directly on the Celotex surface which has an ideal texture for any form of treatment from paint to plaster. Most architects in and around Los Angeles are specifying Celotex as it can be used in countless ways, both in and outside the building. Celotex combines the qualities of a number of materials in that it is at the same time a heat and cold insulator, a sound deadener, an accoustical corrective, and an ideal base for plaster or stucco. California's hot summer sun never penetrates to bedrooms where the roof is insulated with Celotex; 22,000 square feet of Celotex are installed in the ventilating ducts of the Pasadena library to deaden the sound of whirling ventilating fans.

The George L. Eastman Company are the local representatives for Celotex. In accord with the Eastman policy a highly trained corps of specialists are always available to introduce prospective builders to the various uses of this remarkable material.

So far as details are concerned, the feature of both this and the Gotfredson Building, which stays in the memory of the visitor to either, is the extraordinary beauty of the wrought iron. One finds himself wondering if it is really possible to find artisans in Los Angeles who can really produce such work. Such evident knowledge of the limitations of the materials, such skillful modeling within those limitations, such patient, painstaking care in fabrication are the marks of a master craftsman. Such a man have the architects found in J. C. Kubic, whose shop is located at 130 South Cudahy, Bell, California.

THE FACADE OF FEDERAL BANK BUILDING

He does not copy, but from love and understanding of his craft, he is constantly inspired to create. He is not just merely hammering out designs in iron, but creates his designs because of his love for his art. Years of experience coupled with a thorough training in the theory of design, modeling and painting are responsible for the high excellence of his creations. We strongly urge our readers to visit both of these buildings, if for no other reason than to examine the work of this one man.

And last but not least—the Tropico Potteries Co. of Glendale which plays such an important part in most of our finest buildings—has lent themselves to add to the durability and beauty of construction in this, our Southwest.

BULLETIN OF THE ARTS AND CRAFTS

By MARION HUGUS CLARK

THE PARIS EXPOSITION

AND now comes summer. At least two of the active and many of the inactive Arts and Crafts members from Southern California are going to Paris to visit the International Exposition of Modern Decorative and Industrial Art. Much might be written upon the result of the ruling that raw materials and copies be excluded.

Perhaps American manufacturers have been afraid to take a chance in using original designs executed by Americans. Then, too, it is the curse of Art Schools in America that they have taught historic instead of original design. Without doubt there is more tradition in the East and that makes it harder for the Eastern teacher to accept principles which are in reality the very foundation of design.

However, the very beginning of so-called modern design in America originated with Professors Dow and Fenelossi of Columbia University. Ralph Helm Johannot of Carmel followed Professor Dow at Pratt Institute and developed the idea still further. He holds classes in various cities of the East during the winter. Douglas Donaldson absorbed the principles of Color and Design as a garden absorbs and uses the dew. He gives it to his pupils in the same way. The Donaldson Studio home on Melrose Hill in Hollywood is in the center of a garden of applied design and the family lives their art. Rudolph Schaeffer in San Francisco is inspiring pupils with the simplicity and wonder of color design. Didactically we might say that these three teachers use the project method, avoid the academic and present the inspirational point of view.

It occurs to me that a better understanding of our various schools of design, East and West, would result if the Eastern craftsmen came West and the Western craftsmen went East for the summer sessions.

It is all in knowing what you want.

Are you Baboonski, the bandit; Count Karolyi, who ranks with Rothchild in wealth; Mestrovich, the great sculptor or Cizek, the teacher?

While Mrs. Rodman was speaking to the members of the Arts and Crafts Society and showing them the leather, woolen, and linen articles in her collection, it came to me that Mrs. Rodman would have stopped at the Bristol in Vienna, the Grand Hotel Royal in Budapest and the Hotel Anglais in some other city, if she had been the average traveler. Instead she dropped her trunks and with a handbag dared the unknown and in her talk told us what she had found in the Balkan States. She knew what she wanted to see and chance filled in the details.

A red leather purse bought in Sarajevo reminded us that Sarajevo is second only to Constantinople in leather goods. With the speed of thought we were on a steamer in the Sea of Marmora approaching the Bosphorus and Constantinople (Mrs. Rodman had said that we must not take the train). There was the Magic City with an unreal beauty that hurt you. A practical American business man at our elbow said: "It has the greatest harbor in the world." There was a tile from this beautiful city, such as our own Mr. Batchelder might have made.

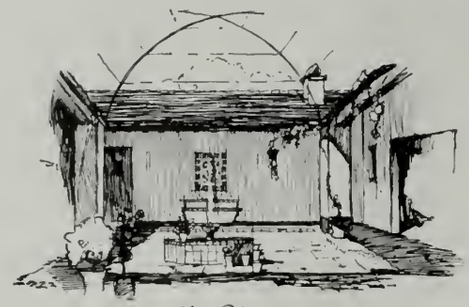
There was a peasant bag from Ragussi, given to Mrs. Rodman by Count Karolyi. From Zagreb came a coat of leather, lined with the natural wool and decorated outside with red and green leather disks on the grey white of the coat itself. This is a museum piece. A dress of almost solid embroidery on heavy linen was from Macedonia. A Polish rug; embroideries from Vallejo; better than the material evidences of this trip into a country that is visited by only a few adventurous ones was the sense of contact with the people. Bread and honey in the village square, with all the villagers for her guests. The train chugs into the station, and the hand-shake all around as she boards her car for another village.

Mrs. Rodman's collection has been left with Miss Anito Delano, while Mrs. Rodman is visiting South America. It will be placed on exhibit, probably in the Museum cabinets of the University of California on South Vermont avenue, Los Angeles.

As we drank our coffee with Mrs. Rodman after her talk and we, through her, had a sense of friendship for the Balkan people, the old wanderlust came over us and as we couldn't go to the Balkans, we packed son Bob's bag and our own and spent Easter week at the Grand Canyon with dude wranglers, the Indians and Moen Kopi village, and the shadows of an extinct people in the Cliff Dwellings at Flagstaff.

We brought back bits of silver done by the Navajos, baskets by the Hopis, a memory of sheep at sunset on desert wastes, but not a single photograph of the Canyon. They are too terrible, these hard realistic photographs.

Arthur Dow, who is like a saint in the Craftsman's calendar, visited that part of Arizona and painted the wonder of it. An exhibit of his Canyon pictures was given in New York and two of them were reproduced in the International Studio in the spring of 1923. I hope that some one with influence will tell either the Harvey or Santa Fe people of these pictures and that they will use them in helping people to understand and enjoy still further the Grand Canyon of the Colorado.

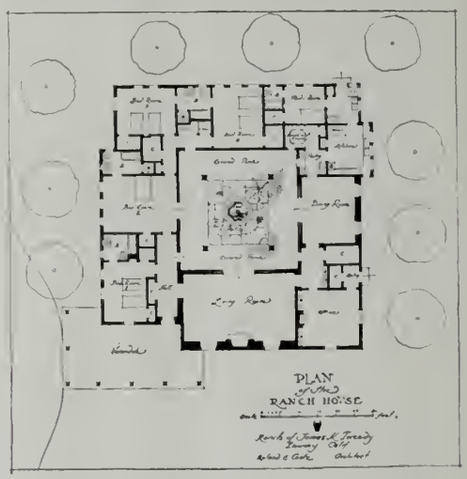


Miss Anito Delano, Chairman of Entertainment, has had a plan in mind, that she has been able to carry forward towards realization. It is called a Pilgrimage Tour. The first of these tours will be on April the thirtieth, just after California Southland has gone to press.

CAPTURING SOME OF CALIFORNIA'S ROMANCE

By ROLAND E. COATE

ISN'T it still possible for us to capture some of the romance of the early days in California? To reclaim something of the days of the ranches with their low adobes surrounded by old pepper trees, showing glimpses of whitewashed walls, broad, cool verandas and roofs of brick-red tile or hand split shakes? I believe that it can be done by looking back and studying the characteristics of these old houses of this southern country and gaining an appreciation of the manner in which the people lived who occupied them. Houses of straightforward, simple lines, showing unerring adaptability to the climate, were made of the materials at hand and furnished with the odds and ends from different sources, from Mexico and from around the Horn.



Such a house was above all else a place in which to live, a house to enjoy, a hospitable place, a house well fitted to its surroundings. Moreover, there is a connecting link between the early California ranch-house and our present day. It belongs to this country and its associations have been inherited directly. Transplanted architecture is interesting and often satisfying enough, depending upon the many factors that write themselves into every building program and the skill with which they are met, but how many Spanish houses, as they are commonly interpreted today, no matter how great their appeal, could stand up under the test which I saw applied last summer?

The Patio

While driving inland we came quite unexpectedly upon an old adobe, several miles north of San Diego. We stopped and were very graciously invited in to see the house by the occupant, who was a newcomer from the east. He had brought with him a splendid collection of Colonial furniture and brasses. These pieces he had placed in the old house and although I did not see a single piece of Spanish furniture the result was one of perfect harmony. In trying to account for this I decided that the old ranch house was probably as closely akin to that furniture as to anything from Mexico or Spain. After all, the windows looked as though they might have been brought around the Horn in the early days, as was much of the material used in those old houses, I have been told.

Realizing that a ranch house cannot be built with great promise of success upon a fifty foot lot I have waited for the opportunity which has recently come my way to build such a house in its proper setting. In the plan which is shown the problem has been to try to capture some of the romance of the early days without sacrificing the modern demands of comfort.

The patio is the outdoor Living Room, small compared with those of the old houses but providing the possibilities for outdoor color with the use of potted flowers and vines and with the tile pool or fountain in the center. A dome of fine copper screen forms the roof over the center of the patio, thus permitting all of the doors into the house to be left unscreened and affording unhampered circulation and view into the patio from the various rooms. Thus it becomes the hallway of the house, as well as the outdoor room and makes possible a house plan of considerable economy. The imagination responds to such a house in this climate.

The Cool Verandah

QUALITY SERVICE
THE ELITE
DRY CLEANERS AND DYERS
Plant: 797 So. Fair Oaks Ave.
Colo. 1349 Pasadena, Cal.

LAUNDERERS DRY CLEANERS
Royal Laundry Co.
461 So Raymond Colo. 67
Pasadena, Calif.

Superior Rental Service
HOMES, APARTMENTS, BUNGALOWS
In Pasadena's Exclusive Sections
MRS. MORRIS (Rentals Exclusively)
THE J. W. WRIGHT CO.
312 E. COLORADO ST., PASADENA

Permutit Soft Water Saves Clothes
TROY LAUNDRY
In Business for Twenty Years
Pasadena, Cal. Phone C. 146
Alhambra 243-J

PASADENA HOMESEEKER'S REFERENCE PAGE

The Rose Tree Tea House
Luncheon, Afternoon Tea, Evening Dinner
CLOSED SUNDAY
ITALIAN LINENS, POTTERIES AND VARIOUS GIFTS SUITABLE FOR EASTER
ROSE TREE GIFT SHOP
167 North Orange Grove Avenue
PASADENA, CALIFORNIA
Telephone Colorado 5523

Angelus Lighting Fixture Co., Inc.
Designers and Craftsmen of
Lighting Fixtures, Lamps, Fire Tools, Console-Tables and Mirrors
746 So. Figueroa St., Los Angeles
VAndike 2296

For STEAMSHIP RESERVATIONS
TO
HONOLULU, EUROPE, ALASKA, NEW YORK via PANAMA CANAL
Round the World Cruises
Agency for Thos. Cook & Son
Raymond and Whitcomb Co.
C. J. JONES STEAMSHIP AGENCY
294 East Colorado St., Pasadena
Phone Fair Oaks 8026

JAMES CINI & COMPANY
of Italy
Antique and Foreign Jewelry
Italian and French Novelties
390 E. Walnut St. Pasadena, Calif.
Fair Oaks 5583

COACHELLA DATE GARDENS

By ELEANOR HOFFMANN

THE longer one lives in California and the more one prowls about, the more it shows its infinite variety. It is a far cry from the snow-capped summits of Shasta where the frost-loving apple flourishes, to the Coachella Valley where enormous clusters of Old-world dates ripen under the hot autumn sun. From Banning one can either reach the valley through forty miles of arid desert or around Palm Springs, within a few miles of the only species of native American palms, whose dry small fruits nourished the Thaquitz Indians.

Indio, Mecca, Thermal and Coachella, these are the valley towns that have set their hearts on the date industry and bend all their energies towards its success. To the casual visitor is is the tremendous romance that is apparent of an industry still in its youth and one transported from the oases of Persia, Algeria and Egypt. But if one stays only a week on a date-ranch, something more than the romance makes itself felt. That is the patience, perseverance, experimentation, cheerful willingness to accept the defeat of tried methods and enthusiastic search for better ones. Californias ways cannot be the ways of the old world. For the pioneers it has been a constant trying and discarding of methods and it will be to their early struggles and hardships that future growers will owe their success.

The oldest ranch in the valley, a wonderfully picturesque old place, has seventeen year-old palms with the fruit hanging thirty feet from the ground. Here I saw the Palm Springs hermit, naked to the waist and bronzed as an Indian, a curious back-to-Nature figure. While the other pickers used ladders, he was climbing from leaf-base to leaf-base as the Old-World pickers are said to climb. In the younger bearing orchards, the palms are low and picking can be done from the ground. The youngest orchards of all are the freshly planted off-shoots. Dates are propagated in two ways, one by seeds, the result known as seedlings, though they may attain their maximum age of two centuries, or by off-shoots cut from the palm istelf. The first method is a gamble, producing surprises pleasant and otherwise, sometimes tremendous improvements on old strains. The off-shoot method enables one to reproduce known and approved varieties. The off-shoots may be imported from the regions of the Mediterranean or from Arizona and California gardens.

Unlike the south-eastern states, California realizes the menace of a one-crop industry, so one finds acres of cotton and grapes associated with the dates. These additional crops are especially valuable during the youth of the palms before they are ready to pay back in fruit the money expended for cultivation. Water of course is the most essential factor and upon the wise and regular method of irrigation depends the success of the fruit. Fertilizers, covercrops, pruning, protection of fruit from weather and birds, insect pests are some of the other problems to be grappled with. Pollination is perhaps one of the most interesting phases of the industry. Like the pepper tree, our eastern holly and many others, the date-palm is diclinous, the male tree furnishes pollen only and the female tree the ovules that develop into fruit. In the normal wild state the trees are equal in number and wind carries the pollen from male to female. In the cultivated state an equal number of males takes up an unnecessary and extravagant amount of acreage. Therefore the proportion of males is kept exceedingly small. To insure pollination, however, sprigs bearing pollinate flowers are broken from the male palms and tied among the bunches of female blossoms. This insures large and perfect clusters of fruit.

As "pigs is pigs" so "dates is dates" until we have had the luxury of California products. It is singular to note how travelers return from the date-growing regions of the Old World unwilling to touch an imported date, but no longer strange after they have explained the adulterated process of packing and contact with the bare feet of the natives.

In America the different types demand different methods of picking and packing. Dates are divided into three main groups; dry, semi-dry and soft. Bread-dates illustrate the first group, exceedingly dry and edible in larger quantities than the softer types; of the semi-dry, Deglet Noor is the variety one hears most about. It can be picked with less care and aside from fumigation, needs less care in the packing-house than the juicier and softer varieties. Of the latter there are innumerable strains and varieties with fascinating Persian and North African names, luscious flavors and soft colors. In contrast to the familiar brown date of doubtful past, one is given an infinite variety of colors and shapes to sample, purple, black, fawn color, tawny, russet or bronze, each with its own distinct individuality. It is fatal to wander through a seedling orchard

A CALIFORNIA DATE ORCHARD IN THE COACHELLA VALLEY

A DATE PALM IN FULL FRUIT, SHOWING A VARIETY OF COLORS AND SHAPES.

sampling them all, as a result lunch has no charms. Perhaps the colors are even lovelier before the dates are ripe and lose their firm texture and taut skin, then they show all shades of pinks and reds, yellows and orange, mauves and lavender. There are few more picturesque sights than innumerable tall palms bearing their huge and heavy bunches and long drooping stalks.

The picking of the soft dates which comes in the early fall, is a delicate job. Women are more valuable than men, their touch is so much softer and the fruit must not be bruised. To avoid bruising, flat trays with small shallow berry-boxes are used. The dates are placed in them carefully, only one layer deep. Trays are wired together and rushed to the packing-house. Some ranches pack their own, while a group of three are trying things out on a co-operative basis, with their packing-house in Monrovia. There the dates are taken into the receiving-room, checked off and placed in a huge cylinder where a pressure of gas brings about complete fumigation. After entering the main room, they are washed in a fine spray of water, then dried in warm air. The next step is grading. Then they can either be packed and sterilized in glass jars or put in cartons. If destined for cartons, they are sterilized and dehydrated, then packed in air-tight sealed packages. Then the keeping quality is assured, and they can be shipped to all parts of the country. Snow-bound New England can revel in dates from the hottest spots of the southwest.

One other intensely interesting aspect of the date-growing is the way in which the growers regulate their lives to tropical heat which has been known to reach a hundred and twenty-nine degrees. Water that fills a swimming-pool is equally valuable afterwards for irrigation purposes, and almost any heat is endurable with a cool swim every few hours. The sight of pith helmets gives one the romantic feeling of being somewhere near the equator but utility justifies their existence more than romance. A low house, wide spacious rooms, screened-in-porches, green lawns with the dense shade of umbrella trees, makes desert life very different from what one imagines it. Clever devices like sun-heated hot water from coils on the roof, fruit and vegetable counters under glass with pipes of ice-water running through, show how easily one can adapt modern conveniences to extreme climatic conditions. A few things of course they must go without; horses cannot breathe there on account of the heat, a mule's morning is over at ten; there is very little rain. Great winds come, however, that bend the long rows of graceful tamarisks, and leave the air as clear as a spring shower leaves ours.

It is strange and wonderful to think that in a few hours from the metropolitan turmoil of a vast city like Los Angeles, one can travel in the shade of golden-fruited, grey green palms, with the blaze of a tropic sun above, and a distant view of deep blue mountains in their naked primitive moulding, and find desert peace.

CALIFORNIA HOMES AND GARDENING MANUAL

LOS ANGELES ARCHITECTURAL CLUB BULLETIN

AN ODE TO A DRAWING PENCIL

I know not where thou art,
I only know
That thou wert on my desk
Peaceful and contented
A moment back
And as I turned my head
To light a pill
Some heartless wretch
Went South with thee.
I know not who he was
Nor shall I investigate
Perchance—?
It may have been
The guy I swiped thee from.
—Author Unknown.

Crepe Hanger Needed

THE secretary of the club would like to correspond with any other club member who entered drawings in the Redwood Association Competition just closed, and who failed to land a prize. Here is how it happened. A nice fat envelope came today from the Redwood Association. It looked as though it might have a check inside. We proudly opened it in the excited company of the other men in the office. Sorrows of Werther! what did we find but a nicely phrased letter from Mr. Hammatt telling us how derned good our designs were and how the jury of renowned architects had debated long and furiously and finally decided to place the laurel on our expectant brow. But no, it was not to be. Some brilliant juror at the last minute discovered that our plan was drawn at one-quarter instead of one-eighth scale. So out we went hors de combat or hors d'oeuvre or whatever kind of horse it is that you are when you get kicked out. We'll eat our editorial sh——, well, any way, that was a pretty fine technicality upon which to lose a competition so we are looking for some other disappointed competitor who can give us the loan of a neck on which we can shed a few alligator tears.

Designer Wanted

The secretary of the club has been approached by a local architect who is in need of a designer. The man to fill the position must be of the very best training and experience as the work involved is to be under the supervision of, and is to be designed, by the man selected. The salary will be commensurate with the obligation and ability involved. There will be an opportunity for an associateship for the right man. Any communication on the subject will be considered confidential.

THE ARCHITECTURAL CLUB OF LOS ANGELES

OFFICERS

for 1925

J. E. Garnsey, President
Roy H. Kelley, Vice-President
H. O. Sexsmith, Secretary
Paul W. Penland, Treasurer

DIRECTORS

Walter S. Davis, Director
J. E. Stanton, Director
H. C. Chambers, Director

Allied Architects' Library

Club members are again reminded that the Allied Architects Library on the eleventh floor of the Citizens' National Bank Building is open to club members. A few wise and studious fellows have formed the habit of dropping in at the library and browsing during the noon hour. It is surprising how much inspiration one can pick up by a few minutes spent in such manner each day. The library is soon to receive an accession of eighty-five new volumes from the house of Morance in Paris. This new material will be mostly on French and Italian architecture. Here is an opportunity. Let's make it good.

Etching Class

Several members of the production department of the Allied Architects' Association have formed an etching class under the instruction of Mr. Millier. It has been intimated that Mr. Millier might be willing to conduct another class in this most fascinating subject. Any club members who are interested should get in touch with Mr. Adams at the Allied Architects' drafting room, Pacific Desk Company Building.

Small House Plan Service

The Small House Plan Service bureau conducted under supervision of the club is still calling for small house designs which may be published in the Sunday newspapers. Members who have material of this nature should make it available for publication. Many plans have been sold as a result of this type of publicity.

Plans From All Over the Land On Display At The Small House Plan Service

The Small House Plan Service of the Architectural Club has recently made arrangements with the national office of the Architects' Small House Service Bureau at Minneapolis, to offer the plans and publications of the latter to the building public here, in addition to the small house plans of California architects.

The national organization acts through Regional Bureaus in various districts of the country, so that the designs of each bureau are primarily intended to solve the problems of its particular section. Much of the work, however, is adaptable to other fields, and it is with the purpose of making the Plan Service of the Architectural Club of the widest possible scope and usefulness that all available material of approved standards dealing with small house problems is being gathered together, displayed and offered to the building public.

The Small House Plan Service is located in the Building Material Exhibit in the Metropolitan Building.

THE HOUSE AND ITS COST IN CALIFORNIA

Illustrated by a Complete House
By Bennett and Haskell. Cyril Bennett and Fitch Haskell, Architects.

HAPPY is the man who owns a tree around which to build his home. Happier still is he who has an architect who knows how to build a house around a tree, or in any other position and still keep it within bounds and habitable in all kinds of weather.

As the old nursery rhyme has it, "This is the house built round a tree, and this is the builder who did it."

Of course the recipe reads, "First find your city lot with a tree on it"; this is no easy task, for our first families were from the Middle West, where it rains all summer and, being brought up to think of trees in terms of firewood, they cut down California's beautiful oaks and sycamores and burned them. Then, when the summers grew drier and drier, they hurried to plant trees. And, while some were enamored of the palm, the more sensible ones planted our fast growing live oaks, or let them grow where the acorns dropped.

But this is the house built around an oak tree and now tea is served beneath its kindly branches on the terrace just outside the sitting room. Harold W. Herlihy is the owner and Fitch Haskell the architect. To Mr. Haskell the owner gives the credit for making possible a home that is hospitable, conveniently arranged and thoroughly livable. In possession of a tree and having found an architect who was sympathetic and understanding, it was inevitable that the owner should find himself in a home that met his needs at every turn.

A HANDSOME HOUSE OF EXCELLENT PROPORTIONS AND A CALIFORNIA LIVE OAK FOR BACKGROUND AND SHADE.

A large degree of Mr. Haskell's success has been due to his penetrating intuition of an individual case, but it has also been due to another happy faculty—his ability to select decorative features that add distinction without over-ornamentation.

No one who enters the house can resist the charm of good proportions and useful spacing. The front door opens to the north, a most economical conservation of the sunny sides of the house for other purposes, where sunshine is useful.

Set in the door itself is a little grill that guards an opening through which those inside may see the street or speak to a night visitor. On the side street is a side entrance into the front hall and to the owner's office or man's room. Under the stairway a little door also connects the service part of the house with the front hall.

In a house such as this, which is an orderly arrangement of the owner's needs, the architect and the contractors get their best results from working not directly to specifications but by getting together and visualizing the house as a whole. Therefore, when the architect's specifications call for bids on the job of covering the wood and plaster with paint the painters chosen must be trustworthy and competent, and have in their employ workers who will carry out the spirit of the thing. An artist unusually conscientious in this respect was selected by Mr. Haskell for the Herlihy house, W. S. Pesenecker of 34 North Broadway, whose ability to perfect the architect's plans proceeds from his ability to visualize first the owner's feeling.

The gray-green sashes and screens, and the little wooden grill which have contributed in a subtle fashion to the quiet beauty of the house where the products of the Crown Manufacturing Company, which, in its plant covering three acres at Green and Vernon streets, has under the supervision of W. L. Leishman been meeting for twenty-one years the millwork needs of architects who appreciate the advantages of well-dried lumber and the facilities of a large well-equipped factory.

(The heating system was selected from the Pasadena Gas Appliance Company at 901 Colorado street.

Carefully worked out in its proportions, its moldings and window frames, its simply paneled doors and interesting wooden grills, this house is a liberal education to the whole community. Its example is worthy of imitation although to copy it would be a crime. It proves that by a careful selection of the best materials and most reliable contractors much more can be secured for the same money, and satisfaction be lasting as long as the home stands.

BEAUTIFULLY FINISHED ARE THE WALLS AND THE TRIM IN THE HALL. W. S. PESENECKER, PAINTER.

Working with the architect and the painter, and more especially with the chatelaine of this delightful house, was Mrs. Nellie Kerns Mansfield, sister of Fannie M. Kerns, who has been supervisior of art in the public schools of Pasadena for many useful years.

Mrs. Mansfield has rapidly developed her business of assistant to the architect in the decorating of homes. She goes shopping with the chatelaine and makes the draperies, curtains, embroideries used in the whole plan of decoration.

Fascinating indeed are her beautiful curtains, designed under Miss Kerns' direction, and embroidered in the Mansfield shops on their own embroidery machines under their personal supervision. Original, sparkling, suitable, are the adjectives that come to one as Mrs. Mansfield shows her samples in one's own home.

Subtle, too, they are for weaving the chosen colors into all her furnishings by means of original embroideries and designs. She gives each house its own atmosphere and catches color to imprision it in the rooms. Working with Mr. Pesenecker in this and other houses, Mrs. Mansfield sees to it that unity prevails.

Sashes and grills from the Crown Manufacturing Company.

On the right is the doorway from hall to sitting room in the Herlihy home. Examples of Mrs. Mansfield's work may be seen in the hangings of linen embroidered in the soft tones of the room and uniting it with the hall.

OHRMUND BROS.

Unit System of Heating

sets the

Standard of the World

with

Superior and Distinctive Features

A Comfortable Home Must Be Properly Heated

PASADENA GAS APPLIANCE CO., INC.
901-3 East Colorado Street Fair Oaks 93

Decorating and Finishing Exclusive Furniture

W. G. Pesenecker

Interior and Exterior Painting
34 North Broadway
Phone Col. 5656 Pasadena, Calif.

RECENT BOOKS—REVIEWS

Continued from Page 12

OBEDIENCE by MICHAEL SADLEIR,
HOUGHTON MIFFLIN COMPANY

This is an attempt to portray the 1860 period in England, but the appropriate "temps autre, autre moeurs" atmosphere seems to be entirely absent. Its situations and sentiments might be just as easily encountered in our own day. The story, presented with average merit, deals with a high spirited heroine and an equally high spirited father. Since there is a lover in the case, the girl comes out victorious, according to the "Hoyle" of this class of fiction.

THE CAROLINIAN by RAFAEL SABATINI,
HOUGHTON MIFFLIN COMPANY

Here we have this prolific author in a new role, exploring fresh fields for material for his romantic fiction, and the result is rather above his average novel. He has chosen for his scene, Charleston in South Carolina, during the Revolutionary War, with a patriot for a hero, a wavering heroine, and something unusual in the way of villains, an important element of the formula which he always follows very faithfully. However, here, he has made a painstaking and praiseworthy attempt to reproduce the background of time and place, and has succeeded admirably in spite of an ungraceful style. The main plot and all the little plots are intimately involved in a succession of events closely connected with the progress of the war in that section. Certainly the viewpoint of an author who is at least half English is noteworthy because of its apparent sympathy with the revolting cause.

MOCKBEGGAR by LAWRENCE MEYNELL,
D. APPLETON & COMPANY

The author of this first novel, has either deliberately chosen or had thrust upon him, a style somewhat reminiscent of the "Dolly Dialogues," written in the now famous 1890's, a style demanding wit on every page, and Mr. Meynell is witty only on some pages. There is no plot to speak of, and little action until rather late in the progress of a somewhat erratic tale, which mostly by means of conversation, portrays the life of a group of young English people, during the last ten years. While the outlines of these youthful figures are decidedly blurred, in some baffling manner, they assume a tangible shape, so that we gradually become conscious of the personality of each. On the whole, this is an improving book, not because it improves the reader, but it improves itself, when presently the author forgets to pose and goes to writing in earnest.

John Carter has made this novel the subject of a brilliant critique in the March 7th number of the "Saturday Review," a publication whose contributors are literary critics able to present the trend of modern literature, with notable distinction and sincerity.

THE MOMENT OF BEAUTY
by SAMUEL MERWIN,
HOUGHTON MIFFLIN COMPANY

While there is no distinctive quality of style or substance in this novel, it presents an interesting and readable view of a world about which most of us know very little, the theatre and theatrical people. The heroine is a youthful actress, the hero an older man already famous. Of course they both have that temperament so closely connected with talent. Evidently actors and actresses have to meet the same problems of life that bob up to interfere with the happiness of less spectacular individuals, and the exigencies of a career on the stage, make a fortunate solution far more hopeless. The book contains frank discussions of well known players and recent plays, which presumably represent the viewpoint of the theatrical people themselves.

SHAKEN DOWN
by ALICE MACGOWAN AND PERRY NEWBERRY,
FREDERICK A. STOKES COMPANY

This story might be likened to a bare tree in winter when we may see clearly the parent trunk with the limbs branching off, one occasionally seeming to have no apparent connection with it. However we are interested in tracing the pattern against the sky. In other words this is a mystery tale without frills, dealing with murder, but more especially kidnapping, and involving a corrupt political ring and graft in the police force of the San Francisco of April, 1906. The details of the plot are already wound into a hard knot, just "at the dawn of the earthquake day", to quote a famous poem, and the action takes on additional momentum. The catastrophe, fatal alike to the city and the villains of the tale conveniently saves and even regenerates the others.

S. M. Wershow
LADIES TAILOR
Riding Habits, Coats and Suits
Furs Stored and Repaired
7066 Hollywood Boulevard
Hollywood
GRanit 4254

Antiques
JOHN W. CONDIT
Dealer in rare old pieces selected from private homes. Specialist in the proper restoration of heirlooms.
199 S. Fair Oaks Ave. Tel. F. O. 315
Pasadena, California

GEORGE · D · MAIGHT
159 · NO · MEREDITH · AVE ·
PASADENA · CALIFORNIA
TELEPHONE F · O · 3135
ARCHITECTURAL · PHOTOGRAPHS

FLORNINA
Gowns · Negligees · Accessories
Ready to Wear or Made to Order
95 South Los Robles Ave., Pasadena
Phone Fair Oaks 113

Welcome to call and Browse
Rare & Art Books
Dawson's Book Shop
627 So. Grand Ave.
First Editions · Early Printing · Autographs · Americana
Books Notable for Printing Illustrations and Binding.
Catalogues sent on request:—

HEWSON HAND CRAFT STUDIOS
Handwoven One Piece Dresses, Coats and Scarfs, Canadian and Candlewick Bedspreads
Dutch and East Indian Brass, Beads, Fine Pendants and Objects of Art in Great Variety
F. O. 6555 — 602 E. Colorado St. Pasadena
DUnkirk 4909 — 2508½ W. 7th St. Los Angeles

MRS. CHARLES C. BELL
Orchard Homes and Villas
Mountainside Acreage
Rentals Near Good Board
SARATOGA - - CALIFORNIA

THE CALIFORNIA SCHOOL OF GARDENING FOR WOMEN
Offers a two years course in practical gardening, including the propagation and care of flowers, shrubs, fruit and vegetables, the laying out and management of small gardens as well as large estates. At Hayward, California (one hour by train or motor from San Francisco). Principal: Miss J. Walrond-Skinner, N.D., Hort., F.R.H.S. Tuition $250 per annum. Term begins Jan. 15, 1925. Only six students will be taken the first year. Write for information and make application now to the Principal, Hayward, California.

HILLER'S STUDIO
Official Photographer for California Southland
49 East Colorado Street
Pasadena, California
Albert Hiller — Phone, Fair Oaks 155

French and Italian Arts
Imported by
ELEANOR AND HOLLINGSWORTH BEACH
Italian Sports Hats — Antiques
Old Furniture — Brocades
Embroidered Linens — Old Prints
French Faience — Italian Majolica
Large Parchment Portfolios for Prints and Photographs
630 E. Colorado Street, Pasadena, California
Fair Oaks 6028

T. W. Mather Co. Inc.
PASADENA, CAL.
Dry Goods
Women's & Children's Wearing Apparel
Colorado Street at Marengo

ASSISTANCE LEAGUE OF SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

MONTHLY BULLETIN

"All for Service—And Service for All"

OFFICERS:

MRS. HANCOCK BANNING, President
MRS. EDWARDS LAUGHLIN, First Vice President
MRS. WILLIAM GIBBS MCADOO, Sec. Vice-Pres.
MRS. ERWIN P. WERNER, Third Vice-President
MRS. E. AVERY MCCARTHY, Fourth Vice-Pres.
MRS. JAMES REED, Secretary
MRS. J. WARREN TATUM, Treas.
MR. D. C. MACWATTERS, Auditor

THRIFT SHOP

Many have been the calls this week for silk hats, riding togs, dress suits, etc.—some film company having sent out the call for "extras" equipped with same to film in a coming production. This accounted for an inquiry from a man of middle height and age, who most anxiously asked at the Assistance League Thrift Shop: "Have you a silk hat and a dress suit?" He was a new customer at the Thrift Shop. The volunteer saleswoman could not but note the look of strain about the corners of his well shaped mouth and clear eyes of blue, which rather haunted her. It was hard for her to tell him that, alas, the calls had been many and that there were no silk hats or dress suits to be had, that all had been purchased, but she asked that he return and said that she would try and secure what he wanted. "There goes Tragedy," said the little gray-haired woman who had been waiting for attention, as she pointed to the man leaving the shop. "Would you find such cases anywhere but in sunny California, where so much joy and so much sadness stalk side by side?" She told me his story, as he had come from her town.

He had been a country doctor, with a modest practice, his little wife, ill, was ordered to a milder climate, and after arriving he found that he could not pass the medical examination of California. His little savings soon dwindled to nothing, and so he joined the great numbers seeking positions as "extras," in Hollywood.

There he finds many like himself, ex-doctors, ex-lawyers, distinguished and titled foreigners, men and women of every age, nation, rank and variety, a pot pourri of humanity, where many are called but few are chosen, where fortunes are made and lost and hopes blasted and reputations besmirched. "I believe that man is hungry," said the little gray-haired woman, "but he is proud and will never tell," and flicking the tear from her tired eyes, she said: "Please hurry, have you my black silk dress? I have the rest of the money that I owe on it, I must hurry. I can dress at the studio." And so the little woman went on her way, and the saleswoman swallowed the big lump in her throat and busied herself sorting the slippers, dusting them and arranging them in a row.

It is not strange that returning home that evening she spent some two hours at the telephone begging her various friends for silk hats, dress suits, men's, women's and children's wearing apparel—everything and anything to fill the needs of this procession of men, women and children that come daily to the Assistance League Thrift Shop for wearing apparel of every kind. She told them that the Motor Corps were subject to calls for the bundles and boxes—possibly containing a dress suit and a silk hat for her Country Doctor. His case is only one of the many needy souls that your old silk hat or dress suit or business suit might be the cause of furnishing a bread ticket.

We wish many could be volunteers in the Assistance League Thrift Shop; then, we know, we would not have to beg, you would not demur, but would come with your bundles of superfluities and give of your bounty.

DAY NURSERY

The Children's Day Nursery, under the leadership of its chairman and wonderful committee of men and women, numbering twenty-two, is doing its work intensively and remarkably efficiently.

The members are on the Board because of their real interest and a belief that Day Nursery work has actual value in community service, and they see their service in its right relation to other civic work. They have that vision which enables them to change policies to meet changing conditions; they can balance values; they work to make their Nursery return full value to the community which supports it. They justify their appeal for support by showing real results in the form of conserved family life and the increased health and happiness of those in its care.

The Day Nursery Staff are workers trained in social standards; they are trained to safeguard and promote the physical health, right mental habits, and the happiness of the children, and they are physically able to meet the strenuous demands of the work.

The policy of the Day Nursery Committee requires an investigation of the family from which the children come, and admits children on basis of constructive work in the family situation, and it regards the school children of accepted families as their responsibility, and accepts the responsibility of refused cases.

A medical examination of all entered children is made and follow up health work is given. A rest period for all children below school age is required each day. Nourishing food is adapted to different ages, checked by the best dietetic standards, and at least one pint of milk per day is given to each child.

The equipment of the institution is fairy-like, and chosen for its usefulness. It is scrupulously clean with even and proper temperature, and play under supervision in a beautiful play garden with adequate play material is provided.

Parents are helped in changing undesirable home conditions and developing possibilities for fuller home life, and are advised in the character training of their children. Come to see us. We want your interest. We know your heart will rejoice when you see what we are doing. Have a part in this great work of building Destinies—making the men and women of tomorrow.

THE SHUT-IN DEPARTMENT

We are planning, through co-operation with the National Shut-in Society, to make the work of this branch of the League one of its most important. The "shut-ins" are invalids who are skilled in the various handicrafts and can be made entirely self-supporting if we provide a market for their products. Teachers may be secured for those who are not skilled and happiness be brought into the lives of all, even those who can never hope to be self-supporting.

We are more than fortunate in having with us former active members of the National Shut-in Society, who can direct the work of the committee which is now being enlarged. Members who can give time to this work, in the selling, visiting or teaching are urgently asked to signify their willingness to serve.

GIFT SHOP

The Exchange and Gift Shop at the Assistance League on De Longpre, is to be enlarged by opening an additional shop at Woman's Athletic Club. After April 29th, hand-made articles and little gifts that have been made by women who take this method of utilizing their abilities and still keeping up their home duties, may be obtained at this very convenient location.

Frequent orders for special things come into the Exchange and the work is sent out to women listed as especially capable of doing certain kinds of embroidery or fine sewing. So well is the sewing, weaving and handiwork done that recently when Mary Pickford needed her silk quilts re-covered, in preparation for the visit to her home of the Duke and Duchess of d'Alba, she brought them herself to the Assistance League Exchange Shop. Needless to add the quilts were ready in time for the visit of the distinguished guests.

The spirit of the workers in the Assistance League of Southern California is best expressed in the quotation which is often used on this page:

"It ain't the guns, nor armament
Nor friends that they can pay,
But the close co-operation
That makes them win the day.

It ain't the individual
Nor the army as a whole
But the everlasting team work
Of every blooming soul."

—Rudyard Kipling.

The following letter is being sent to all members. If you have not received one, call HEmpstead 5133 and application blanks will be sent to you at once.

TO OLD MEMBERS:

The Assistance League of Southern California is planning many interesting activities for the coming year and we are particularly desirous that you continue your membership in the organization.

Membership in the League carries with it the privilege of participating in the work of its splendidly equipped Day Nursery, Woman's Exchange, Thrift Shop, and Location Bureau, as well as the privilege of attending and inviting guests to the Round Table Club Lectures, and using our Tea Room for receptions, teas, card parties and other entertainments.

Each Member is also given without cost a year's subscription to "Southland," the official organ of the League, and a highly-creditable monthly magazine of general interest. The regular subscription price of this magazine alone is $2.50 a year.

The Membership Fee, including the Magazine, is only $5.00 per annum.

The Day Nursery and Good Samaritan Departments are supported and maintained by the Community Chest. The various other Departments of the League, however, are not affiliated with the Community Chest, and the money realized from Membership fees is used for the upkeep and maintenance of the Community House and grounds at 5604 De Longpre Avenue, and for expenses incidental to the management and operation of our Women's Exchange and Thrift Shop, and related activities.

We are confident that you will enjoy association with and participation in the various humanitarian endeavors of the League, and we trust that we may receive your acceptance of the Membership that has been assigned to you.

Donations to our Building Fund, Thrift Shop, Woman's Exchange and related activities will be gratefully accepted.

SPORTS FOR ALL THE PEOPLE AT LONG BEACH

SIX AND ONE HALF MILES OF BEACH LIKE THIS GIVES LONG BEACH ITS NAME AND FAME

PAINTINGS OF THE WEST
STENDAHL GALLERIES
OF THE PACIFIC COAST
The Ambassador Hotel—Los Angeles Hotel del Coronado—San Diego

STATEMENT OF THE OWNERSHIP, MANAGEMENT, CIRCULATION, ETC., REQUIRED BY THE ACT OF CONGRESS OF AUGUST 24, 1912, OF CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND, PUBLISHED BY M. URMY SEARES, AT PASADENA, CALIFORNIA, FOR APRIL 1, 1925.

State of California, County of Los Angeles.

Before me, a Notary Public in and for the State and County aforesaid, personally appeared M. Urmy Seares, who, having been duly sworn according to law, deposes and says that she is the editor and manager of California Southland, and that the following is a true statement of the ownership, management, circulation, etc., of the aforesaid publication, for the date shown in the above caption: that the name and address of the publisher, editor and manager is M. Urmy Seares, Pasadena; that the owner of said publication is M. Urmy Seares; that there are no mortgages, bondholders, or other security holders, owning or holding one per cent of the bonds, mortgages or other securities of California Southland. Sworn to and subscribed before me this first day of April, 1925.

JOHN R. BRAGDON, Notary Public.

My commission expires November 7, 1925.

The Assembly Tea Room
The In and Out-of-Town House of Los Angeles serves
LUNCHEON, TEA AND DINNER
INCIDENTALLY
The Very Choicest Food
Special Sunday Dinner 5 to 8
644 South Flower St., Los Angeles
Phone VAndike 7177

THE BILTMORE SALON
LOS ANGELES BILTMORE
PAINTINGS ETCHINGS BRONZES

MARTHA

WATSON-KERBY

Exclusive Fashions for Women

GOWNS WRAPS SPORTS CLOTHING

2224 WEST SEVENTH STREET

LOS ANGELES

WESTLAKE SQUARE PHONE FITZROY 0823

Clarence P. Day Corporation

Engineers—Contractors

35 N. RAYMOND AVE. PHONE COLO. 1006

PASADENA, CALIFORNIA

Choose your own architect from the representative styles shown in "California Homes" by California Architects. Price $1.00.

Address: ELLEN LEECH,

544 So. El Molino Avenue Pasadena, Calif.

THE BATCHELDER TILES

We produce Tile for Fireplaces, Fountains, Pavements, Garden Pots---anything that is appropriately made from clay. :: :: :: :: ::

LOS ANGELES, CALIFORNIA

Important Louis XV Cabinet of inlaid Rosewood and Mahogany, mounted in Cuivre Doré, copied from the one designed by Schlodtz in 1739 and now in the Bibliothêque Nationale. Rococo at its height.

One of the recent importations of

The Meyer and di Segni Gallery

Antique Furniture, Paintings, Fabrics, Marbles, and Bronzes

640 South Figueroa Street Los Angeles

VAndike 2936

YOU WILL ENJOY A VISIT TO OUR GALLERY

The Unusual in Things Musical

. . . The bizarre—the common-place and the ordinary are unknown at The Music Lover's Shop

. . . True artistry combined with music finds its realization in the Imported Art Cabinets we show for Phonographs and Radios.

. . . Chas. M. Stieff Pianos, Victrolas and Radiolas and Victor Records, are also featured.

RICHARDSON'S INC.
The Music Lovers' Shop
NOW - at 730 West Seventh St.

Tudor Fireplace, Cheesewright Studios Rendered Into Color by Norman Kennedy

The Cheesewright Studios, Inc.

Decorators and Furnishers

PASADENA, CALIFORNIA

CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND

MT. RAINIER, NATIONAL PARK, WASHINGTON. From a Painting by Kathryn W. Leighton

CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND IS A COMMUNITY MAGAZINE OF GENERAL INTEREST, FEATURING SOCIETY AT WORK OR AT PLAY; ART, AND ARCHITECTURE, MUSIC AND DRAMA

No. 66 JUNE, 1925 25 Cents

ALLIED ARCHITECTS ASSOCIATION OF LOS ANGELES

DESIGNERS OF

PATRIOTIC HALL

LOS ANGELES GENERAL HOSPITAL

ADDITIONS TO THE MUSEUM OF HISTORY SCIENCE AND ART

EXTERIOR DESIGN OF THE HALL OF JUSTICE

ARCHITECTURAL TREATMENT OF VIADUCTS AND BRIDGES OF THE CITY OF LOS ANGELES

ADMINISTRATION CENTER FOR THE CITY AND COUNTY OF LOS ANGELES

AN ASSOCIATION FOR FURNISHING ARCHITECTURAL SERVICE FOR PUBLIC STRUCTURES ONLY

NATURE permits no incongruities in her combinations of color. And the kiln interprets Nature with sympathy and tact. The variegated colors created in the fire of the kiln show wide range from tile to tile, but Latin Tile roofs always hold one of Nature's most appealing tints—a soft rose overtone. Under any sky, and in all lights, the singular beauty of these tile roofs is compelling and refreshing.

E. P. GAVIT HOUSE, MONTECITO, CALIFORNIA. REGINALD D. JOHNSON, ARCHITECT

LATIN ROOF TILE

GLADDING, McBEAN & CO.

General Office: 660 MARKET STREET, SAN FRANCISCO

TROPICO PLANT: GLENDALE, LOS ANGELES COUNTY, CALIFORNIA

LINCOLN PLANT: LINCOLN, PLACER COUNTY, CALIFORNIA

OHARA, LIVERMORE AND ARTHUR BAKEN

A View of One of Our New Rooms Near Pasadena's Community Playhouse

Interior Decoration—Antique and Modern—Furniture and Textiles—Draperies—Pillows—Lamps and Shades—Objects of Art.

NEW LOCATION

644 EAST COLORADO STREET, PASADENA, CALIFORNIA. 522 SUTTER STREET, SAN FRANCISCO, CALIFORNIA

An Italian Fireplace in one of our display rooms.

The Cheesewright Studios, Inc.

Decorators and Furnishers

OAK
BEECH
—
Furnished
Scraped

H. G. BENNETT

HARDWOOD FLOORS EXCLUSIVELY

524-26 SO. RAYMOND AVE,

COLO. 178 - PASADENA, CALIF.

Estimates Cheerfully Given
Old Floors Resanded and Polished

MAPLE
BIRCH
—
Laid
Finished

Glazed Tiles
from
Old Mexico

The romance of old Spain and Mexico translated into glazed tile panels. Units of two to eighty-eight tiles.

"Don Quijote"
"San Francisco"
"Santa Barbara"
"Virgin of Guadalupe"
and many others to choose from.

Talavera Importing Co.

CARE CHEESWRIGHT STUDIOS, PASADENA.

SOUTHLAND CALENDAR

Announcements of exhibitions, fetes, concerts, club entertainments, etc., for the calendar pages are free of charge and should be received in the office of CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND, Pasadena, at least two weeks previous to date of issue, the 10th. No correction can be guaranteed if they are received later than that date. California Southland is published monthly at Pasadena, California. One dollar and twenty-five cents for six issues, two fifty per year. Addresses will be changed as many times as desired if notice is given before the first of the month for which the change is made.

Entered as second class matter, July 28, 1919, at the Post office at Pasadena, California, under act of March 3, 1879.

Clubs

VALLEY HUNT CLUB, PASADENA:
The formal season at the Valley Hunt Club closed with May, after which time no programs are arranged. The tennis court and swimming pool o.fer the outdoor attractions during the summer, and individual parties, both afternoon and evening, are arranged as desired.

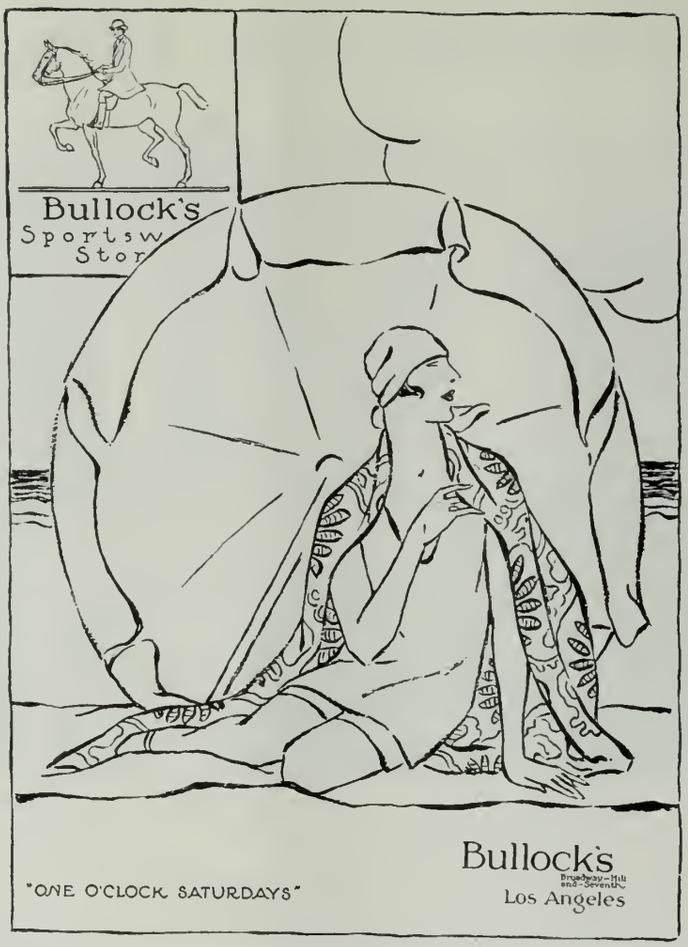
ANNANDALE GOLF CLUB, PASADENA:
The afternoon bridge, Mah Jongg and tea parties have been discontinued for the season, but tea will be served as requested and tables for cards are always available.
Every Friday is Ladies' Day.
The usual Wednesday and Saturday sweepstakes each month through the summer.

FLINTRIDGE COUNTRY CLUB:
Tuesday is Ladies' Day and a special luncheon is served. In the afternoons informal bridge parties may be arranged, followed by tea.

LOS ANGELES COUNTRY CLUB:
Ladies' Days, second Monday of each month.
Music during dinner, followed by dancing, every Saturday evening during the month.
Luncheon served from 11:30 to 2 .p m. on Saturdays.
Sunday night concerts during month.
Tea served as requested and tables for cards always available.

WILSHIRE COUNTRY CLUB:
Ladies' Days, third Monday of each month.
Dancing every second and fourth Saturday during the month.
A musical is arranged for each Sunday night in the month.

MIDWICK COUNTRY CLUB:
Ladies' Days, fourth Monday in each month.
Tea and informal bridge every afternoon.
Polo, Wednesday and Saturday of each week.
Dancing every Saturday night.
Buffet luncheon served every Sunday.
Match polo games every Sunday, preceded by luncheon parties, followed by teas, during season.



LOS ANGELES ATHLETIC CLUB:
Dinner dances, Tuesday and Friday nights of every week, Tuesday night informal; Friday night semi-formal.
Plunge open to the ladies Tuesday and Friday of every week.

SAN GABRIEL COUNTRY CLUB:
A dinner dance is arranged for the third Thursday of each month.
On Friday of each week a special luncheon is served, with bridge in the afternoons.
Ladies play every day starting after ten a. m., and not before two p. m.

MONTECITO COUNTRY CLUB:
Provides an 18 hole golf course, two concrete and two dirt courts for tennis, bowls and croquet.
Tea is served and informal bridge parties arranged as desired.
A buffet supper is served every Sunday night.

LA CUMBRE GOLF AND COUNTRY CLUB, SANTA BARBARA:
Offers a course of eighteen holes, rivaling any in hazard and beauty. A recent purchase of additional acreage will provide an extended and even more interesting course.
Luncheon is served every day, and tea may be arranged as desired.

REDLANDS COUNTRY CLUB:
Golf tournament for men is held every Saturday. Monday the course is reserved for the women and a special luncheon served. Those who do not play golf or who have had a round in the morning, devote the afternoon to bridge or mah jongg. Every Saturday afternoon tea is served.

The Smartest in Cocktails, Goblets, Shakers and Trays

A. Schmidt & Son

For Fifty-six Years Importers of Antique and Modern Silver, Sheffield Plate, Fine China and Glass.

2329 W. Seventh St., Los Angeles

391 E. Colorado St., Pasadena

Boston New York Washington

Art

LOS ANGELES Museum of History, Science and Art, Exposition Park. The Russian Art Exhibition will continue through June 23 and is attracting many art students as well as other interested patrons of the fine arts through its colorful display of the Russian national character depicted on the canvases. The exhibit is a portion of the collected works of one hundred master artists of Russia of the old and new schools and was sent to Los Angeles under the direction of the Russian Art Societies of Moscow and Petrograd, direct from New York where it has received the acclaim of noted critics in that city. There are one hundred and forty-nine pictures in the collection, the most of which depict the various phases of Russian national life. They represent Russian Art covering a period of the past twenty-five years. Some of the paintings hint at an original style while others are distinctly European, comparable with those painted by French, German and English artists.

SOUTHWEST Museum, Marmion Way and Avenue 46, Los Angeles: During the month of June an Oriental Exhibit of Chinese Art will be shown, including bronzes, porcelains, ancient Chinese paint- and tapestries. A Laotze Hanging will be shown through the courtesy of Mrs. Henrietta Horton Kapps. Dr. Herbert E. House, Curator of Asiatic Socoligy of the Museum will supervise the exhibit. Several lectures on Chinese porcelain and the Laotze tapestry will be given during the exhibit. Extension lectures are given every Sunday afternoon in the Assembly Hall of the Museum at 3:00 o'clock. The lectures are open to the public and without charge.

JULES KIEVITS has opened an attractive new gallery in the south wing of the Hotel Vista del Arroyo, Pasadena. The first exhibition contained a group of paintings by Wilhelm van Nieuwenhoven, "Happy Companions," "The Spinning Girl," "The Tinker," and the "Sewing Maid." There are also studies by Peter Rackwitz, and a much valued landscape by Jules De Pre.

EDGAR PAYNE, at the close of a successful exhibition of his latest European pictures in Chicago, began a trip to California by motor, accompanied by his wife and daughter. Following his arrival in Los Angeles he will hold an exhibition at the Stendhal Galleries in the Ambassador

THE FREE LANCE ART CLUB held the third annual exhibition through May at the MacDowell Club.

THE BIDDING SALE in the Hatfield Gallery, 3000 W. 7th street, Los Angeles, will continue through June 4.

THE BOOKPLATE SOCIETY INTERNATIONAL held the first local showing in the Los Angeles Public Library last month, and included bookplates by local men.

THE LOS ANGELES MUSEUM is now richer by $5000, having recently received a subscription of that amount to its Museum Patrons Association.

FRANK GERITZ exhibited a group of block prints from the Bret Harte country at the National Arts Club of New York, and at the same time showed a series of the same subjects at the annual exhibition of the San Francisco Art Association.

"COUNTESS OF EXETER" by Sir Peter Lely, a painting from the Henry E. Huntington collection, is on exhibition in the Stendahl Galleries, Ambassador Hotel.

DAISY M. HUGHES is leaving for an extended sketching trip abroad. she plans to spend the greater part of the time painting in France and Spain.

THE WEST COASTS ARTS, Inc., held their annual meeting at the studio of Dell Meadows on May 9th, and elected officers for the coming year. With one exception the incumbent officers were re-elected, as follows: President, Bessie Ella Hazen; first vice-president, Nell Brooker Mayhew; second vice-president, Mary Everett; treasurer, Mrs. W. T. B. Campbell; recording secretary, Evylena Nunn Miller. Lucy Jack was elected to fill the office of corresponding secretary in the place of Louise Everett who is going abroad.

MISS LOUISE EVERETT, one of the younger Los Angeles painters, has been chosen a member of a group of one hundred to study during the summer session at the Fontainebleau School of Fine Arts in France. The school is conducted by the French Government for American students, and a special committee in New York selects one hundred students each year. Miss Everett was recommended by Mrs. Chouinard of the Chouinard School of Art in Los Angeles, and accepted by Mr. Ernest Peixotto, head of the painting and sculpture department of the New York committee. Miss Everett will sail from New York on June 11th with fifty of the selected group, on the French line steamer de Grace. After the close of the school session which lasts three months, she expects to spend some time traveling on the continent and in England.

ARTHUR MILLIER will exhibit some of his more recent etchings after June 13th, following the showing of the Commercial Art classes of the University of California at Los Angeles in the public library. Mr. Millier only recently has been devoting all of his time to etching.

LELAND CURTIS, who held an interesting exhibition at Barker Bros. gallery

during the month of May, gathered much of his material for desert wastes and snow streaked mountains on a recent trip to Bishop and Lake Sebrina, when he combined painting and fishing. He is planning to go into the high Sierras for more painting—and perhaps fishing—about the first of July.

PAINTERS of the West announce their eagerly anticipated early summer show at the Biltmore Salon, opening June first and running three weeks.

THE ART DEPARTMENT of the University of California at Los Angeles is holding an exhibition in the gallery, of the year's work of the students. It includes some very clever work in imaginative and commercial illustration. The design classes are exhibiting work in interior decoration, stage-craft, industrial and costume design. The applied design, or craft work, is represented by some very lovely pottery, metal work and book-binding. The exhibition will be up until the 12th of June.

LETA HORLOCKER, District Art Chairman of Women's Clubs, and teacher of decorative arts, is re-opening her classes and her studio in Seventh St., Los Angeles, after a nearly six month's cessation caused by a fire the first of the year, when practically all her equipment was destroyed, inculding a valuable collection of costumes and fabrics of various kinds.

MARCELLA BLOOD has a charmingly modern and decorative group of original water-color illustrations on exhibition at the Ebell Club in Los Angeles. Miss Blood, who studied at the Chicago Academy of Fine Arts and locally at the Chouinard School of Art, is doing some very promising work in color design.

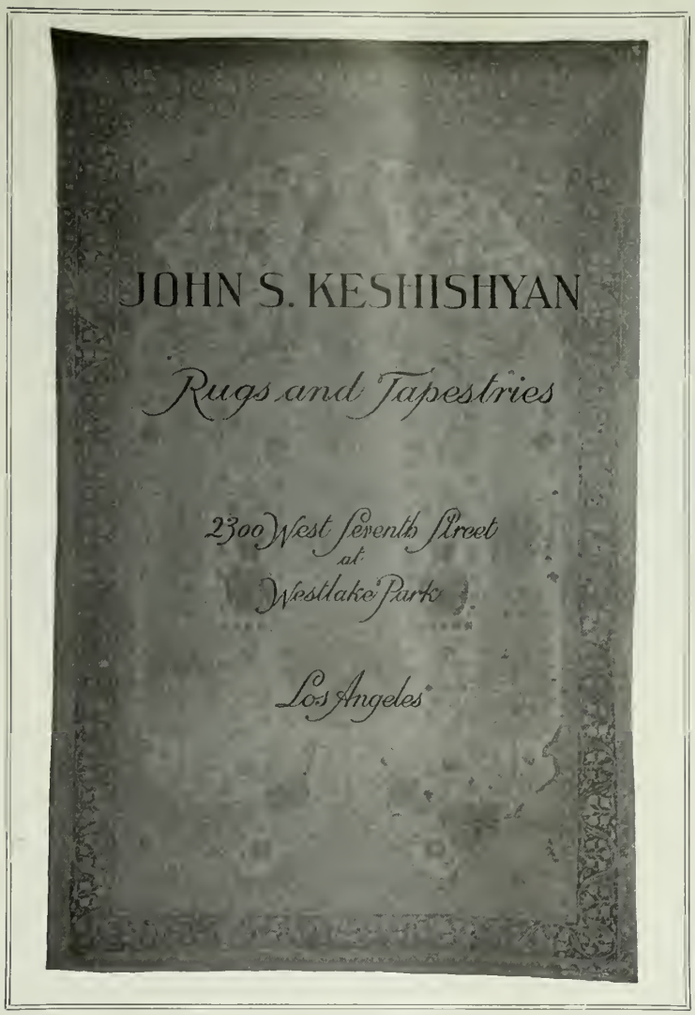
MISS NELLIE HUNTINGTON GERE, dean of the art department at the University of California, Los Angeles, gave a very worthy talk on the art of painting and furnishing the small home on the evening of May 16th at the Recreation Center, in Santa Barbara. Her talk, which was illustrated with lantern slides, was given as a part of the Better Home Week program.

ETTORE CADORIN, the prominent Italian sculptor, a late arrival, and a distinguished addition to the Santa Barbara art colony, has made arrangements to take the Colin Campbell Cooper studio for the summer. Mr. Cardorin comes of a line of famous Venitian sculptors and artists, and has done monuments in many parts of Europe and this country. He has exhibited in many eastern cities and in Los Angeles, and has continual showings in New York where he has a studio on Riverside Drive. His more celebrated works in this country include a beautiful marble group called "Death and Resurrection" in Woodlawn Cemetery, New York, and a war memorial at Edgewater, N. J., which was dedicated on May 30th. Mr. Cadorin was for two years professor of Italian at Columbia University. He is famous for his small bronzes and marbles and the ivory basreliefs of which he is the unique exponent.

MISS ESTHER CRAWFORD will leave on June 7th for a trip to Alaska where she expects to do as much painting as possible in between sight-seeing expeditions,

PAUL LAURITZ, a native of Norway, left Friday, May 22nd for his homeland where he expects to spend several months painting the northern summer landscapes. Mr. Lauritz has painted mountains and sea in California, and last year he brought home some noteworthy canvases from the Columbia River country.

DOUGLAS DONALDSON, the decorator-philosopher of Melrose Hill in Hollywood, will hold summer classes in color design and interior decoration. It has been said that Mr. Donaldson's classes are a liberal education as well as an artistic one.



HENRI DE KRUIF, winner of the Harrison Gray Otis prize at the Sixth Annual Exhibition in the Los Angeles Museum, has exhibited during the latter half of April, sixteen water colors and about twenty etchings at the Little Gallery in San Diego. Mr. de Kruif gave up etching for a number of years, but the fact that he has gone at it again with renewed interest and vigor, is shown by the quality of his later work.

THE COVER PLATES

MRS. KATHRYN WOODMAN LEIGHTON allows us to present this month her third cover for Southland. In June, a year ago, her painting of the desert in flower attracted attention and the canvass was bought as a souvenir of California's Southland in bloom. January saw a cool, stately mountain of the Canadian Rockies, the original of which has been secured by a high official of the Canadian railroads

Mt. Rainer National Park holds a great lure for this mistress of the vigorous brush, and Mrs. Leighton has taken one of the cottages in the park for her summer's camp and studio.

For the Pan American Exhibition to be held in Los Angeles next fall, Mrs. Leighton is one of six local painters to be invited to send paintings for selection, and her place in California Art is established and growing steadily year by year. Through the interest of the Biltmore Salon and the group of western artists there exhibiting, California Southland is planning a series of covers, setting forth the work of these artists in a series which will show how beautifully art can be made to spread the fame of any picturesque country. Now that this magazine is to be placed on the Limited and Rock Island trains, we must live up to our reputation.

B B Bell & Company

Lighting Fixtures

Fireplace Fittings

Lamps

Console-tables and Mirrors

Hope's Casements

2302 West Seventh Street

at

Westlake Park

Los Angeles

Music

WOMAN'S CHORAL CLUB of of PASADENA, William Tyroler, choral leader, will give the last concert of this, the eighteenth season, at the Shakespeare Club house, June 2nd.

THE PASADENA concerts by the Los Angeles Philharmonic Orchestra, Walter H. Rothwell, conductor, will be held at the Raymond Theater, where they were held during this past season. The dates for the 1925-26 season are November 16, December 14, January 14, February 8, March 8, and April 5. The entire Philharmonic Orchestra will appear on each occasion.

THE FINAL and eighth Coleman Chamber Concert of the season was given April 30, with the Chamber Music Society of San Francisco as the assisting artists. Mrs. Alice Coleman Batchelder announces an equally delightful series of concerts for next season.

THE SEVEN ARTS SOCIETY of LONG BEACH, Mrs. Kathryn Coffield, director, announces the following artists will appear during the third season of the society, 1925-1926: Cecil Arden, Alice Gentle, Ethel Leginska, pianist; Thelma Given, violinist; Gay MacLaren, dramatic reader; Brita Beckman, contralto.

WOMAN'S MUSIC STUDY CLUB of LONG BEACH, at a recent election named the following officers: Mrs. W. T. Moore, president and Mrs. Wilbur R. Kimball, vice-president.

THE SPINET CLUB, of REDLANDS, composed of fifty musicians has for more than thirty years brought the best artists of the musical world to that community and has sponsored every effort leading to the advancement and encouragement of local musicians. The annual election recently resulted in the selection of the following officers: Mrs. A. G. Hubbard, president; Mrs. W. J. Rabe and Mrs. A. Haven Smith, vice-presidents; Mrs. L. J. Daun, secretary; Grace Eaton, treasurer, Mrs. John Davis, business manager, Mrs. F. H. Tolkins, assistant business manager, Mrs. Sherman Hart and Mrs. Brorke Sawyer, directors.

JOHN SMALLMAN will present his Apollo Male Quartet in a recital at Chickering Hall, Los Angeles, the evening of June 5.

MRS. J. J. CARTER, who is in the East in the interests of the Hollywood Bowl concerts, has extended an invitation to Leopold Stokowski of the Philadelphia Orchestra to appear as guest conductor at a Bowl concert this summer.

ADOLPH TANDLER'S Little Symphony, of thirty players, is giving a series of concerts at the new Community Playhouse, Pasadena, Sunday afternoons.

THE LOS ANGELES GRAND OPERA ASSOCIATION, and the California Grand Opera Company have arranged their dates so there will be no conflict but instead one continuous opera season of moderate length. The Los Angeles Association's season, at Philharmonic Auditorium, is announced to open with "Lakme," September 28, and to close with "Cavalleria Rusticana" and "Navarraise," October 5. The California Opera Company's season is to follow immediately, at the New Olympic Auditorium.

THE MUSIC TEACHER'S ASSOCIATION of CALIFORNIA will hold its annual convention in San Francisco, July 6-7-8-9, with the St. Francis Hotel as headquarters.

CALMON LUBOVISKI is the concert master for Adolf Tandler's Little Symphony Orchestra.

MRS. EDWARD MacDOWELL, widow of the distinguished American composer, announces that Roy Harris, a young composer of Los Angeles, has been awarded a MacDowell Fellowship, which admits Mr. Harris to all the privileges of the MacDowell colony in Peterborough.

LISZT'S oratorio, "St. Elizabeth," received its first Los Angeles presentation last month at the Trinity Auditorium, sung by Bullock's large mixed chorus, under the direction of William Tyroler.

Announcements

THE PAGEANT of SAN JUAN CAPISTRANO, the history of the Mission told in episodes arranged by the Rev. St. John O'Sullivan, and produced by Garnet Holme, will be given on Sundays throughout the summer, opening June 14. The following June dates are the 21 and 28, with a special performance Saturday, July 4th.

THE PILGRIMAGE PLAY, Life of the Christ, announces the sixth annual season will open July 6th. The leading roles will be filled by former players, including Florence Stone who created the role of Mary Magdalene during the initial presentation.

COMMUNITY DANCES, in Pasadena, under the auspices of the Drama League, and given as in past seasons at Tournament Park, will be resumed this summer opening June 5th.

PASADENA HIGH SCHOOL COMMENCEMENT EXERCISES will be held in the Rose Bowl, Friday, June 19, in the afternoon at five. A beautiful program is arranged with more than a thousand boys and girls in a pageant of beauty and color and flowers, and includes the Elk's Band, J. W. Harrison, Director, June 25 to September 25; Marion Boulette, soprano (Riverside); Ione Tunison Peek, pianist (Santa Ana); Winifred Sloane Hughes, pianist, and Violet Cossack, pianist (San Bernardino).

University of Redlands announces the ground was broken, May 1st, for the eleventh permanent building on the campus when excavations for the library building was started.

THE luncheon programs of the Soroptimist Club, held Tuesday of each week at the Biltmore, Los Angeles, included, May 5, a talk by John R. Gage, President Los Angeles Rotary Club, and Georgia Williams, the whistling violinist; May 12, a Mother's Day program was given, Aletha Gilbert, City Mother, gave a reading, and Henry Hotchener, world traveler, addressed the club; May 19, the program consisted of readings by Clinton Holt, accompanied by Anita Arliss and songs by Alice Lohr, accompanied by Frances Roerdan Collins; May 26, a business meeting for members only, with a rehearsal of club songs, made up the program. Mrs. Lena R. Pepperdine, vice-president, presided in the absence of the club president, Mrs. Gertrude C. Maynard, who was in the East, visiting Philadelphia, Washington, New York and Boston.

Pomona College, Claremont

AN EXHIBITION of paintings from the Laguna Beach Art Association has recently been shown at Stanford University and is now open to the public in Rembrandt Hall, Pomona College, every afternoon from 3:30 until 6:00. The collection shows typical landscapes by a number of well known painters and is supplemented by an additional exhibit of pictures by William Griffith and Miss Anna Hills.

THE POMONA COLLEGE COMMENCEMENT EXERCISES began with the Senior music recital in Bridges Hall of Music, Thursday evening, June 11. On Friday afternoon the Art Department will hold their annual exhibition and reception. Professor Kaminski will also give a gallery talk in connection with the exhibition of the Laguna Beach Art Association. On Friday evening, June 12, the Senior opera, "The Gondoliers," will be produced in the open air theater in place of the usual Senior play. The opera is directed by Reginald Pole of New York City.

SATURDAY, June 13, is alumni day, beginning with the alumni parade, continuing through program, luncheon, musical, alumni banquet and alumni dance to a final view of the stars from the Frank P. Brackett Observatory.

AT ANCHOR, VENICE — By Dangerfield

Exhibition: To June 27, rare and beautiful examples of the work of Georges Innes, Homer Martin, Winslow Homer, Duveneck, Wyant, J. Francis Murphy, John Alden Wier, Twachtman, Abbot Thayer and Thos. Moran.

Cannell & Chaffin, Inc.

Paintings :: Period Furniture :: Antiques

MARYLAND HOTEL
PASADENA

720 W. SEVENTH ST.
LOS ANGELES

PRESIDENT BLAISDELL will preach the baccalaureate sermon in the open air theater at 6:30 Sunday evening, June 14. The Pomona College graduation exercises will be held in the open air theater at 6:30 p. m. Monday, June 15, Professor William B. Munro of Harvard and Pasadena giving the Commencement address.

JUNE 22 is registration day for the Pomona College summer session.

AS A feature of the opening of the Pomona College summer session, Esther Dale, prima donna soprano and soloist for the annual meeting of the Federated Women's Clubs, will give a recital at Bridges Hall of Music on June 24 or 25. The popular price of 75c will open the concert to all the music lovers of Pomona Valley.

ALL the social service clubs and agencies in Claremont have combined in a Community Council, which is sponsoring as the first event of community-wide interest a Fourth of July picnic, program and celebration in the open air theater.

Santa Barbara

THE COMMUNITY ARTS of SANTA BARBARA do not offer a regular program through June, and the only announcements are; June 1-6 Chamber of Commerce, 10 to 5 o'clock daily. Exhibition of California material which was recently displayed in the Architectual and Allied Arts exposition in New York City. Auspices of Plans and Planting Committee of Community Arts Association.

June 19. School of the Arts, 936 Santa Barbara St., 8:30 p. m. Recital by pupils of the school. Public invited.

PUBLISHER'S NOTICE

The recognition which California Southland has received in the East is announced this month in the following letter to Mrs Don Sebastian, as a new and efficient member of Southland's staff.

This magazine will be placed also on the observation cars in the "Golden State Limited" service of the Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific Railway Company, according to a letter to be published in July issue of Southland. Other notable announcements will follow this, and a continued policy for making California Southland representative of all the best interests of this Southern gateway to California's homes and gardens and community life will show our appreciation.

This recognition by experts and business men high in office and representing the most efficient public service in the country is an honor full of inspiration for coming issues of this general readers' magazine.

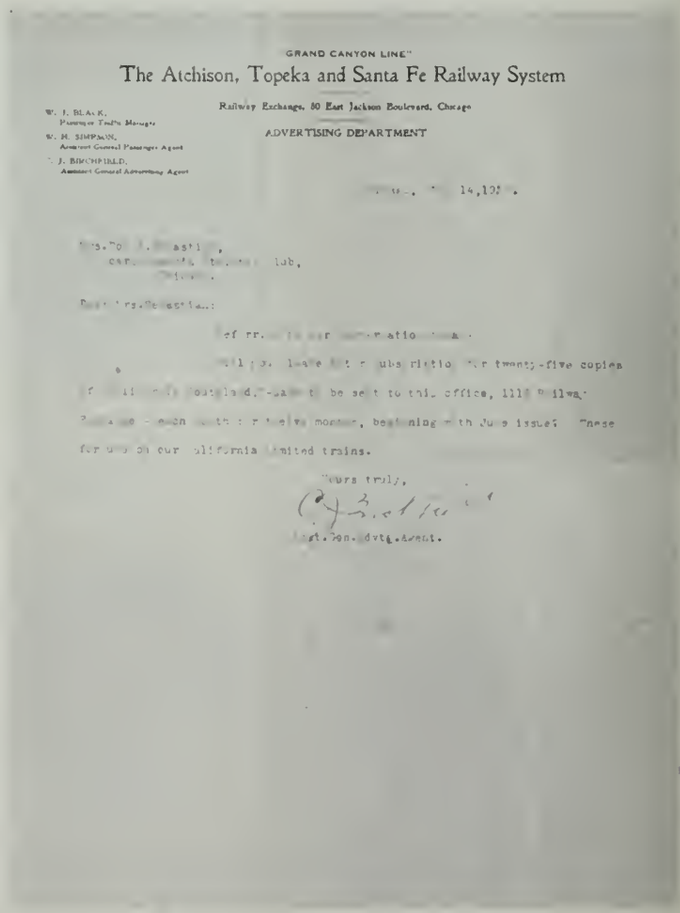
Mrs. Sebastian will represent California Southland in Santa Barbara this summer. She has taken a cottage at Monticito and is authorized as assistant to the publisher in that district as well as in Los Angeles.

HARMONIOUS GROUP OF EUROPEAN AND ORIENTAL FURNISHINGS

Beauty in the Home

has been our business for more than half a century

Interior Decoration



draperies, rugs, mirrors, paintings, lamps, shades, china, glass. Oriental objets d'art

Fine Furniture

designed and made in our own studios. Eastern, imported and Antique

Gump's

S. & G. GUMP CO. 246-268 Post St. | San Francisco California

"GRAND CANYON LINE"

The Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railway System

Railway Exchange, 80 East Jackson Boulevard, Chicago

W. J. BLACK, Passenger Traffic Manager
W. H. SIMPSON, Assistant General Passenger Agent
T. J. BIRCHFIELD, Assistant General Advertising Agent

ADVERTISING DEPARTMENT

14,19[illegible]

[illegible] lub,

[illegible] ly-five copies

[illegible] be sent to this office, 1111 Railway

[illegible] twelve months, beginning with June issue. These [illegible] our California Limited trains.

Yours truly,

[illegible]
Asst. Gen. Advtg. Agent.

DE LA GUERRA STUDIOS, SANTA BARBARA

A CHARMING SPANISH STREET OF SHOPS

MARY E. HAUAN
Partly-Worked Needlepoint Tapestry
Studio 26, de la Guerra Studios

EL PASEO SPORT SHOP
MRS. CHARLES O'DONNELL LEE, JR.
Sport Clothes, Hats, Evening Gowns
Children's Clothes
Studio 30, de la Guerra Studios

DORIS OVERMAN
Designer
Shades, Trays, Decorative Panels, Aztec Pottery and Lamps
Studio 27, de la Guerra Studios

MONCURE DEARDORF
Important Collection of Chinese Jewelry
Dealer and Expert in Chinese Works of Art
Studio 24, de la Guerra Studios

PACIFIC MUTUAL LIFE INSURANCE CO.
SANTA BARBARA BRANCH
101 EL PASEO DE LA GUERRA

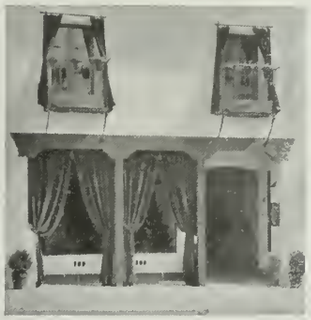
GEORGE M. MILLARD
(of Pasadena)
RARE IMPORTED BOOKS
Santa Barbara Associates
MR. EVERARD MEYNELL
MRS. E. M. GROSSMANN
STUDIO 25, EL PASEO
15 EAST DE LA GUERRA STREET

SPUNWOVEN
"THE GYPSY SHOP"
Hand Fabrics
BETH AND IAN M. WOLFE
Studio 32, de la Guerra Studios

MARINA FLINT
Kimonos, Chinese Suits, Bed Sacks
Suite 114, de la Guerra Studios

ELEANOR JOHNSON
Studio for the Voice
Suite 103, de la Guerra Studios

B. CROFTON ATKINS
Pipe and Tobacco Shop
And Men's Imported Clothing
Studio 29, de la Guerra Studios



LEE ELEANOR GRAHAM
Interior Decorator
de la Guerra Studios
23 East de la Guerra Street
Santa Barbara

THE POLK STUDIOS
MUSIC, DRAMA, DANCE
Gertrude Jeanette Polk
Artist Teacher of Vocal and Physical Expression
Henry Polk
Teacher of Piano, Voice and Pipe Organ
Suite 110, de la Guerra Studios

LA MANTILLA
Costume Designing and Remodeling
Studio 31, de la Guerra Studios

SANTA BARBARA ART CLUB
No. 15 E. de la Guerra Street
Free Exhibition of Paintings and Etchings
Open Daily 10 a. m. to 5 p. m.
Paintings and Etchings for sale

THE GUILD
Publishers
and Craftsmen
Studio 28 de la Guerra Studios

Flowers Sent From
Paseo de las Flores
Will Be Greatly Appreciated

Street of Flowers
818 State St.

EXHIBITION
of
PAINTINGS
—by—
LILIA TUCKERMAN
June 9th to 16th
Studio 102 de le Guerra Studios

El Paseo Patio

Lunch Out of Doors or Dine
at
"EL PASEO"
23 E. de la Guerra St.
Santa Barbara

COMMUNITY ARTS ASSOCIATION OF SANTA BARBARA

SCHOOL OF THE ARTS
FRANK MORLEY FLETCHER, Director
SUMMER SESSION
JULY 6—AUGUST 16
Graphic, Decorative and Plastic Arts
Drama, Music, Dancing

For further particulars, address
MRS. JEANNE AUGÉ, Executive Secretary
936 Santa Barbara Street, Santa Barbara, California

Patio in the house of Harold Waldmann

MARGARET CRAIG
ARCHITECTURAL PHOTOGRAPHY
Portraits by Appointment
Official Photographer for
California Southland
3223 W. Sixth Street
Telephone WAsh. 1653 Los Angeles

Mt. LOWE

"Earth has no finer view to show."

Mt. LOWE TAVERN and Cottages
Enlarged and Improved

at the terminus of this World-Famous Trip afford a most delightful retreat for a long or short sojourn at reasonable rates

5 Trains Daily $2.50 Round Trip Rate at convenient hours - from Main St. Station Los Angeles

For information and Reservations apply

Pacific Electric Ry.

Information Bureau Phone MEtaio-TRinity 3661

HOTEL GREEN

A well ordered Residential and Tourist Hotel of peculiar excellence. Open all year. Moderate rates. Apartments by the month.

The Green Tea Pot

CHARLES B. HERVEY, Proprietor

The
Biltmore
Salon

Los Angeles Biltmore

PAINTINGS
ETCHINGS
BRONZES

California Southland

M. URMY SEARES - - - - - Editor and Publisher
ELLEN LEECH - - - - - - - - - Assistant Editor

NO. 66, VOL. VII JUNE, 1925

CONTENTS

		PAGE
MOUNT RAINIER, WASHINGTON (A Painting in Oil By Kathryn W. Leighton)	Cover Design
SOUTHLAND CALLENDAR	Ellen Leech	4, 5, 6
IN A CALIFORNIA GARDEN	Theresa Homet Patterson	9
RECENT BOOKS—REVIEWS	Louise Morgrage	11
BETTER SUBDIVISIONS	Ralph D. Cornell	12
COMMUNITY WORK IN THE DRAMA	J. W. Morin	13
BUILDERS OF THE COMMUNITY PLAY HOUSE		13
A ROMANTIC SETTING FOR THE ART SCHOOL OF SANTA BARBARA		14
SOUTHLAND OPINION		16-17
THE PASADENA HORSE SHOW AT FLINTRIDGE		18
COLLEGE MASQUES AND COMMENCEMENT		19
CLOTHES IN THE FIELD OF SPORTS—RIDING	P. M. F.	20
BULLETIN OF THE ASSISTANCE LEAGUE		22
BULLETIN OF THE A. I. A.	Harold Sexsmith, Editor	24
BULLETIN OF THE ARCHITECTURAL CLUB		26
ETTORE CADORIN	Christine Curtis	27
BULLETIN OF THE ARTS AND CRAFTS	Marion Hugus Clark	30

Official Organ of the Architectural Club of Los Angeles, California
Official Organ of the ASSISTANCE LEAGUE of SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA,
Presents the interests of The Community Arts Association of Santa Barbara, and is sent East by many of its eighteen hundred members.

CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND is published monthly at Pasadena, Cal.

Copyrighted, 1924, by M. Urmy Seares

Advertising: CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND, Pasadena, Col. 916. Los Angeles, TRinity 1501; Subscription price for 1925, $2.50 per year.

The Los Angeles
Elizabeth Arden Salon
with
J. W. Robinson Co.

UNDER the direct management of Miss Arden and her New York staff, and offering the same specialized treatments that have made Miss Arden's other salons internationally known.

Seventh Floor

Dawson's

"The Birds of California"

A Magnificent Set of Four Volumes

LIMITED EDITION

Published and Sold by
SOUTH MOULTON COMPANY
301 Bank of Italy Bldg.
Los Angeles - California
VAndike 4078

La Solana

A quiet, well-appointed small hotel on the West Side near Orange Grove Avenue.
Each menu is carefully planned and prepared every day.

Grand Ave. and Lockhaven St. Pasadena

THE MANSFIELD SHOPS
Pasadena and Los Angeles

Interiors designed and executed—
Embroideries—
Textiles—

Mrs. Willie Kerns Mansfield

Drexel 1747

J. R. BRAGDON & CO.
Real Estate and Insurance
15 So. Raymond Ave., Pasadena

NOTARY PUBLIC
METROPOLITAN 5270

MISS MARJORIE FYFE
MISS ELLA GILBERT

PUBLIC STENOGRAPHERS

MULTIGRAPHING AND MIMEOGRAPHING

929 LOEW'S STATE BLDG.
LOS ANGELES

CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND

AN ILLUSTRATED MAGAZINE OF NATIONAL INTEREST

CALIFORNIA IN JUNE

SUCH A WEALTH OF BIRD AND BEE AND BLOSSOM,
SUCH A GLEAM OF BUTTERFLY AND BROOK.
AMETHYSTINE SKY AND DREAMY MOUNTAIN,
GRASSY SLOPE AND WILLOW-BOWERED NOOK;
FLOWERS LOOK UP TO GREET THE SWEET
SKY'S BLUENESS,
BIRDS FLY DOWN TO KISS THE DEWY GREEN.
UP AND DOWN, AROUND, ACROSS AND OVER TRAILS THE SUMMER ROBE OF NATURE'S QUEEN.

HINTS OF NEW-MOWN HAY FLOAT DOWN THE HILLSIDE,
SWEET WILD-ROSES LIGHT THE THICKET
GLOOM,
WIND WAVES SWEEP WITH SWIFT AND FAIRY
LIGHTNESS
O'ER THE TRANQUIL FIELDS OF EMERALD
BLOOM;
UP THE COOL RAVINES THE WILD DOVES
COOING
MINGLES WITH THE SIGHING OF THE BREEZE, FAR ACROSS THE PLAIN THE LANDSCAPE
GLIMMERS
THROUGH THE LEAFY VISTAS OF THE TREES.

TRAILING BERRY VINES AND IVY CREEPERS
DECK THE DUSTY ROAD IN GAY ATTIRE,
BLUEBELLS RING A MERRY CHIME OF SUMMER,
SCARLET-RUNNERS SET THE WOODS ON FIRE;
WHILE ABOVE THE SCENE IN LOFTY GRANDEUR
SNOW-CAPPED MOUNTAINS STAND IN DEATHLY CALM,
AND WHILE YET I GAZE A SOMETHING THRILLS
ME—
NATURE CHANTING ONE MELODIOUS PSALM.

Clarence Urmy, in A Vintage of Verse

IN A CALIFORNIA GARDEN

By THERESA HOMET PATTERSON

IT is a thoughtful hostess who has a palm holding up a jasmine umbrella waiting at the curb! One lingers under the spell of its perfume and looks about expectantly. A lacey screen of flowering shrubs runs behind an ivied wall along the street. A walk banked on the right by shrubbery leads by groups of steps up the lawn to the vine covered home of Eleanor Bissell. Wild Flower, one of the beloved children of the San Francisco Exposition awaits part way up with her smile, and in exchange for her welcome has many a bunch of violets laid at her feet or on her poppy hat. Do not tarry for the baby song sparrows are there and mother is circling, a delirium of fear! Potted plants and hanging baskets loiter around the doorway where a gay awning shelters inviting chairs—Mother Quail brings her family out—not so much to entertain you as, apparently to satisfy her own curiosity, one of the babies had a sorry rebuff when he tried to fly into the house through a closed window.

In the foreground the lawn flows down to a perfect specimen of deodar which forms a part of the street screen. Its wee branchlets overlap like feathers, completely covering the midrib on its long plume-like branches. The lower ones rest upon the ground, rising again at the tip. The weighted look is that of one "Upon whose bosom snow has lain." From the very tip of this tree a mocking bird has flooded the garden with music for many years. To be in keeping with the place he knows he must have variety. He imitates six birds perfectly, and loves to contrast the raucous call of the Jay with the sweet notes of the Goldfinch. A second and third deodar bear about the same relation as the three bears and behind them a pink single rose and myrtle run wild and make safe cover for the birds that feed upon the lawn. Rosy green camphor trees lead off to vistas of red roofs, the far bank of the Arroyo, and the hills scarred by new drives where homes cling by some new process of anchorage. The sky line scallops and dips clean cut or cloud draped where "the forges of the sunset flare up in golden fire."

Since the death of the beautiful pines the drive is visible from the house, swinging in between its golden borders of euonymous, and the garden beyond. Formerly the drive was like plunging into the deep woods, a marvelous achievement in deception for so small a place.

THEATER IN THE GARDEN OF MISS ELEANOR BISSELL, PASADENA, WHERE SEVERAL ORIGINAL PLAYS HAVE BEEN GIVEN.

PLANT ROSES
From a Book of Early Poems
By CLARENCE URMY
(1858-1923)

Alas! the heart-aches in the world, the tears,
The grief, the loss, the sorrows that befall
The weary feet that tread the lane of years,
The eyes that see no roses on the wall.

Tired hands that fain would bind the yellow grain,
Their only recompense a sheaf of tares,
Dull ears that hear but stifled sobs of pain
And lips almost grown tired of pleas and prayers.

Plant roses, Friends, plant roses! Heaven forbid
That thorns should ever more abundant spring
Or that one rosebud less should bloom amid
The tangled vines that to the ruin cling.

Plant roses, Friends, plant roses, fear ye not
The desert places or the barren soil,
God will unfold the blossoms, and the spot
In fragrant thanks repay your little toil.

Plant roses for their own sweet sakes, dear Friend,
What half so sweet as budding roses, pray?
And be assured that when shall come the end
Thy path shall bloom a fragrant bower of May.

Happy thy fate, if, when the the day grows late
And dust to dust is spoken of thy clay,
Some soul shall whisper at the church-yard gate,
"He planted roses all along the way!"

While the pines were duly mourned a new beauty has been revealed which is more than comforting.

An ivied terrace runs back of the house., topped by red-gold lantana with a background of broom acacia and goldenglow against the line of dark cedars. A yellow rose trails from this gold into an apple tree. Figs may not grow on thistles but things as strange happen in our gardens! Cecil Brunner roses bloom on the next apple tree. The wistaria on the pergola climbs from there to the roof, screening a large porch on its way. Wistaria is a great traveler always looking for a new place to go. This pergola leads back to the drive across which the steps descend into the lower garden. Shall we go by this violet-bordered path or shall we take the rocky road around the oak with the "hen and chickens" whose families are growing so large we must watch our step! It is difficult to decide what routes to take, what course to choose, what chairs to sit in, which shade to enjoy or which sunlit spots to bask in. This garden has such a variety without being cut up, such restful spaces, it swings together with such harmony. There are flowers for all moods. It is both natural and formal, it is finished without seeming labored. It is remote, not walled in.

The visitor instinctively pauses, lest on entering the spell be broken, the vision of loveliness fade and the rainbow riches be unattainable. No wonder some of the children think this is the home of the fairies. I'm sure that on moonlight nights they dance on the garden stage where real plays are given. Bird lovers would ask for nothing more fairy-like than the Quail trotting around the brick walks, the shower baths of the feathered folks, the humming birds among the flowers, the gay warblers in the trees, the night bird that shuttles over head—and that funny little fellow who says "Who Who."

The stage wings are draped with Japanese elms, its timbers greened with ficus repens, while high at the back ribbons of brown bark festoon the gray-blue trunks of the eucalyptus. The rose of a thousand wonders (truthfully a million) banks the west side of the garden with pink from March until June. Standing out against which are two Italian cypresses, a persimmon with its light green foliage turning to reds in autumn to harmonize with its striking fruit; purple leafed prune, acacia, an orange tree, bridal wreath, Japanese peach, flowering crab, cyanothus, pineapple, guava and two white birches, larkspur, canterbury-bell and amaryllis appear but the lower undulating band of color changes with the season and the mind of the gardner. Lepto-spernum fairly flows around the little gateway, whose posts are etched with the ivy that joins them to the street wall. By feathery jasmine yellow and sweet! bird of paradise, white genista (bridal veil), we come back to the fourth side of the garden where hydrangea and snowball bank against the woodsy drive. Many other plants scamper along, leaning out over the walls as if to be first to see who is coming.

ANOTHER LOVELY PASADENA GARDEN, HOME OF MR. AND MRS. HUSSER.

All the plants and shrubs face the centre, the tallest ones standing politely at the back, paying due reverence to the old pepper which is the soul of the garden. Ivy lies lovingly upon its great branches. Long, willowy stems sway to the slightest breath from heaven, and moonlight traces her lacey shadows upon the ground. With the spirit of youth she spreads a Christmas feast for the birds and finds the Cedar Waxings among her crowned and royal guests. In the Lord Baltimore garden I saw a circle of box with no opening—that was where they put the children to play. So the rose children are all boxed in in this garden and it takes ten little pens to care for them all. They have very grown up names! Lady Hillingdon, Wm. F. Green, Duchess of Wellington are the yellow roses; General McArthur and Hadley are red, and Mme du Pain, Radiance, Mme Webber, Cochet, La Detroit and Los Angeles make up the pink family.

If there is anything in a name listen to these, they are all at home in this garden—Raphioleoips, cotoneaster microphylla, pittosporum-undulatum, viburnum, chaisya, feijoa ceanuthus, acacia floribunda and Baileyana, crataegus yunnanensis, and genista monasperma.

(Continued on Page 28)

RECENT BOOKS—REVIEWS

By LOUISE MORGRAGE

SIDNEY HOWARD, A CALIFORNIAN, AND WINNER OF ONE OF THE 1925 PULITZER PRIZES. PHOTO BY NICHOLAS MURRAY. COURTESY OF SCRIBNER'S.

THREE FLIGHTS UP

By SIDNEY HOWARD, Charles Scribner's Sons

Here is a new voice, sounding loud and clear above the others in the literary chorus. It belongs to a young man, with almost clairvoyant power, who puts his finger on the pulse of life, and discloses in the form of a psychological realism, what its throbbing beats teach him is going on in the hidden recesses of its unseen depths. His last book, "Three Flights Up," a title having little connection with the contents, includes four long short stories, each dealing with an entirely different phase of life, and each treated in an equally different manner; for although this author writes with remarkable ease and flexibility, he invariably adapts his style ot the substance of his tale.

The first narrative concerns two artists, married to each other, wherein is created a situation involving a delicate question of ethics, and solved by Mr. Howard according to the latest code. Somehow here, we doubt his honesty, and find ourselves wondering if his artistic conscience gives him a twinge, when he thinks of "A Likeness of Elizabeth." The story following is called "Transatlantic," a bit of life on a steamer returning from Europe to America, in which we find trivial incidents deftly interwoven with subtle characterizations, all in a style, suave, sophisticated and lightly ironical. It is not well-rounded in form, nor is the next "Mrs. Vietch: a Segment of Biography," which is easily the masterpiece of the book. Herein this eavesdropping young man has listened shamelessly to the secrets of the human heart and then gone away and told. Very reprehensible indeed, and we willingly share his dishonor by drinking in every word of his truthful revelation. The events in this story take place with California as a background, which the style reproduces chameleon-like as characteristically as it reflects the atmosphere of New England in the last tale, called "The God They Left Behind Them." This ambitious attempt is a study of the puritanical spirit and forces, contrasted with those of the present, using psychic influences as a medium. He has done so well with it that we feel it no disparagement to note his inefficiency in this particular form of literary effort. The reader's mind dwells continually on his excellent methods, and that attitude, however flattering, spells failure. Yet it may be that herein he is taking a short ramble along a path, on which some day he is destined to go for a long walk, and afterwards give a noteworthy account of what he has seen while strolling.

Provided this young men remembers Emerson's "hitch your wagon to a star," and pays no undue heed to the loud applause of his enthusiastic spectators, he may rest assured of a rewarding future. A present is already his; the 1925 Purlitzer prize for the "American play performed in New York, which shall best represente the educational value and power of the stage in raising the standard of good morals, good taste, and good manners has been awarded to one written by him, called "They Knew What They Wanted."

A HOUSE WITHOUT A KEY

By EARL DERR BIGGERS, The Bobbs Merrill Co.

We are not going to spoil this lively mystery story for the presumably few remaining in this community who have not read it hitherto. It is enough to say that here is a murder mystery dealt with by a competent hand, in a splendidly constructed tale wherein there is plenty of opportunity for the lover of this type of fiction to exercise every atom of acumen he possesses. And there is no limit to the feeling of respectful awe, that we shall have for the person, discerning enough to guess the identity of the culprit, before the proper time. We may advise amateurs not to be too pleased with themselves over the clue they think they have on page 122, nor yet again with that on page 258.

EARL DERR BIGGERS, AUTHOR OF "THE HOUSE WITHOUT A KEY," IN HIS GARDEN AT PASADENA.

These and many others are equally misleading. In fact characters upon whom suspicion may reasonably be fastened, are involved in situations developed so plausibly, that we sympathize fully with the hero, who undertaking a little amateur detective work on his own account, follows one false trail after another; but he gets there in the end.

The choice of Honolulu as the scene of this novel, will appeal to travellers who have experienced the compelling charm of the Hawaiian Islands, set like gleaming opals in the gaily tinted waters of the surrounding sea. Many readers may also be diverted by the author's presentation of the Bostonian of the Brahmin caste, for whom he appears to have a deep affection. Still others, after the exciting climax of the book is over, may find amusement in guessing the name of Mr. Biggers' favorite city. We feel certain they will decide it is not Boston.

WILD MARRIAGE

By B. H. LEHMAN, Harper & Brothers

Seldom is the reformer a literary artist. Nature may endow him with the requisite equipment, and still his burning absorption in his unyielding convictions will dominate his artistic soul. Novelists attempting to convince the world of some much needed reform, or to express indignation over some attitude of society, which they feel should be corrected, write sometimes crudely, sometimes stupidly, sometimes well; Mr. Lehman has done it superbly. He uses brilliant clear and forceful prose, in a style sparkling with intellectual pyrotechnics, unforced ones, too, but revealing not one heart throb from cover to cover. He displays a deep psychological insight into the human mind and its unconscious motives, he understands the reactions of certain traits of character, but intuitive knowledge of the blind forces of fate seems entirely lacking. In fact "Wild Marriage" is not wholly literature; it is a remarkable exposition, every word of which deserves thoughtful consideration, irrespective of the reader's state of mind. Not often has the defender of certain ideals and standpoints, presented the case so discreetly, so tolerantly, with such a measure of restraint and good taste, and in the end proved nothing.

The story of this novel is of such slight importance compared with the issues involved, that we almost forget to mention the details. Yet it is an extremely entertaining narrative, which the superficial reader, with the vaguest idea of its meaning, may enjoy. Its cerebral hero, the youthful son of a Harvard professor, is a vastly interesting conception; so is the account of what pedagogical Cambridge does to his precocious gifts. And the delicious situation in the end is evolved and managed with a marvelous felicity, so enlivening as to repay amply the most captious reader for the purchase of the book, and the possible attack of mental indigestion brought on by disagreeing with its conclusions. And at any rate, regardless of the effect upon his readers of the expression of the author's dogma, surely they will unite in a petition to fate to spare the old and established college community of Cambridge, an aftermath of Elims, formed by students fancying themselves in the role of Mr. Lehman's enticing hero.

CONFESSIONS OF A DEALER

By THOMAS ROHAN, Frederick A. Stokes Co.

The collector of antiques has his happy hunting grounds in England. There, generations of one family often occupied the same mansion, and each age having its own favorites in the way of pieces of furniture and household articles, frequently relegated to convenient attics, those used in the preceding period. Thus, when the hobby of collecting came to be universal, dealers found a rich harvest of valuable examples of the cabinet maker's art in these store houses. How every nook and corner of the remote parts of Eng-

B. H. LEHMAN, ASSOCIATE PROFESSOR OF ENGLISH AT CALIFORNIA (BERKELEY), AND AUTHOR OF "WILD MARRIAGE." COURTESY OF HARPER'S.

BETTER HOMES THROUGH BETTER SUBDIVISIONS

By RALPH D. CORNELL, OF THE FIRM OF COOK AND HALL, LANDSCAPE ARCHITECTS

IN 1924, more than thirteen hundred subdivisions were recorded within the County of Los Angeles. In 1923, well over fourteen hundred subdivisions were entered on the county records, making a total of some twenty-seven hundred and sixty odd units to be platted and added to greater, metropolitan Los Angeles within a period of two short years. Such growth is unprecedented in any annals of the past and has placed a tremendous burden of responsibility upon the community that must meet the physical facts and assume the moral obligation to its citizenry of such untold expansion.

Such growth, of itself, is nothing to be proud of unless we can say that these near-three thousand subdivisions have added to the possibilities for happy, comfortable homes, wholesome surroundings and better living conditions in general. Each tract must fit into the plan mosaic of greater Los Angeles as did each colored patch on the old-fashioned quilts that our grandmothers made; complete in itself, a distinct unit that functions efficiently to the uses to which it will be put, and yet combines with the many other small patches to make a unified organism of tremendous proportions.

One subdivision may be for residential purposes, another for industrial, still another for business development. The man wishing large home grounds must be accommodated, and equally must consideration be given to the small home owner. Regardless of this purpose, every recorded plat should be required to meet the best needs of its intended use and should be so designed that it may carry on its own independent function at the same time that it fits into and contributes to the greater plan of the community.

One piece of land, planned as a single unit, may be so large and complete that it provides space and accommodation for all of the types of development—residential, industrial and business. But only as a subdivision is conceived and carried out in its planning can it be developed, for it is impossible to conceal the defects and errors of an awkward and unyielding skeleton by draping it with gaudy clothes.

At a recent public gathering, one of our officials, high in the esteem of the community and in qualifications for his position, made the statement that of two thousand land subdivisions recently recorded within the County of Los Angeles, not more than six bore any evidence of particular merit as outstanding examples of scientific study in design and city planning. Such a statement, of course, makes no allowances for the many small plats of land so hemmed in and circumscribed by surrounding development that there was little choice regarding their possible interior arrangement; but it is an indictment against the fly-by-night methods, to which all communities are heir, that attempt to foist upon the public development projects that are backed by unseasoned judgment in matters of city planning and proper housing.

This article is chiefly concerned with subdivisions as a means to better homes, and anyone who has given the matter a thought will concede that the way to better homes is through the building of better neighborhoods, since, in the close congestion of modern urban life, it is impossible to escape the results of our neighbors' acts. Better homes mean plenty of fresh air and sunlight, through a liberal allotment of park area; the sight of green and growing things, comfortable quarters and the opportunity for healthful recreation.

One man of international prominence in rehabilitation work in the stricken Ruhr district has aptly stated that man is engaged in three occupations: He works, he sleeps and he recreates. "But how," he asks, "can the recreation of man take place in the congestion points of our great cities, where not even grass can live and grow?" We of California, because we are young, because we have been surrounded by the endless miles of a virgin country, have not felt in the past, as have older communities, the particular need to set aside recreation areas within the plans of our growing cities. But we of the Southland, where the population has practically doubled within the past five years and where Los Angeles County alone holds some two million people, are today face to face with this very definite need and with the fact that our recent planning has not always given proper consideration to these needed breathing and recreation spaces.

A heavy responsibility lies upon the shoulders of subdividers of land, and an even greater duty of trust upon those officials who must pass upon the acceptance into the community of these tracts which, bit by bit, build our cities from the stuff of which they are made. It is the duty of every man charged with passing upon subdivision plans to so study the need and co-operate in the development of a community that adequate schools, playgrounds, parks, tree-lined streets and other factors expressing charm of neighborhood shall become integral parts of every sizable land addition.

As a nation, we have passed the stage where we question the value of recreation—recreation as an active diversion from everyday cares rather than as a passive submission to entertainment. Entertainment has its proper place in the life of man, but America, as a nation, has been entertained to death, probably as no other nation on record. It is an age of specialization and we pay hard cash for the privilege of watching other people play in games to which they devote much of their specialized time, while we sit on hard seats and our muscles atrophy from lack of use. Too much of our "recreation" is sedentary and passive.

This condition has arisen largely as a result of our centripetal gravitation towards the centers of population where human congestion makes it impossible for the masses to indulge in active sports and where daily habits of life unfit men for the strenuous conflicts of muscle and body that such activity demands. The need for active, outdoor, human recreation has occasioned the rapid development of the golf and riding clubs so numerous in the vicinity of our larger cities, particularly here in California; but it has not consistently provided other means of active recreation for the thousands of children and adults who have less ready means for the enjoyment of exclusive types of recreation.

Playgrounds, parks and open spaces are not a dreamer's myth when submitted to the practical tests of hard business, as has been said so frequently in the past. They are a real asset and they hold cash value for the subdivider who is far-sighted enough to meet such needs of the community when he designs his plan. This fact is attested to in a present case of land subdivision now under way within the county, a tract of some four hundred fifty acres that was originally laid out on paper in the customary, accepted way of extending all adjoining streets into and through the property at their points of contact with its perimeter. Not satisfied with this commonplace method, the subdividers employed professional landscape architects to restudy and plan the subdivision of this property. The final result, in addition to a very different street plan, was the dedication of thirty acres of land to park and playground uses, a sizable contribution when the value of the land is realized at sixty-two hundred and fifty dollars per acre. In addition to this, the use of some twenty odd acres of right-of-way, held by a public service corporation and running through the property, was obtained for similar recreation purposes. Far from feeling that this dedication of land to public use was an item of expense to the organization, the men backing the syndicate have stated that the new street plan and park areas have added $300,000 to the total sales value of their acreage. Their plan is cited as a model of its kind.

This same plan is designated to provide homes for the working man, and is situated within the center of an industrial district. It is not to be a rich man's colony. It has survived the scrutiny and won the judicial approval of men keen in the world of business, and will raise by one the roster of those subdivisions whose design shows merit in planning. It has done this, not in spite of its areas devoted to park and playground purposes, but because of them, and because of the fact that they bear good functional relation to the rest of the plan.

In the filing of subdivision plans, it has been the tendency to dedicate all frontage on through thoroughfares to a business zoning, probably prompted by the higher values that business frontage traditionally brings. The result has been the establishment of attenuated strips of business property all out of proportion to the potential areas of residential property and often very inconveniently located in relation to these areas which they must serve. This is not in accord with the slogan, "better homes through better subdivisions."

Aside from the undesirable appearance of endless, one-story, store fronts along our important traffic arteries, it has never yet been satisfactorily demonstrated that business and interurban traffic mingle congenially. Busi-

(Continued on Page 27)

VIRGIN COUNTRY IN THE UNSPOILED FLINTRIDGE SUBDIVISION, NEAR PASADENA.

OBSERVATIONS IN COMMUNITY PHILOSOPHY

By J. W. MORIN

FOUR PHOTOGRAPHS BY ALBERT HILLER, PASADENA

THE writer has been invited to set down from time to time in these columns comments having a bearing upon the new Pasadena Community Playhouse, and what it means and can do. There seems, therefore, to be a necessity of beginning at the beginning of things, even at the risk of stating self evident truths, and at the same time a certain amount of liberty will be indulged in, to wander somewhat afield from the strict subject of the Playhouse itself, in an effort to define the spirit behind the Playhouse, because the Playhouse is but a manifestation of the spirit.

Wherever two or more persons are in contact, there are community problems and a community philosophy must develop. The simplest form of association is the family, and from remote time this association grouping, depending on instinct and blood relationship in the individual, has been the irreducible unit which in the primary form of society has supplied the indvidual with his support, protection, education and amusement. In general, however elaborate various systems may become in various periods, the greatest problem has been to build an orderly structure in society beyond the circle of the mere family or tribe. There has always been a difficult hiatus to bridge—an absence of sustaining foundation on which to rest—there has always been a lack of permanent and satisfactory stability somewhere in the structure of society, and there has always been a nebulous twilight zone somewhere, which the light seems never to quite penetrate, and it has always been just beyond the home gate.

In general, the harmony, efficiency and cohesion of the family has been characteristic, because it rested on a mere natural instinctive feeling in the individual towards his parents, his mate, and his offspring. Until, however, we have developed relationships and institutions out of human contacts which are stable and are beyond the mere instinctive impulses, we do not make even a beginning in civilization, which has well been defined as the Art of Living Together; not living together with one's children, sisters, aunts and cousins, but living in a little crowded world and yet in peace, in an attitude of mutual respect and co-operation with such persons of various races, attainments and deficiencies as are entitled on their merits, to our respect.

Until we can find a formula for this program, we do not begin to build for permanency any structure in society depending on an organization greater than the family.

In earlier times we used to read that there was a patriarch; such he was because he was older, perhaps, and wiser, but particularly because he was stronger than the rest, and he was the father of the tribe. With little change, except in details, this type has persisted to quite recent centuries, when finally in the mother country, whence came our ideals, an especially powerful conqueror fought a lucky battle and his family has ruled for nearly nine centuries. A dynasty was founded. The assumption of a few convenient fictions has given this system a very orderly structure, and the English nation has emerged, to which we are infinitely indebted for our language, our law and our social ideals.

For most of this time a very consistent progress has been made in the direction of individual self expression according to democratic ideas, in which environment, it has been stated, the individual has equal opportunity, and knows that he has it; but to what end? Along with these privileges that have been afforded us at great price, have come increase in our opportunities for gain in wealth, education and comfort, and we must confess that many of us are living with one main idea—to so live, not that our neighbors may call us "blessed", but that we may accumulate enough wealth so that we will need not exert ourselves beyond middle age, and not only that, but to succeed so well that neither our children nor our children's children need ever engage in competitive efforts for a livelihood, but may be free to extend their graces through long years of polite relaxation.

There is a good deal of hoping that we may each, in our own little personal realm, establish a family dynasty. Self accumulated wealth is but an expression of our personality, and a medium of the expression of our power, in the form in which power may be used by us.

The question, therefore, is—can the traditional limitations of personal instinctive ambition yield to the Community interest?

A. DWIGHT GIBBS, ARCHITECT.

THE BUILDERS

By M. U. S.

THE Community Playhouse of Pasadena is an accomplished fact!

We see now a finished building adapted to a specific need. What that need is can be best expressed in the use which those who have built it demonstrate.

So, we are asking of its founders and builders that direction and leadership which they only can give; and we shall record their ideals in these pages monthly that we may evidence our ability to unite and to follow.

Certain of us who entered and took our appointed seats in the new auditorium in May, 1925, the opening night, will never forget the spiritual thing which, as the building grew in grace and beauty, had found within its spacious interior an habitation and a permanent abode. And as we gazed upon the multiplying beauties of its chalice, it seemed to us an actual presence, the spirit of the place.

It is an intangible which has resulted from the concentrated thought and patient labor of so many talented and trained citizens of Pasadena. The play is not the whole thing; good as the play undoubtedly is.

In the beautiful studio of Mr. and Mrs. Alson Clark this community spirit, which now dwells in our new Center of Arts and the Drama, has slowly been molding a ma-

(Continued on Page 20)

FRANK H. SELLERS, CHAIRMAN.

A COMMUNITY SCHOOL OF THE ARTS

THE recent purchase by the Community Arts Association of the site of the Presidio, at the corner of Santa Barbara and Canon Perdido streets, has revealed the fact that, contrary to popular opinion, the Mission, founded by Fra Francisco de Lasuen two years after Junipero's death,† is not the oldest building that has come down to us from Spanish days. The Presidio, without which the Mission could not have existed, was founded by Governor de Neve* in 1772, four years before the Mission was begun. It was a military post, enclosed by a stockade, and including barracks, store houses, and a church for soldiers. Of these all trace has gone. One building alone has been preserved for us, the commandante's house, erected in 1784, which served as headquarters for the military governor of Santa Barbara. It is peculiarly fitting that this building, a relic of the splendid past of California, should pass into the hands of the Community Arts Association, which is actively concerned in the rennaissance of Santa Barbara's building tradition, and that it should be used as the nucleus for the new School of the Arts.

SKETCH · OF · PATIO · NO. 3 ·

· PROPOSED · GROUP · FOR · THE · SCHOOL · OF · THE · ARTS ·
· COMMUNITY · ARTS · ASSOCIATION · OF · SANTA · BARBARA ·
· Santa Barbara · California ·

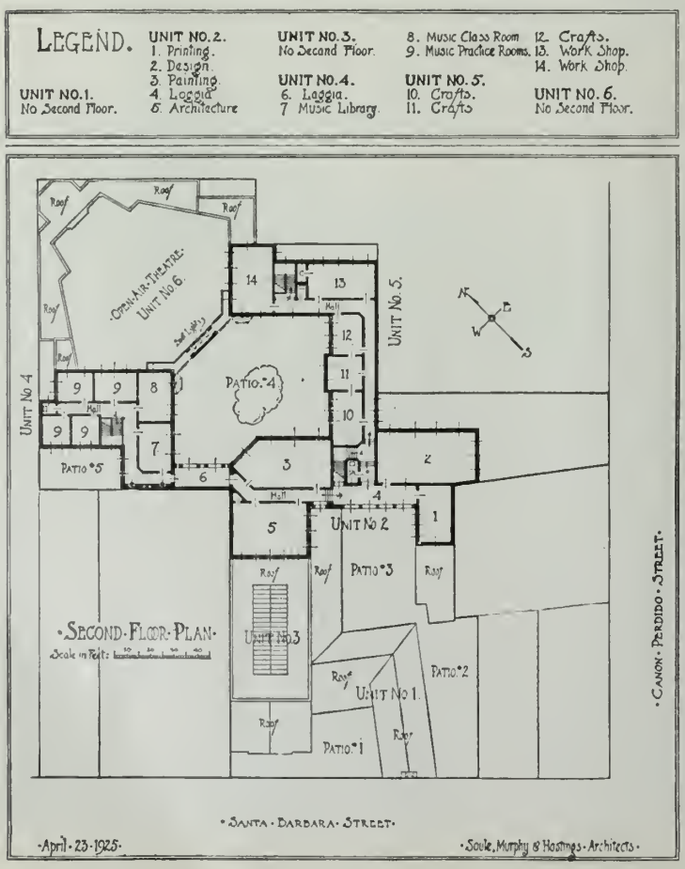
The work of the school is so well known that it seems unnecessary to review in detail its past career. Started some five years ago by a group of enthusiastic art lovers, it became a part of the Community Arts Association in February, 1922. Since that time it has become one of the most useful factors in the cultural progress of Santa Barbara. Instruction is furnished in music, drama, dancing, and all forms of graphic art, including landscape painting, sketching, and life classes. Departments of sculpture and architecture have recently been added; through the latter the School will be linked intimately with the Plans and Planting Branch of the Community Arts Association, as it is already linked with the Drama and Music Branches. It is, in fact, a sort of forcing bed for the garden of the city's artistic activities. Some idea of the size of the school may be gained by an examination of the registration book. The annual enrollment averages at least 260, including adults and children.

Much of the growing success of the movement must be attributed to the director of the School, Frank Morley Fletcher, an English artist with an international reputation. A pupil of the Atelier Cormont in Paris, he has taken medals with his paintings at Chicago in 1893 and Milan in 1906. He has held many important positions before coming to Santa Barbara, notably that of director of the Edinburgh College of Art, where he was in command for 15 years. As director of the Santa Barbara art school he has distinguished himself for his enthusiasm, perseverance, and aptitude for leadership. He is instructor in chief of classes in sculpture, drawing, painting and woodblock printing, and some of his pupils have made remarkable progress.

The original home of the School, the Dominguez Adobe on Santa Barbara street, was outgrown some time ago, although it still houses the office, music, drama, and dancing classes. Another rented building on Ortega street is being used as a temporary home for the art classes. But it is certainly a well deserved reward of merit to give the school this new and delightful dwelling place. The plans drawn up by Messrs. Soule, Murphy and Hastings, include the rehabilitation of the commandante's house, which will be used as the nucleus for a maize of Spanish buildings and courts, which will parallel the much admired De la Guerra street group. Development will be on the unit system, so that buildings can be added whenever need arises. It is planned to begin with Unit I—the old adobe, which is to house the school offices—and Unit II, which will take care of the art classes and will provide a splendid lecture hall with a stage that can also be used for concerts and theatricals. Later additions call for two houses on an inner court, one for music, one for drama, and finally, the farthest piece of the property, which runs down a natural slope with a beautiful view of the mountains in the back ground, will be converted into an outdoor theater after the Greek model.

With everything in its favor, the School of Arts will inevitably become a center of artistic progress on the Pacific coast, a new Parnassus, whose influence will not be limited to Santa Barbara alone, but will spread far and wide the valuable and discreet gospel of good taste.

ARTHUR MEEKER, JR.



BIBLIOGRAPHY OF CALIFORNIA

The Founding of Spanish California*, Chapman.

†California, by McGroarty.

The Beginnings of San Francisco by Zoeth S. Eldredge.

A History of California, the American Period, by Robert Glass Cleland, Occidental College.

IN CALIFORNIA'S MOST ROMANTIC SETTING

CHILDREN FROM THE SANTA BARBARA SCHOOL OF THE ARTS DANCING IN THE OLD PLAZA, RESTORED TO SANTA BARBARA BY THE COMMUNITY ARTS ASSOCIATION'S SUGGESTED PLANS, SKETCHED BY J. OSBOURNE CRAIG, ARCHITECT. ON THE SOUTH SIDE OF THE PLAZA IS THE BEAUTIFUL NEW BUILDING OF THE SANTA BARBARA DAILY NEWS. G. W. SMITH, ARCHITECT.

SANTA BARBARA AS A SKETCHING GROUND

ONE of the tangible assets accruing to Santa Barbara as a result of her attention to the beauty of building is the fame she receives from her artists.

The rehabilitation of the old adobes, which was started by the Plans and Planting Committee of the Community Arts Association, has cultivated so high an appreciation of their value to the community that the amateurish imitations, so common in the Southland of California twenty years ago, began to appear at once and the usual extortion of unscrupulous speculators accompanied it.

Imitation, abhored by all true artists and the stumbling block of American architecture today is, nevertheless, a very valuable point in community education and can be made to work wonders in the appearance of a city if properly handled. Led by artists who know what is good in the landscape, given good examples of original work by our best architects, and made familiar with the beauty of hill towns in Europe through the energetic work of this efficient section of Community Arts expression, the people of the city have gained a new value and a new perspective which, once established, will make the banal impossible in Santa Barbara.

The work of man cannot ruin the picturesqueness of a country where this perspective and this knowledge of what is good prevails. Rather do houses become a part of the beautiful landscape as soon as they are finished, if they are created by architects who have been trained to adapt the lines and masses of a building to the contour of hills which form its background and to express the life of the people.

Looked at from its heights or from the placid sea at its feet, Santa Barbara is extremely picturesque and becomes more so as white houses and tiled roofs add their combined beauty to the distant view. The painting of these picturesque houses should not be left to amateurs. Painters who have hitherto gone to Europe to find sketchable country habited by man, will find it now in Santa Barbara. The setting is superb. It is not being desecrated by subdividers, but its beauty is knowingly conserved and the houses are, in groups and singly, being built to add to the beauty of the setting and not to detract from it. Let me repeat it, this beauty should not be allowed the disgrace of poor painting. Inferior pictures should neither be exhibited nor offered for sale. The work of students should be kept in the studio to serve as stepping stones to better things.

THE SOUTH FRONT OF THE OLD ADOBE BUILT FOR THE COMMANDANTE

IN OUR DAYS OF IGNORANCE AND GRIDIRON STREETS, SANTA BARBARA CUT A STREET THROUGH THIS, HER OLDEST HISTORIC MONUMENT, THE HOUSE OF THE COMMANDANTE (1782).

Santa Barbara has more than its share of excellent artists. It has a fine art school. It should satisfy its taste with these and the best work from abroad. Then, when the genius awakes and paints Santa Barbara itself, beautiful heside its opalescent sea, the world will applaud the work of the Plans and Planting Committee.

ARTHUR HAZARD, whose beautiful portrait "The Girl in the Leghorn Hat" was on our cover for May, is doing much for California Art in his personal attention to its proper presentation in Los Angeles.

One of the most active of the Society of Western Artists, which is the motive force in exhibitions at the Biltmore Salon, Mr. Hazard has helped mightily to place painting on a pedestal downtown where all may see and learn. His one man exhibition at the Biltmore in April showed remarkable versatility and interesting new phases of his work. Portrait painters are few in California. The human figure is too difficult for most of our painters who have launched themselves as landscapists before graduating from the life class.

Mr. Hazard's work shows careful attention to the characteristics of his sitter and in the painting used on our cover last month, a delightful daintiness and delicacy approprate to the subject and reminding one of Romney and Gainsborough.

SOUTHLAND

The University of California in Los Angeles

LOS ANGELES has arrived as a college town now that the University of California has received recognition from its inhabitants in a bond issue for its enlargement in our midst.

Time only can show the immense benefit to our youth and our teaching profession which will result from this more vital connection between the southern part of the State and our State university.

The thousands who have been coming to southern California for the past forty years have few of them felt the University as a vital necessity in their lives, nor have they known its thorough and painstaking attention to all the various educational interests of the whole State. But the native Californians who have been born in the South during the last fifty years realize what the University of their State is doing and they are responding by the hundreds to its splendid training and influence.

Thousands of newcomers are also taking advantage of a faculty of experts and will attend the fine summer school arranged for the teaching fraternity in California schools.

Loyalty to the State will be fostered and the splendid record which the University has made in its long and honorable career in the United States has become an asset for southern California to boast about.

Significance of Our Service Clubs

SERVICE CLUBS are these associations of professional and business men who gather weekly at the luncheon hour in a wholesome atmosphere of fellowship and helpfulness. Some of their names are familiar, Rotary, Kiwanis, Optimists, Lions and others. Outsiders frequently wonder what they truly stand for, what they really accomplish. Are they not merely fads, or, at most, organizations for the promition of selfish interests in the community, and in their larger activities are they not guided by ambitious organizers and unpractical visionaries? In any case, can they be taken seriously by thoughtful and busy men?

A closer study would quickly convince the critics of the genuine worth of these organizations. If democracy is to be a success, it will be so only through the education of the majority in the principles of service—service to our fellows, to our community, to our state, to the nation, to the world. That task of educating a whole country is enormous. Education does not stop at high school graduation; it would more fittingly be said to begin there. It is a life-long process. It cannot be carried out except through small groups which will gather, here and there, for the consideration, the adoption and the furtherance of the highest standards of individual and collective action. The Service Clubs are one of the answers to that crying need.

We cannot in a short article do justice to their program. But the following are some of the principal contributions they make, at least as these contributions appear to one of their members.

The first thing a Service Club does is to supply friendly, sincere, open-hearted contracts for busy men, who, absorbed by professional or business cares may grow narrow in their vision, morose in their humour, selfish in their purposes. At the noon hour, once a week, the physician, the grocer, the banker, the teacher, the manufacturer, the city official, sit around the same luncheon table without formality or constraint. There are no artificial barriers. You find yourself ushered from the cold arena of competition and of the struggle for life into an atmosphere of good will, of friendliness, unquestionably sincere and genuine. The warmth of that friendship goes to the heart, and releases instantly latent energies, which translate themselves into renewed optimism, confidence, determination to do. The service club provides friends, unfailingly devoted and loyal. It supplies a civic family which binds you to your town with ever growing ties.

A Service Club will not only give one from fifty to two hundred friends in its own town, but it makes these men a solid working unit, which will function successfully whether the task to be accomplished is large or small. As Bishop Stevens of Los Angeles wrote recently, speaking of Kiwanis, they are "organized helpfulness, organized patriotism, organized clean thinking, organized optimism." A good cause that might be months before getting a hearing in the crowded marts of our city, finds at once sympathetic listeners in these clubs. They rather sin by excess of credulity, of interest, of sympathy, than by indifference or scepticism. They stand for the larger life of the community, for a more intelligent understanding of our civic obligations, for a better and more beautiful city, for education, for broad religious sentiment.

In these small groups, the latent talent or ability of men is more easily detected. That ability finds readily a field for expression and thereby leaders are created which, in a less friendly and sympathetic environment, could have never risen from the ranks.

Our Service Clubs are in our country a leaven of generous, open-hearted, unprejudiced, broad-minded democracy. They are neither partisan nor fanatical, scattered throughout the land they are our modern forts for the defense of American institutions, and, as they grow international by gradually reaching out to Mexico, Canada and the entire British Empire, they become the outposts of international good will.

The Service Clubs deserve to be better known and appreciated, but the Clubs in turn must not forget that the value of their service depends upon the quality of their membership and upon the amount of time and devotion their members are willing to allot to the general welfare.

PAUL PERIGORD.

The Child Guidance Clinic

HUMAN behavior has been of interest to students since the earliest times. Viewpoints have changed, and in the last few years important scientific light has been thrown on the problem of human behavior. Great progress has been made recently in physiology, psychology, psychiatry and the social sciences. Discoveries in these fields assist materially in the understanding of human conduct.

When the scientific views the human being objectively, he is apt to see him as a biological unit struggling with his ever changing environment. Some individuals succeed in this contest, while others fail dismally and are buffeted about as derelicts. Society is commencing to show interest in these failures; we call them insane, criminals, paupers, agitators or "ne'er do wells." We classify the individuals of this heterogeneous mass, label them and remove them from sight by pigeon-holing them in various institutions.

When the history of these unhappy individuals is traced back to their childhood we find that they are the logical result of the forces which were brought to bear upon them. Many of these forces were undesirable, but could have been corrected. Most of these individuals were conduct problems as children and mental hygiene could have assisted them, preventing many of the later catastrophies.

With the idea of meeting such conditions in an effective manner, the Southern California Society for Mental Hygiene has placed in Los Angeles the Child Guidance Clinic. It is the purpose of this clinic to study and treat problem children, assisting them to adjust socially. The child is studied from as many angles as possible and all appropriate resources of science are brought to bear upon him and his environment for the correction of his difficulties.

In the Child Guidance Clinic a complete social history of each child is obtained by a social worker whose special training in nervous and mental conditions assists her to discover hereditary or environmental factors which may have influenced the development of the child and his personality traits. It may have been his social contacts that have handicapped him. . Continual criticism and unfavorable comparisons make the child feel he is "no good," perhaps hopeless.

OPINION

Every one is menaced by the myriad hosts of the bacterial world. The majority succeed in winning their early tilts with these ever-present aggressors, but many are permanently injured, often in such a way as to interfere with their future occupational and social adjustments. Defective sense organs or nutritional troubles will always handicap. A child's failures cannot be understood without knowledge of the exact state of his physical equipment. In a child guidance clinic all the specialties of scientific medicine are at the service of the child.

In life success or failure may depend upon the amount of intelligence a child possesses and the relative efficiency with which he uses it. These assets can now be measured with scientific accuracy. A dull child cannot compete with a bright child, and nothing short of accurate measurements can justify anyone in saying which is the bright and which is the dull child. A psychologist should be a part of every clinic working with children.

During the World War the importance of morale was forcefully brought to our attention. Morale is of the same importance to the child in his struggles as it is to an army. The psychiatrist, as the result of his experience in treating nervous and mental conditions, is peculiarly qualified to evaluate the child's mental and emotional attitudes. Attitudes are the basis of morale. Adults seldom realize the deep feelings, serious thoughts, mental conflicts and worries from which the child suffers and how these affect his attitudes. It is these little understood feelings and attitudes that govern much of his conduct. A child does not run away from home because he is bad, but because he is unhappy. If adults knew of and understood his unhappiness he would not run away. Understanding his conduct means not only knowing what his friends and his enemies think of him, but also knowing what the child thinks of himself, his friends and his enemies.

To treat a problem child without complete study is dangerous, and might prove disastrous. As the result of sixteen months of diligent work, the Child Guidance Clinic is assured that the majority of conduct disorders in children can be successfully treated.

Man has succeeded in bringing his material environment under his control so that it administers to his welfare and comfort. May he not now succeed in modifying intelligently human personalities, most powerful forces, so that they will administer more effectively to his welfare and happiness?

Dr. E. Van Norman Emery.
Director Child Guidance Clinic, 1401 So. Grand Ave., Los Angeles

Pledge of Peace. International

We stand for:—the Right against the Wrong; for the Oppressed, against the Oppressor.

For our Birthright, Opportunity, for the Wisdom of System, the Nobility of Justice, the Grandeur of Law, the Glory of Peace, for Supreme Education, full, complete, free; so that each and all, to their utmost capacity, in their spheres, may become true men and women, free of disease of mind or body, skilled in the Arts and Industries of a sane, peaceful, harmonious Life, trained to love the Creator and the marvellous beauty of his Creation, with affectionate reverence and profound appreciation.

We declare this World a priceless, precious heritage, to be preserved by all the Arts known to Humanity, each striving to bring to perfection the sections they find themselves custodians of, to hand over to their descendants—in every way far better, and in no sense worse, for having lived on it.

We solemnly swear, by the High Honor of our Humanity, by the Sacred light of our Souls, by every Thought, and United Action, to protect and maintain the Peace of the World, as we aspire to be worthy of the Life Eternal.

Claude H. Simson.

The Class in Personal Religion

SOME people are religiously gifted, others are not. Some have the power of feeling the presence of God intensely and intimately; others have it not. Two mistakes are often made about this gift of devotion. Some think that it is a proof of goodness and holiness. Others think that it is all a delusion. Both are wrong. The gift of devotion is an endowment like a taste for music or poetry. In its highest form it is genius of a certain kind. The saints are our masters in the spiritual life. They have the same kind of authority in their own sphere that the great poets and musicians have in theirs. We do not think that music is all rubbish, because we happen to be unmusical, nor, like George III., that much of Shakespeare is "sad stuff" because we may happen to prefer a sensational novel. The great saints have been men of genius, no less than Handel or Shakespeare. Why should we not trust them on their own subject?

But it is almost as great a mistake to suppose that religiosity is a mark of the goodness which God values. Clergymen, I am afraid, often make this mistake, carried away by professional zeal; but laymen know better. They know that the most unselfish, upright, kind-hearted men of their acquaintance are often not outwardly religious. At any rate no one could call them saints or mystics. Now the right way to look at this is that the gift of devotion is a good and precious gift, which we ought to cultivate and be very thankful for if we have it, and a thing which we ought all to try to acquire; but that it is not a measure of our acceptance with God. From what we read of the Twelve Apostles, I should gather that most of them were not religiously gifted men naturally. Our Lord chose them because they were true-hearted and generous men, men capable of making great sacrifices, brave and loyal men. If then you have this gift, do not be proud of it; do not suppose that it will necessarily make you pure and honorable and unselfish. I regret to say that this is very far from being the case. And if you have it not, recognize frankly that it is a defect in your make-up, and that you must go to school humbly to the saints, in order to know what are the high and holy truths which God reveals, by His Spirit, to some men and women, whom He chooses to be the receivers and witnesses of these revelations. Do not disbelieve what they say because you cannot have these experiences yourselves, and do not think meanly of yourselves because God has not committed this special grace to you. Only, before you make up your minds that you are spiritually shortsighted, I repeat that you must give the Holy Spirit, or rather yourselves, a fair chance. You do not give Him, or yourselves, a fair chance unless you determine to perform frequently what are called acts of faith. I mean that we must force ourselves to direct our whole minds, our wills, our affections, our intellects, towards divine things. When we have a few minutes to ourselves, alone, we should say to ourselves, "Now I want to think about, and make real to myself, those great facts about the unseen and eternal world which Christ revealed to us, and which thousands of good men and women have seen and feel as plainly as I see and feel this table and chair in my room. Lord, I believe; help Thou mine unbelief. Open Thou mine eyes, that I may see the wondrous things of Thy law. Thou hast said, O Lord, Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God. O make my heart pure, that I may see Thee." You will find these exercises very difficult at first, and you will sometimes doubt whether they are doing you any good. But believe me, they will clear and open out channels in your minds which are now choked up from disuse; they will make it possible for the fresh springs of God's grace, the sweet influences of His Holy Spirit, to flow freely through your hearts. They will gradually form habits of spiritual communion, which will be an inestimable joy and help to you. Surely you may trust those who have tried it, when they say the same thing.

The Very Rev. W. R. Inge, D. D.
Dean of St. Paul's, London.

MAY MASQUES AND COLLEGE COMMENCEMENTS

The Annual Greek Play Is the Event of the Year to the University of California at Los Angeles, and the Production of Sophocles' "Antigone," Under the Direction of Miss Evelyn Thomas in May was Interesting and Beautiful

"STARS" IN THE PAGEANT, "ASTRA," OF THE MILLS COLLEGE MAY FETE.

"Nobody knows his name today,
But far greater than soldier or king was he;
As in this land of blighting sun,
For the future he planted a tree, a tree!"

AS it can scarcely be due to accident, it must be the result of design that both Mills College in the north and Pomona in the south are so rich in a setting of trees, and to this background it seems only fair to credit some of the more apparent advantages accruing to study within their gates.

Mills is quite the pioneer college for women on this Coast, growing from a foundation laid in Benecia when a Young Ladies' Seminary was opened in 1852, under the direction of Mary Atkins, from whom it was purchased by Rev. and Mrs. Cyrus T. Mills in 1865. Through the development of this school it was necessary to secure larger holdings and the present site in the foothills near Oakland was purchased, and Mills Hall was opened in 1871.

Growing with the State from those early pioneer days Mills has a background of history and tradition, cherished by all her students as zealously as any of those of Vassar, Wellesly or Bryn Mawr, and is one of the few colleges in the West recognized and admitted to all the privileges of the Association of American Universities. Also of particular interest now, since every woman is seeking more than one outlet for her energies, is the fact that Mills offers two distinct courses, the academic and the vocational. But to the students of either course the meaning of the Latin motto on the portal of the new Beulah Gate, "One goal, many paths," is a promise of opportunity granted and a vision fulfilled.

Whether due to the background of tradition or to the ideally beautiful location of the college, Mills offers a perfect setting for pageantry and each year during Commencement Week characters of history and literature live again, swaying and dancing in the shadows of the great oaks; down the paths of the fern covered hillside they come to add more color and life to the waters of the lake, with its wealth of emerald hues, borrowed from the copper sulphate of the old quarry in the hills.

The trees, the rambling little paths, the singing streams are not valued merely as scenery, however, but are loved as friends and every girl makes haste to call the attention of a visitor to the age-old oaks, with their gnarled, yet stately trunks, and to the double row of tall, gray-green eucalypti, guarding the paths and offering sanctuary to the birds.

The gates of Pomona College at Claremont also bear a tablet and possibly because the college is a bit younger, the admonition is a trifle more severe, bidding one enter only if imbued with eagerness, reverence and sincerity. But here, too, the trees beckon and call, and if at Mills you love the old traditions and never tire of hearing stories of other days, here at Pomona the very youthfulness intrigues and a desire grows to help make tradition, to live to the full now and leave a bit of color and beauty in the weaving tapestry of her history.

In the south also the flower of pagenatry blooms, and each year there is a masque and usually a play given in the beautiful outdoor theater by the senior class, frequently written by the class as well.

A visit to either college is a delightful experience and also a discovery, inasmuch as you can ever afterward refute the statement that only "flappers" exist among the younger feminines. These students are thinkers, and if their thoughts are long, long thoughts, they are to some advantage and lead somewhere, not merely along a meandering path of poetic fancy.

"SNOW WHITE" AND THE DWARFS IN THE MAY MASQUE, POMONA COLLEGE, CLAREMONT.

THE TRAILS OFFER SO MANY CHARMS WE WONDER HOW THE RING MANAGES TO ATTRACT UNTIL WE RECALL THE REASONS FOR THE SHOW.

THE HOSPITALITY OF THE FLINTRIDGE RIDING CLUB IS DISPENSED IN THIS PLEASANT CLUB HOUSE AND UNDER THE SPREADING OAKS.

SUCCESSFUL AMATEURS IN SPORTS AND PHILANTHROPHY

FOR some reason, or no reason, we are so apt to look for good sportsmanship only in the field of sports, forgetting it is back of so many things in our everyday life—nor does this necessarily apply to the chances taken every time Broadway is crossed. But now in June, that month of discoveries, when the newly come graduate discovers the world which the newly made bride has forgotten, we have two examples of thoroughly good sportsmanship. The Flintridge Riding Club sponsors a horse show, strictly for amateurs, and the body of young women who organized the Children's Convalescent League opened their Home in Los Angeles, when they had been told over and over again by older and presumably wiser heads that it simply could not be done. Probably nobody told the Flintridge Club that it could not stage the show, but certainly a few short years ago the entries would have been very limited to a show, the first rule of which reads, "An Amateur is one who rides for the love of the sport, not for remuneration and shall not be professionally interested in the purchase, sale or trading of horses."

ELEANOR KINGSBURY, DAUGHTER OF MRS. N. C. KINGSBURY OF PASADENA, ON PINTO; ADDING A CUP TO HER ALREADY INTERESTING COLLECTION OF TROPHIES

Both bodies were really taking a sporting chance, you see, and as, following the old rule of the birds, good sports will find each other, they did, and combined forces to the extent that the entire proceeds of the show go to increase the fund for the maintenance of the Home. The revenue from the sale of the boxes, as well as that from the al fresco luncheon will help bring again roses and smiles to little faces. This home offers the greatest advantage to children just released from the hospital in giving them adequate care until they are entirely well.

It would not have been considered advisable, from a financial standpoint a few years ago to have selected a horse show as a "benefit" from which to derive a revenue for a beloved charity and particularly an amateur show, because of the dearth of horses privately owned, but now with all the renewed interest in riding, with good stables the rule rather than the exception, and with bridle trails showing us more of America every day the horse show has become an attraction for which we gladly pay.

One peculiarly nice thing about this show is the opportunity afforded the children of the club, whose portion of the show is scheduled for the morning hours, to do something, some really tangible thing for the other children, who for the present can enjoy indoor sports only, and must depend largely on stories which are read them for amusement. To this end the mounts of the junior members were cantered, trotted, and put over the hurdles, then groomed and polished with exceeding care that they might enter the ring in full fettle on June 13.

The League which opened the Home, on the corner of Lucas and Ingraham streets, Los Angeles, only organized in January, with thirty members, to which a few others have since been added, has accomplished a great deal in such a short time. The home is well equipped throughout for the care of the twelve children to be admitted at one time, and with such pleasant big bedrooms, flooded with light and sunshine, a sleeping porch, and a play room for the "almost well" small ones. The whole house evidences care and love in the preparations, the furniture being literally hand-painted by the members of the League, and in the dining room the windows are hung with a cretonne the tones of which bring the outside inside, showering the room with sunbeams and flowers.

The attainment to this home emphasizes again the vital need, to most natures of a personal, intimate relation in philanthropy, the desire to plan and execute as well as give. The ability to write a liberal check is needful but it does not carry the thrill of purposeful accomplishment.

A POLO TEAM OF DECIDED ENTHUSIASM, WITH GROWING ABILITY, IS MADE UP OF JUNIOR MEMBERS AND INCLUDES BOTH GIRLS AND BOYS.

AMONG THE ARDENT SUPPORTERS OF AMATEUR SHOWS, D. R. MONTALBODDI, INTIMATELY KNOWN AS "MONTE," RANKS HIGH.

CLOTHES IN THE FIELD OF SPORT---RIDING

By P. M. F.

ARLINGTON HOTEL, SANTA BARBARA, WHERE MANY OF THE "UP THE VALLEY AND DOWN THE COAST" TRAVELLERS STOP.

IN the field of sports, clothes play an important part for women. For those who are most skillful demand the most comfortable and efficient garb; and this in turn, if properly made, is usually the smartest, for it will invariably be simple in line, whether golf skirts, riding coats, or bathing suits. Just as one feels sure that the girl wearing a bathing hat with a brim, is no swimmer, equally convinced is one that a woman in baggy breeches, a helted coat, or boots with high heels, can not ride. In giving advice about riding clothes, I am tempted to make a list of "nevers," and I shall head it with never follow the information given in the ordinary advertisements. "Chic" and "all the rage" never apply to riding clothes. There are no sudden changes in fashion, or new fads, but plain and sensible conventions, adhered to very strictly, by those who ride the best, because these conventions are based on comfort and upon those lines which please the eye.

Advertisements are very often written by people who never ride. They gave pictures of pretty models posing. Sometimes the models have never seen a horse except from the ground. Naturally such picturs are very unsatisfactory for praetical purposes.

And now to business. Never wear red or green coats. A woman does not wear a red coat, unless she be M. F. H., and there are not more than two or three in the United States who hold that honor. Never wear sleeveless coats. "It just isn't being done," the obvious reason being that white shirt sleeves break up the simple lines of the body and distract the eye.

Never wear boots with pointed toes or high heels. Never wear flat or odd-shaped derbies, and above everything else, never wear sports hats, no matter how simple. A man's soft felt is comfortable and always looks well for informal riding. And now comes a very important never; it refers to white breeches. Again, as in the case of red coats, there is but one occasion when it is correct for a woman to wear white breeches. If she is showing in a hunt team with two men and riding astride, she must dress as they do, and regulations demand the breeches be white. It might be well to speak here of the silk hat, for as a result of the hunt team situation, which has arisen in the last few years since women have been riding astride, it has gradually become correct for them to wear top hats on this occasion. I write that word "correct" with hesitation, for there is still an old guard that looks with horror upon a woman in a high hat astride. It must be admitted that it looks not quite right. Fortunately however, occasions requiring it are rare.

Breeches should be cut in one way only. The buttons must come on the inside of the shin hone. This is very important, for the material is then so cut that the bias of the goods while fitting the knee snugly, still will give when it is bent. On ready-made breeches, usually the buttons are on the outside for some reason not to be understood. So placed they rub off easily, and more often rub into the wearer; and the breeches, if fitted tightly enough not to wrinkle, have no give and are uncomfortable. This illustrates the fact that comfort is the foundation of what may seem to be petty conventions, although perhaps this maxim applies only to riding clothes.

Coats should be simple and cut in at the waist only slightly, and never belted. I have said there are no fads in riding clothes, but for the past five years there has been one which is now almost a convention. Breeches and coats are not matched, in material or color, although they are supposed to blend; a dark brown coat goes with tan breeches, or a dark-grey coat with light-grey breeches.

Boots should be high and the line at the back of the leg straight. It is almost impossible to find a ready-made boot that is well-cut and high enough in the leg. Several London bootmakers send every year, representatives to this coast, to take orders and measurements; if not convenient to get in touch with them, it is best to be fitted to an ordinary boot at a local shop, and then order one like it from the factory, insisting on a higher leg, which generally adds only $5 to the cost, and much to the good appearance of the boots. They should come high enough to leave room for the width of a pencil between the top and the bend of the knee at the back when the knee is bent only slightly as in the saddle.

One last never. Never go to your family tailor for a coat and breeches, but patronize a good and reputable habit maker. My own experience is a sad tale. Several years ago, I intended to crush my friends by appearing in a magnificent formal coat. I went to a large city, where there was a very expensive ladies' tailor, whose name one mentioned with awe. He made me the coat. It was dreadful. If I had worn it, standing perfectly still in a room, I should have heen the center of an admiring circle, but unfortunately I had to ride in it. When I mounted, the coat became a mass of bunches. That tailor did not have a saddle in his establishment and therefore could not fit a coat for riding. One pays a high price perhaps at a habit-maker's, but gets comfort and appearance for the money expended If one is willing to wait, it is possible to order from English firms at lower prices, but there is also the danger of necessary alterations.

Men's or boy's shirts are far nicer than women's because they are longer and do not pull out; likewise men's socks are preferable to long hose, which are likely to bunch at the knee. Riding crops with bone handles and leather loops at the ends are proper only for hunting. The bone handle is intended for opening gates. For park or country riding, a stick or stout whip is best.

Looks like $100.00
Wears like 100.00
Guaranteed like .. 100.00

Cost $40.00

ENGLISH RIDING or POLO SADDLE

In lots of 2.....$37.50
In lots of 3..... 35.00

WRITE FOR CATALOG

Liberal discount to Riding Academies and Saddlery Stores

Specifications:
Whippy pattern
Fine pigskin seat
Square cantle
Straight head
Leather lined
Felt panel
Stitched edges
Folded leather girth
Beveled edge and numbered stirrup leathers
Never rust stirrups

The "Littlejoe" Wiesenfeld Co.
Baltimore, Md.

Photo by Val

CHRISTINE SQUIRES

INTERIOR DECORATIONS
MATERIALS

Exclusive Furniture
Designing

3217 WEST SIXTH STREET
WASHINGTON 3433

THE BUILDERS

(Continued from Page 13)

terial form which would express itself in actual architectural presence. Here the friends of the building gathered, trying out designs and new improvements and molding in plasticene every curve of the satisfying interior, every relief of the walls, now so brilliantly colored and lighted.

Just as ancient Greece gave her artists freedom to study the endises, the proportions, the details and decorations of her classic orders until they have come down to us in a refinement of beauty and usefulness today; so this age and generation has given time and money into the hands of its artists to study out perfection of detail and beauty of line and color that every artifice known to modern science may be at the command of the artists developed here to express in perfection the beauty of the human relationships and individual or social ideals.

In the congenial atmosphere of Mr. Clark's notable studio set so lovingly in a garden on the edge of our arroyo, there has for many months been growing up this subtle thing which the people of Pasadena recognized on the opening night. The applause which greeted the curtain meant more than any casual observer might know. When before has a painter listened to applause for his great canvass as it unrolled before an appreciative and sympathetic audience? It is seldom that such an experience comes to living men.

For it is the gift of their love for the work that has made this little theater something more than ordinary — the determination to have everything done well.

When the work became too cumbersome for a painter's private studio, Mr. A. Dwight Gibbs, who was appointed to execute the plans, opened an office down town, where he will continue to practice the profession in which he has proved himself so eminently efficient.

Before he left for a much needed time of rest in Gloucester, Mr. F. H. Sellers gave to us a complete list of contractors and workers which appeared in the souvenir programs, and requested that the city give credit to all who have contributed in time and thought as well as in funds.

The beauty of the combined work appeals to all who understand, but we put on record here some of the main contributions as examples of the thoroughness with which the work was done. For this is an advertisement for them.

A VIEW OF THE PASADENA COMMUNITY PLAYHOUSE. WINTER CONSTRUCTION COMPANY GENERAL CONTRACTORS, 2404 WEST SEVENTH STREET, LOS ANGELES. TWO OF THE MANY HANDSOME WROUGHT IRON LANTERNS DESIGNED ESPECIALLY FOR THIS THEATRE BY ROBERTS MANUFACTURING COMPANY, 827 SOUTH HILL STREET, LOS ANGELES. THE ANCIANO STONE COMPANY FURNISHED THE BEAUTIFUL FLAGSTONES OF THE PATIO.

The Winter Construction Company is the general contractor. Experienced in the building of theaters, and sound experts in carrying out architects' plans and specifications, this company proved itself a tower of strength to the Guild in its execution of every construction detail. It is one thing to plan carefully, it is quite another thing to find efficient help in the execution of those plans. The Winter Construction Company has done the actual job of building the playhouse for the people and the gratitude of the people of Pasadena will not diminish but will grow greater as the thoroughness with which they have done their work is more and more evidenced.

This handsome building is a monument to the efficiency of this Construction Company. Mr. Frank Sellers, who as chairman of the building committee of the Guild sacrificed personal plans to the demands of the Playhouse in his constant attention to its business, tells of their conscientious helpfulness, and gives a glimpse of the numerous trials made to find lighting fixtures that would conform to the massive yet pleasing and livable architectural scheme.

The Roberts Company, discarding all its standard products for the occasion, sent out from Los Angeles Mr. H. C. Frost, designer, and set him to work on the spot. The result is a most happy outcome of true artistic application to first principles. The heavy wrought iron lamps at the entrance show the skill with which the thing was done. Their appropriateness as well as their historical and artistic interest makes them a striking addition to the patio where the people of Pasadena and their friends and guests will congregate daily and revel in their new possession—an actual community meeting place for all.

The Roberts Manufacturing Company put in all the lanterns and brackets designed by Mr. Frost to harmonize with the unique architecture of the building. It was a very happy idea of the first planners of the theater to have this outdoor foyer to a California theater and very happily was it designed by Elmer Grey, the architect.

On either side of this patio, which opens toward the east, are shops where the artists and craftsmen of the town will display their products and those who cannot find room there are crowding this eastern section of Colorado Street and El Molino for store rooms. It is to be hoped that builders on nearby lots will keep to a two-story height and leave the distinctive tower of Mr. Clark's and Mr. Gibb's decorative skyline to dominate. Pasdena can have this her own original shopping district in the Pasadena style instead of attempting to fake a Spanish town, which she never was and never can be. Our beautiful mission is down at San Gabriel; we have nothing in Pasadena of the Spanish occupation to revive as has Santa Barbara—to her everlasting glory and renown.

Just as our citizens are from every part of the United States, so the materials are from far and near. The use of flagstones we brought with us as our forebears had used them in New England; but flagging cannot conscientiously be brought so far, and we must look to our mountains nearby to furnish them or make them ourselves.

It is fortunate that the Anciano Company had already begun to bring in their beautiful flagstones, which are now laid on the floor of this patio. Colorful and easy to the tread, they give great interest to the court so that even the ground we walk on is here a thing of beauty. Interest and varying sizes give relief from the stereotyped square concrete of our too universal sidewalks.

Set around the court and on the wide upper balastrade or planted in the open spaces left in the flagging are interesting plants native to this or other semi-tropical and semi-arid climate. These are from the extensive nursery of Edwin Rust, with offices and lath houses on Bank street, South Pasadena. Mr. Rust made his contribution to the Community Playhouse by selecting plants and shrubs appropriate to the architecture and in line with the ideals of the Building Committee. Who knows what interest these fascinating desert growths may inaugurate in carrying out the ideas of Professor Houghton, who in speaking to the Garden Club at the home of Mrs. Albert Sherman Hoyt last month deplored the fact that California has no Kew Gardens and suggested the establishment of a public place where all the interesting plants of Southern California will be available for study hy the Community and its winter and summer guests.

Standing one day with Mr. Sellers and Mr. Gibbs across the street from the rapidly rising building, we noted with interest the way they worked to accomplish this satisfying result which makes everyone call the playhouse "lovely," an appropriate word, notwithstanding its frequent misuse. Every sharp edge of the concrete walls was curved or rounded as though Father Time himself had worked on it for centuries. So while it is new, it has the soft contours of ancient walls.

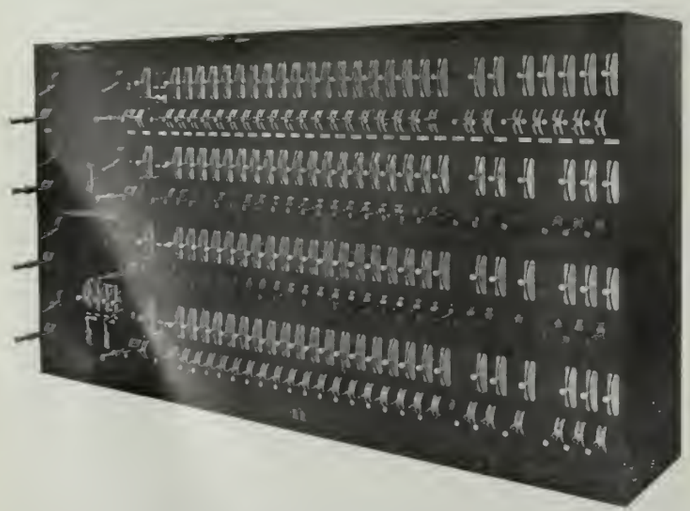
Inside one meets again the loving care which attended every detail of the building. Ablaze with color and gold leaf, the decorations of the false boxes and the garlanded proscenium arch and handsome drop curtain combine to make the interior something for the Community Players to live up to whenever the curtain rises on a new play.

It is, perhaps, the ceiling which is the crowning work of the Interior Decorator, Einar Peterson. Blue as the heavens on a still, starry night, it adds height to the dome-shaped auditorium and yet is near enough to enable us to enjoy its delightful pattern and charm of color scheme. Surely the Spirit of the Community theatre has a beautiful home, since Mr. Peterson and his painters have touched it with their magic wands.

Einar Peterson studied art in Paris, traveled and worked in various European countries, and came to America to a position in Chicago. Sent to the Pacific Coast to execute some mural paintings about four years ago, he remained to build a studio at 4350 Beverly Blvd., Los Angeles, from which point of vantage he has decorated many beautiful interiors with the skill of a true artist, and a creative genius which is his own. For the Friday Morning and University Clubs, Mr. Peterson received the honor award of the A. I. A., showing the satisfaction of the architects with whom he has collaborated.

We shall expect to see some of his work reproduced in color before long—but it is futile to try to show in black and white the work of twenty skilled decorators, led by Mr. Peterson's direction.

Beneath the color and gold leaf is the staff or plaster-workers' surface to be adorned. This is the work of the Watkins Company, 43rd and Pacific Avenue, Los Angeles.



STAFF ORNAMENTS, WATKINS PLASTER CO.

The designs by the architect, Dwight Gibbs, for the interior, worked out in the studio of Alson Clark, were molded by the artists of this company in clay, and then cast in staff. That this work, with which we have all have grown more or less familiar, through watching the building of our World's Fair building, should be done for the moldings and other decorations of the walls is not surprising. But we were surprised when, entering the building for another peep at the interior by daylight, we were told by Mr. Clinton C. Clarke, indefatigable worker on the Governing Board, that the flat fixtures surrounding the ceiling lights in the foyer are also of plaster or staff, and were designed and executed by the Watkins Company. Their dainty design and lightness never betray their origin in concrete, but give great pleasure as added beauty spots in this beautiful house. So, too, the grilles and the other artistic touches executed by this company tell to the world of theatre goers that there are artists in our midst.

In no profession practiced has modern progress made greater gain than in that of the electrical engineer. Fascinating in its study, it repays its devotees in manifold ways. The modern lighting of a modern theater is therefore a profession in itself and its ways are intricate and hard to comprehend. Standing before "the very latest thing in switchboards" we listened to Mr. Sellers expatiate upon its elaborate control and usefulness, and were glad it was there. But we are also glad that the experts are there to use it, and that we are permitted to sit in the comfortable theatre seats and enjoy the lighting effects. It has gradually dawned upon us as we have studied the subject, that much of the genial effect of the lighted interior comes from the various contrivances of this remarkable system used in the auditorium. The general electric contract was placed in the hands of W. E. Langstaff, 1256 North Fair Oaks avenue, Pasadena. Elaborate indeed in the wiring done in this up-to-date enterprise, and carefully has it been carried out. No seat in the auditorium is spoiled by direct light, and yet there is no loss of light by the position of the lamps. As a citizen of Pasadena, Mr. Langstaff has put his best work into the Community Playhouse, and it will continually remind the people of his thorough knowledge of all that is now possible in modern electric lighting and its control.

The determination on the part of the Building Committee to have the most complete stage lighting equipment obtainable brought to them and to the Community Playhouse of Pasadena the Safety Electric Products Company of 1330 E. 16th St., Los Angeles, who have installed here in Pasadena a switch board that is more full of wonders than Aladdin's lamp of Arabian Knights Tales. It has the largest number of stage circuits of any theater switchboard west of Chicago, and combines in one unit the best features of all the more important installations now in existence. It gives more combinations and has greater flexibility of control than any other board in the western half of the United States and puts our little theater in a class by itself at the head of the list in lighting.

PASADENA COMMUNITY SAFETY CONTROLITE STAGE SWITCHBOARD: SAFETY ELECTRIC PRODUCTS COMPANY, 1330 EAST SIXTEENTH STREET, LOS ANGELES.

Because the Building Committee are themselves up to date and keen to get the best in stage equipment, they have given the Safety Electric Products Company opportunity to do their very best work, and to put in every new appliance their engineers have worked out. Thus the dream of the technician has been realized; house lighting has been used as a direct aid to stage lighting. There is no seeming artificiality about our stage. We dwell in so complete a harmony with the actors to whom we are listening, that we almost forget that they are acting, and feel with them as though they were our friends. This is in no small part due to the naturalness of the lighting controlled by a switchboard that is like a musical instrument to be played upon by artists answering quickly, and silently, to their every demand. It can be controlled from many points on the stage, or from the stage manager's station to every necessary signal receiving point.

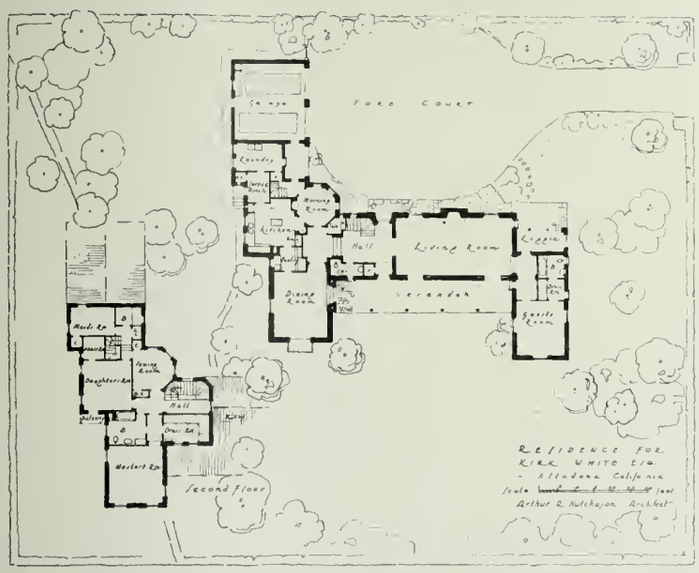
Elliot Lee Ellingwood, "the best heating and ventilating engineer on the Pacific Coast," the architects call him, worked out the pressure system of warm, washed air and cooled, washed air which comes in on demand at the top of the house and is pulled out near the floors through registers. The E. O. Nay Company of Pasadena, executed this most finished system of heating and ventilating and also did the plumbing in the house.

Proudly we were shown this fine, scientific system by the Building Committee, as we picked our way through the basement before the debris was removed. We can therefore assure the attendants at the plays that the air is absolutely clean and fresh in the building, no matter what imagination may persuade them to think. It is moving air, it is warm air in winter and cooled air in summer, but it is always and continually fresh air, no matter what the thermometer. We can thank the E. O. Nay Company for doing this elaborate job so substantially and so well, and as we enjoy future plays, we shall always remember that basement with its great pipes and air tubes, its air washer and heater, its intricate system of "works" that only an expert like E. O. Nay can put into a building so that it will satisfy even the audience at the Community plays.

Prominent among those who have brought the Community Playhouse idea to its present state of prosperity is Mr. E. J. Cheesewright from whose studios and crafts shops have come many of the settings of past plays in the old playhouse and to whom may be given all praise for the subtle beauty of the new green room, that heart of the Community Playhouse. Here through two little doors under the stage the audience may have the pleasure of meeting the actors on our new and elaborately fitted modern stage, and here the Community Players may enjoy midnight suppers and various activities hitherto unknown only to the profession but soon to be recorded in these pages as they occur in future years.

It is a joyous room. Red laquered doors, green and gold walls, beautifully harmonized ceiling and decorated beams unite to form a handsome, low ceiling reception room reminding one of some old French drawing room where stately salon was held.

More brilliant than a French room often is, but less crude than a description of its colors might suggest, this room, it is safe to say, is original, pure Californian as developed in the southern counties, if you must have a name for the style. The furniture is especially Californian for every piece was made in Pasadena, in the high-grade shops of the Cheesewright Studios. Few even of those who live here know how fine a furniture shop is established there and many wonder where this leading decorator finds his furniture.



When Mr. Einar Peterson reached this room in his decoration of the theater he, too, began to play with his art and no spot is more lovely than the ceiling of the actors' meeting place in the green room of the Pasadena Community Playhouse on South El Molino Avenue, where all the art lovers of the town and state will congregate.

For the art of this gem of a playhouse is no imitator. It is false to call such a product of all the thought and experience, the talent and training of local artists an imitation of the work of Spanish, Mexican, Italian or French artists. In the freedom of Western Ameica Art is in solution as the chemist would say. As it crystalizes around a Community playhouse, as its painters and sculptors, its tile workers and plasterers, become interested to the extent of giving their very best something new is evolved. Travellers bring their offerings and suggestions, experienced decorators who, like Mr. Cheesewright, have received their training in Kensington Galleries where the art of the old world at its best is concentrated for study, bring ideas and their dreams. From this treasure trove, things appropriate to our climate, the spirit of our community and its mode of life spring into being and a new art is the result. Many hands working happily together have molded the playhouse into beauty. "It is lovely," said the President of The Community Arts Association of Santa Barbara, telephoning over long distance his congratulations to CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND. Yes, and it is lovable; for love of the work has been put into every line and curve and it is Pasadena's own

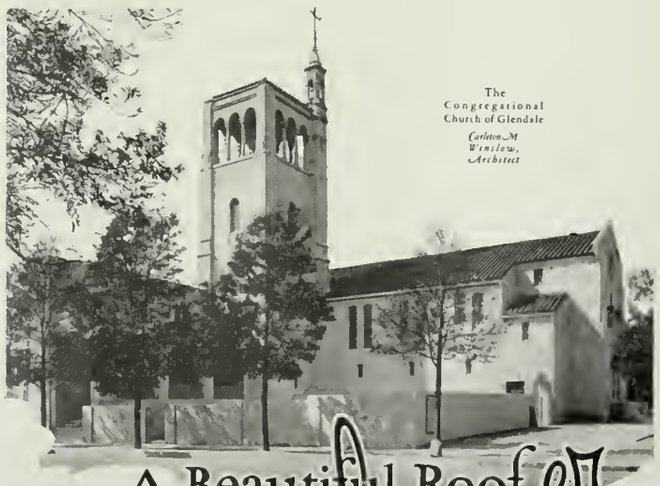
LOS ANGELES ARCHITECTURAL CLUB BULLETIN

SELDOM does an architect have an opportunity to design a house under such ideal conditions as those afforded by Mr. Kirk White, whose home is now under construction in Altadena.

The architect was instructed to design a home. To the architect, such a building must express primarily the character of a home. A hospitable retreat wherein the owner might welcome his friends and yet maintain that intimacy of a home which ofttimes is lost in the more formal buildings. Permanency and stability, characteristics of a well established home, have been interpreted in walls of concrete and tile roofs; truthfulness in construction, by leaving exposed the structural parts of the building, not in their crude state, but refined with slight detail in a craftsmanlike manner.

The orientation and general arrangement was designed to meet existing conditions of prevailing winds and sunshine. The forecourt was placed to the north, leaving the southern exposures for the living rooms and the deep verandah overlooking the gardens and the delightful greens of a golf course which extends along the highway.

Slight differences in contour of the land have been recognized by a change of levels in the two wings. And where floors are on grade tile has been used. In the main stairway heavy oak planks have been designed with colored tile risers in the steps, to give life and brilliance to the entrance hall. Walls are to be left in a subdued white to form a background for the hangings and pictures. The exterior will be simply treated with whitewash to give color contrast to the red tile of the roof. The trim around windows will be painted an olive green to pick up the color of the foliage and make the building an harmonious part of its natural setting.



Carrara Marble Neptune Fountain, Reproduction by a Pupil of the Great Sculptor Gianbologna, of his Celebrated Fountain of Neptune in the Piazzo del Nettuno, Bologna, Italy.

THE MEYER AND di SEGNI GALLERY

Antique Furniture, Paintings, Fabrics, Marbles and Bronzes.

640 South Figueroa Street Telephone VAndike 2936

Los Angeles

The Congregational Church of Glendale
Carleton M Winslow, Architect

A Beautiful Roof Forever

THIS beautiful edifice, so suggestive of the old Mission type of architecture, is roofed with this company's

Small Mission Roofing Tile

... an everlasting protection against flying sparks ... a permanent shelter ... "beautiful forever"

"The Standard of Quality in Clay Products"

L·A·Pressed Brick Co

ENTIRE SIXTH FLOOR..... FROST BLDG

Second and Broadway ..... TRinity 5761

LOS ANGELES

107A

FACE BRICK · HOLLOW TILE · ROOFING TILE · TERRA COTTA · ETC

ASSISTANCE LEAGUE OF SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

MONTHLY BULLETIN

"All for Service—And Service for All"

OFFICERS:

MRS. HANCOCK BANNING, President
MRS. EDWARDS LAUGHLIN, First Vice President
MRS. WILLIAM GIBBS MCADOO, Sec. Vice-Pres.
MRS. ERWIN P. WERNER, Third Vice-President
MRS. E. AVERY MCCARTHY, Fourth Vice-Pres.
MRS. JAMES REED, Secretary
MRS. J. WARREN TATUM, Treas.
MR. D. C. MACWATTERS, Auditor

CALENDAR FOR JUNE

June 1—10:30 a. m. Day Nursery Sewing Unit.
June 2—10:30 a. m. Meeting of Directors.
June 2—12:15 p. m.—Round Table Luncheon.
June 2—Motor Corp Drive in Hollywood.
June 3—10:30 a. m. Shut-In Committee.
June 4—10:30 a. m. Good Samaritan Committee.
June 8—10:00 a. m. Day Nursery Committee.
June 9—10:30 a. m. Executive Committee.
June 16—10:30 a. m. Executive Committee.
June 18—10:30 a. m. Good Samaritan Committee.
June 23—10:30 a. m. Executive Committee.
June 29—10:30 a. m. Day Nursery Sewing Unit.
June 29—10:30 a. m. Motor Corp.
June 30—10:30 a. m. Executive Committee.

WILMINGTON UNIT

IN the five months since its establishment the Wilmington Unit has handled 180 cases. For 124 of these either employment or material relief has been secured. The employers of labor in Wilmington as well as the social agencies of the Harbor District have given us their heartiest cooperation. We have reason to be very proud of the results and hopeful of a future of extended usefulness in that community.

The story of Juan and Angela will be of interest to all. It is just one of the many cases which is justifying the efforts being put forth there.

Angela, like most mortals, started life with handicaps. She was thrust upon the world at three weeks without mother or father. Belonging to that genial, warm-blooded, and sympathetic race to the south of us, she was fed at the breast of someone else's mother in the neighborhood. The home of this foster-mother was Angela's home until she was four. But as that flock was added to year by year the little mouths became too numerous and the food too scarce, so Angela was placed in an orphan asylum.

Until she was fourteen the good sisters trained her in the way she should go—taught her cleanliness and tidiness, simplicity and sweetness. During all this time she never quite lost contact with the kind foster mother and it was to her she would return for little vacations. To this day she speaks of her affectionately as "the only mother I ever knew." At fourteen she left the orphanage. She was placed with a good thrifty German family of wholesome and simple standards and here she lived more or less happily as one of the family for three years.

It was on one of her trips to visit her foster-mother that she met a young Mexican, of that unusual type, fair-skinned, blue-eyed, and handsome. Angela, born in the United States, spoke no Spanish and Juan, just over from Mexico, spoke no English. It seems, however, they spoke some universal language, for in three months they were married.

What a change for Angela! Juan of the peon class—the poorest of the poor—led his dusky and beautiful young Mexican-American to the humble abode of his family. From the spotless cleanliness of the sisters and the well-ordered household of the German family Angela came to a little shack, gloomy from lack of windows, dingy from over-use, unkempt from overcrowding. The bare board walls were grimy from the smoke of the wood stove and kerosene lamp. There were two rooms and two beds and the house was occupied by Juan's mother, two sons and their wives, and several children. There was no place for them to sleep but on the floor—no running water—no conveniences—just a partial shelter from sunshine and rain. And to add to the sense of desolation was the babble of a strange language about her—not one word of which she understood. What a situation! When Angela wanted to talk to her husband it must be through an interpreter and naturally before the end of two weeks their romance was shattered by misunderstanding and doubt.

Angela was seventeen, Juan nineteen—two children speaking a different language, each having a different background and different standards of life, trying to solve the problem of living together harmoniously and happily. What chance had they?

With each year a child arrived and with each child more trouble. Juan was jealous—jealous of his brothers—jealous of his cousins—jealous of his neighbors—and each time a child was on the way he tormented himself and Angela with the question of whether it was his or belonged to someone else. And Angela felt, whether real or imagined, the hostility of her in-laws. She was not Mexican but American born, full of foreign ideas, foolishly proud, and independent. She felt herself pushed aside, singled out, and never taken into the family circle. She felt they resented her and she also resented thm.

Angela's mother-in-law was at this time her best friend. She was the mediator, the peace-maker.

With more or less friction and misunderstanding Angela and Juan hung together on this slender thread of the mother's affection for her son and her daughter-in-law.

Just about this time Juan was making very good wages as a longshoreman and under the guidance and advice of his mother he bought a lot and put up a little shack. But just about the time the house was finished Juan's mother died and the slender thread that for so long held the family together was broken.

Shortly after this work became scarce and Juan discouraged, jealous and disheartened was in the right mood to listen to further tales of infidelities on the part of his wife from his brothers and friends, and Angela, now the mother of six children, with her good friend, Juan's mother, gone, felt abused and neglected by her husband. Juan could not or would not find work—Angela took in washings. And then on the advice of someone she had her husband arrested for non-support. He was put into jail and on his release was ordered by the court to pay his wife twenty dollars per month. Finding no work and fearing re-arrest, he went to Mexico. Angela placed a mortgage on the little property they had so laboriously accumulated and struggled along. Then she found herself pregnant again and with despair in her heart tried to rid herself of her burdens. She was rushed to the hospital and her life saved.

This was the story of Angela and Juan when the Assistance League found them.

At tweney-seven Angela is still pretty and more amazing for one of her race, young looking after years of child-bearing, hard work and worry. Juan has returned from Mexico, rushing here to take care of his children when he heard of Angela's illness.

Slowly and carefully working with the good padre of the Church, we are re-establishing the little home—a new roof to keep out the weather, clothes for the children, work for Juan, visits, little chats, friendliness. In every way we know encouraging Angela to an interest again in life, to a pride in her six lovely children, a pride in her house with touches of prettiness here and there, trying to make life seem worthwhile and wholesome. And Angela is responding—planting flowers in her garden, keeping her children clean and in school, her house neat and clean as she was taught to do in her youth.

We wonder if a turning point has come for Angela and Juan? We hope so.

THE Community House is the central headquarters, where the Exchange, Gift Shop, Thrift Shop, Film Location Bureau, and Executive office of the League are located. Here, through the splendid efforts of a representative volunteer corps, the various business activities of the League are conducted. Every effort is made to carry on the business activities of the League at a minimum cost, and practically all of the work is done by the members who volunteer their services.

The Thrift Shop represents a worthy achievement toward rendering assistance. The receipts from this department defray its overhead expenses and make it possible to maintain a "little spot" where men and women, as well as children, can secure wearing apparel, which is donated to the Assistance League by members and friends.

HAVE you lunched in the tea room of the Community House of the Assistance League? If not, make a reservation for one of the round table luncheons. These luncheons are always held on the first Tuesday of each month with Mrs. William de Mille, chairman. You are served with a delicious home-cooked lunch, and you are entertained by some world-famous personage. But the reservations are limited, so make a reservation early.

We all like to see the make-believe world in real life—the great stars of the film world. Here at lunch times you will see many of the great celebrities in costume, lunching. They like the homey atmosphere and refinement of the tea room and are also interested to help the Assistance League Committee develop and broaden their work. Some of the loveliest parties are given in the community tea room by the celebrities. Alma Rubens entertained a party of twenty; Marion Davies another party. The Duchess of Southerland was the guest of the Fox Studio at a luncheon of twenty. The smart set of Los Angeles entertain constantly with luncheons, often followed with bridge and mah jongg. Mrs. Cosmo Morgan entertained a group of friends following Miss Van Kuk's lectures. Mrs. E. Benedict gave a luncheon of six. Mrs. Hancock Baning had a party of five. The Countess Carolina had a party. The great charm of the place is due to the personality of the women interested in the work. One is so cordially received and made to feel that individually she is helping and developing this work—by just patronizing the shop and tea room.

MRS. JOHN MELL, WEARING ONE OF THE INTERESTING "FUTURIST" FROCKS, SOLD AT THE ASSISTANCE LEAGUE WOMAN'S EXCHANGE, 5604 DE LONGPRE AVE., HOLLYWOOD, AND AT THE LEAGUE BRANCH SHOP AT 5 AND 6 WOMAN'S ATHLETIC CLUB BLDG., 833 SO. FLOWER ST.

BOOK REVIEWS

Continued from Page 11

lish country, has been searched for antiques, by dealers, is described by one of them in this very interesting book on the subject. Here in this country there is little opportunity for such discoveries, owing to our inveterate custom of moving on, but many of us have the lure of collecting in our blood and like reading about it, even if we are able to go no farther.

Mr. Rohan has given a simple and naive account of his experiences in an occupation, which he regards very seriously. The true artistic dealer according to him, like the poet, is born, not made. And also like the poet, will consider no other calling. This was the case with Mr. Rohan and having once settled on this profession, made it a matter of pride to conduct it with integrity and to acquire the reputation of an expert authority in which ambition, he appears to have attained success. He came in close contact with many notable Englishmen, and we can not help feeling that our English cousins know far better than we, how to make life happy, by filling it with resources. Collecting antiques is only another method of expressing one's artistic aspirations, and one of the ways of helping one over the rough places in the passage of human beings through the world.

The book itself is a fine example of the book maker's craft; the paper is most excellent, the printing attractive, and nothing but the title appears on the jacket, of which fact American publishers might profitably take notice.

SO YOU'RE GOING TO ITALY

By CLARA E. LAUGHLIN, Houghton Mifflin Co.

Occasionally the complimentary blurbs printed by ambitious publishers on the jackets of new books are misleading, and we feel that "better than a guidebook" is one of them. It is too modest; it understates the case. We might say "all who enter here, leave dull care behind," only we know the "all" alas will not be true. Unfortunately many readers exist, who, due to lack of youthful training, will feel no responsive thrill to the charm of these enchanting pages. Far beyond the price of pearls and rubies, is that foundation laid in early youth which enables one to read this volume with appreciation, to dream and dream, to see visions eye to eye with the Circe writing it. It is a power that fills equally the cottage of the poor and the palace of the rich with a radiant delight. Like the song of the Eastern bluebird, in the early days of spring, it must be caught in childhood to exercise to the utmost its potent charms. In this book of her's about the Italy of so many centuries, all unconsciously no doubt, Miss Laughlin has made an eloquent plea for that enjoyment, which must be anticipated by hours of youthful study.

This pleasing author writes with delightful ease, in a manner peculiarly her own, implying intimate acquaintance with her fascinated readers. Under her guiding magic, we see Italy ever the leading lady on the stage of Europe, performing dramatic parts in her own productions, and changing them whenever the interest of her audience begins to wane. She held the world spellbound, first with her Rome, next with her Church, and surpassed even herself with her Rennaissance; and now who knows what tours de force she is preparing to regain her supremacy over the minds and hearts of men, to run its course through still another cycle of age-long years.

The appeal of this book is so strongly aesthetic, that we are inclined to forget the practical viewpoint of those looking for the advice and help, which Miss Laughlin gave in her volume on Paris. It is not here, however. In the presence of the "grandeur that was Rome," who can be expected to think of restaurants wherein the hungry traveler may procure the best food for the expense of time and money? Far better, she tells of expeditious ways to furnish the most satisfying artistic nourishment to him whose stay in Italy unfortunately must be brief; and assistance of such kind more than compensates for the absence of details to be found in any commonplace and prosaic guidebook. And at that, we would go without the guidebook, much preferring Miss Laughlin's volumes to books of any other kind.

PORTRAIT OF A PUBLISHER

And the first hundred years of the house of Appleton. 1825-1925.

The publisher is the late William Worthen Appleton, who became a member of this well-known publishing house in 1868 and continued to be a prominent figure in its progress from that day to this. The brief sketch of his career with which the booklet opens, is both an appreciation of his worth and an entertaining account of his acquaintance with men now famous. Perhaps the most interesting item deals with his correspondence and relations with Herbert Spencer, whose characteristics thus revealed, prove illuminating.

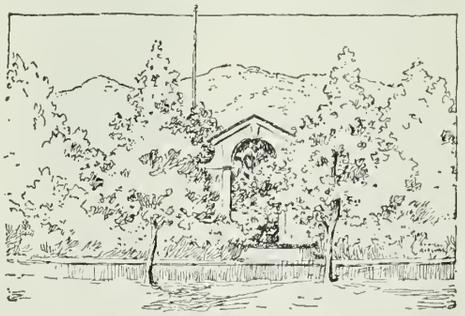
This firm originated a century ago, in an unimportant way, when Daniel Appleton went over to New York City from New England, and established a wholesale dry goods business, having a small department devoted to books and put in charge of his son, William Henry Appleton. The young man's first publication was a tiny book of Bible selections, after which beginning the firm acquired gradually so great a reputation and success, that distinguished authors were glad to have their books published under its auspices. For many years, the distinctive feature of the firm was the publication of Cyclopaedic and scientific works, particularly those of Spencer, Huxley, Tyndall and Darwin, eminent Englishmen, introduced to the American public through this medium. It was also responsible for the 1866 edition of "Alice in Wonderland" in America, found afterword to be identical with the 1865 English edition, and now almost priceless in value.

Grant Overton is the author of this little booklet, in which he has given a very creditable account of the achievements of this most reputable house, during its century.

INTERIOR DECORATION
SUMMER CLASS :: CONDUCTED BY DOUGLAS DONALDSON

Beginning July 6th the class will meet in the Donaldson Studio on Melrose Hill in Hollywood.

This is a laymen's class and we consider it a means to a better knowledge of color and design, as related to all arts. Including home decoration, dress, gardens and a better understanding and appreciation of the fine arts.



Tuition, Fifty Dollars.

Address
DONALDSON STUDIO
4960 Melrose Hill, Hollywood
Telephone Hollywood 8774

Welcome to call and Browse
First Editions Early Printing Autographs Americana
Rare & Art Books
Dawson's Book Shop
627 So. Grand Ave.
Books Notable for Printing Illustrations and Binding.
Catalogues sent on request.

T. W. Mather Co. Inc.
PASADENA, CAL.
Dry Goods
Women's & Children's Wearing Apparel
Colorado Street at Marengo

COSTUME SHOP
of the Assistance League
5604 de Longpre Ave., Hollywood
Have you a costume you would like to see in the movies? Give it to the Hollywood Thrift Shop
of the Assistance League

MRS. CHARLES C. BELL
Orchard Homes and Villas
Mountainside Acreage
Rentals Near Good Board
SARATOGA - - CALIFORNIA

THE CALIFORNIA SCHOOL OF GARDENING FOR WOMEN

Offers a two years course in practical gardening, including the propagation and care of flowers, shrubs, fruit and vegetables, the laying out and management of small gardens as well as large estates. At Hayward, California (one hour by train or motor from San Francisco). Principal: Miss J. Walrond-Skinner, N.D., Hort., F.R.H.S. Tuition $250 per annum. Term begins Jan. 15, 1925. Only six students will be taken the first year. Write for information and make application now to the Principal, Hayward, California.

S. M. Wershow
LADIES TAILOR
Riding Habits, Coats and Suits
Furs Stored and Repaired
7066 Hollywood Boulevard
Hollywood
GRanit 4254

FLORNINA
Gowns · Negligees · Accessories and Bathing Suits
Ready to Wear or Made to Order
Unusually Attractive Frocks in Tub Silks and Dotted Swiss
95 South Los Robles Ave., Pasadena
Phone Fair Oaks 113

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA CHAPTER A. I. A. MONTHLY BULLETIN

HAROLD O. SEXSMITH A. I. A.
Editor

Through unfortunate error the name of Loyal F. Watson of the firm of Witmer and Watson was omitted from the article on The Code of Ethics of the American Institute of Architects which was published in last month's bulletin. Attention is called to the second article of the series given herewith which was written by Mr. Arthur Hutchason.

Annual Meeting with the Students of the Department of Architecture, University of Southern California

We were not among those present, but from what has leaked out here and there the Chapter was most royally "wined and dined" and diverted for one solid evening by the students of the University. A prominent member of the faculty confessed to us that there had been little school work done in the department for several days before the big event. The Chapter appreciates the labor of love which went to make the affair a success and thanks the students for their hospitality.

Use Home Products

Along in June there will be available a number of architectural students who are now studying in the department of architecture of the University of Southern California. All of them are enthusiastic hard-working youngsters who need our help this summer. They will find places some where. Whether it be in the office of a member of the Chapter or in that of a "Jerry" builder is for us to decide. A place can easily be found for every one of them. They only ask to be paid what their training and experience is worth. Some of them have had as much as three years in an office. It is the Chapter's duty to see that they find the right environment. Let's find places for them.

THE Canons of Ethics of the American Institute of Architects has been written for the purpose of maintaining a high standard of professional practice among architects and to afford protection to the public by outlining the proper relations between architects and the building trades.

The first of the ten Canons of Ethics states, "It is unprofessional for an architect to engage directly or indirectly in any of the building or decorative trades." To most architects and professional men such a rule is most obvious. However, many laymen have questioned such a stand. Even some architects have looked covetously upon the profits that might accrue should they enter into the field of building.

Could not the public be better served through an arrangement whereby the architect would contract to build the structure he has designed? The answer might be in the affirmative if those individuals would agree that in the case of an illness a patient might better be served by a druggist selling patented medicines or a doctor financially interested in such remedies, than by seeking the services of a reputable physician whose only interest in the case would be to advise and effect a cure and not to sell an article at a profit.

The conditions are analogous with that of an owner contemplating the construction of a home or any other building. Should the owner contract with an architect actually engaged in the building trades, an architect whose association with some contractor might be such that he would be financially interested in the award of the contract? Or should the owner choose an architect as he would any other professional adviser and obtain from him the advice and formula to meet the requirements of his particular case; a formula written by one who had no thought of profit in the materials to be specified or the award of the contract?

The pharmacist is a trained man who sells his services in the form of profits upon the products of his manufacture. The patient relies upon the doctor as one whose judgment may not be inflenced by any financial interest in the materials of the formula. The contractor's position is similar to that of the pharmacist, his profits must come from his ability to buy and sell at a profit the labor and materials which enter into the product of his manufacture, namely the buildings he erects. The architect is a man trained to visualize the ideas and requirements of the owner. His judgment must not be influenced by any personal material or interest he might have in the award of the contract.

Assume the case of one of the concerns advertising "Architecture, Financing, Building, etc.," which would be the situation the architect would find himself in were he to engage in the building trades. The owner has entered into a contract with such an "architect-contractor," to build complete, one certain building as per plans and specifications which will cost ——— thousand dollars. The architect begins his work. He is an interested party in the contract to construct the building. If his specifications or his details allow certain materials or substitution to be made it might be to his advantage. Then as the building proceeds the owner may question certain materials, or details in the construction, perhaps even inquire into the status of the accounts. Could the architect's answer be unbiased? What assurance has the owner that the work has been properly executed? What protection would the "architect-contractor" have, should the owner insist that additional work was necessary before the contract would be considered complete? Whose judgment would be fair, or final in the case of any misunderstanding?

It is not so much a question of ethics as the impossible positions that both the owner and the architect would find themselves in, under such conditions. True, such contracts have been made, but their results have been questionable. The architect has gained, perhaps, finacially, the owner has gained too, in experience. Architects must furnish efficient, scholarly and honest services. For the protection of the owner, the contractors working under his instructions and in fairness and honesty to himself the architect can not assume a dual role.

ARTHUR R. HUTCHASON, A. I. A.

What the Offiee Clock Heard Between Ten and Twelve on the Morning of May Fifteenth

Mrs. H. (The Client): Why is it that you charge so much for the design and supervision of my house? Your fee seems quite out of proportion to the service you are to render. It was only yesterday that a contractor offered to furnish the plans for my house for three percent of the cost. Another has offered to furnish them free of charge if I would allow him to build for me. I realize that I can't get something for nothing but three percent seems quite enough.

The Architect: It is true that there are men who will agree to do this work for you at the price you have mentioned. It would be a long tedious story for me to tell you why I think it would be unwise for you to have your work done by one of them. Here is a letter from a friend of mine who is now having a house built by a three percenter. He too failed to see how an architect could earn his fee. But let me read what he says. "The contract was let for twenty-two thousand and seven hundred dollars. I was elated because it was a figure below what I had expected I would have to pay. I soon found out however, that the plans were woefully incomplete. There were endless arguments as to the interpretation of the drawings and specifications and continual claims for extras from the various sub-contractors. To date I have paid out in extras which should have been included in the original design, practically $8,000 dollars. Old man, I am through with cut-rate architects. I could have paid you the ten percent fee you asked and still be about several thousand dollars ahead. I am beginning to realize, too, that the house I am getting is not as well designed or as well built as it should be. "Well, there is more of it there in the letter, Mrs. H., if you would like to hear it; but I won't bore you with it. I have a dozen letters similar to that in my file.

The Client: You half convince me. At any rate I will talk the matter over at home this evening and we will come to an early conclusion as to what is to be done. Good day, and thank you for your advice and help.

Fifteen minutes later the architect is called into the contractors' room to see a new hardware specialty. The salesman explains its merits and the architect is interested. The article seems efficient and lower in cost than similar equipment that has been specified. The following dialogue ensues.

The Architect: "What was that you said about a bonus?"

Salesman: "We are offering a bonus of fifteen percent to the architect or contractor who will specify or use this equipment on his work."

The Architect: "Do you mean that if I specify a hundred dollars worth of this article in my next job you will send me a check for fifteen dollars."

The Salesman: "Exactly it sir. There are dozens of architects who have accepted this bo———."

The Architect: "Stop! Don't call it a bonus, Call it a bribe. Such a proposition is just plain crooked. Such offers as this one you are making have made it possible for crooks in my profession to offer their services to a client for two or three percent when in reality they were receiving ten or twenty percent for a service which any architect of ability and integrity would be ashamed to offer." The architect looked up at the office clock. Its hands were both up. The salesman stammered something and wilted.

The architect glanced again at the clock. He shook his head as he moved to the door soliloquizing as he went. "Well old timer I'd put up my hands too to hide my face but I'm afraid one of those birds would slip in and pick my pocket. Why can't I have all my clients here to listen in when such things happen."

Editor's note: The above incidents actually happened in a Los Angeles architect's office on the morning of May 15th.

ETTORE CADORIN

TO the coterie of distinguished artists and writers who year by year seek the serenity and inspiration of the west coast may now be added the name of Ettore Cadorin, famous Venetian sculptor, who has lately arrived in Santa Barbara for an indefinite period of work and play. Mr. Cadorin is of an old family of Italian sculptors who from early times have been privileged to maintain a studio on one of the quaint waterways of Venice. His father was a well-known decorative sculptor and his brother is one of the foremost painters of Italy.

In the square of St. Mark's, Venice, stand two beautiful Grecian statues modeled by Mr. Cadorin to replace those destroyed by the fall of Campanile. On the Grand Canal is his memorial to Wagner, with the inscription written by his friend D'Annunzio. In this country a striking marble of "Death and Resurrection" stands in the Woodlawn cemetery, and his war memorial in bronze to the American soldier will soon be dedicated at Edgewater, N. J., on the banks of the Hudson.

"JOIE DE VIVRE," BRONZE, BY ETTORE CADORIN

For many years Mr. Cadorin had his studio in Paris, and here he became especially noted for his ivory bas-reliefs, of which he is the unique exponent. He carved the heads of many of the social beauties of Paris, as well as the queen and princesses of Italy.

Mr. Cadorin's first visit to America was in response to a call from Columbia University, where he became professor in the Italian department. Recalled to Italy during the war, he returned to America on a special mission for his government, lecturing throughout the country on the preservation of art treasures in Italy.

Exhibitions of the sculptor's work have been held in many of the large cities of the east, and he has continual showings in New York, where he maintains a studio on Riverside drive. During his recent visit to Los Angeles he exhibited at the Cannell-Chaffin galleries and gave several lectures.

His work is distinguished by a fine fluent line, with modeling that is plastic and supremely sensitive. His small bronzes and marble have inimitable grace, together with an elusive and delicate spirituality. In his ivory bas-reliefs he has been able to carve in the translucent cream and amber, curves and contours that have a lustrous clarity. In the features of his women, particularly, he has caught the sweet and dreaming quality of inner vision. Mr. Cadorin is everywhere the apostle of the fine, rare, intimate and expressive.

SUBDIVISIONS—(Continued from Page 12)
ness spoils the highway for through travel, and hurrying machines are demoralizing to the slow movements of local business. It is far better to establish business in local centers about which buildings can be grouped to the extent of satisfying the demands for business property, with such centers distributed throughout the residential districts from which they gain their patronage. Such planning has a far more sedative effect in the rehabilitation of values than has the shoestring policy of the unthinking subdivider.

Southern California has paused for breath in her mad dash towards urbanity. She has had forced upon her a responsibility such as no other young community has experienced in like degree. This pause is an opportunity for the regaining of equilibrium and orientation and a fresh start toward the goal of a land where living conditions are ideal, where slums do not exist and where there are homes for all. We can acquire better homes through better subdivisions.

ETTORE CADORIN, VENETIAN SCULPTOR, NOW IN CALIFORNIA

SOUTHLAND Magazine has received a letter from the Frank Meline Company, Realtors, announcing a competition for the design of a beach cottage to be located on their new subdivision at Pierpont Bay. The architectural club is to be represented on the Jury of Awards, and Mr. Carlton Winslow is acting as architectural consultant for the competition. The program is to be found in the Frank Meline Company's announcement in the newspapers. Members who intend to compete should register at once with the Frank Meline Company.

Antiques
JOHN W. CONDIT
Dealer in rare old pieces selected from private homes. Specialist in the proper restoration of heirlooms.
199 S. Fair Oaks Ave. Tel. F. O. 315
Pasadena, California

ANNOUNCING
HENRY C. FOES
INTERIOR DECORATOR
Formerly Known as
BARNES STUDIOS
Now Located in the Beautiful New Community Playhouse Building
33 So. El Molino Ave. Pasadena

L. BIXBY-SMITH
Architectural Studies
Camera Portraits
2504 W. 7th St.,
Los Angeles, Calif.
Phone FItzroy 3542

HEWSON HAND CRAFT STUDIOS
Handwoven One Piece Dresses, Coats and Scarfs, Canadian and Candlewick Bedspreads
Dutch and East Indian Brass, Beads, Fine Pendants and Objects of Art in Great Variety
F. O. 6555, 602 E. Colorado St., Pasadena
DUnkirk 4909, 2508½ W. 7th St., Los Angeles

HILLER'S STUDIO
Official Photographer for California Southland
49 East Colorado Street
Pasadena, California
Albert Hiller Phone, Fair Oaks 155

French and Italian Arts
Imported by
ELEANOR AND HOLLINGSWORTH BEACH
Italian Sports Hats — Antiques
Old Furniture — Brocades
Embroidered Linens — Old Prints
French Faience — Italian Majolica
Large Parchment Portfolios for Prints and Photographs
630 E. Colorado Street, Pasadena, California
Fair Oaks 6028

QUALITY SERVICE
THE ELITE
DRY CLEANERS AND DYERS
Plant: 797 So. Fair Oaks Ave.
Colo. 1349 Pasadena, Cal.

Decorating and Finishing Exclusive Furniture
W. G. Pesenecker
Interior and Exterior Painting
34 North Broadway
Phone Col. 5656 Pasadena, Calif.

For STEAMSHIP RESERVATIONS
TO
HONOLULU, EUROPE, ALASKA, NEW YORK via PANAMA CANAL
Round the World Cruises
Agency for Thos. Cook & Son
Raymond and Whitcomb Co.
C. J. JONES STEAMSHIP AGENCY
294 East Colorado St., Pasadena
Phone Fair Oaks 8026

LAUNDERERS DRY CLEANERS
Royal Laundry Co.
461 So Raymond Colo. 67
Pasadena, Calif.

Superior Rental Service
HOMES, APARTMENTS, BUNGALOWS
In Pasadena's Exclusive Sections
MRS. MORRIS (Rentals Exclusively)
The J. W. Wright Co.
312 E. COLORADO ST., PASADENA

Angelus Lighting Fixture Co., Inc.
Designers and Craftsmen of
Lighting Fixtures, Lamps, Fire Tools, Console-Tables and Mirrors
746 So. Figueroa St., Los Angeles
VA ndike 2296

JAMES CINI & COMPANY
of Italy
Antique and Foreign Jewelry
Italian and French Novelties
390 E. Walnut St. Pasadena, Calif.
Fair Oaks 5583

Permutit Soft Water Saves Clothes
TROY LAUNDRY
In Business for Twenty Years
Pasadena, Cal. Phone C. 146
Alhambra 243-J

THE most picturesque place in California to spend the summer is Santa Barbara. Here it is always pleasantly cool and delightful, with vistas of the mountains and the sea. Samarkand with an atmosphere peculiarly its own, lends itself to particular guests. Outdoor sports of all kinds are nearby—La Cumbre Country Club, with one of the best golf courses in the country, is adjacent to the hotel. Samarkand is also noted for its unrivaled cuisine and perfect service. Our offerings and rates will be sent you on application.

SAMARKAND

Management
A. K. BENNETT

"One of the Linnard Hotels"

BIRDS IN GARDENS — Continued from Page 10

When the birds get back from the north this fall to Vermont Canyon in Griffith Park they will have a great surprise. If their bird instinct for locality were not unerring they would be sure they had not arrived at home. Not being able to read and possibly not knowing what "sanctuary" means or even that they are "birds" the inscription on the boulder would not enlighten them. Where it was all dry they will find a stream of water singing around the rocks, dripping over minature falls, again so placid as to mirror the ferns along its banks, making pool after pool for bathing sunlit or shaded to the bird's taste. They will see nature's preparations for spreading the banquet table with fruit—and berries especially—flowers and seeds. All will not be ready to serve this fall but the shrubs and plants will make a wonderful growth even in one summer. The thing that will seem too good to be true is the tight wire fence keeping out cats and other animals even humans will be allowed to enter only on occasions. This was brought about by one who came to live near this spot many years ago and whose homesick eyes looked out upon these burned and barren hills. She said then if it were ever in her power she would give the little plants in this canyon a drink.

Through the influence of Mrs. George H. Snyder, president of the California Audubon Society and Van M. Griffith whose father gave this wealth of acres for a park, the park commissoners were led to see that it was a kindly, beautiful and beneficial thing to set apart this canyon for the birds. The unveiling of the boulder brought together some twenty organizations of nature lovers, and beside our own nature writers and lecturers, Mr. Arthur Newton Pack of Washington, D. C., associate editor of Nature Magazine and William D. Finley of Portland, whose pictures of wild life are not surpassed if equaled. The antics of chipmunks and fawn, the cubs pressing their friend for more food, the turtles that might have been laying eggs for Agassiz, the pet porcupine caressing the dog who endured but did not return the affection—these intimate close-ups are never to be forgotten. In his lectures we are so close to bird colonies that we are fanned by their wings, and we go home to pack up the old kit bag and go into the wilds for the summer. Raising the Audubon flag we read this inscription, "Bird Sanctuary, April 13, 1925." This is a good example for other cities to follow and private gardens could be miniature sanctuaries with walls or close-mesh wire fences with mulberry trees and berry bearing shrubs, tubular flowers for the hummers and bird baths. Mr. Benjamin's article on his feeding table must have made every one feel that breakfast is not appetizing without one.

Mercersburgh Academy has erected an unusual memorial to Calvin Coolidge, Jr. It is a sunshine corner shut off from the campus by flowers and shrubbery containing a series of bird baths, a sun dial and seats where the boys may gather to enjoy the birds. There is another beautiful testimony of man's friendship for the birds in Rock Creek Park, Washington, D. C. During the sad days of the war an Ambassador and his wife went frequently to Piney Branch in the park where they were cheered and comforted by the birds' songs. On returning to France they sent a bird bath of stone designed by M. Cret having this inscription, "To the Birds of Piney Branch from Their Friends, Elsie and Jules Jusserand."

PAINTINGS OF THE WEST
STENDAHL GALLERIES
OF THE PACIFIC COAST
The Ambassador Hotel—Los Angeles Hotel del Coronado—San Diego

The Assembly Tea Room
The In and Out-of-Town House of Los Angeles serves
LUNCHEON, TEA AND DINNER
INCIDENTALLY
The Very Choicest Food
Special Sunday Dinner 5 to 8
644 South Flower St., Los Angeles
Phone VAndike 7177

Cumnock School Los Angeles
Fall Term Opens September 29
Summer Session—June 22nd to July 31st
An old California day and resident school with beautiful new buildings. 31st year. Reservations now being accepted.
School of Expression (College grade), specializing in Voice; Diction; Literary Interpretation; Story-telling; Public Speaking; Dramatics.
Academy—an accredited Junior and Senior High School in class A.
Write for Catalog.
Helen A. Brooks, A. M., Director, 5353 West Third St.

MARTHA

WATSON-KERBY

Exclusive Fashions for Women

GOWNS WRAPS SPORTS CLOTHING

2224 WEST SEVENTH STREET

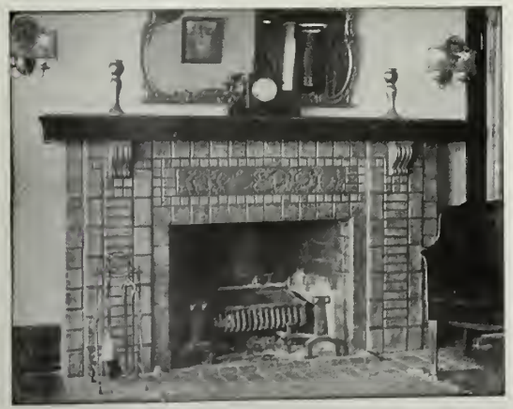
LOS ANGELES

WESTLAKE SQUARE PHONE FITZROY 0823

Clarence P. Day Corporation

Engineers—Contractors

35 N. RAYMOND AVE. PHONE COLO. 1006



PASADENA, CALIFORNIA

Choose your own architect from the representative styles shown in "California Homes" by California Architects. Price $1.00.

Address: ELLEN LEECH,

544 So. El Molino Avenue Pasadena, Calif.

THE BATCHELDER TILES

We produce Tile for Fireplaces, Fountains, Pavements, Garden Pots---anything that is appropriately made from clay. :: :: :: :: ::

LOS ANGELES, CALIFORNIA

Announcement

Southern California Edison Company

Offers to its consumers and the people of California the unsold portion of a new issue of 100,000 shares of Series B 6% Preferred Stock.

The constant strength of Edison stock over a long series of years has proved to the Investing Public its exceptional worth as an attractive investment of a conservative nature.

The development of Southern and Central California has only begun. Edison Company will grow with the community, as electric power is the basic industry upon which all other industries depend.

Over 71,000 Stockholders Have Invested for Safety

EDISON 6% PREFERRED STOCK

Authorized by the Railroad Commission of California

PRICE: $94.00 per share, cash
$95.00 at $5 per share per month.

Ask at any Edison Office

Southern California Edison Company

306 WEST THIRD STREET

LOS ANGELES

MAIN 7120

BULLETIN OF THE ARTS AND CRAFTS

By MARION HUGUS CLARK

LAST month we announced a Pilgrimage Tour of Saint John's Church under the guidance of its rector, Doctor George Davidson. To those who were unable to attend that meeting, we are able to say that Doctor Davidson will conduct another group through Saint John's on the second of July.

Saint John's Church is at West Adams Street, Los Angeles, and the architects were Davis and Davis. Miss Ann Chalmers, who made a special study of church architecture while in Europe, has reported this trip.

NOT far from busy streets and close to one of the best residential districts in Los Angeles, there has arisen, blossomed out, under the director of it rector, a beautiful church—and it has been called Saint John, named for and dedicated to the Holy Apostle, Saint John, the Divine.

In architecture, it is Italian-Romanesque of the basilica type, an exact reproduction of a sixth century church in Toscanella, thirty miles out of Rome. The construction of this old-world church is interesting. There was used one hundred and fifty tone of steel and the walls, which are two and one-half feet thick of solid concrete, rest upon a foundation of from sixteen to eighteen feet thick.

The facade is made of California stone carved and chiseled by Italian workers under the direction of Cartino Scarpitti. Over the central door is the Angel of Strength and the invitation: "Whosoever will, let him come." Above in either corner are the Angels of Prayer and below are emblems significant of the apostles, Andrew, Peter, James and John.

Directly opposite the central door, taking the place of a reredos which forms a part of the wall above and back of the altar is a very lovely tri-tich. Pendant from the ceiling in front of the altar are the Seven Lamps of the Holy Spirit. These lamps are lighted day and night and signify the presence of God in the church and the sevenfold gifts of the Holy Ghost. The Baptistry of marble mosaic is of Byzantine feeling. The Liberty Service Chapel, a tribute to the soldiers of the world war, was an inspiration of Doctor Davidson's. In time it is his plan to have the seals of the thirteen original states and the portraits of the four war presidents, Washington, Lincoln, McKinley and Wilson, placed in the walls in mosaic.

One of the most striking features of the building is the ceiling, an exact reproduction of an eleventh century church in the town of San Miniato, three miles out of Florence. The four colors used in design are of divine significance. White, the emblem of Christ. Blue, symbolic of the penitential season. Red, typifying the martyr and green significant of the Trinity. The beams carved from solid oak were the work of Swenki, a pupil of Anton Lang of the Ober Ammergau.

An interesting addition to the church is an outside pulpit to be used for street preaching. Magdalen Chapel of Oxford has such a pulpit. Grace Church in New York is the only other American church to have one.

ANN CHALMERS.

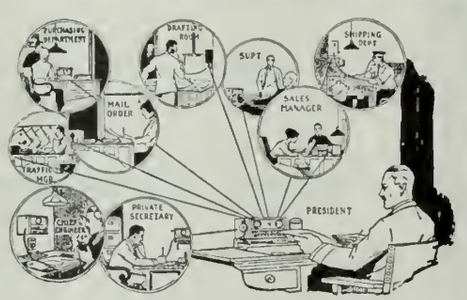
FOLLOWING the visit to Saint John's Church, which was at four on the afternoon of April the thirtieth, came the banquet at seven. Miss Delano had provided as entertainment, a small dancer, Yvonne Pelletier. Mr. Martin Justice, the well-known illustrator and formerly art editor of the Saturday Evening Post, talked to us about the New York Art Centre.

It is an instinct with us all to own a home. If the instinct for belonging is strong, we want to have a home for our favorite club, society or pastime. So it is with various art associations. The Arts and Crafts Society is no exception. Mr. Justice and others who followed him thought that several amicable associations might join hands and erect a building with studios to rent.

On May the fifth, I opened the door of my husband's roadster and stepped out on the Main Street of Carmel by the Sea.

One hears about Monterey pines and one is prepared to go into raptures over them. But I saw Carmel first and my interest in what they have achieved in the way of an Art Centre left me an admirer of the pine but rapturless. I do not know who owns the buildings. That does not seem to matter so long as there is a spirit of co-operation—a unity of endeavor—doing the thing because you like doing it.

First there is the Theatre of the Golden Bough. I hope that we can have a theatre in our Art Centre. The Community Playhouse is inspirational. We need it. In Miss Ellen Leech's fine article last month I felt that Pasadena's Community Playhouse had need of us too. We are remembering Norman Edward's present employment by The Eastman Kodak Company in the Rochester Theatre.



The shop called The Seven Arts Book Shop is next to the passage leading back to the theatre entrance. You stand outside of a bay-window and buy your tickets from a young woman standing in Seven Arts. It reminds me of the pulpit outside of Saint John's Church. Seven Arts has magazines, books and door-knockers, and there was a nice young man planning another quaint shop, so I suppose Architecture is one of the seven arts. I hope so, for I want Architecture in our Art Centre.

Of course there was the Weaver's Shop with all the nice woven things, such as our Mr. Hewson makes.

Cabbages and Kings has everything Tlily Polak has not and Tilly Polak, God bless her, has everything but flowers and you find them in the Blooming Basement. Mrs. Harry Leon Wilson plies her blooming trade with flowers that she raises in her own garden on Carmel Highlands. She also has lovely old tiles and modern block prints.

The whole group of theatre and shops could be built upon a lot 200x100 feet. The theatre occupies the shops back yard with a jolly little entrance of its own and the shops all present a smiling face to the street.

THE regular yearly election of officers will take place on June the tenth at the Shop, 2508 West Seventh Street, Los Angeles.

The Dictograph System does not supplant the ordinary telephone but relegates it to its proper function of handling incoming and outgoing calls. It improves the regular telephone service. Relieves the intercommunication burden from the switchboard (often 75 per cent or more). Provides perfect service twenty-four hours a day—every day. Makes all connections automatically. Increases the efficiency of the entire organization. Converts hours of wasted time into productive effort. Promotes individual and collective team work. Eliminates lost motion, Minimizes routine. And cuts down expenses.

LEROY C. BISHOP, 1241 Pacific Mutual Building, Los Angeles
BRoadway 4573 TUcker 9906

Designed and Built by Heating Experts

BETTER HOMES
ARE HEATED WITH
OHRMUND BROTHERS
Unit System of Heating
ELECTRICALLY CONTROLLED

Thousands in Use in Southern California. Let us show you why Ohrmund Brothers Units are superior.

HEATING AND SHEET METAL CONTRACTORS

PASADENA GAS APPLIANCE CO., INC.
901 E. Colorado Street
Pasadena Fair Oaks 9393

NO. 121—TALMAGE VASE

Beautiful Garden Pieces
in
Sculptured Terra Cotta

Italian Terra Cotta Co.
W. H. Robison
1149 MISSION ROAD
Opposite County Hospital
Phone Lincoln 1057 Los Angeles

THOMAS FRANKLIN POWER
ARCHITECT
AND
ARCHITECTURAL ENGINEER

DUNKIRK 1442
2615 W. SEVENTH ST.
LOS ANGELES

WE offer for investment of Personal or Trust Funds sound Securities returning highest rates consistent with safety.

WILLIAM R. STAATS COMPANY
Established 1887
Government, Municipal and Corporation Bonds

311 East Colorado St.
PASADENA, CALIF.
Los Angeles San Diego San Francisco

For Information Regarding

PASADENA,

Her climate and living advantages. Write to the Chamber of Commerce

100 So. Raymond Avenue, Pasadena, California

The

Serendipity Antique Shop

26 & 30 SOUTH LOS ROBLES AVENUE

PASADENA

BRADFORD PERIN, Proprietor

Antiques, Objets d'Art, Decorations

TELEPHONE: FAIR OAKS 7111

TREASURES FROM EUROPE

ARRIVING IN BARKER BROS.' STUDIO OF INTERIOR DECORATION

FINE old floor chests from Florence, some interesting Venetian chairs, Italian chests and commodes, as well as much that is unusual in brocades, tapestries, wrought iron, pottery and glass — these make up the collection of antiques and reproductions selected during months of searching the art centers of France and Italy by Barker Bros.' representative from the Studio. Because of this personal selection and direct importation, a most extraordinary opportunity presents itself to secure rare pieces at prices no higher than one is often asked to pay for the most ordinary.

BARKER BROS.

COMPLETE FURNISHERS OF SUCCESSFUL HOMES
BROADWAY BETWEEN SEVENTH AND EIGHTH

Lake
Arrowhead
A lodge in Arrowhead Woods combines the comfort of home with the delights of California's Finest Playground.
Sales Representatives for
THE FRANK MELINE CO.
Arrowhead Woods
Lodge Sites

CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND

The Most Beautiful Part of Santa Barbara, California, Pasco de la Guerra. From a Painting by Lilia Tuckerman

No. 67 JULY, 1925 25 Cents

CHARLES W. CLARK HOUSE, Pebble Beach BAKEWELL & BROWN, Architects

LATIN ROOF TILE

A Permanent Weather-proof and Fire-proof Crown for Buildings

GLADDING, McBEAN & CO.

LOS ANGELES OFFICE: LOS FELIZ BOULEVARD AND S. P. TRACKS
TROPICO PLANT: GLENDALE, LOS ANGELES COUNTY

Chinese tapestries, embroideries and brocades provide an incomparable decorative note to any interior, the while they serve as a fascinating introduction to the mythology, folklore and symbolism of the mystic East. ¶ Our collections are unsurpassed in their variety and rarity.

No Catalog
Correspondence Invited

Gump's
S. & G. Gump Co. 246-268 Post St. San Francisco California

Clarence P. Day Corporation

Engineers—Contractors

35 N. RAYMOND AVE. PHONE COLO. 1006
PASADENA, CALIFORNIA

Choose your own architect from the representative styles shown in "California Homes" by California Architects. Price $1.00.
Address: ELLEN LEECH,
544 So. El Molino Avenue Pasadena, Calif.

NO. 121—TALMAGE VASE

Beautiful Garden Pieces
in
Sculptured Terra Cotta

Italian Terra Cotta Co.
W. H. Robison
1149 MISSION ROAD
Opposite County Hospital
Phone Lincoln 1057 Los Angeles

SOUTHLAND CALENDAR

Announcements of exhibitions, fetes, concerts, club entertainments, etc., for the calendar pages are free of charge and should be received in the office of CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND, Pasadena, at least two weeks previous to date of issue, the 10th. No correction can be guaranteed if they are received later than that date. California Southland is published monthly at Pasadena, California. One dollar and twenty-five cents for six issues, two fifty per year. Addresses will be changed as many times as desired if notice is given before the first of the month for which the change is made.

Entered as second class matter, July 28, 1919, at the Post office at Pasadena, California, under act of March 3, 1879.

Clubs

VALLEY HUNT CLUB, PASADENA:
The formal season at the Valley Hunt Club closed with May, after which time no programs are arranged. The tennis court and swimming pool offer the outdoor attractions during the summer, and individual parties, both afternoon and evening, are arranged as desired.

ANNANDALE GOLF CLUB, PASADENA:
The afternoon bridge, Mah Jongg and tea parties have been discontinued for the season, but tea will be served as requested and tables for cards are always available.
Every Friday is Ladies' Day.
The usual Wednesday and Saturday sweepstakes each month through the summer.

FLINTRIDGE COUNTRY CLUB:
Tuesday is Ladies' Day and a special luncheon is served. In the afternoons informal bridge parties may be arranged, followed by tea.

LOS ANGELES COUNTRY CLUB:
Ladies' Days, second Monday of each month.
Music during dinner, followed by dancing, every Saturday evening during the month.

An Italian Fireplace in one of our display rooms.

The Cheesewright Studios, Inc.

Decorators and Furnishers

Luncheon served from 11:30 to 2 .p m. on Saturdays.
Sunday night concerts during month.
Tea served as requested and tables for cards always available.

WILSHIRE COUNTRY CLUB:
Ladies' Days, third Monday of each month.
Dancing every second and fourth Saturday during the month.
A musical is arranged for each Sunday night in the month.

MIDWICK COUNTRY CLUB:
Ladies' Days, fourth Monday in each month.
Tea and informal bridge every afternoon.
Polo, Wednesday and Saturday of each week.
Dancing every Saturday night.
Buffet luncheon served every Sunday.
Match polo games every Sunday, preceded by luncheon parties, followed by teas, during season.

LOS ANGELES ATHLETIC CLUB:
Dinner dances, Tuesday and Friday nights of every week, Tuesday night informal; Friday night semi-formal. Plunge open to the ladies Tuesday and Friday of every week.

SAN GABRIEL COUNTRY CLUB:
A dinner dance is arranged for the third Thursday of each month.
On Friday of each week a special luncheon is served, with bridge in the afternoons.
Ladies play every day starting after ten a. m., and not before two p. m.
Southern California Junior Golf Tournament, July 8. Eighteen holes, medal play. Three classes. Tournament is open to sons of members of clubs affiliated with the Southern California Golf Association, ages 12 to 18 years. Trophy donated by Mr. William M. Orr.

MONTECITO COUNTRY CLUB:
Provides an 18 hole golf course, two concrete and two dirt courts for tennis, bowls and croquet.
Tea is served and informal bridge parties arranged as desired.
A buffet supper is served every Sunday night.
Tennis Tournament opened June 11, the finals were played the 14th. Men's Singles was won by Wm. M. Johnston, who defeated C. J. Griffin. Ladies' Singles by Charlotte Hosmer who defeated May Sutton Bundy. Men's Doubles by Johnston and Griffin, who defeated Ferrindini and Godshall. Ladies' Doubles was won by Mrs. Bundy and Miss Williamson who de-

UP THE VALLEY AND DOWN THE COAST

YOSEMITE

And all the fascinating features of the High Sierras await you in California

The

Californian

HOTEL

FRESNO, CALIFORNIA

is the logical stopping place in the Valley from which the high Sierras rise

First Class, Fireproof
Correctly Appointed

H. WINGATE LAKE, Manager

FRESNO

Your happiest

VACATION

Assure it this summer.

Go somewhere. And get the most out of your travel funds.

Let Southern Pacific Lines help you fix your itinerary. Ask our agents — travel experts eager and competent to aid in all travel matters.

Back East reduced round-trip fares. Final sale date, Sept. 15th. Return limit, Oct. 31st.

No matter where, Southern Pacific Lines and connections can take you. These suggestions:

Del Monte — Lake Tahoe
Santa Cruz — Yosemite
San Francisco — Sierra Lakes
Crater Lake — Puget Sound

SUMMER EXCURSION FARES

Substantial reductions in roundtrip fares.
In effect through the summer season

Ask agent

Southern Pacific Lines

feated Miss Hosmer and Miss Swarts. This is the fourth year of the Tournament, heretofore it has been an open affair but owing to the heavy entry of last year it was necessary to make it entirely invitational.

LA CUMBRE GOLF AND COUNTRY CLUB, SANTA BARBARA:
Offers a course of eighteen holes, rivaling any in hazard and beauty. A recent purchase of additional acreage will provide an extended and even more interesting course.
Luncheon is served every day, and tea may be arranged as desired.

REDLANDS COUNTRY CLUB:
Golf tournament for men is held every Saturday. Monday the course is reserved for the women and a special luncheon served. Those who do not play golf or who have had a round in the morning, devote the afternoon to bridge or mah jongg. Every Saturday afternoon tea is served.

PALOS VERDES GOLF CLUB:
Offers an eighteen hole, all grass, seaside course, delightful for summer play.
Tea and informal bridge every afternoon.
Lunch and dinner served every day.

NEWPORT HARBOR YACHT CLUB:
June 26—Dance. Open house for all yacht clubs.
July 4 and 5—Bang and go back race, second heat. Free for all. Outboard motor race, upper lake course. One design sloop race, Frank Smith trophy, first heat. Small sailing boat class races. Star class race, ocean course, second heat. Cruiser race, ocean course, second heat. One design prize runabout class race, ocean course, second heat. Schooner, ketch and yawl race, Sewanaka rule of handicapping, second heat. Sloop handicap race, ocean course, second heat. Dance.
July 11 One design runabout class race, third heat. Fleet cruise aboard club yachts. Star class race, bay course, second heat.
July 12 Marion class race, final heat (junior.) Star class race (junior.)
July 18 Outboard motor race, Bay Island course, five miles. Star class race, ocean course, third heat. Bang and go back race, third heat. Cruiser race, ocean course, third heat. Schooner ketch and yawl handicap race. Sloop handicap race, ocean course, second heat.
July 19 Snow birds (junior,) final heat, 10:30 a. m. Star class (junior,) final heat, 10:30 a. m.
July 24 One design power runabout class sprint race, one mile. Star class race, bay course, third heat. Canoe races for boys and girls, 18 years or under (junior.) Rowboat races for boys, girls. Model yacht boat races, free for all (junior.)

CALIFORNIA YACHT CLUB:
Saturday, July 4 Pacific Coast Yachting Association regatta at Victoria.
Sunday, July 5—Cruise to Avalon.
Saturday, July 18 Motor boat races.
Sunday, July 19 Motor boat races.
Saturday, July 25—Cruising race for all yachts to Catalina Isthmus.
Sunday, July 26 Return race.

Art

LOS ANGELES Museum of History, Science and Art, Exposition Park: Seventh Exhibition of Work by Students of Otic Art Institute opened June 28 and will continue through July 15.

The officers of the Los Angeles Museum feel assured of the success of the Pan-American exhibition which will open on November 3, next, and will be shown until January 1, 1926. On the closing date the Latin-American section will begin a tour of the important museums of the United States, and the North American section will be sent to the capitals of Latin-America.

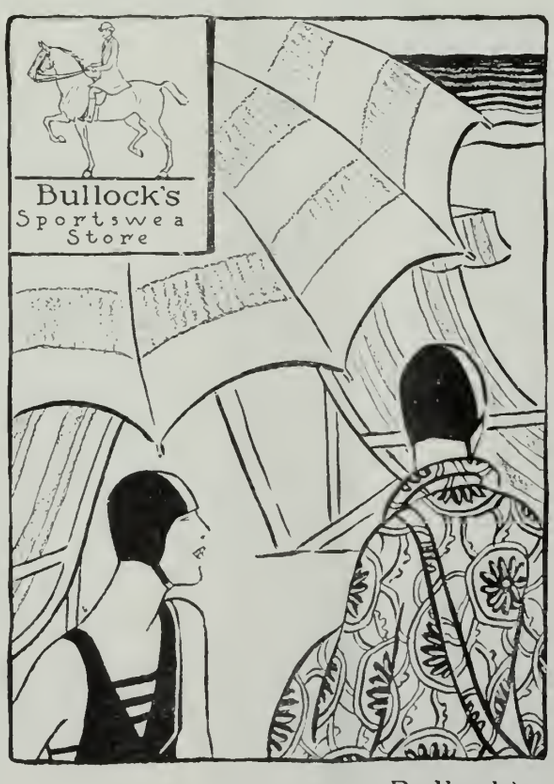
SOUTHWEST MUSEUM, Marmion Way and Avenue 46, Los Angeles: During July and August a very important collection of old Masters will be shown. Extension lectures are given every Sunday afternoon in the Assembly Hall of the Museum at 3:00 o'clock. The lectures are open to the public without charge.

PAINTERS of the West announce the award of the three medals, gold, silver and bronze, offered for the best three paintings in their third annual exhibition, recently closed in the Biltmore Salon: The gold medal went to "Crossing the Bar," by Armin Hansen; the silver medal to "Wandering Shadows," by Hanson Puthuff, and the bronze to "Young Girl," by Edouard A. Vysekal. Honorable mention was given to "The Loom of the Desert," by Carl Oscar Borg, and "Fog Veiled Coast," by Jack Wilkinson Smith.

STENDAHL GALLERIES announce an exhibition of the work of Beltran-Masses in the Fiesta Ballroom of the Ambassador Hotel to continue to July 9. An admission fee is asked as the fund thus collected will be donated by Earl Stendahl to the Los Angeles Museum purchase fund of $15,000 for the Pan-American Exhibition.

Made in London by William Grundy in 1794

Where the Treasures of a Collector May Be Purchased as Gifts



A. Schmidt & Son

For Fifty-six Years Importers of Antique and Modern Silver, Sheffield Plate, Fine China and Glass.

2320 W. Seventh St., Los Angeles

391 E. Colorado St., Pasadena

Boston New York Washington

"One o'Clock Saturdays"

Bullock's
Broadway—Hill and Seventh
Los Angeles

BILTMORE SALON will not be open in the evenings during July and August except by appointment. The display galleries during those months will open at 10:00 A. M. and close at 6:00 P. M.

CHARLES W. BARTLETT will hold his delayed exhibition of block prints from the Orient at Barker Bros.'s Art Gallery to July 11.

CANNELL and Chaffin announce that beginning July 1 the large gallery will be hung with water colors by local and foreign artists. The two foreigners represented will be James Gilmour, a Scotch painter, and E. S. Holding, an English artist. In addition the work of the well-known American water colorists, Frank Hopkinson Smith and George Elmer Brown, together with two local artists, Loren Barton and Dana Bartlett, will complete an interesting exhibition. In the smaller gallery will hang foreign masters, including primitives and examples of the 16th Cenutry German School, the 17th Century Spanish School, a fine example by De Hoog, the famous Dutch artist, and examples by Boucher.

ARTHUR HILL GILBERT and Haldane Douglas held a joint exhibition at the Biltmore Salon during the last half of June.

THE PASADENA ART INSTITUTE held several exhibitions in the house in Carmelita Gardens during June: One show was made up of canvases by Pasadena painters and included John Frost, Orrin White, Benjamin Brown, Franz Bischoff, Alson Clarke, Guy Rose, Jean Manheim, F. Carl Smith, Louis Hovey Sharp, Frederick Zimmerman, MacDuffie Thurston, Ada Belle Champlin, Frances Clark, Wallace De Wolfe and Herbert V. B. Acker. In other rooms fifty pictures were shown by the Santa Cruz Art League, and in still other sections were a group of desert pictures by F. Grayson Sayre, Scotch scenes in water color by Thomas H. McKay, California landscapes in tempera by Dorothy Visju Anderson. In the upper hall were hung pictures by Albert Insley, Colin Campbell Cooper, Dorothy Ochtman and Guy Wiggins.

KATHERINE W. LEIGHTON with her husband and son left June 28 for Lake McDonald, where they have taken a cottage for the summer. Mrs. Leighton expects to paint throughout July and August and will return to Los Angeles in September in order to prepare for the Pan-American show to which she has been asked to contribute. The lake section is of peculiar interest to Mrs. Leighton as it gives her the other side of the country, practically opposite from where she painted the Grinnell Glacier.

F TENNEY JOHNSON is again in California and has opened his Alhambra studio, preparatory to doing interesting California pictures.

AARON KILPATRICK and Hansen Puthuff have gone down into Mexico—the city and vicinity—on a sketching trip of several months' duration.

FRANK GERITZ held an exhibition in the Hollywood Public Library during June, showing his latest etchings and block prints as well as examples of his earlier work.

JACK WILKINSON SMITH, Clyde Forsythe and F. Tenney Johnson are planning a sketching trip together into the High Sierras.

PAUL LAURITZ has gone to his home in Norway on a sketching tour of six months, the results of which will form an interesting exhibition for Los Angeles on his return.

EDGAR PAYNE is at Laguna and will probably spend the summer sketching in that neighborhood.

ROGER NOBLE BURNHAM, sculptor, exhibited at the Friday Morning Club during the last half of June. His relief portrait of John Muir was recently placed at the foot of Yosemite Falls, in Yosemite National Park, by the California Society of Social Work. The installation ceremony was conducted by Dr. Irving Lipstich of San Francisco, and the principal address was made by Dr. William F. Bade of Berkeley, who collected and edited "The Life and Letters of John Muir."

LELAND CURTIS expects to make several sketching trips into the High Sierras during the summer, bringing back interesting sketches each time.

LOUIS HOVEY SHARP visited Carmel recently in search of new material.

NELL BROOKER MAYHEW has decided to make her future home in Oakland and leaves with her family about the middle of July.

ADOLPH WEIL GALLERIES, 2504 West Seventh Street, Los Angeles are showing an interesting collection of European paintings, also bronzes.

ARTHUR MILLIER exhibited a number of his recent prints at the Los Angeles Library during June.

EARL STENDAHL will show during the last half of July, and probably through August, a number of new pictures at his Ambassador gallery. These include the works of many French and American painters, among them George Innes, Thomas Moran, Theodore Robinson, (1852-1896), J.

H. Twatchman, J. Francis Murphy, and J. Alden Weir. Among the Frenchmen he has two famous artists represented, Millet and Breton, Millet having a painting, "Woodchopper," and Breton a typical landscape with figures, called "The Poppies."

DAVID ANTHONY TAUSZKY has recently finished a portrait in oil of Mr. Charles Bedell Hervey of Pasadena. Mr. Hervey is the proprietor of Hotel Green of Pasadena and the portrait will be hung in the rooms of the California Hotel Men's Association in Los Angeles, of which Mr. Hervey is first vice-president.

Music

HOLLYWOOD BOWL concerts will open July 7. The first concert will be under the direction of Fritz Reiner, Conductor of the Cincinnati Symphony Orchestra, the second under Sir Henry Wood, and the two following under Reiner. It is announced that Rudolf Ganz and Ernst Bloch will conduct later in the season. This is the fourth season of this remarkable series of symphony concerts and will probably in both direction and solo work, and certainly in attendance surpass the concerts of other years.

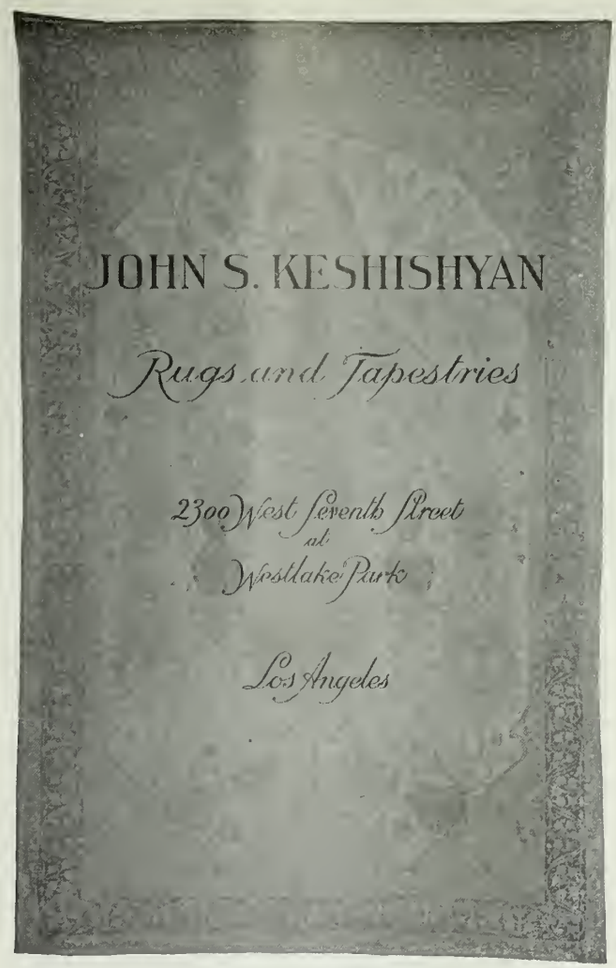
UNIVERSITY OF CALIFORNIA, Berkeley, through the committee on Music and Drama, announced its summer concerts of half hour programs to begin June 14 in the Creek Theater. The Oakland Orpheus Club gave the first program, conducted by Edwin Dunbar Crandall, with Marion Brower, soloist.

CALIFORNIA STATE MUSIC TEACHER'S ASSOCIATION will hold the annual convention, July 6-9. The convention will be addressed by Professor Ballentine of Harvard University who is one of the lecturers of the summer session at the University of California.

HOLLYWOOD COMMUNITY ORCHESTRA, Jay Plowe, director, appeared in the final concert of the season June 25, in the auditorium of the Hollywood Woman's Club, and was given in co-operation with the Hollywood Community Chorus. Calmon Luboviski, violinist, was the soloist of the evening, and the orchestra was augmented by members of the Philharmonic Orchestra.

PASADENA RECIONAL BOARD of the Los Angeles Philharmonic Orchestra has announced the retention of the Raymond Theater as the location of the Pasadena Series of Six Monday Evening Symphony Concerts to be given by the Philharmonic Orchestra during the forthcoming season.

ADOLPH TANDLER'S LITTLE SYMPHONY CONCERTS were given during June on Sunday afternoons at the Pasadena Community Playhouse, 39 South El Molino Avenue.



L. E. BEHYMER announces a new plan for the Artists' Series next season, instead of being obliged to selected either the Tuesday or Thursday evening course it will be possible to make selections from each. The two courses include a total of twenty-one events, twelve in the Tuesday and nine in the Thursday series, and fourteen events may be chosen from these to make up a selective series.

CARTER WEAVER—M. Barbara Dacier offered the first of a series of Artist Ensemble Concerts the evening of June 24 at the Ebell Club, presenting William A. Bone, Author-Lecturer; Margaret Jarman, Mezzo Soprano; Ben Whitman, Violinist; Ralph Reily, Tenor; William David Coburn, Poet; Anderson Crant, Scotch Artist; Tilda Rohr, Contralto and Swiss Yodeler, and Frank A. Hopkinson, Canadian Boy Tenor.

LOS ANGELES GRAND OPERA ASSOCIATION has announced the stars to appear during this, the second, season and also the operas to be produced this Fall at the Philharmonic Auditorium. Hon. Benjamin F. Bledsoe is President of the Association, Merle Armitage, general manager, and Richard Hageman is conductor and general musical director. William Tyroler, assistant conductor, is training the chorus of seventy voices. The artists engaged include Rosa Raisa, Alice Centle, Marie Kurenko, Mme. Elizabeth Rothwell, Charles Hackett, Giocomo Rimini, Edward Johnson, Vincenete Ballester, and others. Ernest Belcher Ballet has been engaged for all performances. The operas to be presented are Lakme, Aida, Carmen, Rigoletto, Cavalleria Rusticana and La Navarraise (double bill).

THE PATTERSON OPERA was an outstanding feature of the National Federation Music Clubs' Biennial in Portland, Ore., last month. "The Echo" is a one act opera by Frank Patterson, of the editorial staff of the New York Courier, and complies with the request for an opera in English. Walter Henry Rothwell, conductor of the Philharmonic Orchestra of Los Angeles, directed and the principals included Marie Rappold, Marjorie Dodge, Forrest Lamont and Lawrence Tibbitt.

FRIEDA HEMPEL will be managed next season by George Engles, and she anticipates a repetition of her success in her "Jenny Lind" concerts throughout her tour.

B B Bell & Company

Lighting Fixtures

Fireplace Fittings

Lamps

Console-tables and Mirrors

Hope's Casements

2302 West Seventh Street

at

Westlake Park

Los Angeles

EMILIO DE GOGORZA intends to devote more time to recitals in this country during the coming season.

PADEREWSKI will appear in seventy-five cities in the United States and Canada during his 1925-26 tour. He will play in New York in December and will appear as soloist with the New York Symphony Orchestra.

LUISA TETRAZZINI will come here next season for a tour to include the United States, Canada and Mexico under the management of W. L. Healy of San Francisco.

LAWRENCE TIBBITT, the young Los Angeles baritone who won signal honors with the Metropolitan Opera Company last winter, plans, with his wife and twin sons, to spend the summer in Los Angeles. Mr. Tibbitt is booked for five leading roles at the Metropolitan next season, including the baritone lead in the Ravel opera, one of the first offerings of the season.

THE WOMAN'S CHORAL CLUB, of Pasadena, gave its second concert of the season, June 2, at the Shakespeare Clubhouse, with William Tyroler directing. Assisting on the program was the Orpheus Four. Club soloists were Mrs. Wendell G. Robinson, soprano; Hortense Hough, contralto, and Mrs. Vesta E. Castleman, soprano. Lois Wall was the club's accompanist. The work of the chorus evidenced the fine training it has received under the baton of Mr. Tyroler.

THE OJAI VALLEY MUSIC FESTIVAL announces for 1926 a competition inaugurated by Mrs. F. S. Coolidge and Frank J. Frost to stimulate the composition of chamber music. It offers a prize of One Thousand Dollars to the composer of the best string quartet for two violins, viola and violincello submitted to a jury. The prize winning composition will have its initial performance at the Ojai Valley Festival of Chamber Music to be held in April, 1926. The contest will be open until March 1, 1926.

THE Juillard Musical Foundation, New York City, has announced that it will award 100 fellowships, each worth $1000, to American music students for study in singing, piano, violin, violoncello and composition. The awards will be made after competitive examination. The requirements are that the contestants should be between the ages of 16 and 30 years, citizens of the United States, and ahle to present credits or credentials in general education equivalent to four years of high school.

SIMON GUGGENHEIM, former United State Senator from Colorado, has announced that he and his wife will make a preliminary gift of $3,000,000 for fellowships to be used by American students for advanced foreign study of many subjects, including music. The fund will be known as the "John Simon Guggenheim Memorial Foundation" and will be a memorial to their son, who died on April 26, 1922, while he was preparing to enter Harvard University.

THE Tournament of Roses Association are sponsoring a spectacular musical is sponsoring a spectacular musical production to be presented at the Rose Bowl, July 27. The first rehearsal was held, June 26, in the Green Hotel, Pasadena. Both rehearsals and performances will be personally conducted by the composer, Robert P. Skilling of New York.

Announcements

PASADENA COMMUNITY PLAYHOUSE: "Peer Gynt," by Henrick Ibsen, July 2 to 11. Two plays a month will be produced throughout the year. Each play will begin on a Thursday and end on the second Saturday eleven performances. Following "Peer Gynt" the plays will be "Tweedles," "The Green Goddess," "You Never Can Tell," "Treasure Island," "The Show Shop," and "Pharaoh's Daughter."

THE PILGRIMAGE PLAY, Life of the Christ, opens Monday, July 6.

THE MISSION PAGEANT at San Juan Capistrano will be given as a special performance on July 4, also on Sunday, July 5, and repeated each Sunday thereafter throughout the summer, opening at 3:00 o'clock p. m. The cast includes many well-known players, among them being Dorise Schukow, Karyl Marker, Earl Schenck, and the dancer, Martha Belfort.

PASADENA DRAMA LEAGUE held the annual meeting early in June, at which Mrs. Charles P. McCullough was elected president to succeed Miss Eleanor Bissell, who will be abroad for more than a year. The officers and board of directors elected to carry on the work of the Drama League for the ensuing year are: Mrs. Charles P. McCullough, president; Mrs. A. B. McCay first vice-president; Mrs. William Munro, second vice-president; Claude Griffith, third vice-president; Miss Louise Crawford, recording secretary; Miss Elizabeth Connor, corresponding secretary; Karl Kieling, treasurer; directors, Miss Eleanor Bissell, Mrs. Frank H. Sellers, Mrs. F. B. Wetherby, Mrs. Henry Godfrey, Mrs. George R. MacMinn, Mrs. Robert A. Millikan, Mrs. George E. Hale, Mrs. J. S. Torrance, Mrs. W. S. Wright, Gilmor Brown, Miss Margaret Penney, Mrs. H. I. Stuart, Miss Florence Bemis, Mrs. H. C. Barroll, Mrs. Stanley Brooks, C. Churchill Clark, Miss Hildegarde Flanner, Mrs. Howard Wright, Mrs. Desnix Myers, Mrs. Alson Clark, Mrs. J. C. Gripper.

PASADENA BROWNING CLUB held the aanual business meeting in Juae aad decided to hold the meetings for the next year in the Shakespeare Clubhouse. An election of officers was held, resulting in the choice of Mrs. Stuart W. French, president; Mrs. Edward H. Aagle, first vice-president; Mrs. Edwin Knowlton, second vice-president; Miss Lilliaa Rea, recordiag secretary; Miss Helen Arlene Hammell, corresponding secretary; Miss Winifred Farmer, treasurer; Miss Catherine Power, auditor; Mrs. Henry Godfrey, librarian; Miss Myrtle Harris aad Mrs. Paul Loveland, press reporters.

COMMUNITY dances, under the auspices of the Pasadena Drama League, will coatiaue throughout July aad August every Friday eveniag at Tourament Park, Pasadena.

SOROPTIMIST CLUB luncheon programs for June included Minaie Maddera Fiske as guest of honor, Juae 2, whea Walter F. Dexter, president of Whittier College, addressed the Club. The installation banquet for members aad guests was held Monday evening, Juae 22, at the Biltmore, followed by a special program aad dancing. Officers elected are as follows: President, Mrs. Gertrude C. Maynard (re-elected); vice-president, Mrs. Mae Carvell; treasurer, Mrs. C. W. Dyson. Directors: Miss Elizabeth L. Kenny, Mrs. Cora Bee Sheffield, Mrs. Fera-Dell Hunt, Miss Margaret Reordaa, Mrs. Amelia F. Johnston, Mrs. Addie L. Marks. The club held the fiaal meeting on Juae 30th until the first Tuesday in September, as the Club is to be closed duriag July and August.

POMONA COLLEGE Summer Session Calendar.

The sixth aaaual conference of the Congregational young people of Southern Califoraia was held at Pomona College duriag the week of Juae 29.

On Thursday eveniag, July 2, the faculty of the Departmeat of Music will give a recital at 7:15 ia Bridges Hall of Music.

Will C. Wood, superintendent of public instruction, will give an address on education at the summer session assembly on Thursday, July 9.

At the assembly on Moaday, uly 13, William A. Griffith, distinguished artist of Laguna Beach and formerly head of the Art Department of the University of Kaasas, will give an address on "The Appreciation of Art in the School and the Community."

Professor E. Harold Geer, organist of Vassar College, will give aa organ recital Monday eveniag, July 13.

On Thursday, July 23, Mrs. Hallie F. Flanagan, director of dramatics at Vassar, will present an eveniag of one-act plays.

DR. AURELIA HENRY REINHARDT, President of Mills College, California, left Oakland June 10, to attend two international meetings during July. She will go first to Edinburgh, Scotland, as a delegate to the Meeting of the World Federation of National Education Associations, held July 20-28. Then as president of the American Association of University Women, she will attend the Council Meeting of the International Federation of University Women held in Brussels, Belgium, July 27-30. She will serve officially there not only as president of the American Association, but she will also represent Miss Ellen Pendleton, President of Wellesley College, who is chairman of the Committee on International Relations. President Reinhardt will return to California for the opening of Mills College, Tuesday, August 18.

WALTER HELFER, SANTA BARBARA, MUSICIAN, WHO WAS RECENTLY AWARDED THE AMERICAN PRIX DE ROME

COMMUNITY MUSIC ASSOCIATION of Redlands, Mrs. George Mullen, president, annouaces twelve concerts for the summer moaths, together with community sings such as were started last summer and which proved of such great worth to the community. An average attendance was reached last summer of 3500. Esther Dale, soprano; Margaret Messer Morris, soprano; Charles Wakefield Cadman, pianist-composer, are among the artists already engaged for the summer series.

ERRATA:—In the June number of this magazine, on page 21, for Edwin Rust please read E. H. Rust Nursery Company.

Rachel Baker

713 South Flower Street,
Los Angeles
TUcker 4623

And in the Assembly Tea Rooms

THE CHICAGO, ROCK ISLAND AND PACIFIC RAILWAY COMPANY

PASSENGER TRAFFIC DEPARTMENT
ROOM 722 LA SALLE STREET STATION

CHICAGO, ILL. May 16, 1925.

IN YOUR REPLY REFER TO FILE 22-2794-FP

REPLYING TO YOUR LETTER OF FILE

L. M. ALLEN, VICE PRESIDENT AND PASSENGER TRAFFIC MANAGER
W. J. LEAHY, ASSISTANT PASSENGER TRAFFIC MANAGER
G. H. ASPO, ASSISTANT GENERAL PASSENGER AGENT
D. McCLURE, ASSISTANT GENERAL PASSENGER AGENT
F. C. FRENCH, MANAGER MAIL, BAGGAGE & EXPRESS TRAFFIC
J. P. PUTT, ASSISTANT MANAGER MAIL, BAGGAGE & EXPRESS TRAFFIC
A. W. LARGE, AGRICULTURAL AGENT

SUBJECT: Magazines in Observation Cars.

Mrs. Don Sebastian,
Drake Hotel,
Chicago, Illinois.

Dear Mrs. Sebastian:

Confirming conversation of even date, in regard to the placing of "California Southland" magazine on observation cars in Golden State Limited service.

We will require twelve copies of each month's issue for this purpose, and they should be mailed to the undersigned for handling.

I will write you later at your Santa Barbara address on the subject of display advertising in this publication.

Yours very truly,

Vice Pres. & Pass. Traf. Mgr.

ROUTE OF THE "GOLDEN STATE LIMITED" TO CALIFORNIA
AND "ROCKY MOUNTAIN LIMITED" TO COLORADO
COMFORT AND COURTESY ARE YOUR FELLOW TRAVELERS ON THE ROCK ISLAND

PUBLISHER'S NOTICE

THE accompanying letter to Mrs. Don Sebastian from the Vice-President and Passenger Traffic Manager of the Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific Railway Company, written in Chicago on May 16, 1925, confirms the statement made in our June issue on this page. "The Golden State Limited" operates between Chicago and Los Angeles over the Rock Island and Southern Pacific; the trains remaining solid without change through to Los Angeles. All passengers, therefore, arriving at Los Angeles or departing via Southern Pacific "Golden State Limited" will find California Southland in the observation cars. The same applies at Chicago, the eastern terminal of the Rock Island Railroad.

Together with the twenty-five copies subscribed for by the Assistant General Advertising Agent of the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railway System, these copies of California Southland will each make six trips a month across the country in the company of an average of three hundred passengers per train to whom the observation car is accessible.

In its completion of a service to this large group of people interested in California, California Southland is publishing each month matter relative to this section of the country; but will not change its policy of presenting this matter as a true reflection of the life of the Coast in a perfectly normal way.

Found on a newsstand in New York or New Orleans or Montreal, as well as in the homes of Californian subscribers, this magazine aims to contribute to the sane, pleasant life of the place, and to record the progress being made, in community organization, in the beautification of common life, and in the adaptation of everyday habits of living to the unusual conditions of our climate, soil, and relation to the other portions of the world.

Since its first issue in August, 1918, this war-born magazine has endeavored to help in any good cause by presenting a record of how the good was done. Leisure is here in California's southern counties to think out problems, to try out social theories. Wise and experienced workers from all over the globe seem to congregate here; and much that they think through seems worth recording. Experts on almost every subject, and professional men high in their calling are ready to give the results of their work in words understandable to the laity. Thus, without any blowing of trumpets or any expensive expenditure of any individual's money, the public is served and fundamentals made available to all who have ears to hear or eyes to read withal.

N. B.:—For extra copies or back numbers of California Southland call on the L. A. News Co. Agent in your town.

DE LA GUERRA STUDIOS, SANTA BARBARA

A CHARMING SPANISH STREET OF SHOPS

MARY E. HAUAN
Partly-Worked Needlepoint Tapestry
Studio 26, de la Guerra Studios

EL PASEO SPORT SHOP
MRS. CHARLES O'DONNELL LEE, JR.
Sport Clothes, Hats, Evening Gowns
Children's Clothes
Studio 30, de la Guerra Studios

DORIS OVERMAN
Designer
Shades, Trays, Decorative Panels, Aztec Pottery and Lamps
Studio 27, de la Guerra Studios

MONCURE DEARDORF
Important Collection of Chinese Jewelry
Dealer and Expert in Chinese Works of Art
Studio 24, de la Guerra Studios

PACIFIC MUTUAL LIFE INSURANCE CO.
SANTA BARBARA BRANCH
101 EL PASEO DE LA GUERRA

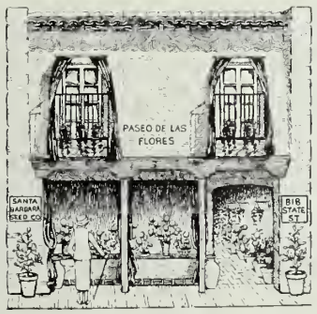
B. CROFTON ATKINS
Pipe and Tobacco Shop
And Men's Imported Clothing
Studio 29, de la Guerra Studios

LEE ELEANOR GRAHAM
Interior Decorator
de la Guerra Studios
23 East de la Guerra Street
Santa Barbara

THE POLK STUDIOS
MUSIC, DRAMA, DANCE
Gertrude Jeanette Polk
Artist Teacher of Vocal and Physical Expression
Henry Polk
Teacher of Piano, Voice and Pipe Organ
Suite 110, de la Guerra Studios

GEORGE M. MILLARD
(of Pasadena)
RARE IMPORTED BOOKS
Santa Barbara Associates
MR. EVERARD MEYNELL
MRS. E. M. GROSSMANN
STUDIO 25, EL PASEO
15 EAST DE LA GUERRA STREET

LEONARD WOODRUFF
Studio of Antiques
37-39 East de la Guerra St.



LA MANTILLA
Costume Designing and Remodeling
Studio 31, de la Guerra Studios

MARINA FLINT
Kimonos, Chinese Suits, Bed Sacks
Suite 114, de la Guerra Studios

ELEANOR JOHNSON
Studio for the Voice
Suite 103, de la Guerra Studios

SANTA BARBARA ART CLUB
No. 15 E. de la Guerra Street
Free Exhibition of Paintings and Etchings
Open Daily 10 a. m. to 5 p. m.
Paintings and Etchings for sale

THE GUILD
Publishers
and Craftsmen
Studio 28 de la Guerra Studios

Flowers Sent From
Paseo de las Flores
Will Be Greatly Appreciated
Street of Flowers
818 State St.

El Paseo Patio

Lunch Out of Doors or Dine
at
"EL PASEO"
23 E. de la Guerra St.
Santa Barbara

COMMUNITY ARTS ASSOCIATION OF SANTA BARBARA

SCHOOL OF THE ARTS
FRANK MORLEY FLETCHER, Director
SUMMER SESSION
JULY 6—AUGUST 16
Graphic, Decorative and Plastic Arts
Drama, Music, Dancing
For further particulars, address
MRS. JEANNE AUGÉ, Executive Secretary
936 Santa Barbara Street, Santa Barbara, California

A. FALVY
Antiques
9 East de la Guerra St.

LA TIENDA MEXICANA
Mexican Souvenir Shop
Specializing in Mexican and Spanish Wares
Robert L. Lewis
Under Management of
Mrs. Ethel Stotesbury Hill
Studio No. 5 de la Guerra Studios

Mt. LOWE
"Earth has no finer view to show."

Mt. LOWE TAVERN and Cottages
Enlarged and Improved

at the terminus of this World-Famous Trip afford a most delightful retreat for a long or short sojourn at reasonable rates

5 Trains Daily at convenient hours - from Main St. Station Los Angeles

$2.50 Round Trip Rate

For information and Reservations apply

Pacific Electric Ry.

Information Bureau Phone MU-7400-TR-3661

HOTEL GREEN

A well ordered Residential and Tourist Hotel of peculiar excellence. Open all year. Moderate rates. Apartments by the month.

The Green Tea Pot

CHARLES B. HERVEY, Proprietor

The
Biltmore
Salon

Los Angeles Biltmore

PAINTINGS
ETCHINGS
BRONZES

California Southland

M. URMY SEARES - - - - - Editor and Publisher
ELLEN LEECH - - - - - - - - Managing Editor

NO. 67, VOL. VII JULY, 1925

CONTENTS

PAGE

EL PASEO, THE DE LA GUERRA STUDIOS.....Cover Design
(Color Plates by Bryan & Brandenberg from a painting by Lilia Tuckerman)
SOUTHLAND CALENDAR.....3, 4, 5, 6
OLD SPANISH DAYS IN SANTA BARBARA.....Ellen Leech 9
TWO SONGS BY THE CALIFORNIA TROUBADOUR..... 10
THE ITALIAN PERGOLA AT EL ENCANTO..... 11
AN ITALIAN GARDEN.....Theresa Homet Patterson 12
RECENT BOOKS—REVIEWS.....Louise Morgrage 14
CRYSTALIZING COMMUNITY THOUGHT.....J. W. Morin 15
SOUTHLAND OPINION.....16-17
COMMUNITY ARTS.....Henry Pritchett
CHRIST THE FIRST EVOLUTIONIST.....
.....Princess Lazarovich-Hrebelianovich
YACHTING AND THE DOG SHOW AT SANTA BARBARA.....18-19
THE SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA CHAPTER A.I.A...Harold O. Sexsmith 20
HILLSIDE HOUSES DESIGNED BY W. PAUL LOVELAND..... 21
BULLETIN OF THE CRAFTS.....Marion Hugus Clark 23
THE MEMORIAL TO CLARENCE URMY IN SAN JOSE..... 24
SPANISH AND ITALIAN GARDENS.....Kathryn Bashford 27
THE BIRTHDAY PARTY AT THE ASSISTANCE LEAGUE.....28-29
A MODERN MOUNTAIN HOTEL, LAKE ARROWHEAD..... 30

Official Organ of the Architectural Club of Los Angeles, California
Official Organ of the ASSISTANCE LEAGUE of SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA,
Presents the interests of The Community Arts Association of Santa Barbara, in two pages of interesting matter each month. Mrs. Don B Sebastian, 15 Humphrey Road, Montecito, is Assistant to the Publisher and Representative in Santa Barbara for this magazine.

CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND is published monthly at Pasadena, Cal.
Copyrighted, 1924, by M. Urmy Seares
Advertising: CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND, Pasadena, Col. 916. Los Angeles, TRinity 1501; Subscription price for 1925, $2.50 per year.

The Los Angeles
Elizabeth Arden Salon
with
J. W. Robinson Co.
Seventh and Grand

UNDER the direct management of Miss Arden and her New York staff, and offering the same specialized treatments which have made Miss Arden's other salons internationally known.

Seventh Floor

Round the World Cruises
$1500 and up
Mediterranean Cruises
$900 and up

Agency for all tours and cruises. Let us arrange your reservations.

C. J. JONES STEAMSHIP AGENCY
294 East Colorado St., Pasadena
Phone Fair Oaks 8026

Patio in the house of Harold Waldmann

MARGARET CRAIG
ARCHITECTURAL PHOTOGRAPHY
Portraits by Appointment
Official Photographer for California Southland
3223 W. Sixth Street
Telephone WAsh. 1653 Los Angeles

La Solana

A quiet, well-appointed small hotel on the West Side near Orange Grove Avenue.
Each menu is carefully planned and prepared every day.

Grand Ave. and Lockhaven St.
Pasadena

THE MANSFIELD SHOPS
Pasadena and Los Angeles
Interiors designed and executed—
Embroideries—
Textiles—
Mrs. Willie Kerns Mansfield
Drexel 1747

JAMES CINI & COMPANY
of Italy
Antique and Foreign Jewelry
Italian and French Novelties
390 E. Walnut St. Pasadena, Calif.
Fair Oaks 5583

CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND
AN ILLUSTRATED MAGAZINE OF NATIONAL INTEREST

THE HIDALGOS ON THEIR MAGNIFICENT HORSES, MANY OF ARABIAN STRAIN, TRANSLATE THE PRESENT INTO THE PAST TO THE ACCOMPANIMENT OF CHAMPING BIT AND STRAINING LEATHER. THE HAND-CARVED SADDLES AND SILVER EQUIPMENT BEING WORTHY OF THE ANIMALS THEMSELVES, SHOWING THE HANDIWORK OF THE DAYS WHEN A SADDLER WAS AN ARTISAN

OLD SPANISH DAYS IN SANTA BARBARA

By ELLEN LEECH

TWO sections of California furnish pivotal points for her most romantic history; the land of forty-nine of the north and Santa Barbara of the south. But there is a varied difference in the two romances, one vivid, virile, headstrong and giddy with the lust of the newly discovered gold, thriving in a country to which Bret Harte imparted a picturesque charm, imbedding it so deeply in the soil that it has outlasted the gold and the towns themselves.

Santa Barbara now unfolds the opposite picture. It is eternally filled with warm, glowing, pulsing life but of another tempo, a life which has grown under a warm southern sun, yet seems always tempered by moonbeams. A section replete also with legends of love and hate, balanced by a gorgeous hospitality, which meets friends with open hands and homes. Time has tempered all passions or convention has muted them but above and beyond all else that elusive something, that indescribable virtue, which we call charm remains. It is always round about you, dreaming or waking, but with never a traceable source, it may be the ocean, it may be the mountains, or yet both, and again it may be the memories which live in the very air of the place and drift into your being just as the mountain air, fragrant and spicy, joins the balmy breezes of the sea to make a heady perfume ineffably delightful.

Santa Barbara has done more to preserve her history and the poetry of living than the other towns of southern California, and through the restoration of many old adobes and the establishment of a Spanish-Colonial type of architecture has taken on much the appearance, amplified and glorified, of the earlier days. Here at least it is conceded that the heritage of Spanish color and romance is one of the most precious assets of the West Coast.

Santa Barbara not only does not forget but rejoices in her memories of other years; the days of Cabrillo, days fraught with the works of the sincere and earnest padres, and days upon days filled with the joys of meeting and greeting friends, when hospitality was the very soul of life. A period when every birthday was an occasion and a wedding meant endless preparation and embodied the friendly interest of the whole country-side. Within these boundaries lived the best of the old Spanish aristocracy and here the Patriarchial life, which Dana stresses, had its highest development.

With this background it is to be expected that when Santa Barbara entertains it is with assurance, with every possibility of giving unbounded pleasure. In her confines, within the walls of their ancestors, many daughters of the old families live and gladly join in every community plan, so last year when the town decided to have a friendly, neighborly old-time Fiesta, dedicating three days to a re-living of Old Spanish Days, every descendent of the Spanish families came. The senoras and senoritas appearing in the silks and satins of other lands, lovely old lace mantillas floating from beautifully carved combs, their carriages draped in the gorgeous shawls so reminiscent of Granada and Madrid. The Dons in swaying capes and shining boots gave strength to the picture, while their magnificent horses were the most inspiriting note of the street scenes.

With pageantry rife in the land—and many of the pageants lovely and interesting,—it is well to remember this is not a pageant which

Santa Barbara again offers in August, at the time of the full moon, the 13th, 14th and 15th, but a re-creation of the days of old, no matter whether the days of gold or just golden days, these are days to be lived and enjoyed by her guests.

Color is provided without stint or measure, first in the streets which are hung with the warm colors of Spain and gay with our own speaking Stars and Stripes. Then, following the example of the early festival makers, the townspeople and their guests come in costume, historically correct and varying in detail with the styles of the different provinces of Spain, interspersed here and there by a daring, yet intriguing pirate, or a roving, lovable gypsy. It thus becomes a huge costume party but done so gracefully and convincingly that a masquerade is not suggested. No formalities intrude themselves nor yet is convention absent, and buffoonry does not appear. The years slip away under this charming influence and again we glimpse the California that was.

The plans for a repetition of this delightful three-day celebration in August will follow the trend of last year, retaining the most interesting of the earlier features and adding other picturesque elements.

On Thursday, the thirteenth, assuring the interest of old and young, the pageant parade will be given, depicting the discovery of Santa Barbara; the coming of Cabrillo, the landing of the men from the Spanish galleon in the harbor, the meeting with the Indians, and the taking over of the land for Spain. No modern features will be allowed in the pageant, but it will adhere strictly to the old times of the Dons and vaqueros.

Following the parade on Thursday and repeated on Saturday afternoon will come polo games at the field in Montecito, and, as last year, a reception at the de la Guerra House, where descendants of the early pioneers of Santa Barbara and the surrounding country will hold open house to greet friends and visitors.

An interesting feature of the week is to be on Thursday and Friday when an old time Fiesta will be held in Peabody Stadium with a replica of the de la Guerra House as a realistic setting. The dramatic action will center about a wedding ceremony and will contain features described by Richard Henry Dana in his book "Two Years Before the Mast," when he spent some time in Santa Barbara. In the evenings street dancing, wandering musicians, Spanish dancers, and serenaders will fill the town with color and sound. Carnival night will be celebrated on Saturday evening with especial music and dancing.

The Southern California regatta, the Dahlia show of the Horticultural society, exhibitions at the Art Club and special performances at the Lobero Theatre will be added features of entertainment.

Editors' Note:—This was in press when the earthquake came to Santa Barbara. El Paseo, the first of the new, modern building that is to rise around the old Spanish Plaza, is pictured on our cover. It stood the shocks! So did the Lobera Theatre! One is now the Red Cross station for dispensing supplies so generously sent to stricken Santa Barbara; the other forms the headquarters of the banks.

State Street is an expose, a record of how not to build.

The fiesta will be held in August; the city will rise. "With the best experts in city planning and sound construction hers to command, Santa Barbara now has her chance." What will she do! The world is looking on, expecting wisdom from chastened Santa Barbara.

GAY GROUPS FORMED IN THE GARDENS, MORNING, NOON OR NIGHT.

THE SERENADERS ENJOY THEIR OWN MUSIC AS DID THE DINERS EN FETE.

Two Songs by The California Troubadour

In Exile

The valleys voiced a song for me
A song that sang the praise
Of grain-filled field and fruit-hung tree.
And hammock-swinging days—
For me the valleys voiced a song, a simple, sunshine song,
And Saints joined in the fond refrain—a soft-voiced mission throng.

The rivers wrought gold chains for me,
Gold chains of wondrous weight,
That stretch from mountains to the sea
And out the Golden Gate—
For me the rivers wrought gold chains, such fair, enchanting chains
Of sea-worn ships, and argonauts, gold fever in their veins.

The hills held out their hands to me,
Hands filled with flowers of home,
The flowers that woo the woodland bee
And fill its honey comb—
To me the hills held out their hands, their poppy-laden hands—
Is there a Californian here? Yes? Well, he understands.

New York City

Published in Munsey's Magazine.

To a Redwood Forest

Whose names are dim in Clio's diadem—
When they were here on earth, you lived with them!
Imagination droops, and Art despairs—
Oh, for that tongue, that harp, celestial airs,
When gazing into turrets young and green
I contemplate what eons lie between
The tiny seeds and your majestic forms,
Survivors of great earthquate shocks, and storms—
The grandest monarchs Time has ever known,
You link the primal ages with our own!

Clarence Urmy,

Saratoga, California

July 10, 1858—June 2, 1923.

THE ITALIAN PERGOLA AT EL ENCANTO, SANTA BARBARBA

BY CHARLES F. EATON

Landscape Architect

By ELIZABETH ST JOHN WHITING

THE POOL INSIDE THE DOUBLE-COLUMNED PERGOLA—EL ENCANTO HOTEL, SANTA BARBARA

HIGH on Mission hill, beyond the gray old Spanish church and garden, the state of California built, years ago, a school for teachers of crafts and beauty in the home. From out this school have gone trained teachers of design and technique in weaving and woodwork, pottery and metal work to the inspiration of many students throughout the state. And while the commonplace walls of the building will require years of weathering and the growth of shrubs and trees before it is in itself a thing of beauty, it has been the means of attracting the life of the city by the sea up to its elevated terraces, and the glorious view from Mission Hill has done the rest to make this the choice residence seat of Santa Barbara.

Before the trolley line was built a forehanded capitalist saw the need of housing the faculty of the normal school upon the hill and bought the land nearby on which to build a court of tiny bungalows with kitchenettes, a room or two, and little else besides the glorious view.

Teachers are notably high-souled and by tradition are supposed to live on air and glorious view, high thoughts and little in the larder. But when the times grew prosperous; when glorious views became an asset of the realtor, and trolley lines, and motor roads began to climb the hill, the teachers were found to have silently folded up their little kitchenettes, slipped down the hill to find their own homes among the fleshpots of the lowlands near the sea.

Deserted by his tenantry the forehanded capitalist studied the situation, looked at the glorious view, the trolley line, the motor roads, and the small army of subdividers coming up the hill.

Perhaps he knew of Naples, and its coast line, fair Amalfi and the little monastery high on the cliff above that far, blue bay! Be that as it may, the court of bungalows was made the forecourt of a fine hostelry, the little cottages remodelled, kitchenettes turned into modern bathrooms; and a main building rose to look out over the city by the sea.

Wise beyond his generation, this far-seeing capitalist called on an expert in Italian landscape gardening and architecture to make the court beautiful as Italy is beautiful in garden, pergola and pool.

So Charles Frederick Eaton had here an opportunity to build in California something of which he had dreamed since as a boy he had climbed over the ruins of old Roman baths and tumbled walls of Italy. If vines and delightful little plants will grow on ruins why shouldn't they grow in brick pillars here at home? And so the pergola was built of brick, forty pillars in all, hollow so that they might be filled with earth and support plants. Occasionally a brick was left out and tiny rock plants or interesting examples from other countries set at a convenient height to be studied. For on each side of the pillar, Mr. Eaton contends that he has a separate climatic condition and has set his plants accordingly.

Not as extensive as Kew Gardens but as interesting for intensive study, these pillar gardens have been a source of great interest to travellers and visitors at El Encanto for many years. In order to cover the pergola rapidly, Mr. Eaton set against their sides the thick trunks of a native canyon vine which he calls "dimpled wood." Up these strong supports the rapid growing vines climbed quickly and in the top of each pillar he planted a wild grape vine. Tourists who came to El Encanto in the first few years of growth were heard, by Mr. Eaton, explaining to each other the rapid growth of everything in California and reasoned aloud that these twisted supports were the natural trunks of the grape!

These, with the gold fish which follow visitors around the pool inside the pergola add to the attractiveness of this delightful Californian hotel; but there is a great deal more that will bear even closer study. The pillars are taller than most people build pergolas—and all the California architects who visited Santa Barbara when this garden was being built thought they were too tall. They now prove their correct height, and the architects have acknowledged this to Mr. Eaton.

Everything is on a grand scale in Italy. The ceilings are high and there is a certain lofty feeling about the houses. Perhaps the Italians know better than we how to live in this kind of a climate. Hundreds of years of living in a similar climate has taught them much that we may emulate.

A charming story of an Italian emigre named Francesca is told by Mr. Eaton in this connection. Passing a little street in Los Angeles one day Mr. Eaton saw a man leaning over some sashes under which he had planted seeds. His interest aroused, the landscape architect addressed the stranger and discovered that he was introducing into California, plants from all countries over the world. Carrying on this work in Santa Barbara under Mr. Eaton's patronage, Francesca introduced many of the familiar plants we all now enjoy at El Encanto and in other beautiful Californian gardens. Later when called home by his government to do the same sort of work in Tunis, Francesca proved to be an Italian nobleman of ancient name. Mr. Eaton alone remains with us to record the plants he introduced and to write the book we all are waiting for. It will teach us which are native and which foreign plants in California.

When that guide book is written we shall all take it in our hands and wander round the lovely pergola of El Encanto studying like visitors to some Italian Gallery of paintings—but with the perfect service of a fine American hotel at our command and the glorious view of Santa Barbara's red roofed houses and her channel islands gleaming through the ancient eucalyptus trees that form the chief beauty of this hillset, colorful hotel.

Built of wood and gray as though it had been weathered by sea wind and spray, this homey hostelry by Soule, Murphy and Hastings has taken on this year a charm of color inside that makes it delightfully cheery. Hospitality, born and bred into every citizen of Santa Barbara, here finds its most complete epitome in welcome to its guests.

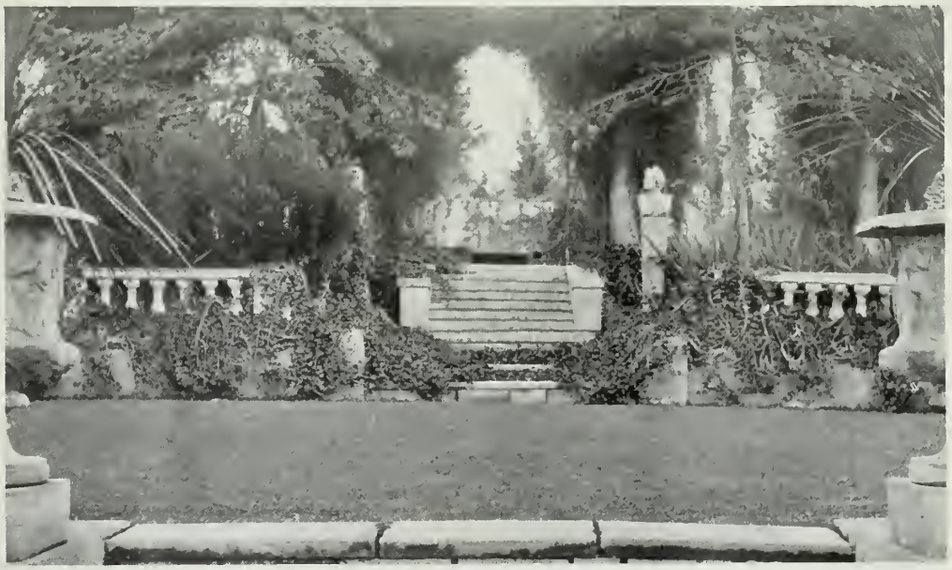
AN ITALIAN GARDEN IN PASADENA

By THERESA HOMET PATTERSON

IF California lacks anything, it is simply that we haven't found it. Off hand, one would say of course we have no old Italian villas. Looking from the main terrace into the Lindley garden, I had to assure myself that I wasn't dreaming. Being convinced that I was not, I was even more certain that I must be emerging from a state of coma, during which I had been carried to Italy. Approaching the place from the west, there is no hint of what lies beyond the apparent forest. A Mocking Bird had the advantage over me, for he sat on the tip of the tallest tree, where he salutes not only the morn, but the mountains and the sea, and sings the knell of parting day and moonlight sonatas to his loved one. While I gazed up in wonder at his song, a passing dog yipped fiercely at my heels. A Wren, disliking dogs as much as he did loiterers, scolded as only wrens can, making altogether so great a commotion, that a Humming Bird came out to see what it was all about.

The entrance is through the northwall and over this pavement of large stones, one listens for the clatter of coaches, bringing royal guests. A row of Lombardy poplars stands outside the windowed wall, giving glimpses of mountain between them. In the center is a well, which might have been brought from the Villa of Palmieri. The wall of shrubbery, which with the house, completely encloses this entrance, is made up of the golden cupressus, coprosmos, myrtles, mahonias, veronicas, ericas, chorozema and heather. Italian cypress and eugenias give architectural accents. It was all so foreign and formal, that I welcomed the California Thrasher who tripped along the wall and dropped into the shrubbery, the cooing of the Doves and the quiet music of running water. The dampness brought out a ravishing perfume of balsam and jasmine. Passing through the marble hall to the terrace I almost lay my pen down at thought of the picture before me. It gave me a thrill, such as no other garden has done, since the Villa d'Este with formal beds of blue —verbenas, nepita, ageratum, asters, columbine; the raised pool where blue and white water lilies open their hearts to the sun and the lotus raises its majestic head; the pergola at the end, deluged with blue and white wistaria and the yellow jasmine, which follows; on the south arches of maiden hair vines, which have completely obliterated the classic pillars and give the softness of the fern, for which it is named. Whether the garden invited the mountains to come in, or the mountains invited the garden to come out, I don't know, but they are forever joined. Almost overcome by day beauty, Mr. Lindley pictured to me, the great moon rising over the mountains and flooding the garden with light, contrasting its dark masses of evergreens and shadows with the illumined gold of acacia. One can never become satiated with such beauty or even accustomed to it. A Gold Fish, which has passed his thirtieth birthday, luxuriates in the pool, and is the first one to come to dinner, when Mr. Lindley whistles. A calla lily is growing in this pool, following an experiment which the gardner made in Ireland.

The small arch in the north wall leads into the sacred garden and faces a cross. There is an old sacrificial altar (my own interpretation) in the center, with a screen around it, which suggests to me a conventionalized crown of thorns. Perhaps no flower is more sacred than another, but the flowers in this garden seemed particularly appropriate, the white lilies (like the upraised chalice) the blue Egyptian lily, ferns and for-get-me-nots, Cecil Brunner roses, the Passion Flower, white jasmine for incense, the tiny arenaria for a mossy carpet, the Tecoma vine with its bleeding heart, Bird of Paradise and by the cross a drooping fuschia.



An opening to the south of the formal garden discloses a long, stately vista of Italian cypress rising from a hedge of privet, ending with a bird bath, that must splash like a fountain with so many birds. Descending the two flights of steps and getting the picture in the opposite direction, with the maiden hair vine for a background, is even more beautiful. Ivy winds through the balustrade and falls at the feet of the nymphs or satyrs or whoever they are who sit on garden pedestals! A cool looking sycamore will provide gold for the autumn and gray-blue dappled bark for winter; an apricot carries out the yellow color in its summer fruit and autumn foliage; and to the right, broom is splashing her gold in the shrubbery garden. To the left, Japanesy (meaning artistic) looking acacias shade the fern garden. A Humming Bird has fashioned her nest of the acacia blossoms on one of the lowest limbs. Her eggs were taken. A second nest built of the down from the sycamore, making a spongy nest, was quite as unfortunate. The eggs were pricked and the contents removed—by what we do not know The cement edge of this rustic garden, is rather a clever imitation of a tree trunk. Green and white bamboo, New Zealand flax, calladium and cordyline give character, with one fiery little fire cracker plant—the only bit of red outside the sacred garden.

The south side of the house is draped with bignonia. Gold finches "float and run" and knowning this was a blue and gold garden, one pair of blue birds felt constrained to stay over. From the brick pavement to the south of the house, the eye drops down from terrace to terrace to the long, unbroken stretch of green, the swimming pool, the clumps of cypress, the sea, Catalina, and where the eye leaves off, fancy takes it up, when memory cuts loose what strides it makes, out-timing wireless. We are here, we are there! The sound of hammers and such noises as rise from a city, the cocks crowing, trains and bells, are all blended into a harmony with bird songs and crickets. It recalls Ravello, where one looks from villas with mountains all about, down onto the sea, and the mellow sounds of distant bells and singing peasants, cocks and barking dogs, are never to be forgotten. Not having my Baedecker at hand, I cannot name the spot back of Naples, where common sounds of working day, come up blended into such harmony. It is comforting to think that the earthly discords may take on some kind of harmony to those listening on the other shore. The clumps of cypress might be in Hadrian's villa, but this is not a ruin.

While this villa copies the Italian lines, and the blue of her sea and skies in its flowers, it is also the blue of California's lupined hills and the gold of her own poppies. Spring comes dancing down these walks, leaving a line of blue iris and disappears in banks of acacia, and summer creeps along the shadows of her deep green hedges, ringing her Canterbury Bells of blue and pink and white. But we really must go back to the main terrace for some detail. English ivy growing to the top of the wall, has crept out upon the floor. A line of rose trees break ranks where the steps descend to a small pool, in which two water lilies, separated by a fine leafed spider shaped plant, make hiding places for the gold fish. The second terrace is edged with blue pansies. Half way down this terrace, the steps divide to the right and left back of a wall fountain, where a single papyrus plant revels in the moisture. Floating about is the water hyacinth, which has no place of abode—adrift at the mercy of wind, if not of tide. Banana plants and papyrus and palms backed by acacia bank this portion to the east and west. Then comes the noble, restful lawn, unbroken save by the shadows of sixteen royal looking palms, which creep off and on. The sides of this plot are tipped up to keep the green from spilling into the swimming pool, which reaches clear across the south end, and is sky blue and sky deep. Flowers cuddle in between the walks and the enclosing cypress hedge. A pair of Phoebes police the pool and give the needed Frenchy touch of black. A view of one roof broke through into the garden, but was quickly put out by a giant bamboo.

In summer the swimming pool is the gem of the garden—a crystal set with sapphire and emerald. The shadowing green moves back at either end for semi-circles of velevety blue petunias and lobelia. Walks entering from the side gardens bring long vistas with them. Eight eugenias standing at attention might belong to the life saving crew. Two fine specimens of formium are very effective reflected at the back of the pool, creeping cupressus delights to lean over into the water, lepto spernum accepts the familiarity of the gentle sallya and in the stillness of the night listens to the silvery music of her fairy bells.

One is always coming upon unexpected openings and long vistas, and surprise gardens. One of these, with its latticed rooms and passages seems like nothing so much as a play house: and then there are hedges waist high, running and dodging, surely made for children to play Hide and Go Seek. The French garden announces itself by the Fleur-de-lis openings in the panels of its latticed enclosure. It has a canopy of blue cyanothus. The wild flower garden was still showing blue and yellow, but knew full well that summer and its seed time were at hand. A spider had thrown its beautiful web across one of the cypress arches, quite to the annoyance of the gardner, who has a grudge against this persistent architect. Seeing a Towhee, the gardner said our birds must be more cunning in hiding their nests than in Scotland, as he found so few. He had some other interesting opinions about our birds, one being that they were out of proportion—our robin is so much larger than theirs! And some of ours look so funny, running, when they should hop!! The Black Birds remind him of the Jack-Daws in Scotland. He had just been longing to have some one tell him the names of the birds and "that one that sings in the night." As it wasn't Warbler season, I could name the residents and appear fairly wise.

There are three shrubs, new to me, which seem particularly fitted to this garden—the anchusa, with its best blue colors in flowers of forget-me-not shape, borne on stems some six feet high; the duranta or golden dew drop, bearing blue flowers and yellow berries; and the sallya, a shrub which will vine if given support; its dainty little blue flowers, borne on delicate stems, in pairs, remind one of the exquisite little twin flower, growing in Jasper National Park. Surely in this garden one may find "The lost enchantments of the mind."

I am borrowing these lines from Allan Seeger's poem on a garden:

"For here their pleasure was to come and sit
Oft when the sun sloped midway to the west,
Watching with sweet enjoyment interknit
The long light slant across the green earth's breast.

And over plain and far Sierra spread
The fulgent rays of fading afternoon,
Showing each utmost peak and watershed,
All clarified, each tassel and festoon
Of floating cloud embroidered overhead
Like Lotus leaves on bluest waters strewn,
Flushing with rose, while all breathes fresh and free
In peace and amplitude and bland tranquility.

New fragrance on the freshening atmosphere
Would steal with evening, and the sunset glow
Draw deeper down into the wondrous west
Round vales of Prosperpine and islands of the Blest.

RECENT BOOKS—REVIEWS

By LOUISE MORGRAGE

OUTFIT USED IN THE JOURNEY DESCRIBED IN "MOTOR CAMPING ON WESTERN TRAILS." COURTESY OF THE AUTHOR, MELVILLE F. FERGUSON

MOTOR CAMPING ON WESTERN TRAILS

By MELVILLE F. FERGUSON, The Century Co.

The very thought of adventure, invariably causes agreeable thrills to run up and down the human spine. Innumerable books on this alluring subject are constantly issuing from the printing presses, yet one of unusual quality, such as this "Motor Camping on Western Trails" is certain of a welcome from a responsive reading public. We can heartily recommend it to all who appreciate a lively and entertaining account of experiences which are anything but commonplace. Herein modern adventure in the form of a motor camping trip, is written up by the adventurer-in-chief, who is an editor of an eastern newspaper, and plainly an expert in spinning this kind of a yarn. Those aiding and abetting him in this significant venture, were first of all a dog; then seven members of his family, three young lady daughters, his wife, a grandfather, and two grandmothers, one being seventy-eight. To a unit, the author tells us, they "abhorred snakes, bugs, and wet feet," meaning that they were not overfond of roughing it, which was probably the reason why they prepared such equipment as enabled them to make a camping journey of eighteen thousand miles, through twenty-two states, with a detour into Canada, and a side-trip to Honolulu, without giving up home comforts, such as nourishing and palatable food properly cooked in shining aluminum ware, frequent hot baths, clean and comfortable beds, and even occasional parties for entertaining congenial acquaintances, encountered on the way.

Many readers with some such plan in mind, may profit by the suggestions in this narrative, offered by one who has "been there and staid all night." But aside from its value as a guide, it is a notable book because Mr. Ferguson has an aptitude for authorship and writes vigorously and is also very happy in selecting his incidents with a practiced eye for just the shade sure to harmonize with the whole. As a consequence he has really produced a human document, upon which our thoughts dwell with pleasure. Without intending to do so, he has given us glimpses of an unusually delightful family companionship, whose members contributed individually to the general fund of good cheer, and were always eagerly on the alert for the next encounter round the corner. In fact it was the kind of a family that gave and expected courtesy from one another, and ended by finding it in everybody else as well.

In such an extensive itinerary, naturally California was included, and much of the time in the southern part of the state was spent in Pasadena at Brookside Park to which there are some very flattering references. How gratifying to local pride to learn that the advantages of this camping site are unusually superior, and surely the camp manager called "Danny" should be pleased enough, if he chances to read the econiums written in his honor.

The trip to Honolulu came about unexpectedly but pleasantly, as was natural in a succession of nothing but happy events.

"We thought we could not afford to go to Hawaii. When we inquired about passenger rates and automobile freight, we knew it. So we definitely decided not to go, and sailed for Honolulu December 29th." This is just what they did. This metropolis of the Hawaiian Islands has for a lower class a polyglot population which knows nothing about the outside world and cares less, while the upper class white population knows everything and cares a lot. So we may picture the apathy of the one and the amused condescension of the other, as all viewed with some amazement, this absurd but altogether delightful caravan, wending its way shortly after landing, to Kapiolani Park, in search of the camp, supposed to be situated therein. This situation turned out to be a predicament from which it took the city's mayor to rescue them, and he did it very handsomely by giving them a special spot in Paradise wherein to camp during their stay. And once more, they proceeded to have an enjoyable time, as presently the hospitable residents of Honolulu learned that although this outfit might be queer, it was extremely nice. The lively account of what they saw and did in the Hawaiian Islands makes one of the most vivid and interesting parts of the book, whereof the whole contents are of such a nature, that we fervently pray for further adventure by this engaging family, to be chronicled by the same author. There is Europe; and Africa; Asia too.

TALES YOU WON'T BELIEVE

By GENE STRATTON-PORTER, Doubleday Page & Company

There is a report that Mrs. Porter's books have been translated into nine languages, and read by millions of people. Decidedly this was a matter for investigation, to determine if possible, the reason for such remarkable popularity, and we found the cause easily enough by reading her last book on nature studies, a very illuminating volume in more ways than one. At first it must be admitted, the faults of hasty composition loomed so large as to obscure all points of excellence; but presently the spirit that went forth to scoff, remained to pray. However amazing these stories of natural history may be, and the subject matter of the book is all that and more, the important aspect is the complete revelation of an exuberant personality, rapturously absorbed in the wonders surrounding her; of a soul untutored and unspoiled, fresh from the hands of God; of a genius whose natural expression was in terms of lyrical inspiration, opening a flood gate, as it were, and pouring forth a torrent of imaginative phrases, personifying epithets, tender endearments, out of a heart full of love for all wild life, animate and inanimate. Such spontaneity seemed as much a part of this gifted woman, as the breath she drew, so much so that at times she completely saturated page after page with a cloudburst of poetical thoughts and fancies.

Everything was a miracle to Mrs. Porter, and to the reader she herself was a miracle as well. Her faith in her tales was undoubtedly sincere, and some of them we can believe, while all of them we love. But why talk about belief in connection with them. Certainly the charm of poetry does not depend on striking that responsive chord in its readers' hearts, to make itself perceived. No one believes that the raven perched on the lintel above Poe's chamber door; or that the lady of Shalott for years wove into her loom what she saw pictured in the reflection of her mirror. We will not mention belief then, but only our enjoyment of the delectable stories of Mrs. Porter's experiences with different types of wild life. Some indeed are exceedingly diverting, such as her account of her struggle to save the lives of some owls which a neighbor was determined to destroy. He won, but it took him eight years, during which time the subject of owls was never mentioned in their social intercourse. Amusing likewise is the picture of chauffeur, secretary and cook, all impressed into service in the search through fields and forest for a certain rare and lovely flower that Mrs. Porter was very anxious to obtain.

More striking, however, is the marvellous tale she unfolds in the chapter called "Singers of Immortality," describing how she recognized the notes of English skylarks singing far out of sight, under the vault of heaven, when no birds of this kind were supposed to be in the country; astonishing enough, but it turned out to be true. Distinctly intriguing, but at the same time somewhat of a strain on the reader's credulity, is her claim to be able to distinguish the fly from the spider, merely by listening to the sound of the footsteps of each. In fact these are some of the "Tales You Won't Believe."

Throughout this whole book, Mrs. Porter was apparently unconscious of the gifts with which nature had so lavishly endowed her and which she herself tossed forth carelessly like beautiful jewels thrown recklessly around a workroom. What might have happened to the world of literature could she have gathered these together and put them in a setting worthy of their value? But after all, nine languages! Millions of readers! The people know a natural genius when it appears.

MRS. PORTER GATHERING BROWN MARIPOSA LILIES. FROM "TALES YOU WON'T BELIEVE." COURTESY OF MRS. J. LEO MEEHAN

A COMMUNITY PLAY-HOUSE BELONGS TO EVERYONE

By J. W. MORIN

TO understand the Community Playhouse of Pasadena, anyone, but especially one of our own community should apprehend and constantly remember that it is not merely a theatre, a place of amusement, or a place of intellectual or moral uplift, nor merely a vehicle for the great art of a great director or great amateur actors of great talent, but it is the sublime exhibition of a great and enlightened community expressing itself in one of many ways in which it may manifest itself. In other words, the thing should be understood primarily as a layman's theatre, of laymen, for the laymen and by the laymen. This great impersonal thing which we call the Community, has a certain vitality and feeling as a collective whole, quite similar to the individual instinct, which craves expression and is capable of infinite development, and the director, the stage crew and the staff employed in the Community Playhouse are not in any sense the Community Playhouse itself, but rather the theatre and the staff of the theatre are the mere instrumentalities through which our community expresses itself in this particularly responsive way.

Thus the most persuasive apostles of the Playhouse movement in Pasadena, (in which community by the way the movement is especially hopeful and significant), are not necessarily the director or the actors, leading or obscure, nor those persons who are widely read or technically informed in literature, but the greatest among them are those converts who may be merely those average typical people whose folk interest is normal and true.

When we take the apparently complicated local mechanism of the Pasadena Community Playhouse movement apart and analyze it, we find it in its first principle just a simple story for the regular folks, and concerned mainly with what the average person is thinking about.

In the very beginning of the institution of the movement in Pasadena, the leadership was fortunate in realizing in accordance with the foregoing suggestions, that they were engaged in the institution of a social movement, and if it was not a truly typical product of the community, it would be false in name as well as lacking in stability, because it was not well and truly founded. It was realized that the products of the institution that was to be, being in a sense a true symphony of many arts, and the realization of so much disinterested devotion to the abstract idea we call the community good, could not be brought to their final consummation, which is now recorded, unless there was in the movement an adherence first to social justice and secondly to standards of art. In other words, without a general concensus of support from the opinion and talents of the community, regardless of wealth or financial endowment—the movement would not live, as a true community institution for social advancement must contain within it at least two grains of truth, it must be a typical product of the community, and it must be unique within the community. It must be a true family affair and a family divided against itself must fall.

Thus the incorporators of the movement in Pasadena were among themselves representatives of many interests and many tastes. They assumed not the proprietorship, but merely the leadership in fostering an idea, the ultimate development of which they could not clearly foresee at the time. They made little pretense at art or technique of the stage, but gravely conferred with the director as to what plays he should give, he paying all the bills for the first year, and merely by their approval and moral support, kept alive the tiny flicker of light of a true principle, to-wit, that the theatre they were headed for was a true people's theatre and that they were the mere custodians or representatives for the real owners and beneficiaries who were all the people of the community, and when the sense of personal proprietorship shall have come to each person in the community, one of the great ends of the Community Theatre movement in Pasadena shall have been attained.

S. S. HINDS IN THE "THIRD FLOOR BACK," AN EARLY PLAY

presented, but the actors must always be subservient to the action of the play. This is easily understood as we realize that the community theaters have usually grown out of a group brought together by an interest in play reading and which is later held together and brought to function as a cast by a director, who continually enlarges the circle, thereby providing additional members on whom to call as the idea grows into the selection and production of a play.

The work of the community directors is naturally complicated, particularly in the selection of a play. They would like always to present something new, clever, and arresting, not too difficult to produce but with enough force to intrigue the separate abilities of each actor. But as untrammeled as they should be in their work, the box office must be consulted. In every community there are citizens who accept the theater as a means of relaxation, a mode of entertainment merely. They are willing to be taught a lesson if it be pleasantly taught, but they are a little wary of symbolism. When a play merely amuses, it has only accomplished half its purpose, it can be made to teach a precept without delivering a preachment.

Each director is ever mindful of and on the lookout for new members for the drama section, and usually keeps a card index of all possibilities, never forgetting if he has been told of latent talent in a man or woman. Miss Nina Moise, director of the Santa Barbara Community Players, never goes out on the street, in a store, cafe, or car, without watching for types. She contends everyone is fundamentally an actor, it may be a remnant of the childish love of "dressing up," but in most humans it is there. She notes the play of the features, the walk, the inflections of all voices and pigeonholes various people as a future possibility, and when the demand comes she seeks them out,—apparently picking her actors from the atmosphere, but where she has had them hanging for some time awaiting the call. After the selection, it is literally a welding of the mass together by the personality of the director, and as he is dynamic and vital, so they imbibe strength and vividness of portrayal, often surprising themselves by the force of the response.

Community directors in this way start with an absolutely untrained cast, people who have not had the least inclination or desire to act but who are willing to be convinced that they can do so, if they believe they are achieving part of a public service. When the cast is selected it is with the understanding that each individual knows that it means work, and that there can be no other thing of equal importance during the period of rehearsal—the play is not only the thing, it is the only thing. Rehearsals are held every day or evening, if not of all, then

Continued on Page 30

MRS. CLINTON CHURCHILL CLARKE, ALWAYS A FAVORITE IN THE CASTS OF THE PLAYHOUSE

THE PLAYERS

THE Community Theater as an integral part of the home life of a community has grown intensely within the past ten years, and has developed because of public need. In most communities on this Western Coast a new play was not even anticipated, and even now the best things never come in their entirety from New York or Eastern centers. The most we can hope for is a second rate company with an occasional star. Several cities support their own stock companies, some quite good and others indifferently bad, but in those cases the box office decides the type of play produced.

In the Little Theater or Community Theater movement it is always a case of play interest rather than actor homage. In the legitimate theater this prevails to a degree now, but it is the very essence of community drama. The play must hold the attention of the audience, this it could not do unless it were well

MRS. SAMUEL S. HINDS, WHOSE APPEARANCE IN THE PASADENA COMMUNITY PLAYHOUSE IS LOOKED FORWARD TO WITH PLEASURE

SOUTHLAND

The Meaning of a Community Arts Association

An informal talk given at a membership meeting of the Community Arts Association of Santa Barbara on June 19th. To be continued in August number.

THIS is a membership meeting of your Community Arts Association. There lies before you a detailed statement of the organization of the Association and of its activities during the past year. Aside from the general administration of the Association, these activities lie mainly in four branches—a Drama branch, a Music branch, the Committees on Plans and Planting, and the School of the Arts.

It is not my purpose to discuss the details of these plans. The measure of success which these activities attain depends on the members of this association and on those who lead the work of the various branches. This charming building [the Lobero Theatre] in which you are meeting, one of the most beautiful rooms for the performance of plays that exists on the continent, is itself an encouraging exhibition of your progress. One cannot go about the city and note the increasing interest in gardens and in the architecture of the homes, nor can he visit the schools, without being conscious of the help that pupils are receiving from the efforts of your Association. The concerts appeal to audiences of constantly growing numbers and the opportunities in the School of Arts are drawing to your student body evidently men and women who have a serious purpose and who are eager to avail themselves of the opportunities for improvement. Of all these matters you know how far better than one who sees them as a visitor. The leadership of the men and women who associate themselves together in unselfish labor for the advancement of the community is the leaven which must inspire whatever success such an association may achieve. Touching the details of this work, the friendly co-operation which exists and of the difficulties that are overcome you know far better than I.

Perhaps in the few minutes of your time that I take I can do nothing better than to present the matter from a different point of view, namely, the point of view of the Carnegie Corporation. What were the considerations that weighed with the Carnegie Corporation in making a grant to a Community Arts Association, and what results did the trustees of that corporation have in mind in rendering this aid?

The Carnegie Corporation is an institution having in its custody an endowment whose income shall be used "to promote the advancement and diffusion of knowledge and understanding among the people of the United States." The Deed of Trust goes on to say that this promotion shall be effected by aiding such agencies and means as shall be found from time to time appropriate for this purpose.

The question which the trustees of the corporation have to answer is, what are the agencies that will effectively promote the increase and the diffusion of knowledge among the people of the United States?

This is one of the most difficult questions in the world to answer. Organized giving, like all giving, may do good or harm, or what is perhaps more often the case, may merely result in commonplace and insignificant achievement. Every social agency, educational, scientific, religious, charitable, sincerely believe it is engaged in the promotion and increase of knowledge of the utmost importance. How is one to discriminate between those which are likely to be fruitful and those that are not; between those that ought to receive aid from an endowed foundation and those that ought to depend on public support; between those whom a modest gift might stimulate and those which will be harmed, rather than helped by a gift? This is a complicated question to answer if one undertakes to answer it thoughtfully, sincerely and justly, for there is nothing more evident to the student of our social order than the wide margin that exists between the actual accomplishment of many of our social agencies and that which the promoters of the agency think they accomplish.

Amid all these activities why did the Corporation choose to aid a community art project, and what did it hope to accomplish? The decision of the Corporation was based upon two assumptions: first, that a widely diffused knowledge and appreciation of Art in American life was a cause directly related to the happiness and contentment of the people of our country, and secondly, there was the conviction that a Community Arts Association has a community appeal not characteristic of all social agencies. To these two topics I venture to devote the few minutes that I propose to use.

I suppose there are few persons in this gathering who know less about Art than I do. Nevertheless, I think it is necessary to adopt some conception of what Art signifies before one can form an opinion as to the social value of a Community Art Association. In its popular sense we use the term Art to mean anything that we distinguish from Nature. Art and Nature form two comprehensive terms. I take it that we do not intend to use the term Art in this generic sense, but that we mean to apply it in a restricted sense of two fields of human interest, including in the first place the general and widespread appreciation among all the people of a community of beauty, whether of form or color; and secondly, to include in Art a certain amount of technical training both of youth and of adults in the knowledge and practice of various forms of activity, so that some at least may come to a high order of skill in one or another of these distinctive fields of Art expression, such for example as drawing, designing, music, architecture, gardening, acting or writing. Used in this sense there is no effect of contrast between Art and Nature, but on the contrary in the familiar words from the great master of literature, perhaps the finest of all Arts, "the Art itself is Nature."

The Corporation in making its grant to a Community Art Association had therefore in mind, first, this direct work of the Association in the community both for the appreciation of beauty among its inhabitants in their homes, their gardens, their streets and public buildings, and also instruction of a more or less formal degree to children in the schools, to youth and to adults in such selected courses as seemed most available for the use and instruction of the community. The direct purpose of the gift was to aid in establishing an association whose work would make for a wider appreciation of beauty on the one hand and for a trained and technical skill on the other. The Trustees of the Corporation believed that the accomplishment of these two objects could not fail to contribute to the usefulness and to the happiness of the inhabitants not only of this city and of this region, but of the country; and that a demonstration of a co-operative Community Arts Association in one community would be both stimulating and helpful to the same cause in other communities. What might be called the direct product of the labors of this Association is shown in its results as recorded in public education, and in individual response to instruction, team work and drill.

I think one word ought to be said as to the value in a community of keeping open to adults and to youth such opportunities as are given in your branches of the Community Arts. We Americans are too much inclined to estimate the value of a movement by the number of people who are drawn into it, and we feel discouraged that many people in a community do not come in touch with, or even note the existence of agencies like your admirable School of the Arts, for example. It is, of course, desirable that such knowledge be as widespread as possible, and yet the value of an agency like the School of Arts consists in large measure of keeping alive year by year, and decade by decade, the opportunity for communities to obtain the training which the school offers. This work alone, to keep alive, and to keep in vigorous action these agencies for social improvement is itself a great service. Now and again men and women of unusal ability come up through them whose servce to the world is a repayment for all that has been done.

HENRY S. PRITCHETT.

OPINION

Christ the First Teacher of Evolution

In her play, The Way, Princess Lazarovich-Hrebelianovich has presented so clear and logical an argument for the higher evolution of man, that we publish it as glad tidings of great joy. As read before the Southern Council on International Relations, June 11, this welcome exegesis of what evolution means to the human race was sponsored by Dr. E. C. Moore of the State University in Los Angeles, and by President von KleinSmid of the U. S. C., and by six members of each Faculty representing Science, Philosophy, Sociology and Arts.

THIS conception is based on studies of personality and character in connection with the findings of modern science, compared with what Christ taught, did, and was.

It is postulated that still higher than the apex of the animal kingdom, the merely human order, is another order in nature, toward which man is evolving, and which he must enter here on earth. That is what he is doing here.

This new order, the kingdom of the highest, is to be conquered through the understanding and the spirit. It brings with it mastery of all energy and the faculty to use the forces of nature creatively.

When, with countless millions of years, Nature had produced the true human skull, it was short work to leap ahead to the well-rounded type of human being. With that, arrived the age to go forward to a still grander achievement, the unfolding of sublime potentialities in the creature.

Christ belonged to that order beyond the present man. He was the master of all energy in nature, and able to play back and forth with its mutable forms. That is, was able to overthrow the stabilization of energy in the atoms (in those atoms where stabilization has already been reached)—which science today views as theoretically possible. Not only that, but Christ was able to stabilize or to re-stabilize that energy; so, could achieve all apparent creations of matter. So, too, could he scatter the rapidly disbanding chemical energies of the lifeless body, each back unto its own. So, too, it is logical to suppose that he could make visible to his students after the tomb, some finer, ethereal frame, possessed by us all in embryo, and which, always with us in the earth body or out of it,—but invisible as the ultra-violet rays to our present eyes—may be the "everlasting storehouse" spoken of by Christ for the laying up of imperishable treasure.

In this connection, those curious as to mechanics of action, may remember that with the beginnings of life, that is, of organic matter, in its most primitive forms of amoeba, biologists have noted in the little creatures a positive and negative electricity; and such electro-magnetic charge augments in living individuals all the way up the developing series,—man being the strongest living magnet.

The process of Evolution is probably the conquest and practical appropriation of energy by the mind or spirit. This appropriation and subjection appears to occur in hierarchical procession or method of progression; in which, the more complex, more definite organizations of energy impress into their service the weaker and less sentient forms.

Christ, like all who are great in the highest order, passessed as he said, "the power to lay the body down and to take it up again."

It is submitted that when the point in human development was reached when man began to be capable of higher conceptions—when, as expressed by Christ, he "was able to hear," Christ deliberately took the earth-flesh upon him, stepped down into earth-conditions, to tell men of their nature and latent capacities, and to show them how to attain the full measure of life; life that is eternal because made up of eternal faculties and masteries.

His first word, (recorded by Mark and Mathew), and his continual cry was, "The time is fulfilled, the kingdom of the highest is now at hand!—"the kingdom that is within you!"

What can that mean, if not that the time has come when the human can enter a higher order of creation?—"The kingdom of God" Christ also called it. What is the function of that kingdom, but creativeness?—Therefore man has come to the evolutionary stage where he must step out from nature's nursery and its inexorable rules—the automatic fiats of earlier stages—and assume full individual responsibility—take upon him the perilous but glorious functions of being a free "fellow-laborer," as Christ said, with the Almighty Maker in the very processes of his own further advance.

Man, too, must reach the mastery of all energy and its use for creative purposes. So too, must he, as the script says, "take unto himself his power." That mastery of energy and creative faculty would make him, like Christ, able to say literally, of the body, "I have power to take it up and power to lay it down."

That One, "belonging to the above" as he told of himself, said, to us "you are of the beneath"—but that we must be born again "into the above" (or, as translated, "of the above" —a change that must occur here on earth.—"Thy kingdom come, thy will be done on earth" as says the prayer-directive he gave. He taught that those of the "beneath," even were they to die with him, could not at present go with him, but, that they "will follow hereafter." He stated in plain words that what they saw him do in controlling the forces of nature (literally translated, "working the forces or powers.") we should be able to do later; and"greater things than these," greater than could then be shown; because, as he said, of our primitive degree of understanding:" I speak as to babes and sucklings." He informed us of the means whereby we can grow up from this infantile mind to the full stature of life and understanding. By "asking, knocking, seeking," in "the sole spirit of truth" we can arrive at all knowledge. First on earth he taught that we are developing creatures and, that as developing beings, we possess potentialities beyond our present ability to even conceive: "Eye has not seen, ear has not heard, neither has it entered into the heart of man to imagine, what is in store for those who fulfill the will of the Father." That was the complete teaching of evolution:—God's process, grand with unutterable promise to the developing human race.

At this present time when the whole earth stands in peril of self-destruction, through the beginnings of mastery of physical energy, put into the hands of vast numbers of mankind who have not yet made corresponding conquest of the spirit and are deficient in the understanding of life-values, is the hour not here for all those the earth around, who are beginning to have seeing eyes and hearts that hear, to form definite means of co-operating for the study and intelligent forwarding and intensive acceleration of race evolution into that highest order of vast, ever-enduring life of control over natural forces and of creative activity?—The Kingdom of God, first proclaimed, for each and all by Christ in his words, his acts and in his own person. "Learn of Me!" he said. The means can only be multiform, because of the hierarchies and stages in the unrolling of intelligence, but the aim, one—a single aim for all minkind.

Let the Universities and all other places of learning, the homes and all individuals "awake!" as Christ called to them —"Awake—and rise from the dead!" become active "fellow-laborers with the Creator" in his work here on earth. Let us with free minds study to know that work; get free from the dominations or the lingering grip of lower preceding ranks in Nature; shake off the habits of the reptilian age and the age of inter-slaughter—escape from the tyranny of ages past and gone. "Let the dead past bury its dead!"

Let us look at Christ, listen to him, and know ourselves, believe him when he tells us what power sleeps in even the lowliest of us to overcome evil and weakness, sickness of soul and body, all hindrance; the power to live on, and to achieve works with enjoyment beyond any ever dreamed of before the Christ age came!

PRINCESS ELEANOR CALHOUN LAZAROVICH-HREBELIANOVICH.

SPORT AND TREASURE AT SEA AND ASHORE

R. H. Stone

THE "DIABOLA" OF THE S. C. Y. C., A WINNER IN THE SCHOONER CLASS IN THE SAN DIEGO REGATTA LAST SUMMER.

ONE might start off by saying the sea occupies the center of the stage this month but that seems a very triffling, not to say piffling, beginning for such a mighty subject. However when you are hampered by a landlubber's vocabulary it is difficult to give the seafaring tang unless you resort to all the old standbys and interject the "Yo-Ho-Ho an' a Bottle of—Bevo" which, before tamed by custom or that later day amendment, would bring the salt air right into your lungs while now it only brings tears to the eyes as a tribute to a fond memory.

The increased interest in yachting is very apparent even to the veriest cave dweller or mountain climber, and is proved by the number of recently acquired boats in both the California and Newport Harbor Yacht Clubs, the full programs of all the clubs, and the announcement by the Catalina Yacht Club of the establishment of an annual cruiser race around Catalina Island, July Fourth. The entries are power cruisers and the results are determined by the skill of the crew rather than the speed of the boat.

The addition of one hundred yachts to the southern California yacht clubs is not to be passed over lightly, and means a visible increase in entries to all racing classes and in attendance at the southern California regatta at Santa Barbara. Practically all classes of yachts are included in the ownerships of the various clubs; small open cat boats, R boats, Star boats, ketches, yawls, schooners, cruisers, small power runabouts, Cimmes, Marions, Diesel and Elco schooners.

The cruiser race around Catalina is expected to draw at least forty entries and will naturally include the faster cruisers in these southern waters. The course has been charted around the Island, is approximately sixty miles in length, with Sugar Loaf as the terminus.

Another point, the longest yacht race in the world was undertaken

THE ARTISTS' GUILD AND MEMBERS OF THE ARTISTS' COLONY SAIL, JULY 11, ON A PIRATE CRUISE EN COSTUME, BUT DECRY PIRATICAL INTENT. THE CRUISE INCLUDES A BUFFET SUPPER IN THE QUIET WATERS OF THE ISTHMUS, AND THE PRESENTATION OF A DEEP SEA DRAMA WITH TRUMAN CURTIS AS DIRECTOR.

reeently from our own neighborhood,—meaning San Francisco Bay, and what are a few hundred miles to neighbors when we are contrasting it with a race of four thousand miles? This thing of running down to the South Sea Islands for a bit of luscious color for an artist's palette is frequently done but making a run down to Papeete, Tahiti, in a sailing boat for a cup is yet another thing, and if by chanee along around the equator they sail into a doldrum or two—or do they come in pairs or singly,—it or they will give sufficient pause for all hands to wonder just why they left the cooling shores of the home port.

But everyone knows why. Would we deny a man the spirit of adventure, certainly not a sailing man. Avast and avaunt the idea! It does seem though, speaking of adventure and whatnot, that a whole lot of romance has been abstraeted by the careful planning which went into the salvaging of the sunken treasure ship off the eastern coast with its wealth of bullion and jewels. It rather seems to lose interest when we find the backers are all men of wealth, sportsmen it is true but not the soldier of fortune kind who might have undertaken the job with a scow and a diver's suit made from debris found on a junk pile.

To add another fillip to the imagination and more publicity to the ocean, the Artists' Guild has decided to "go down to the sea in ships" for the annual outing which these hardworking chaps give themselves once a year. The cruise in this case will lead from San Pedro to Catalina Island where, in the quiet waters —stressing the quiet waters,—supper will be served. A deep sea drama is to be produced, director and cast seleeted from the Guild, and will no doubt reek with nautical thoughts and language, attendance on which would serve the double purpose of entertainment and an increased voeabulary. Another year and we may expeet the production of an opera.

If the Guild needs an excuse for an annual outing, though they don't, they might use the line of Walt Whitman's, which Reed Williams has adopted "I loaf and invite my soul."

THE MEMBERS OF THE NEWPORT HARBOR YACHT CLUB HAVE RECENTLY ACQUIRED A NUMBER OF NEW BOATS, WHICH WILL FIND PLEASANT ANCHORAGE IN THESE WATERS.

ON SAN FRANCISCO BAY, THE HOME OF THE CONTESTANTS IN THE LONGEST RACE EVER PLANNED FOR PLEASURE YACHTS, FROM SAN FRANCISCO TO PAPEETE, ISLAND OF TAHITI, IN THE SOUTH SEAS. BOATS ENTERED ARE "MARINER", L. A. NORRIS, OWNER. "ELOISE", JOHN C. PIVER, OWNER, AND "SHAWNEE", MARK FONTANA, OWNER

AMONG the many sporting attractions which Santa Barbara will offer this summer will be the Dog Show to be given by the Santa Barbara Kennel Club on August first and second. Summer shows have their own especial lure, coming at the season of the year when relaxation from the sterner duties of busier months allows time for sport and a more leisurely enjoyment of out-door pleasures. Weather conditions are conducive to good condition in men as well as dogs, and it is natural that the topic of interest among California fanciers should be the prospects of what is planned as the biggest show on the coast. Santa Barbara is a convenient meeting place for North and South, a beautiful and advantageous spot where everybody can bring his dog and have a thoroughly enjoyable time. The plans of the Kennel Club have been generating since mid-winter and no plans will be spared to make the August show the most complete success on record.

Dogs of unusually high rating from all over the state as well as from Santa Barbara proper will be shown. Among the notahle "home" dogs will be the Champion Sealyham owned by Mrs. Goeffrey Courtney, two champion Cannes terriers owned by Mr. and Mrs. Frank Wymond, wire-haired fox terriers owned by H. H. Davis, and wire-haired fox terriers and airdales owned by J. Beverly Alexander. Wm. Poillon will have entrics of shepherd dogs, and C. R. Holmes several magnificent great Danes.

The selection of judges gives every breed an expert of known ability and all three of the gentlemen comprising the slate have the complete confidence of the fancy. For shepard dogs, William Klaasen of San Francisco. agent of the Holland-American line and in this country for a short time, has been engaged. He is well-known as an international dog fancier. John A. Meadows of Vancouver, B. C. returns to California to place awards in sporting terriers, with all the toy breeds added to his schedule. For the third judge, George A. Cranfield of Santa Monica, California has been secured. He is a famous English terrier breeder, who has a reputation for judging at such shows as Pueblo, Long Island, Toronto and others. Mr. Cranfield, it is rumored, has been requested by the Australian Kennel Clubs to judge in Australia during the winter.

Sunday night following the Dog Show will be given over to a banquet to be held at one of the large Santa Barbara hotels. Over $1200 has already been pledged for prizes, and it is announced that there will be special trophies for all local dogs.

The directors of the Santa Barbara Kennel Show are as follows: G. S. Courtney, President; H. H. Davis, Vice President; J. Beverly Alexander, Secretary and Treasurer; Frank A. Wymond, and William Ellis. They will all be on the listing as owners of fine dogs.

ABOVE: A GROUP OF FOX TERRIERS OWNED BY H. H. DAVIS AND J. BEVERLY ALEXANDER

THREE SANTA BARBARA CHAMPIONS, LEFT TO RIGHT, MR. AND MRS. FRANK WYMOND AND TWO CAIRN TERRIERS, MRS. GEOFFREY S. COURTNEY AND SEALYHAM TERRIER

GREAT DANES OWNED BY CHRISTIAN HOLMES OF FEATHER HILL RANCH, MONTECITO

BULLETIN OF SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA CHAPTER A. I. A.

June Meeting of the Southern California Chapter A. I. A.

HAROLD O. SEXSMITH, Editor

THE June Chapter meeting was given over largely to the reports of delegates to the Convention of the Institute recently held in New York. Some of the reports were woefully dry but, thank goodness, most of them sparked here and there with comments of interest to everyone. The comments given extempore were the best for they were of course the high lights which remained in each man's experience. Fitch Haskell gave an especially interesting account of his impressions of the Architectural League Exhibit.

William Clarke hung about sixty or more photographs of the trip he recently made through Europe. Seldom have we seen a more beautiful collection of architectural photographs and certainly never have we seen such a collection of the work of one man. Each picture he has taken is of value to the designer and yet at the same time is a beautiful composition. We earnestly hope that the Chapter will be given another opportunity to see more of Mr. Clarke's work. The picture herewith reproduced will give some faint conception of the quality of the work of our fellow chapter member. The pictures and Mr. Clarke's reminiscences of his trip were the brightest spots in the evening's program.

The following are extracts from the report of Edwin Bergstrom who was a Chapter Delegate to the recent Convention of the Institute. Chapter members please read and meditate.

PROFESSIONAL PRACTICE. The Board of Directors of the Institute reported to the Convention that during the year the Board had received a large number of requests for changes in or amendments to the Institute documents covering the "Principles of Practice," "Canons of Ethics" and "Schedule of Minimum Charges," and that during the year these had received a very considerable discussion within the Board itself and at the Regional Conferences which the Board attended.

The Board has been loath to change and has not made any changes in or additions to the rules or regulations set forth in these documents. The documents deal almost entirely with fundamental truths and these fundamental truths do not change. These documents were compiled when the membership of the Institute was much smaller than it is now; when the problems of giving service were much simpler. The remedy for the difficulties that have arisen and that came before the Board * * * lies entirely with the profession itself. The Institute cannot be used for the financial betterment of its members to secure work for themselves. The architect cannot expect work to come to him unless he is in a position to give, and does give, a service which makes him of value. If there are accepted standards of service and accepted standard fees for such services in any locality, it is not only bad business for the architect to attempt to secure work on lower standards of work and for lower fees, but it is discourteous, ungentlemanly, and unfair to the entire profession in that community, to say nothing of the damage it may and usually does do to the entire building fraternity, affecting not only the architects, but the contractors, material men and, most of all and most important of all, the owners who are paying for the work. * * * * * *

CONVENTO SAN FRANCESCO, FIESOLE. PHOTOGRAPH BY WM. CLARKE

No architect should accept commissions from any one except the owner who employs him. It is an easy thing for dealers, manufacturers, salesmen, agents, and contractors to offer commissions to the architect. In some cases the architect can show, because of arbitrary trade rulings that such commissions could not accrue to the owner and that such fees might enable him to do the work for a smaller commission from the owner, but it is improper for anyone to accept such commissions and it is the duty of the profession to enlighten the younger men who are coming into the profession, in regard to the real danger of such methods and of how they undermine all possibility of honest, capable service.

* * * *

Chapter members will be glad to know that the Allied Architects have opened a "Canteen" at their drafting room at 420 South Spring. Noon lunch is being served there from twelve to one. The Canteen is open to all architects. The lunches are served at cost and we are happy to report that they are the best we ever had for fifty cents. Let's get the habit and meet each other there occasionelly.

The following is the Survey Standard used by the office of Witmer & Watson. When surveys are complete with all the information requested by this Survey Standard, they have proved very valuable and have saved much time and many errors in the making of Working Drawings. Surveyors are requested to furnish the information listed below when surveying property for clients of this office. When deviations are necessary, please inform this office before proceeding.

Scale of Drawings to be $\frac{1}{8}$" equals 1'0".

Drawings to show:

1. Lot lines and "Set outs" for location of corners. (Describe markers).
2. All angles off 90°.
3. Walks, parkways, curbs, streets. State if streets are paved.
4. Sewer and man holes; direction and per cent grade of flow, depth below datum, location and depth of all "Y's".
5. Show Gas main and size. (Name company.)
6. Water main.
7. Electric light poles. (Name company.)
8. Nearest telephone pole or conduit
9. North arrow.
10. All important trees accurately spotted, i.e., within 3".
11. Datum.
12. Elevations of all corners.
13. Contours at 1'0" intervals.
14. Elevation at top and bottom of all vertical cuts, including such cases where elevations would be taken on adjacent property in preparation for design of retaining walls.
15. Give lot, block, tract, sub-division, or other legal description.

STEEL CASEMENTS OF FINE ENGLISH MAKE

A PAMPHLET obtained from B. B. Bell and Company, describes an interesting line of Hope's Steel Casements, which they are handling and which is carried in stock in their warehouses so immediate delivery can be given to customers.

The superiority of the steel window has been so thoroughly demonstrated in better class buildings that it needs but little comment. Hope's Casements, particularly, have enjoyed a reuptation for reliability and superiority of manufacture, which has resulted in their being used in most of the important buildings throughout the World. The outstanding features of these windows are that they provide a thoroughly reliable steel window with substantial hardware of traditional design, which will allow of their use in any architectural style, at a very low price.

These windows can be set in any material and in any situation. There is no limit of their use, with the exception that openings of the standard sizes must be provided. The range of these standard sizes, however, will provide a window suitable for any ordinary requirements.

Standardization means the production of a high-class article at half the price of the specially made one. It allows large stocks in warehouses and immediate delivery. It does not restrict the architect in making his designs, as the choice of the windows offered will allow of any architectural treatment being carried out. It allows uniformity of glass sizes, fly screens, etc.

Steel windows of Hope's designs give distinctive architectural lines in domestic buildings which cannot be approached by wood sash. They are weathertight. They are delivered ready for fixing into the building as a complete unit, with casements hung and complete hardware attached. Any man who can use a screwdriver can install them satisfactorily.

No labor is required other than fixing the complete window and glazing. They are finished with baked enamel, and with ordinary care do not require painting for a number of years. They cannot stick or jam and will open easily and smoothly in all weather conditions. There are no repair bills after installation.

A high class window with these advantages is offered at a price no higher than the unsatisfactory wooden sash.

Standard sizes were developed from hundreds of years of experience in making Steel windows. More recent experience has shown that the standard sizes cover all possible requirements. The sizes have been arrived at by making every window a multiple of a well-proportioned pane, with the result that variation in glass sizes is reduced to a minimum.

All joints are electrically welded, and the Fittings, Hinges, etc., are riveted, thus making a window which is practically indestructible. The Fittings allow for a wide range of ventilation, from an opening of about an inch to a full right angle, and the windows can be held open in any position with perfect safety and without rattling.

Hope's Special Cleaning Hinges fitted to Side Hung Casements allow the outside of the windows to be cleaned from within, and provide for the easy operation of awning cords.

Henry Hope and Sons of England are the pioneers in steel casements, having made fine windows for over one hundred years. In their works the old fashioned system of apprenticeship is still in vogue with grandfather, father and son all working on the same job, painstakingly making reliable windows which years ago passed the experimental stage. Their window casements and frames therefore will not easily be confused with the cheap imitation of today.

BUILT INTO THE HILLSIDE SO THAT IT COVERS THE CUTTING OF THE HILL, THIS DELIGHTFUL HOME OF MR. AND MRS. W. PAUL LOVELAND ON SOUTH GRAND AVENUE, PASADENA ILLUSTRATES THE BEST USE OF HILL PROPERTY. DESIGNED BY MR. LOVELAND. PHOTOGRAPHS BY GEORGE HAIGHT.

A GROUP OF HILL-SIDE HOUSES DESIGNED BY W. PAUL LOVELAND

By M. URMY SEARES

HOW to build homes on the hillside without hurting the hill has become the chief problem in the present development of our Southland. San Francisco solved this problem decades ago by taking the attitude that hill sites are desirable, advantageous and to be made the most of. Berkeley and Piedmont solved it by the same method, with an added insistance on a study of the contours on the spot instead of in some city engineer's office. The hill towns of Europe have capitalized the problem and their picturesque hills have made them famous in art and pictorial illustrations. "I will lift up mine eyes unto the hills from whence cometh my help" sang the Psalm ist of old; and humanity has followed his example for ages. But today in California it is the hill which needs help from humanity or rather from its Creator to defend it from humans armed with steam-shovels.

Plainsmen should not try to subdivide a hill without help. They do not know its good points. They cannot intelligently capitalize its advantages. There are men among us who have lived all their lives on the hill tops. Instinctively they guard that which they love and preserve it for posterity. There are those among us who have studied the hill towns of Italy, Spain and Switzerland, they have much knowledge which it would pay us to employ before we make more mistakes that are never to be remedied.

Now that the plains have become occupied by commonplace, gridiron additions to the city; and only the choice hill sites are available for homes, subdividers and realtors are making a more intensive study of hillside construction and sites hitherto avoided are now being used.

VIEW OF LOGGIA AND CORTILE THROUGH THE GARDEN GATE.

Fortunately for those who love California the expense of the grading thought necessary has prevented the use of hill tracts until now. It is only lately that this terrific expense—like the unnecessary one of covering the side—walks with hard concrete which one wouldn't ask a horse to walk on—has been forced upon California by commercal concerns ignorant of good taste and selfishly aggressive.

Avoid all grading, if possible, and keep what little grading is unavoidable covered by the house. This is the first rule for hill building which wise ones have evolved out of their experience. Study your own particular hill, become intimate with its dells and dimples, walk over it, live on it, know its every curve and contour before you dare to turn a steam shovel loose on its softly rising slopes which like the full bosom of Mother Earth seem to be created to welcome the tired world and sooth it to quietude and peace.

It is only by covering some hills, already disfigured by grading, that their beauty will be restored. Therefore it is best to study very seriously the covered slopes of Italian and Spanish cities and see if we cannot speed the day when our landscape will regain its loveliness and our hill view be obtained without destroying the pleasure of others by our careless, thoughtless butchering of California hills.

One of the most distinctive homes in this city is the "Villetta", 788 S. Grand Ave., designed and built by W. Paul Loveland. This picturesque dwelling of the Roman Campagna type, is fraught with a keen sense of artistic harmony and shows that atmosphere can be built into a home if thoughtfulness and consideration are exercised in the planning. Mr. Loveland's home is situated on a hillside, far back from the street, giving the house a dignified and adequate setting. It is carefully placed with regard to the grouping of trees which serve as a frame for the lovely view across the Arroyo to the sunset hills beyond.

The "Villetta" is the first unit of a picturesque hillside of homes designed by Mr. Loveland and being built on Grand Avenue at Bradford street. Mr. Loveland and his associates, Messrs. Rufus and James Spalding, are developing a distinctive group of six homes each one individual and with personality; but each so harmoniously studied with regard to the others that the unit when completed will impart the real Italian atmosphere. Mr. Loveland made a special study of the Italian domestic architecture during his years of residence and architectural work in Rome and Florence and so is able to give the touch of distinction and reality to his compositions.

There are sun-filled cities basking above the Adriatic Sea with just such homes as these upon their terraced reaches. Within tall walls surrounding Italian gardens just such effects of repose and seclusion are obtainable as are to be found within the sheltered gardens of 788 South Grand Avenue. Long pleasant rooms with time marked rafters adorn these southern European homes; rooms where the sunlight falls very golden and the shade very cool. So in this local home these rare effects are caught with genius-like ability and the cool rooms and the lovely secluded gardens tell of the high place which modern architecture has reached.

In the Studio, reserved for Mr. Loveland's personal use, quaint rafters, cleverly treated to give the effect of age and atmosphere, stand out together with the old tufa stone fireplace as predominant in the room.

The main doorway of the "Villetta" is approached by way of an open stairway, common to European homes. Through a handsome antique oak door carved in Italian design, one enters the spacious living room. Here the high wooden ceiling with heavy chestnut beams antiqued to give a sense of softening age is used to remarkable advantage.

Up two iron-railed stone steps the refectory dining-room is approached from the living room. Plain walls with old copper light sconces and walnut panels comprise the interior which is cool and restful by reason of the quiet loggia and cortile onto which it opens. Beyond, the garden enclosed by a high wall, is entered by a picturesque gate. Here an old well head has been converted into a fountain. From the cortile a little winding flight of stairs leads to the canopied roof garden above. The bed rooms of this home all have two exposures, either on the garden or overlooking the hills. Light, unpapered walls give the rooms a quaint monastery-like coolness and the old style furniture enhances the effect of repose. Satinwood floors, tile floors, and brick floors are used throughout the interior. The unevenly laid red tile roof adds a touch of friendly color. Into garden wall is sunk a signed escutcheon by the Architect, an adornment also characteristic of European architecture, where workmen often mark their own particular aspects of craftsmanship.

THE CORTILE OR OUTDOOR ROOM ENCLOSED. PHOTOGRAPH BY ALBERT HILLER.

THE BEAUTIFUL ITALIAN LIVING ROOM OF THE LOVELAND HOME. PHOTO. BY GEORGE HAIGHT.

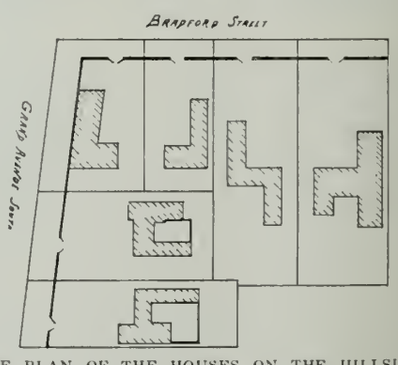
Necessitous utility has not been sacrificed for artistic form and atmosphere, for wardrobe cupboards, linen presses and closets for hats and shoes have been generously installed and every inch of available space happily utilized. A convenient kitchen is constructed along tavern lines. The red tile sink and floor, the antiqued wooden cupboards with handwrought hinges and the row of gleaming copper kettles make an unusual kitchen, agreeably artistic, yet possessing all the essential requirements of a modern kitchen. A large garage and workroom lie curiously concealed as part of the building.

The incidental features of the home are typical of the thoughtfulness used throughout. An old-fashioned lamp abuts from a corner of the house, just as such lamps are clamped on European homes today. Medallions of quaint design are let into the walls of the garden and interior and tell of the former religious customs of the Italian peasants.

In transferring the architecture of one country to another the architect finds some of his greatest obstacles in the hidden mechanical details. For this reason Mr. Loveland is himself supervising the work of the contractors under him, all of whom he has selected for their quality of output and special fitness.

The painting done on the Loveland residence and that to be done on the adjoining houses is by John Williams of 167 Harkness street, Pasadena. His pride in preserving the house and its adornment of modern craftsmanship is as great as the pride of his predecessors and will be reflected in the building as long as it stands just as the pride of the early Italian workmen is displayed to this day in their century-old homes.



The doors, flooring and beamed ceilings of the house are among the first details to excite the admiration of the visitor. Mr. Loveland made a happy selection when he went to the Orban Lumber Company at 77 South Pasadena Avenue, Pasadena, for his lumber. Among the beautiful effects in lumber which this company provided are the satinwood floors for the bedrooms which give the smooth effect of age better than any other possible wood.

The hardware, which was selected at the Live Hardware Company at 1511 Mission Road, South Pasadena, is of a severe simplicity and correctness of line necessary to harmonize with the design of the house. Only at a shop that offered a splendid assortment could one be so well satisfied, and the Live Hardware Company, which lives up to its name in business-like methods, is equipped to meet the needs of architects who limit themselves to periods as well as those who do not.

The Pasadena Roofing Company at 306 Elm Street, Pasadena, furnished the composition roofing, and laid the substantial gravel and oiled drive. Although it may be the tendency of some architects to disregard the utilitarian points of building for those more beautiful Mr. Loveland has the ideal record of never having had a roof leak. He guards against these annoyances by his careful selection of materials from reliable firms.

Alongside the emphasis laid on good roofing, Mr. Loveland considers the necessity of good sheet metal work of great importance. This he entrusted to Earl Fisher of 4936 Buchanan Street, Los Angeles. Mr. Fisher is more than competent; he does his work with the idea in mind of giving full value to his employer, an idea that is of supreme necessity when one comes to selecting the right sort of man for work of this nature.

The electric fixtures Mr. Loveland selected from the Jacobs Electric Shop at 1128 Mission Road, South Pasadena. The completeness of this shop is excelled only by the interest and willingness of its employees who enter into their work with enthusiasm and a fine spirit of loyalty from the very beginning, when one selects a fixture, until the installation is over and the house itself is regarded as one of their products.

THE PLAN OF THE HOUSES ON THE HILLSIDE

Out of the bewildering array of wrought iron work at the Vogan Iron Company at 10 East Bellevue Street, Pasadena, came the wrought iron for the residence. Here simplicity of design was necessary but along with it was even more desirable a real beauty of line. In both cases the Vogan Iron Works were ready and competent to serve.

A visitor at the office of Z. B. Galloway at 95 South Wilson Avenue, Pasadena, is at once impressed by the double emphasis laid on artistry and utility displayed by this dealer in tiles. When Mr. Loveland wanted a floor that duplicated as far as possible the cool tile floors of sunny Italy Mr. Galloway offered him exactly what he was looking for and not only arranged a satisfactory purchase but provided men to lay the floor to obtain the desired pattern.

IN MEXICAN WATERS

By George Hugh Banning

Boston, Mass, Charles E. Lauriat Co.
London, Martin Hopkinson and Co. Ltd.

IS DEDICATED TO CAPTAIN ALLAN HANCOCK,
Master of the "Velero II"
My Host
Who sometimes went out of his way for my "damphoolishness"

Never was more appreciative chapter written on mere islands than that which heads the list of chapters in this book and dares the title "Isles of Nothing." All the spirit and dash of the boy whose imagination has been fed on Robinson Crusoe and Stevenson's tales, all the smothered feelings of a child who had lived for years within sight of our channel isles and had heard them described as full of nothing, lie in and lead us into the reading of a journeys' tale. By the charm of its diction and the delicacy of its handling a subtle phase of boyhood this introductory chapter marks the writer as a master and makes one search the lists for more journeys among the islands of the sea or experiences of life with this gifted Californian.

San Clemente, visited in boyhood but a few miles from his home on Catalina; Guadalupe where were sea elephants eighteen feet from nose to tailtip; and the Revilla Gigedo Group, rise before the reader as peaks protruding from a sub-marine continent.

All through the book one finds poetic thought striving to find expression in conjunction with the relating of the skipper's interesting log. A little bolder effort, a little freeing of the spirit of adventure upon the sea of literary skill and this writer will take the material gathered on such a voyage and weave a tale of southern seas unburdened by the log.

When we catch him alone in the jungle of banyan trees on Socorro Island, the narrative takes on a unity of litery progress that might easily be used to carry through a finely flowered imaginative tale.

All the materials necessary are there,—enough for many tales; and this prolific source, this book of actual adventure and travel opens a field untouched by Tusitila, and is Mr. Banning's own by right of prior literary invasion and the adventurous spirit in which he has taken literary possession in the name of his muse.

As we touch with the narrator at old, unfrequented ports on the west coast of Mexico and here feel with him in the evident love of lands where there were no towns dependent upon tourist travel "and where elaborately carved stone edifices built by Franciscan Friars are smothered in jungle or have passed, with all their grace of architecture, from this earth and its striving after something new, we are glad to have discovered this method of visiting romantic but, we fear, plague-ridden ports of entry; and hope that hereafter we may wander there under his delightful leadership in many a tile of our neighboring southern seas.

EL RETIRO NOW KEPT BY MRS. JOHN WALLACE AND MISS DOROTHY WALLACE AS A MEMORIAL TO CLARENCE URMY, WHO THERE WROTE MUCH OF HIS RECENT VERSE.

THE DAY THAT I WAS BORN

THIS little autobiography of Clarence Thomas Urmy, who was the first of California's native poets to win international recognition, has been presented to a limited market for nearly a year. It is rapidly nearing the out-of-print state of Mr. Urmy's books of poems and will probably be reprinted in a contemplated memorial edition of his works.

Friends of the author have used this posthumous reprint of an Argonaut story for starting a memorial fund in San Jose and many dollars have been raised for this purpose by Miss Emma Thomas, 37 Devine Street, San Jose.

Recent developments of the movement to make a memorial to Clarence Urmy in San Jose have caused it to take the form of a fellowship or lectureship in Poetry at Stanford University where a part of the Urmy library is now accessible to students. San Jose contributors to the South Park Monument to "The Troubadour" in San Francisco who prefer to transfer their contributions to this new fund, may do so by writing to Miss Ruth Royce, one time librarian at San Jose State College and now secretary to Dean Gresham, 1219 Sacramento Street, San Francisco. Miss Royce with Dean Gresham heartily sympathizes with the idea of a Stanford lectureship in Poetry, and has the permission of those nearest to Mr. Urmy for the transfer of San Jose funds to a trust company in San Jose for this memorial, started by Miss Thomas. Friends who are more interested in a gradual accumulation of funds for the Troubadour monument in old South Park—so closely connected with the early history of San Francisco as to justify such a remembrance—are requested to communicate with the following: Mr. Garton Keyston, a close friend of Mr. Urmy's who has recently resigned his position as assistant attorney for the State of California and can be addressed at his office, 506-508 United Bank and Trust Company's building, Market Street, San Francisco; others of that depleted group of the intimate "Eight," so closely identified with Mr. Urmy's literary and musical life in San Francisco, are: Mr. Newton Barry, 417 Montgomery Street; Mr. Austin Sperry, 301 Brannan Street; Mr. De Lancey Lewis, recently made San Francisco manager for the Pacific Mutual, and Mr. Harold Marshman, 718 Broderick Street, San Francisco. Mr. A. M. Robertson, publisher of Mr. Urmy's book, A California Troubadour, and who recently aided in the placing of some of the Californian's verses in a new anthology, is also interested in the establishment of this San Francisco memorial.

MARTHA

WATSON-KERBY

Exclusive Fashions for Women

GOWNS WRAPS SPORTS CLOTHING

2224 WEST SEVENTH STREET

LOS ANGELES

WESTLAKE SQUARE PHONE FITZROY 0823

"little Joe's"

SALE SPRING SHEETS

No. 101. Fine quality fawn twill, double shoulder, reinforced at neck, and rump. Bound all around, open or closed fronts, with or without surcingles. 72 inches, $4.00—76 inches, $4.25.

No. 102. Made of linen finish heavy cotton cloth, white background, assorted fancy plaids. 72 inches, $4.90—76 inches, $5.25.

No. 103. Made of all wool cloth, extra fine finish in fancy plaids. 72 inches, $9.95—76 inches, $10.45.

Write for catalog.

Discount to riding academies and saddlery stores.

THE "LITTLE JOE" WIESENFELD CO.
BALTIMORE, MD.

Carrara Marble Neptune Fountain, Reproduction by a Pupil of the Great Sculptor Gianbologna, of his Celebrated Fountain of Neptune in the Piazzo del Nettuno, Bologna, Italy.

THE MEYER AND di SEGNI GALLERY
Antique Furniture, Paintings, Fabrics, Marbles and Bronzes.
640 South Figueroa Street Telephone VAndike 2936
Los Angeles

BULLETIN OF THE CRAFTS

By MARION HUGUS CLARK

THE Arts and Crafts Society of Southern California held its first annual meeting on Friday, June the twelfth, in its own shop at 2508 West Seventh Street. The shop is a sizable place, nearly opposite Westlake Park in Los Angeles. When one thinks back a short year when a few interested craftsmen rented the McDowell Club in which to organize, it is cheering to have a big, beautiful place of our own in which to meet.

At the first meeting, the following officers were elected: Mr. Porter Blanchard, President; Mr. Douglas Donaldson, First Vice President; Mrs. Edward Perry Clark, Second Vice President; Miss Edna Jones, Treasurer; Miss Vivian Stringfield, Secretary. Five concillors were also elected to serve on the executive board: Mr. H. L. Hewson; Miss Fannie Kerns; Mrs. Caroline Owen; Mr. F. W. Vreeland; Mrs. Karl Howenstein.

A constitution and bylaws after the plan of the older societies was drawn up and adopted.

The first meeting was held on May 28, 1924. In August, 1924, the shop was established. Those early days of the experiment were attended by some sleepless nights for the less adventurous. Would we have money to pay the rent and would the craftsmen continue to support their shop? One never mentions previous worries unless the present prospect is rosy. A statement from the shop committee shows an income of $4773.21 for the ten months. The rent has been paid and the active craftsmen have found an increased demand for their work. Mr. Hewson's optimism is very largely responsible for the marked success in that necessary part of the society's enterprise.

The society has been conspicuous also in its educational and social activities. There have been four evening meetings at the shop—two of which were exhibits. This magazine has contained a resume of the talks given by Mr. Ralph Helm Johannot, Mr. William G. Purcell and Mrs. Willoughby Rodman.

If the Arts and Crafts Society shows any great success in the future, Mrs. Seares' steady support through CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND will merit the thanks of every craftsman.

Three dinners were held at which Mr. Herman Sachs, Mr. Be Hannesy and Mr. Martin Justice were the speakers.

The faithfulness of the board in the past year will be an incentive to the new officers who were elected to serve for one year. Dr. Edwin C. Hyde, President; Mr. H. L. Hewson, First Vice President; Mrs. Edward Perry Clark, Second Vice President; Miss L. E. Patterson (of the Chouinard School of Art) Secretary; Mr. Harry Schoeppe, Treasurer. The councillors: Mr. Douglas Donaldson; Miss Fannie Kerns; Mr. F. W. Vreeland; Mrs. M. D. Wenzell; Mr. J. C. Freeman.

Following the business meeting, Volga tiles were shown and their original designs explained to the members. Miss de Volgenski, who brings her art from Russia, told us that these bits of pottery in pure color and bold design are inspired by Russian fairy tales.

The pages of our magazines and newspapers overflowed with enthusiasm for the Cizek Exhibit, the work of the children of Vienna.

On last Friday night, we persuaded friend husband and son Bob to go with us to the McKinley Junior High School, which is down Vernon and Central Avenue way in Los Angeles, to see their play called "Joseph, the Interpreter."

From Virgil Junior High, where our somewhat pampered child goes to school to McKinley Junior High is a long ride through well-ordered residence streets, then through blocks of stores, finally through streets that seem all to be ready-cut bungalows with peeling front steps.

After seeing the play called "Joseph, the Interpreter," I am not sure that McKinley Junior has not the advantage.

There was a middle aged descendent of Joseph's father Jacob in the seat in front of us. Around us were children and their parents of many races, Mexican, Russian, Czeks, African, but the Italian and Hebrew seemed rather in the ascendent.

There was an orchestra, that played its piece and then the curtain went up on the first scene where Joseph is sold into Egypt. The coat of many colors struck the key note for this spectacle of beautiful color. I think the craftsmen of the school, Marion Gurnee, Margaret Clapp and Audrey Lyon chose this play for the opportunity it gave of teaching and demonstrating hue value and intensity of color. The design was good but secondary. Elsie Bartlett adapted the words.

The second scene was Potiphar's Palace. My memory of that is magenta and red-violet, that played around the feet of the young performers, none of whom could have been more than sixteen. There was a stunning curtain of an all-over design not of the tiresome King Tut pattern, but original and yet Egyptian. No two dresses were alike.

The materials for the costumes were of cheese cloth dyed, sateen, Japanese crepe, tinsel and quantities of Chinese gold and silver paper. The scenery was of wall board and canvas. Every bit of the staging, costuming and acting was executed at McKinley Junior High by the boys and girls under the direction of their able craft teachers.

We met Marion Gurnee on our trip to Moen Kopi village in the Painted Desert last Easter. In the Indian store there, we each bought baskets. She said that she expected to use hers in teaching her children. It happens that there is an alcove just within the door of her class room. Here where the children can see it well, she arranges still life studies. I asked Mrs. Gurnee what nationality brought the greatest ancestral gift of talent to her class room. In that school, the Hebrew leads.

It would be interesting to learn the ratio of nationality and talent in the Cizek school, which is also composed of many peoples.

An Arts and Crafts emblem to be used on stationery stickers and wrapping paper is required. Two prizes will be given for the first and second best drawings. A woven dress pattern has been contributed by Mr. Hewson for the first prize and half a dozen hand-made spoons contributed by Mr. Blanchard for the second prize. The councillors will act as judges, reserving the right to refuse all drawings if they do not come up to standard.

The Serendipity Antique Shop

Antiques Lamps Decorations

22, 26 and 30 SOUTH LOS ROBLES
PASADENA, CALIFORNIA
BRADFORD PERIN, Proprietor
Telephone F. O. 7111

Announcement

The new Interior Decorating Department, has on exhibition many Lamps, Screens, Cushions and Foot-stools made in our own work-room by specialists, as well as fine fabrics for draperies and furniture coverings.

Can You Save 17 Cents a Day?

A saving of slightly less than 17 cents a day will purchase one share of Edison Stock.

The interest accumulated on one share of Edison 6% Preferred Stock at $95.00, assuming payments of $5.00 per month are made regularly throughout the contract, amounts to $4.32.

On completion of contract, dividends of $6.00 per year are paid on the share in the form of a dividend check for $1.50 mailed every three months.

If purchased for cash, the price per share is $94.00 and dividends start immediately.

Southern California Edison Company

RECENT BOOKS—REVIEWS

Continued from Page 14

IT IS A STRANGE HOUSE

By DANA BURNET, Little Brown and Company

Life may have any aspect the individual viewpoint chooses. To some it appears very like a whirlpool of iniquity, with its human victims forever moving in a vicious circle; to others as a vale in Paradise with lovely beings bathed in a constant atmosphere of joy and happiness; to Mr. Burnet it is not a chamber of horrors, but a whole house full, with miserable humanity occupying its various rooms. "It Is a Strange House" is a drama which reminds us continually of the line in a hymn, stating that "only man is vile." Herein he is very vile indeed. In the upper and luxurious rooms of this fanciful abode dwells that part of the human race endowed by worldly fortune, but none the less selfish and sordid, practicing every kind of sham and hypocrisy; lower down are the workers, ground by constant toil for the benefit of those above them; in the basement, too awful for words, exists a mass of human wreckage buried hopelessly in sin, sorrow, and disease. But unhappiness and woe is the common lot of all. Dear, dear! We knew life could be pretty terrible, but we did not dream it was as bad as this. We are indeed thankful when the mechanism of the play occasionally becomes so apparent as to destroy the illusion, or when we arrive at the only havens of refuge from this pessimistic sea of trouble, the strikingly decorative and imaginative directions for the stage settings for the scenes.

Very likely this view of the human race pursuing its earthly course does not reflect Mr. Burnet's true conception regarding life. We infer it is assumed merely for the purpose of trying out the literary effect of a very ingenious allegory, as well as for the display of a pen dripping with irony, capable of making bittter allusions to frailties and inconsistencies undoubtedly underlying many human institutions. Even so, no symbolical presentation of life can be wholly honest which omits all references to the soothing influence of nature, or that "hope that springs eternal in the human breast," or the spirit that prompted Browning's "God's in His Heaven, All's well with the World." To any man who sees life devoid of these elements, the most suitable advice would be to consult a physician immediately concerning the best remedies for a disordered liver or what to do for an unbalanced mind.

MADONNA AND THE STUDENT

By ISABEL NEILSON, B. W. Huebsch, Inc.

Readers of this racy and delectable tale will finish it with widely varying emotions, among which, we may safely affirm, will not be ennui. But we make no assertions about shocked feelings, the depth of which will depend largely on how far back into the Victorian past the roots of one's training extend. For this is a decidedly modern book of the post-war type, occasionally frank to a startling degree. It can hardly be called a novel, since it has no plot, but merely describes the experiences of a young woman, not so very young, as a student during a recent winter in Munich. The details are related in the first person very simply, in a manner of what appears to be artless, but is far more likely artful naivete, with such a semblance of reality as to make us believe we are reading actual reminiscences. However, the characters and events are presumably fictitious, because such tactics as are herein adopted by this "Madonna Vampire," if truthfully recorded, would certainly end in someone's murder, if we know anything about the male genus. And what is more convincing, if we poke away the light iridescent albeit wholly competent froth on the surface of the story, we discern underneath a very firm purpose and indications of extremely subtle propaganda. In other words, we have with us once again the reformer, far more tricky than most, but no more trustworthy as to viewpoint.

FRANKLIN WINSLOW KANE

By ANNE DOUGLAS SEDGWICK, Houghton, Mifflin Company

The lady who wrote this book some fifteen years ago, was born in America, married a Frenchman, and has lived in England. In consequence, her knowledge gained at first hand among expatriated Americans, and English people of the leisure classes, has greatly assisted her natural facility in a certain type of fiction. It is inevitable that we compare this book, written previously to "The Little French Girl," but just recently offered to the public, with that phenomenal best seller. In both appear the same method of portraying characters and events, in a smooth limpid style, presenting men and women, serene, cultured and well bred, who for the most part keep their pallid passions under strict control. Strangely enough, her story proceeding in this leisurely fashion, more analytical than eventful, compels the reader to follow it very closely, with interest and appreciation. All well and good in "Franklin Winslow Kane," until unfortunately matters have to be wound up because even the most successful lady novelist can not go on forever. As this crisis approaches, Mrs. DeSelincourt has every appearance of viewing the situation she has created with consternation and dismay and of making frantic efforts to rearrange affairs to suit the views of sentimental readers, disregarding the ways of man, God, or destiny. So diverting is the vision of her strenuous endeavor to gain such ends, that here the book becomes almost ludicrous. What a sigh of relief she must have given when it was finished.

S. M. Wershow
LADIES TAILOR
Riding Habits, Coats and Suits
Furs Stored and Repaired
7066 Hollywood Boulevard
Hollywood
GRanit 4254

Antiques
JOHN W. CONDIT
Dealer in rare old pieces selected from private homes. Specialist in the proper restoration of heirlooms.
199 S. FAIR OAKS AVE. TEL. F. O. 315
PASADENA, CALIFORNIA

GEORGE · D · HAIGHT
159 · NO · MEREDITH · AVE ·
PASADENA · CALIFORNIA
TELEPHONE F · O · 3133
ELY · CATHEDRAL
ARCHITECTURAL · PHOTOGRAPHS

FLORNINA
Gowns · Negligees · Accessories and Bathing Suits
Ready to Wear or Made to Order
Unusually Attractive Frocks in Tub Silks and Dotted Swiss
95 South Los Robles Ave., Pasadena
Phone Fair Oaks 113

HEWSON HAND CRAFT STUDIOS
Handwoven One Piece Dresses, Coats and Scarfs, Canadian and Candlewick Bedspreads
Dutch and East Indian Brass, Beads, Fine Pendants and Objects of Art in Great Variety
F. O. 6555 — 602 E. Colorado St. Pasadena
DUnkirk 4909 — 2508½ W. 7th St. Los Angeles

ANNOUNCING
HENRY C. FOES
INTERIOR DECORATOR
Formerly Known as
BARNES STUDIOS
Now Located in the Beautiful New Community Playhouse Building
33 So. El Molino Ave. Pasadena

HILLER'S STUDIO
OFFICIAL PHOTOGRAPHER FOR CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND
49 EAST COLORADO STREET
PASADENA, CALIFORNIA
ALBERT HILLER Phone, Fair Oaks 155

French and Italian Arts
Imported by
ELEANOR AND HOLLINGSWORTH BEACH
Italian Sports Hats — Antiques
Old Furniture — Brocades
Embroidered Linens — Old Prints
French Faience — Italian Majolica
Large Parchment Portfolios for Prints and Photographs
630 E. Colorado Street, Pasadena, California
Fair Oaks 6028

Welcome to call and Browse
Rare & Art Books
First Editions · Early Printing · Autographs · Americana
Books Notable for Printing Illustrations and Binding.
Dawson's Book Shop
627 So. Grand Ave.
Catalogues sent on request:

T. W. Mather Co. Inc.
PASADENA, CAL.
Dry Goods
Women's & Children's Wearing Apparel
Colorado Street at Marengo

PASADENA HOMESEEKER'S REFERENCE PAGE

Superior Rental Service
HOMES, APARTMENTS, BUNGALOWS
In Pasadena's Exclusive Sections
MRS. MORRIS (Rentals Exclusively)
THE J. W. WRIGHT CO.
312 E. COLORADO ST., PASADENA

QUALITY SERVICE
THE ELITE
DRY CLEANERS AND DYERS
Plant: 797 So. Fair Oaks Ave.
Colo. 1349 Pasadena, Cal.

LAUNDERERS DRY CLEANERS
Royal Laundry Co.
461 So Raymond Colo. 67
Pasadena, Calif.

Decorating and Finishing Exclusive Furniture
W. G. Pesenecker
Interior and Exterior Painting
34 North Broadway
Phone Col. 5656 Pasadena, Calif.

KATHERINE BASHFORD
LANDSCAPE ARCHITECT
810 CENTRAL BUILDING
TERRACE 9403 PASADENA

The Lundblads
A Real Home in the Country
Open to Guests the Entire Year
Address Mrs. L. Lundblad
Saratoga, California

Permutit Soft Water Saves Clothes
TROY LAUNDRY
In Business for Twenty Years
Pasadena, Cal. Phone C. 146
Alhambra 243-J

WE offer for investment of Personal or Trust Funds sound Securities returning highest rates consistent with safety.
WILLIAM R. STAATS COMPANY
Established 1887
Government, Municipal and Corporation Bonds
311 East Colorado St.
PASADENA, CALIF.
Los Angeles San Diego San Francisco

The Assembly Tea Room
The In and Out-of-Town House of Los Angeles serves
LUNCHEON, TEA AND DINNER
INCIDENTALLY
The Very Choicest Food
Special Sunday Dinner 5 to 8
644 South Flower St., Los Angeles
Phone VAndike 7177

Designed and Built by Heating Experts

BETTER HOMES
ARE HEATED WITH
OHRMUND BROTHERS
Unit System of Heating
ELECTRICALLY CONTROLLED
Thousands in Use in Southern California. Let us show you why Ohrmund Brothers Units are superior.
HEATING AND SHEET METAL CONTRACTORS
PASADENA GAS APPLIANCE CO., INC.
901 E. Colorado Street
Pasadena Fair Oaks 9393

OAK
BEECH
—
Furnished
Scraped
H. G. BENNETT
HARDWOOD FLOORS EXCLUSIVELY
524-26 SO. RAYMOND AVE,
COLO. 178 - PASADENA, CALIF.
Estimates Cheerfully Given
Old Floors Resanded and Polished
MAPLE
BIRCH
—
Laid
Finished

Angelus Lighting Fixture Co., Inc.
Designers and Craftsmen of
Lighting Fixtures, Lamps, Fire Tools, Console-Tables and Mirrors
746 So. Figueroa St., Los Angeles
VA ndike 2296

An Ideal School for Young Women
Cumnock School
COLLEGE WORK IN THE FOLLOWING COURSES:
Vocal Interpretation of Literature
Literary Appreciation — Voice and Diction — Short-Story
Public Speaking — French — Dancing
Dramatics — Story Telling — Psychology
Journalism
Art and Art Appreciation
An accredited High School and Junior School under same management
HELEN A. BROOKS, Director
5353 West Third Street Los Angeles
GR anit 3253 —TELEPHONES— GR anit 3353

THOMAS FRANKLIN POWER
ARCHITECT
AND
ARCHITECTURAL ENGINEER
DUNKIRK 1442
2615 W. SEVENTH ST.
LOS ANGELES

ARE YOU INTERESTED IN THE UNIQUE AND UNUSUAL
Only 48 Sets of the Beautiful Art Edition of Dawson's "The Birds of California" Remain Unsold!
Published and Sold by
SOUTH MOULTON COMPANY
301 Bank of Italy Bldg. Los Angeles, Calif.
Phone VAndike 4078 for Appointment

CALIFORNIA HOMES AND GARDENING MANUAL

OUR esteemed president has gone to Europe without even bidding us goodbye. Well, it seems he has left a live one in his place. At least we should judge so if the lurid poster we received last week was any criterion. No one is happier than your humble editor to see another "renaissance" of the thing he was about to give up as dead. Before this article comes from the press the "Renaissance party" will be history. We know it is to be a huge success. Roy Kelly is in charge.

The executive committee of the Club is planning to resume its meetings and is to meet the first Wednesday of each month at the Allied Architects Canteen at 12:15. Ruling elders please note.

By the way, speaking of the Canteen, we had just about the best fifty cent lunch there the other day that we ever hope to get. The canteen is open to all Southern California Architects. It is located at 425 South Spring street on the top floor of the Pacific Desk Company Building. Let's get the habit.

The Frank Meline Company has announced a competition for a beach cottage. Many of our members are submitting drawings. Our editorial heart goes out to these toilers in the night. We will try to publish the names of the lucky ones next month.

Fifteen men have taken the Beaux Arts Esquisse for the summer problems. Some people have all the pep.

IN CHARGE OF PLAN

IN charge of the Plan for an administration center for Los Angeles as presented by the Allied Architects last spring, the following members of both that Association and the Architectural Club or the A. I. A., were listed in the copy sent to this magazine by the Association in its report for SOUTHLAND. Crowded out by lack of space, this list is here presented by the publisher, to give credit to a group who are working constantly for the good of Los Angeles.

Under the direction of the board of directors of the Association, comprised of Edwin Bergstrom, president, Myron Hunt, first vice-president, A. L. Edelman, second vice-president and D. C. Allison and Sumner P. Hunt, with Harwood Hewitt, secretary and H. M. Patterson, treasurer, the preparation of the final drawings was in charge of members:

Robert D. Farquhar and J. E. Stanton assisted by members:—

Sumner M. Spaulding—In charge of the Union Terminal plaza design;

Roland S. Coate—In charge of the old mission plaza design;

Harwood Hewitt—In charge of the library plaza design;

Walter S. Davis——In charge of renderings.

PROFESSIONAL STAFF

In addition to the service of its own members, the following members of the professional staff of the Association Architectural Draftsmen, under the direction of H. C. Nickerson, Assistant to the Executive, and George J. Adams, Production Manager, have been of great assistance in the development of the plan and in making of final drawings:

L. F. Sherwood, R. H. Crawford, Lee F. Fuller, H. P. Sabin, W. F. Nullay, W. V. Marshall, C. E. Masters, Donald J. Lewis, L. C. Test, F. P. Hromada, J. D. Tuttle, L. B. Miller, A. McSweeney, Gabo Chittenden, Harold Abrams, and C. B. Morrison, W. G. Drummond, J. Byers, M. C. Ayers, R. L. Latham, Civil Engineers.

George L. Ott and Joseph L. Brady of the executive staff have given splendid service in obtaining data and historical information on which were based the elements of the plan.

THE ARCHITECTURAL CLUB OF LOS ANGELES

OFFICERS

for 1925

J. E. GARNSEY, PRESIDENT
ROY H. KELLEY, VICE-PRESIDENT
H. O. SEXSMITH, SECRETARY
PAUL W. PENLAND, TREASURER

DIRECTORS

WALTER S. DAVIS, DIRECTOR
J. E. STANTON, DIRECTOR
H. C. CHAMBERS, DIRECTOR

LOGGIA AND FOUNTAIN, ESTATE OF WM. CLARK. COOK AND HALL, LANDSCAPE ARCHITECTS.

SPANISH AND ITALIAN GARDENS

By KATHERINE BASHFORD
Landscape Architect, Pasadena

THE gardens of Italy are characterized by a strong underlying design which, while it unites the garden as a whole, also breaks up the area into separate parts. The main axis leads up or down, as the case may be, to other levels, and cross axes open up charming smaller gardens or lovely vistas. The garden is seldom seen as a whole.

In England one passes from the open terrace along glorious herbaceous borders to the rose garden, then perhaps through a gate to a delightful walled blue garden. Then past a pool garden, very green and cool and quiet, along the winding paths of the wild garden, and back to the terrace once more. This gives an infinite amount of variety and interest, of change from sunlight and color to dark green and heavy shadows. It is also very illuminating to any of us who may have tried desperately to force from one wee garden, obvious in all its corners, a riot of colors for twelve months of the year!

But Spain has carried this idea of a series of enclosed gardens even further. In the Alcazar, a large garden of Seville, we find a beautiful typical example. It consists of a series of rooms open to the sky. Because of the necessity for shade, they are surrounded by high walls, so thick that a promenade may be made on top of them. Wide arches join them and lovely grilles, with tile seats below, show glimpses of other charming enclosures.

Each patio, as it is called, is a unit quite complete in itself. Almost always there is a fountain in the center, a planting of boxwood, lemons or oranges often pleached against the walls, cypress and magnolias. Color is almost entirely confined to the tiles. Roses are on the walls and in pots, and lilacs bloom in the spring.

My haunting impression of the Alhambra is of creamy stucco, old brown woodwork of balconies and carved ceilings, patios with glorious old cypress, box, myrtle and oranges, of paving of small stones in design, and always the sound of running water.

Water is more indispensable than plants. In the small patios of private houses in Granada, no larger than a small room, there would be two or three fountains, each fulfilling a different need, and always one which splashed the water far out over the paved floor to evaporate and fill the air with moisture as well as with the refreshing sound of running water. There are almost no large quiet pools except the practical reservoirs—their delight is in the use of a very little water made to look like a great deal. It is always seen and heard as it ripples through open conduits from one tree to another, or goes coursing down an open gutter in the ramp of a stair. There is no underground outlet to their pools and no waste.

Mrs. Byne commends their economical yet effective ways of using water to our own Southwest, where "it costs more to water the garden than to heat the house." And very rightly. We have done comparatively little along this line and when our dry summers come and the conservation of water is a necessity we are inclined to discard our dream of having water in some form in our garden, instead of evolving from our limitations a system as delightful and satisfying as Spain has achieved with conditions so very similar.

ASSISTANCE LEAGUE OF SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

OFFICERS:

MRS. HANCOCK BANNING, President
MRS. EDWARDS LAUGHLIN, First Vice President
MRS. WILLIAM GIBBS MCADOO, Sec. Vice-Pres.
MRS. ERWIN P. WERNER, Third Vice-President

MRS. E. AVERY MCCARTHY, Fourth Vice-Pres.
MRS. JAMES REED, Secretary
MRS. J. WARREN TATUM, Treas.
MR. D. C. MACWATTERS, Auditor

THE annual birthday party of the Assistance League of Southern California was held at the Community House, 5604 De Longpre and St. Andrews, Hollywood, on Tuesday, June 16th from ten to ten.

Members of the Board of Directors were there with others invited to receive the guests of the League and hundreds who had never before taken active part in the work studied the various departments of the League with interest and visited the Day Nursery, the Thrift Shop, the Exchange and Gift Shop, and the Film Location Bureau.

The Studio Tea Room was crowded at luncheon and dinner time and demonstrated its present efficiency by serving its purpose of catering to the cinema stars at the same time. Prominent directors and leading actresses mingled with the gay crowd and added interest and vivacity to the scene.

In the ramada and garden, tea was served and each member of the League brought gifts for the Thrift Shop, which has taken the old idea of the rummage sale and organized it into a continuous and very valuable medium of communication between those who have clothes they do not need and those who need clothes they never can afford to buy at any other place.

Mrs. E. Avery McCarthy was the very successful Chairman of the Day and called on all the Board to assist, bringing out an enthusiastic, happy crowd and leading in the delightful spirit of the third birthday held at Community House.

Assisting Mrs. McCarthy were the well-known officers of the Assistance League, the active Board of Directors, and those who had from the beginning enjoyed the privilege of organizing and carrying on this, the most efficient and well planned work of love and charity developed out of war work for women and their various necessities.

Mrs. Hancock Banning as President, Mrs. Wm. Gibbs McAdoo as Vice Chairman, both of the League and of the Day, Mrs. Lucien Brunswig, Mrs. Le Moyne Wills, Mrs. Seward Cole, Chairman of the Thrift Shop, Mrs. Eleanor Cole, Mrs. Robert Loudon, Madame Rodezno, Mrs. and Miss Holliday were asked by Mrs. McCarthy to act as hostesses. All members of the Board and of the Advisory Board were asked to assist, as were some whose help was asked especially for that charming corner of the garden where tea was served.

Countess Caracciolo, Mrs. Thompson Buchanan, Mrs. Cosmo Morgan, Mrs. John Newton Russell, Mrs. Neil Brown, Mrs. Egbert Benedict, Mrs. W. E. Hollingsworth, Mrs. Hansen Moore, Mrs. W. D. Crews, Mrs. E. R. Richardson, Miss Monica Shannon, Mrs. Harry Lombard (in charge of luncheon), Mrs. Arthur Wright, Mrs. Wesley Clarke, Mrs. R. B. von KleinSmid, Mrs. Jeffras (in charge of decoration), Mrs. Shephard, Mrs. Chester Hoag, Miss Margarite Brunswig.

Mrs. Sylvester L. Weaver, Mrs. Joseph Sartori, Mrs. Thos. G. Patton, Mrs. Rhodes Hervey, Mrs. W. E. Dunn, Mrs. J. Dabney Day, were invited to assist in receiving. Mrs. Preston Harris, Miss Winston, Mrs. Stuart French, and Mrs. Ernest Dickey and Mrs. Donald Dickey.

Mrs. Force Parker, Mrs. Waring, Miss Anne Pattons, Mrs. D. J. Sully, Mrs. Giles Hall and Mrs. Eugene Hirsh, were named as especially asked to be present: as were Mrs. D. C. McWalters, Mrs. E. N. Martin, Mrs. van Locranz, and all the members of the Advisory Board.

ON THE LAWN OF THE DAY NURSERY WITH SOME OF THE CHILDREN JUST FROM THEIR AFTERNOON NAP. LEFT TO RIGHT, MRS. HOAG, MRS. SHEPHARD, MRS. BANNING, MRS. BOSWICK, MRS. LIPPINCOTT, MRS. TATUM

BRINGING IN THE GIFTS TO THE BIRTHDAY PARTY ON JUNE 19. THAT OTHERS MAY DRESS THE PART AS EXTRAS OR WOULD-BE STARS

MRS. FORCE PARKER AND MRS. McCARTHY UNDER THE TREES OF THE RAMADA AT TEA

MRS. BRUCE SWENEY, MRS. FREDERICK W. KIMBALL, MISS MARY ELIZABETH BALDRICK SHOWING THE SHAWLS ON SALE AT THE LEAGUE

Showing the Shawls on Sale at the Community House

MISS MARY ELIZABETH BALDRICK OF LOS ANGELES POSING FOR THE ASSISTANCE LEAGUE PAGE BEFORE THE COMMUNITY HOUSE IN HOLLYWOOD

BOARD OF DIRECTORS

Mrs. Frank Gates Allen
Mrs. Egbert-Judson Benedict
Mrs. William A. Brackenridge
Mrs. Alexander Bobrick
Mrs. Thompson Buchanan
Mrs. Ralph M. Burdick
Countess Mario Carriciolo
Mrs. William deMille
Mrs. Philip Schuyler Doane
Mrs. John Dunlop
Mrs. Edward Elliott
Mrs. Grove Chester French
Mrs. Giles Hall
Mrs. Eugene Hirsch
Mrs. Joseph M. Hixon
Mrs. W. I. Hollingsworth
Mrs. William S. Hook, Jr.
Mrs. Oscar Howard
Mrs. Willis Hunt
Mr. S. W. Jamieson
Mrs. Charles Jeffras
Mrs. W. Kennon Jewett
Mrs. Milbank Johnson
Mrs. Isaac-Hampshur Jones
Mrs. Roy Jones
Mrs. Frederick Kimble
Mrs. Richard Lacy
Mrs. Charles H. Lippincott
Mrs. Harry D. Lombard
Mrs. William Gibbs McAdoo
Mrs. Alexander MacDonald
Mrs. John C. MacFarland
Mrs. Tully Marshall
Mrs. John Maurer
Mrs. Daniel Murphy
Miss Anne Patton
Mrs. Lee Allen Phillips
Mrs. Frederick H. Seares
Mrs. Caroline Smith

MISS LORNA PALMER, MISS BALDRICK AND MRS. BRUCE SWENEY OF BURLINGHAM SHOWING THE SHAWLS WHICH ARE PLACED IN THE LEAGUE'S SHOPS ON COMMISSION

MRS. GILES HALL, COUNTESS CARRICIOLO AND MRS. SEWARD COLE AT TEA IN THE RAMADA

Mrs. Frances Layng Spence
Mrs. Walter P. Story
Mrs. R. D. Shepherd
Miss Elizabeth Terrill
Mrs. Gurdon Wattles
Mrs. Robert M. Weed
Mrs. Wilailm Lee Woollett
Mrs. Clare Woolwine
Mrs. Chester Hoag

OFFICERS

Mrs. Hancock Banning, President
Mrs. Edwards Laughlin, 1st Vice-Pres.
Mrs. William Gibbs McAdoo, 2nd Vice-Pres.
Mrs. Edwin P. Werner, 3rd Vice-Pres.
Mrs. E. Avery McCarthy, 4th Vice-Pres.
Mrs. James Reed, Secretary
Mrs. J. Warren Tatum, Treasurer
Mr. D. C. MacWatters, Auditor
Mr. John C. Macfarland, Attorney

ADVISORY BOARD

Mr. Lucian N. Brunswig
Rt. Rev. John J. Cantwell
Mr. William Andrew Clark
Mr. George I. Cochran
Mr. Louis M. Cole
Mr. J. Dabney Day
Mr. W. E. Dunn
Mr. Marco H. Hellman
Mr. Rafael Herman
Mr. Rhodes Hervey
Rt. Rev. Joseph H. Johnson
Mr. John Barnes Miller
Mr. Ben Meyer
Mr. John C. MacFarland
Mr. William Gibbs McAdoo
Mr. E. Avery McCarthy
Mr. Henry M. Robinson
Mr. Joseph F. Sartori
Mr. R. B. Von KelinSmid
Mr. Sylvester L. Weaver

MRS. E. R. TILTON, JR. AND MRS. J. W. TATUM SHOWING THE SEAMLESS GOWNS FOR SALE

For the Convenience of Architects of the A. I. A., the A. A. A. and New Arrivals

AMONG the many advantages arising from the drawing power of life in California is the fact that the attractions draw the rich and the poor, capital and labor, and the type of worker known as the craftsman, an artisan in his life work. We need no longer bewail the lack of men to whom a trade is a profession, men who take the same pride and care in filling a contract as an artist does in painting a portrait. We are not compelled now to put up with the workman who is willing to do a thing in any sort of way to get it done but have men who insist that every smallest detail must carry the hall-mark of perfection. We now have many dependable workers, builders and contractors and it is with the co-operation of these men that the building of the southland goes forward to the high mark attained.

Ranking high among the colorists is Einar Petersen, 1350 Beverly Blvd., Los Angeles, who not only studied art in Paris but observed and worked on the continent before coming to America where he has risen to prominence as a mural decorator. So valued is his work that we find it evidenced in connection with some of the best loved building of the community, such as: Community Playhouse, Pasadena; University Club, Los Angeles; Friday Morning Club, Los Angeles; Feagans Jewelry Shop, Los Angeles; St. Paul's Cathedral, Los Angeles; Peter Young Market, Los Angeles, Neves Cafe, and numbers of others throughout the Southwest.

There was a time when the installation of a heating and ventilating plant was, to say the least, a gamble. The heating plant might turn out to be a ventilating one or vice versa, but now with the introduction of dependable men, men with an interest in their products, who understand every approved method in heating, ventilating and plumbing there can be no mistakes. Among the most dependable firms of this character is that of F. D. Reed Plumbing Co., 1362 Factory Place, Los Angeles, whose work can be found in many buildings in the Southwest. Among them are the Montebello High School, Taft Building, Hollywood, Pacific Motor Garage, Los Angeles, and the Edwards-Wildey Bldg., Los Angeles.

From the earliest days of the history of architecture the eaves and cornices of buildings presented difficulties and it has only been in fairly recent times that sheet metal and tin have come to be pliable and usable materials in the hands of a skilled worker. Men who can supply the material and the skill are to be found in and with the Arcade Cornice Works, 721 E. 12th Street, Los Angeles, T. F. Bazzeni, manager, and their workmanship is shown in such buildings as the Frick Martin Bldg., Los Angeles; Taft Bldg., Hollywood; National City Bank Bldg., and Finance Bldg., 7th and Spring, Los Angeles; Lincoln High School, Los Angeles; Fremont High School, Los Angeles; and the Shrine Temple, Los Angeles.

TERRACE 0127

After the Play Is Over or Before Place Telephone Order for Refreshments

El Patio Tea Room

In the open foyer of the

Pasadena Community Playhouse

37 South El Molino Avenue

Lunch Tea Dinner

THE COMMUNITY PLAY HOUSE

Continued from Page 15

of separate groups, and during the last week previous to the production a rehearsal of the entire cast is held every day, with a technical and a full dress rehearsal the two nights preceding the play.

In these productions there are other willing hands and brains beside the director and cast: frequently there is a dramatic committee who, with the director, selects the plays; a producing committee that generally functions with the technical director, under whose supervision the scenery is designed, built and painted; a wardrobe committee through whose efforts the costumes are provided, and another set who supply the properties.

The vital point in all this is that all these people undertake this work for love of the drama, with a desire to see the theater grow and live, and they do it whole heartedly, making a real business of it and never present an amateurish performance. Occasionally there may be criticism of the plays presented, it is scarcely possible to please every member of a community, even the dramatization of the telephone directory might cause comment if misunderstood.

EMPHASIZING the community interest in the choice of plays the Southland Calendar publishes each month an announcement of coming plays being rehearsed during the month.

In addition we propose to publish opinions and discussions of the plays to be presented. Contributions will be welcomed if they are written in a constructive way and give real thought on the subject of life in its demonstration on the stage.

So far, the plays given in the new playhouse have been unusually fitted to show forth life as it is today and something in each play strikes a common chord in the life of the most indifferent listener.

If you think you would have interpreted the part differently, or if you feel that the play itself was untrue to life write your comment down, study its effect on future acting or playwriting, and if it seems to have in it a really helpful criticism, type it and send it to SOUTHLAND. In the next issue it will appear if space can possibly be found for it.

O'HARA LIVERMORE and ARTHUR BAKEN

644 East Colorado St.
Pasadena, Calif.

522 Sutter St.
San Francisco, Calif.

Interior Decoration

ANTIQUE AND MODERN FURNITURE AND TEXTILES—LIGHTING FIXTURES—WALL DECORATION AND DRAPERIES—LAMPS—SHADES—PILLOWS—OBJECTS OF ART

The exterior design of this building is one of the many Architectural achievements of the Allied Architects' Association of Los Angeles.

It stands now, high above the City, forever a monument proclaiming the Strength, Power and Majesty of Los Angeles County.

HALL OF JUSTICE

THE WESTERN TILE AND MARBLE CO.
Importers and Contractors
386 SOUTH RAYMOND AVENUE
PASADENA

For the convenience of patrons planning houses, gardens, patios, and any other building in tile this Company has on display tiles from every portion of the world.

Spanish	American Encaustic
Mexican	Pardee
Persian	Batchelder-Wilson
Moroccan	Gladding-McBean
Holland	California Clay
English	California Art Tile

TELEPHONE, FAIR OAKS 3157

PAINTINGS OF THE WEST
STENDAHL GALLERIES
OF THE PACIFIC COAST
The Ambassador Hotel—Los Angeles Hotel del Coronado—San Diego

THE BATCHELDER TILES

We produce Tile for Fireplaces, Fountains, Pavements, Garden Pots---anything that is appropriately made from clay. :: :: :: :: ::

LOS ANGELES, CALIFORNIA

Photo by Val

CHRISTINE SQUIRES
INTERIOR DECORATIONS
MATERIALS
Exclusive Furniture
Designing
3217 WEST SIXTH STREET
WASHINGTON 3433

Lake
Arrowhead
A lodge in Arrowhead Woods combines the comfort of home with the delights of California's Finest Playground.
THE FRANK MELINE CO.
Sales Representatives for
Arrowhead Woods
Lodge Sites

SANTA BARBARA ∴ BUILDING NUMBER ∴ BEAUTY PAYS

CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND

CALIFORNIA STATE

The Home of Frances Marion Thompson — WALLACE NEFF, ARCHITECT — Rendered into color by Norman Kennedy

No. 68 AUGUST, 1925 25 Cents

CALIFORNIA'S HOME AND GARDEN MAGAZINE

Increase in the Price of Edison Stock

In line with lowering interest rates the price of Edison 6% Preferred Stock is increased as of August 1, 1925 to

$97.00 per share cash
$98.00 per share on our "Easy Savings Plan"

Over 75,000 Stockholders have benefitted by the upward trend of EDISON SECURITIES

Southern California Edison Company

"UP THE VALLEY AND DOWN THE COAST"

YOSEMITE

And all the fascinating features of the High Sierras await you in California

The
Californian
HOTEL

FRESNO, CALIFORNIA

is the logical stopping place in the San Joaquin Valley from which the high Sierras rise

First Class, Fireproof
Correctly Appointed

Reasonable Rates for High Class Service

Management of H. WINGATE LAKE
FRESNO

The
Serendipity Antique Shop

Antiques Lamps Decorations

22, 26 and 30 SOUTH LOS ROBLES
PASADENA, CALIFORNIA
BRADFORD PERIN, Proproietor
Telephone F. O. 7111

Announcement

The new Interior Decorating Department, has on exhibition many Lamps, Screens, Cushions and Foot-stools made in our own work-room by specialists, as well as fine fabrics for draperies and furniture coverings.

MARTHA

WATSON-KERBY

Exclusive Fashions for Women

GOWNS WRAPS SPORTS CLOTHING

2224 WEST SEVENTH STREET
LOS ANGELES

WESTLAKE SQUARE PHONE FITZROY 0823

Clarence P. Day Corporation

Engineers — Contractors
Builders

205 Boston Bldg.
Pasadena, Calif.

Phone
WAkefield 6841

Roofs that blend with the land-scape

Students' Union, Stanford University — Bakewell & Brown, Architects

LATIN ROOF TILE

GLADDING, McBEAN & CO.

LOS ANGELES OFFICE: LOS FELIZ BOULEVARD AND S. P. TRACKS
TROPICO PLANT: GLENDALE, LOS ANGELES COUNTY

The Cheesewright Studios, Inc.
Decorators and Furnishers
PASADENA CALIFORNIA

THE BATCHELDER TILES

We produce Tile for Fireplaces, Fountains, Pavements, Garden Pots---anything that is appropriately made from clay. :: :: :: :: ::

LOS ANGELES, CALIFORNIA

Choose your own architect from the representative styles shown in "California Homes" by California Architects. Price $1.00.
Address: ELLEN LEECH,
544 So. El Molino Avenue Pasadena, Calif.

SOUTHLAND CALENDAR

Announcements of exhibitions, fetes, concerts, club entertainments, etc., for the calendar pages are free of charge and should be received in the office of CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND, Pasadena, at least two weeks previous to date of issue, the 10th. No correction can be guaranteed if they are received later than that date. California Southland is published monthly at Pasadena, California. One dollar and twenty-five cents for six issues, two fifty per year. Addresses will be changed as many times as desired if notice is given before the first of the month for which the change is made.

Entered as second class matter, July 28, 1919, at the Post office at Pasadena, California, under act of March 3, 1879.

Clubs

VALLEY HUNT CLUB, PASADENA:
The formal season at the Valley Hunt Club closed with May, after which time no programs are arranged. The tennis court and swimming pool offer the outdoor attractions during the summer, and individual parties, both afternoon and evening, are arranged as desired.

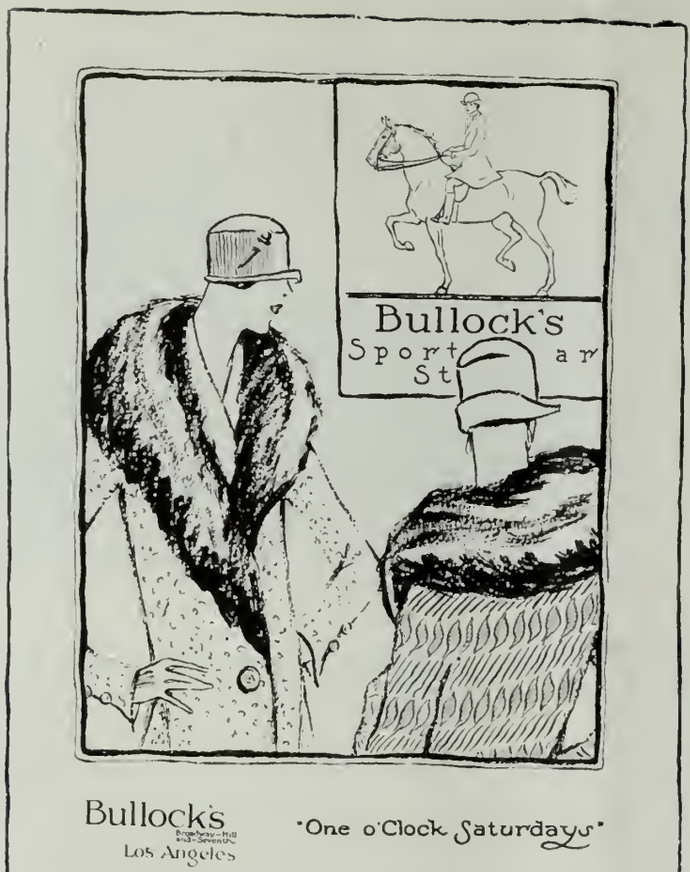
ANNANDALE GOLF CLUB, PASADENA:
The afternoon bridge, Mah Jongg and tea parties have been discontinued for the season, but tea will be served as requested and tables for cards are always available.
Every Friday is Ladies' Day.
The usual Wednesday and Saturday sweepstakes each month through the summer.

FLINTRIDGE COUNTRY CLUB:
Tuesday is Ladies' Day and a special luncheon is served. In the afternoons informal bridge parties may be arranged, followed by tea.

LOS ANGELES COUNTRY CLUB:
Ladies' Days, second Monday of each month.
Music during dinner, followed by dancing, every Saturday evening during the month.
Luncheon served from 11:30 to 2 .p m. on Saturdays.
Sunday night concerts during month.
Tea served as requested and tables for cards always available.

WILSHIRE COUNTRY CLUB:
Ladies' Days, third Monday of each month.
Dancing every second and fourth Saturday during the month.
A musical is arranged for each Sunday night in the month.

MIDWICK COUNTRY CLUB:
Ladies' Days, fourth Monday in each month.
Tea and informal bridge every afternoon.
Polo, Wednesday and Saturday of each week.
Dancing every Saturday night.
Buffet luncheon served every Sunday.
Match polo games every Sunday, preceded by luncheon parties, followed by teas, during season.



LOS ANGELES ATHLETIC CLUB:
Dinner dances, Tuesday and Friday nights of every week, Tuesday night informal; Friday night semi-formal.
Plunge open to the ladies Tuesday and Friday of every week.

SAN GABRIEL COUNTRY CLUB:
A dinner dance is arranged for the third Thursday of each month.
On Friday of each week a special luncheon is served, with bridge in the afternoons.
Ladies play every day starting after ten a. m., and not before two p. m.

MONTECITO COUNTRY CLUB:
Provides an 18 hole golf course, two concrete and two dirt courts for tennis, bowls and croquet.
Tea is served and informal bridge parties arranged as desired.
A buffet supper is served every Sunday night.

LA CUMBRE GOLF AND COUNTRY CLUB, SANTA BARBARA:
Offers a course of eighteen holes, rivaling any in hazard and beauty. A recent purchase of additional acreage will provide an extended and even more interesting course.
Luncheon is served every day, and tea may be arranged as desired.

REDLANDS COUNTRY CLUB:
Golf tournament for men is held every Saturday. Monday the course is reserved for the women and a special luncheon served. Those who do not play golf or who have had a round in the morning, devote the afternoon to bridge or mah jongg. Every Saturday afternoon tea is served.

Bullock's
Broadway—Hill and Seventh
Los Angeles
"One o'Clock Saturdays"

Where the Treasures of a Collector May Be Purchased as Gifts

A. Schmidt & Son

For Fifty-six Years Importers of Antique and Modern Silver, Sheffield Plate, Fine China and Glass.

2320 W. Seventh St., Los Angeles

391 E. Colorado St., Pasadena

Boston New York Washington

PALOS VERDES GOLF CLUB:
Offers an eighteen hole, all grass, seaside course, delightful for summer play.
Tea and informal bridge every afternoon.
Lunch and dinner served every day.

NEWPORT HARBOR YACHT CLUB:
August 1 and 2—Intercup championship, Star class races for city of Newport trophy, ocean course. One design sloop race, Frank Smith trophy. One design power runabout class Grudge race. Rowboat tug-of-war. Cruiser race, ocean course, final heat. Schooner, ketch and yawl handicap race, final heat. Sloop race, final heat, handicap. Small sailing boat races, bay course. Balboa Tournament of Lights.
August 8 to 16—Southern California Yachting Association regatta at Santa Barbara.
August 22—One design sloop race, Frank Smith trophy, final heat. One design power runabout Grudge race. Star class Grudge race, bay course.
August 23—Fleet cruise for club members aboard club yachts, 1 to 5 p.m.
August 29—Yachts Joy, Carrolie and Pal O' Mine scratch race around Catalina Island. Schooner, ketch and yawl handicap race around Catalina Island. Star class Grudge race, ocean course.

CALIFORNIA YACHT CLUB:
Saturday, August 1—Interclub Star class race.
Sunday, August 2—At Newport Harbor.
Saturday, August 8, to Sunday, August 16—Regatta of the Southern California Yachting Association at Santa Barbara.
Saturday, August 22—Times Cup race for sloops.
Sunday, August 23—Nordinger trophy race.
Sunday, August 30—Motor boat races.

Art

LOS ANGELES Museum of History, Science and Art, Exposition Park, from July 18th to August 30th is showing paintings by Anglada y Camarasa. Anglada is one of the outstanding new figures of the art world in America this year, his work being shown for the first time in North America at the Palace of the Legion of Honor, San Francisco. The pictures then came directly to the Los Angeles Museum. They will be shown this fall at the Carnegie International Exhibition at Pittsburgh. Anglada himself coming to America to serve on the Carnegie Jury. These nine pictures are the most important work the artist has accomplished in years. Two are portraits. All are very brilliant and very decorative. Showing at the same time as the Anglada Paintings will be a group of pictures assembled by the Oakland Art Gallery. They are by the "Group of Six" artists of the bay district. Dr. A. S. Cecil has kindly loaned the Museum three stunning portraits by Robert Henri. One a picture of Mrs. Cecil painted several years ago; the other two of their young sons. The latter were finished last winter and are also to be shown at this time.

SOUTHWEST MUSEUM, Marmion Way and Avenue 46, Los Angeles: Continuing through August the collection of old masters will be shown. A number of the canvases date back to the fourteenth century, the oldest of the group being: A Fra Angelico, a small canvas depicting the Holy Trinity; a Guido Reni; and one attributed to Botticelli or Correggio. Several modern paintings have been added to the group; a landscape by Inness, one by Constable, two by Turner, sunsets. A group of twelve includes a portrait of Henrietta Maria, wife of Charles the First and daughter of Louis the Thirteenth of France, by Jansen, the court painter; a "Madonna and Child," by Botticelli; "The Misers," by Rembrandt; "The Immaculate Conception," by Murillo; "Susanne and the Elders," by Peter Paul Rubens; "A Woman Carding Wool," by Gerard Dou; "Angelica and Medore," by Velasquez; "The Scourging of Christ," by Ferrari; "Madonna and Child," by Raphael; "Supper at Emmaus," by Ribera, a portrait by Holbein the younger, and "Charitas Castiles," by Holbein the elder.

BILTMORE SALON will show from July 27 to August 15, the work of J. Duncan Gleason in the larger display room. The general exhibition is changed every other week in the small rooms. The Print Room will show a different series of etchings opening August 1st.

PASADENA ART INSTITUTE will continue through August the collection of art works at Carmelita Gardens House. Local artists are represented in Room 1, which includes the work of John Frost, Benjamin Brown, Orrin White, Frances Clark, Guy Rose, Louis Hovey Sharp, Franz Bischoff, Jean Mannheim, Ethel Farnsworth, Frederick Zimmerman, Jane McDuffie Thurston, Ada Belle Champlin, F. Carl Smith, Geraldine Duncan, and Wallace de Wolf. Harry Fielding Winebrenner has contributed an exhibition of his sculpture, and one of the rooms contains an exhibition of canvases by R. Frederick Heckman. A collection of block prints by Frances Hammel Gearhart is shown in Room 5, while Rooms 6 and 7 are occupied by the work of Geraldine Duncan and Dorothy Visju Anderson. The gallery is open to the public daily between the hours of 10 and 5 o'clock, on Tuesday and Friday evenings from 7 till 9, and on Sunday afternoons from 2 till 5 o'clock. Admission is free.

ARTLAND CLUB, Los Angeles, opened July 14 with an exhibition of the work of the members of the Painters' and Sculptors' Club. The opening show was large and varied and will be followed by others of equal interest.

LOUISE FENDERSON will continue her exhibition of Pastels through August 11 in the galleries of Barker Bros., Broadway, Los Angeles.

THE ARTS AND CRAFTS SOCIETY held throughout July an exhibition of prints by Paul Kreisel, a German etcher.

THE BILTMORE SALON is showing in the Galleria Real a few examples of the work of Irving Manoir, which includes mural enamels, screens, and decorative panels.

ARTHUR HILL GILBERT is sketching in Arizona, the results of which will form the basis of an exhibition in the early Fall.

F. TENNEY JOHNSON, Clyde Forsythe, and Jack Wilkinson Smith are sketching above Bishop, with other points in the High Sierras as an objective.

CARL OSCAR BORG is doing very interesting work this summer, one branch being the supervision of the art work of the Fairbanks Studio in Hollywood.

KATHERINE W. LEIGHTON writes from Lake McDonald that she is enjoying her summer and working every single day.

HANSEN PUTHUFF, who, with Aaron Kilpatrick, is sketching in old Mexico, finds both the people and the architecture unusually and decidedly interesting.

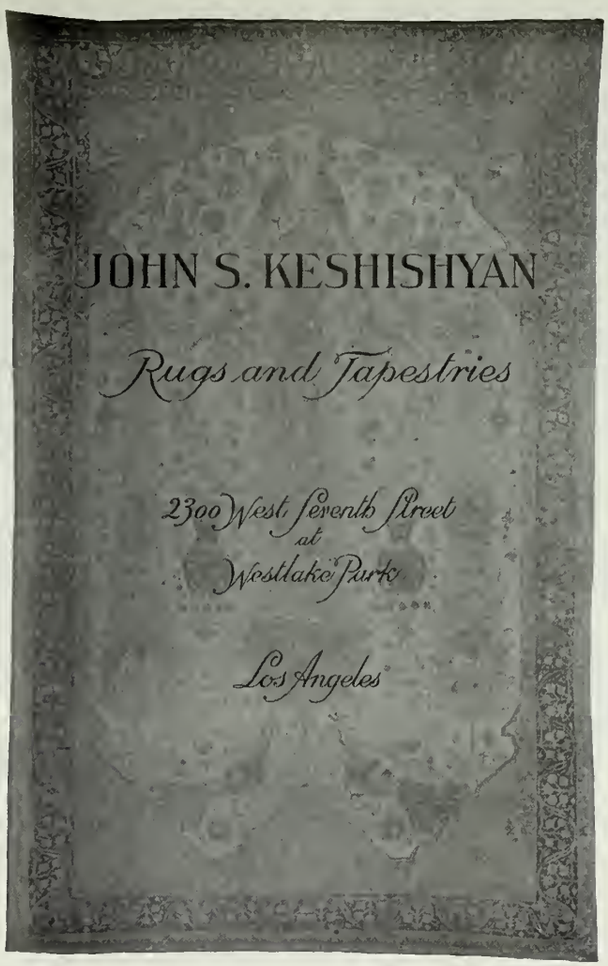
FRANZ BISCHOFF is at work in his South Pasadena studio completing the sketches made on a recent trip to Point Lobos.

STENDAHL GALLERIES, Ambassador Hotel, Los Angeles, are showing throughout August carefully selected paintings by the best European and American artists.

MR. CHARLES B. HERVEY FROM A PORTRAIT BY DAVID ANTHONY TAUSZKY, PORTRAIT PAINTER, PASADENA

CANNELL AND CHAFFIN announce that August 1 the two larger galleries, 720 West Seventh street, Los Angeles, will be re-hung with carefully selected examples of the work of a number of the most prominent Eastern and Western artists. Among the artists represented are: George Elmer Browne, Chas. H. Davis, Eliot Daingerfield, John Carlsen, Jack Frost, H. H. Kitchell, Dan Sayre Groesbeck, H. W. Ranger, Wm. Ritschel, Orrin White, Granville Smith, and others. In the Print Room a very interesting exhibition of wood block prints of Japanese and Chinese subjects by Bertha Lum of San Francisco will be shown to August 15.

DALZELL HATFIELD opened his new galleries at 3142 Wilshire Boulevard early last month. The works of old masters and examples of the best of European and American artists will be exhibited.



EDWARD WESTON will leave early in August for Mexico City to make additinoal photographic studies of the country, the architecture and the people.

PUPILS of the Chouinard School of Art exhibited their recent work at the Los Angeles Public Library during July.

ADOLPH WEIL GALLERIES, 2504 West Seventh street, Los Angeles, are showing an interesting collection of European paintings, and unusual bronzes.

THE KANST GALLERIES, Hollywoodland, include the best examples of modern American paintings.

CHARLES WAKEFIELD CADMAN'S "The Witch of Salem" has been accepted for production by the Chicago Civic Opera company, according to an Eastern announcement. The story of this opera is founded on historical facts of Salem (Massachusetts) witchcraft.

B B Bell & Company

Lighting Fixtures
Fireplace Fittings
Lamps
Console-tables and Mirrors
Hope's Casements

2302 West Seventh Street
at
Westlake Park

Los Angeles

Music

THE Hollywood Bowl summer symphony concerts will be given on Tuesday, Thursday, Friday and Saturday evenings of each week during August. The season, which opened July 7, will continue for eight weeks. Fritz Reiner conducted the first week, followed by Sir Henry Wood, with Reiner conducting the third week. Other conductors include Leopold Stokowsky, conductor of the Philadelphia Symphony, Nikolai Sokoloff of the Cleveland Orchestra, Emil Oberhoefer, Rudolph Ganz, Ernest Bloch, Ethel Laginska, Edgar Stillman Kelley, Howard Hansen and Samuel Gardner.

OPEN air concerts are held on Sunday afternoons at 3:30 in Carmelita Gardens, Pasadena, sponsored by the Chamber of Commerce and Civic Associations.

THE Redlands Community Music Association began its twelve weeks series of Bowl concerts, with two concerts each week, in July. On Tuesday evenings community sings are held and on Friday evenings the artists' concerts are presented. No admission charge is made but a voluntary offering is taken.

THE Cauldron Singers of Pasadena, under the direction of Roy V. Rhodes, assisted by Hazel Elwell Rhodes, gave an enjoyable program in the Theater of the Stars, at Fawnskin, Bear Valley, last month.

THE Zoellner Quartet, presented by the Amphion Club, opened the Mt. Helix Amphitheater in San Diego, and will give a concert in the early Fall in the same city.

MARY CARR MOORE'S opera, "Narcissa," will be given in San Francisco during Diamond Jubilee week, September 7 to 13. Alice Gentle will have the leading soprano role and Anna Ruzena Sprotte will sing the contralto lead.

THE Chamber Music Society of San Francisco has announced that previous to September 1, manuscripts or published works for string quartet, and for string quartet and flute, will be accepted for examination.

CHARLES WAKEFIELD CADMAN has been asked to write the music for Portland's 1926 Rose Pageant.

GLENDALE Musical Club has announced it will sponsor a series of seven artists' concerts at the Glendale Broadway High School Auditorium, opening in October with Vincente Ballester, baritone. Hulda Lashanska, lyric soprano will follow in November.

LOS ANGELES Grand Opera Association, Merle Armitage, manager, announces that opening Monday, September 29, with "Lakme," six operas will be given as follows: Tuesday, Sept. 30, "Aida"; Thursday, Oct. 1, "Rigoletto"; Saturday matinee, Oct. 3, "Carmen," and Saturday night, double bill, "La Navarraise," "Cavalleria Rusticana." Richard Hageman will conduct, and William Tyroler is director of the chorus. The opera will be given at the Philharmonic Auditorium.

TOURNAMENT or Roses Association of Pasadena is sponsoring the production of "The Mystic Rose" in the Raymond Theater, the evenings of August 5 and 6. Robert P. Skilling is the director of this spectacular musical comedy.

THE new Olympic Auditorium in process of construction in Los Angeles, Grand Avenue near Washington street, is to have a seating capacity in excess of 10,000, but for grand opera or purposes requiring less generous accommodations provision is made whereby the space may be reduced, converting the auditorium into a smaller hall with 4700 comfortable seats available. The season of opera by the California Opera Company, Gaetano Merola, director, will open here October 6th.

Announcements

PASADENA Community Playhouse: "The Green Goddess" by William Archer, July 30 to August 8. "The Vegetable" by F. Scott Fitzgerald, August 13-22. Two plays a month will be produced throughout the year. Each play will begin on a Thursday and end on the second Saturday; eleven performances, matinees on Saturday only.

THE Pilgrimage Play opened the sixth annual season July 6, in the impressive outdoor theater in the Hollywood hills, northeast of the Hollywood Bowl. Ernest Lawford assumes the character of Christ in this year's production, while Florence Stone again portrays Mary Magdalene.

THE Mission Pageant at San Juan Capistrano will continue each Sunday afternoon, opening at 3:00 o'clock, throughout the summer.

COMMUNITY Dances, under the auspices of the Pasadena Drama League, will be given every Friday evening during August at Tournament Park, Pasadena.

CALIFORNIA Federation of Business and Professional Women's Clubs will be held in San Jose, California, September 10, 11 and 12.

PASADENA Athletic and Country Club announces the plan has been selected and the contract let for the club building to be erected at Los Robles avenue and East Green street, and the work will proceed immediately.

Santa Barbara

THE SANTA BARBARA ART CLUB has cancelled all dates for exhibitions, and has given the use of its gallery and rooms to the Architectural Advisory Committee, during the reconstruction period, following the earthquake. On June 30, the day following the catastrophe, the club passed a resolution endorsing a definite architectural treatment, which was read by its secretary, John M. Gamble,at the Business Men's meeting, that afternoon in City Hall Plaza. On July 6 the Board of Directors of the Art Club passed a resolution resolving, "That the Santa Barbara Art Club offer its services collectively or individually in any capacity in which it may aid in the artistic reconstruction of Santa Barbara." Signed by Arthur M. Hazard, Vice President, and John M. Gamble, Secretary.

DONALD FRANCIS TOVEY, pianist and Reid Professor of Music at Edinburgh, who is visiting in Santa Barbara this summer, volunteered his services at a benefit recital on Sunday evening, July 26, in El Paseo de la Guerra to aid local musicians, out of work as a result of the earthquake.

MR. ISLEY is acting President of the Community Arts Association.

MONTECITO COUNTRY CLUB has extended its holdings to include a Beach Club, where most of the entertaining has been done during the past month. By utilizing the house on the property from which to serve, grouping the tables under the trees, a very delightful arrangement has been secured.

FLINTRIDGE RIDING CLUB does not follow a program of events during the summer but the early morning and late afternoon hours are filled with the start and return of riders. Gay groups form on the lawn and under the trees, for tea and to discuss the objective of the next ride. Many members, yielding to the charm of the spot and the cool mountain breeze, stay for dinner, which is always excellent. The new outdoor grill to be built at once, under the great oaks, just southwest of the clubhouse, will furnish another motive for dining at the club.

Pomona

THE Art Exhibition of the Los Angeles County Fair in Pomona in August will offer a more material incentive to artists to exhibit than usual, as $500 will be given out in prizes.

Appreciation

EXCERPT from a recent letter to a California friend, and dated Argola, Portuguese, West Africa:

"Our boat was two days ahead of time and consequently there was no one to meet me. I was dismayed at the thought of getting myself and my huge pile of luggage through the customs, a process difficult enough at best but simply appalling without a knowledge of the language. . . In the tray of the first trunk opened were some copies of California Southland, the inspector picked one up casually, presently his manner changed and he began to exclaim over the beautiful pictures. In a short time other inspectors joined him and soon the head official himself strolled up. The magazines were passed from hand to hand, the lovely pictures and wonderful country which they represented called forth loud cries of delight and many gestures of pleasure. At the end of an hour and a half the head official thanked me in polite, but limited English for the treat I had given them in return for which he passed all my luggage unopened, and himself saw me safely on the train. California Southland saved my day."

Extended Service

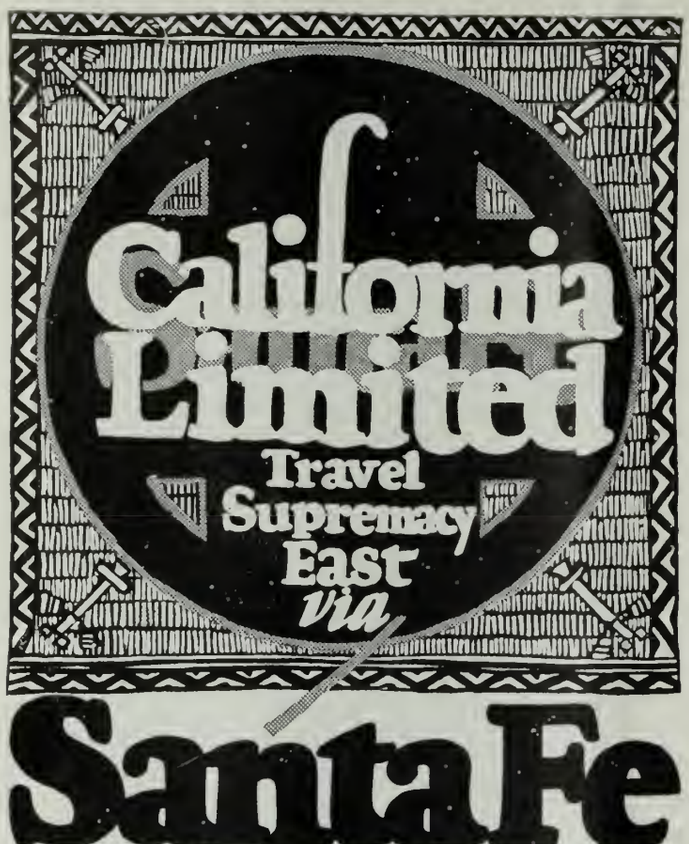
THE Ambassador, Los Angeles, announces the opening of the Louis Seize Room, designed by Messrs. Tierney and Lawford. This new room opens off the main lobby, just south of the Fiesta Ball Room and connects with the Parrot Porch by French windows. This service is designed particularly for the convenience of women who shop in the Wilshire district and desire to avoid parking complications. A Fashion Luncheon will be served every day, and on Wednesday, beginning August 5, a Tea Dance will be arranged, with a la Russe service. This is in addition to the Saturday Tea Dansants.

THE Assembly Tea Room, 644 South Flower street, Los Angeles, has opened the garden for dinner during the summer months. The wall, hidden by the vines and trees, shuts out the noise of the city, and only the splash of the fountain is heard. The perfect service in these quiet surroundings is deeply appreciated.

EL PATIO, in the Community Theater building in Pasadena, offers a delightfully unusual place for luncheon, tea or dinner, as one may be served in the pleasant depths of the dining room, or in the shadowed corridor around the patio of the playhouse.

THE Elite, 641 South Flower street, Los Angeles, has recognized the necessity for specialized co-operation in arranging social functions and offers to prospective hostesses the services of Marion R. Boyd, social director, in consultation regarding menus, decorations, favors and details in connection with any form of social entertainment.

THE Mary Louise, West Seventh street, Los Angeles, forms the center for a large part of the luncheons, teas and dinner in Los Angeles, and has recently opened a most attractive branch "Mary Louise" in Fullerton, California, which is growing equally popular with that neighborhood.



THE La Fayette, overlooking Westlake Park, Los Angeles, to perfect appointment and cuisine adds an unmistakably exclusive atmosphere. Every suggestion of New York at its best prevails, with the exception that each table bears a discreetly worded card, requesting that guests refrain from adding liquor to the service. Guests may dance every evening except Sunday, when a very good concert is given.

THE Montmart in Hollywood is frequently selected for luncheon or dinner, not only because of the service offered, but due to the possibility of securing close-up views of movie celebrities, and where members of the music and art world are often found.

MARCELL INN, out Lincoln avenue, Pasadena, serves luncheon, tea and dinner every day, with dancing in the evening. On Sunday dinner is served at noon, and also in the evening.

LA VENTA INN, Palos Verdes, on the cliffs overlooking the ocean, is constantly filled with gay luncheon and dinner parties. Within less than an hour's ride from Los Angeles it attracts many motor parties throughout the long summer days.

HOTEL STOWELL of Los Angeles has recently been purchased by Charles B. Hervey and Harry J. Tremain, who announce a new policy and adjustment of rates, including room and restaurant prices. Mr. Hervey is the owner of Hotel Green in Pasadena, the Hotel Maryland in San Diego, and until about a year ago operated the Samarkand in Santa Barbara.

TWO SECTIONS DAILY to Chicago via principal mid-continent points. Direct connections for Atlantic Coast cities.

FRED HARVEY Dining Cars serve all meals... Modern equipment embodying newest travel comfort features... Ladies' maid, barber and valet in attendance en route.

THE COOL SUMMER WAY

...the route lies over a continuous mountain top from California's boundary to eastern Colorado. Most of the way you are a mile above sea level, avoiding the hot weather of the lower altitudes.

For train schedules and rail fares

Santa Fe Ticket Offices and Travel Bureaux

221 South Broadway
LOS ANGELES

6405 Hollywood Blvd.
HOLLYWOOD

Santa Fe Station
PASADENA

915 State Street
SANTA BARBARA

Glazed Tiles
from
Old Mexico

The romance of old Spain and Mexico translated into glazed tile panels:

1. for the patio
2. for the garden wall,
3. for the fountain back.
4. for niches in the stairway;

and for innumerable spots to add the color and the atmosphere of old Spain.

Talavera Importing Co.
CARE CHEESWRIGHT STUDIOS, PASADENA.

JAMES CINI & COMPANY
of Italy
Antique and Foreign Jewelry
Italian and French Novelties
390 E. Walnut St. Pasadena, Calif.
Fair Oaks 5583

SANTA BARBARA CITY ORDINANCES

ORDINANCE NO. 1256

AN ORDINANCE RELATING TO BUILDING PERMITS, ESTABLISHING AN ARCHITECTURAL BOARD OF REVIEW AND PRESCRIBING THE DUTIES THEREOF:

BE IT ORDAINED by the Council of the City of Santa Barbara, California:

Section 1. Architectural Board of Review. To promote the general public welfare, health and safety, an Architectural Board of Review in and for the City of Santa Barbara is hereby established.

Section 2. Membership. The Architectural Board of Review shall be composed of five members appointed by the City Council, of whom three shall be persons engaged in the practice of Architecture or the Fine Arts each of whom shall be appointed from a list of two nominees made by the Certified Architects of Santa Barbara in a meeting called for the purpose by the City Planning Commission. The two other members shall be citizens versed in matters of architecture and the fine arts known for their integrity and public interest one of whom shall be appointed from a list of two nominees named by the Community Arts Association of Santa Barbara and the other of whom shall be appointed from a list of two nomi-

SANTA BARBARA, CALIF.
H. G. CHASE
(Established 1903)
Real Estate and Rentals
1012 State St. Phone 125

N. B.:—For extra copies or back numbers of California Southland call on the L. A. News Co. Agent in your town.

DE LA GUERRA STUDIOS, SANTA BARBARA

A CHARMING SPANISH STREET OF SHOPS

GEORGE M. MILLARD
(of Pasadena)
RARE IMPORTED BOOKS
Santa Barbara Representative
MRS. E. M. GROSSMANN
STUDIO 25, EL PASEO
15 EAST DE LA GUERRA STREET

LEONARD WOODRUFF
Studio of Antiques
37-39 East de la Guerra St.

ELEANOR HOLLAND JOHNSON
STUDIO FOR THE VOICE
Suite 103 de la Guerra Studios

THE GUILD
Inc.
PUBLISHERS
and
CRAFTSMEN
Studio 28 de la Guerra Studios

nees named by the City Planning Commission. In case a vacancy shall occur the successor shall be nominated and appointed in the same manner as in the first instance. At the first meeting of the Architectural Board of Review the members shall choose by lot terms of office as follows: Two for one year, two for two years and one for three years, and their successors shall be appointed for terms of three years, except an appointment to fill a vacancy which shall be for the unexpired portion of the term. In case any of the organizations entitled to make nominations as hereinbefore provided shall fail to make such nominations within thirty days after written

El Paseo Patio

Lunch Out of Doors or Dine
at
"EL PASEO"
23 E. de la Guerra St.
Santa Barbara

notification by the City Clerk of the expiration of a term or the occurrence of a vacancy, the City Council shall appoint a member to fill the vacancy on its own nomination, provided such appointees shall in all cases in number and qualification fulfill as nearly as possihle the provisions of this Section as to Membership.

Section 3. Officers.

The members of the Architectural Board of Review shall elect from their own number a President and Vice-President, name a secretary and other officers and shall adopt their own rules of procedure. Three members shall constitute a quorum. Any funds appropriated by the City Council therefor or received as herein after provided may be used by the Architectural Board of Review to pay their members for time in attendance at meetings and other expenses which in its judgment are incidental and proper to carrying out the purposes for which it is established, provided that said board shall incur no obligation on behalf of said city or any department thereof and provided that no expense shall be incurred to exceed the funds appropriated to or at the disposal of the Architectural Board of Review, which may accept bequests and donations of money and personal property and shall have power to administer, disperse or dispose of the same for the purposes for which it is established.

Section 4. Review of Plans.

All applications for building permits and the plans and elevations required by the Building Ordinances of the city submitted to the Inspector of Buildings in connection therewith shall be in triplicate and immediately upon the filing thereof

Reduced
Roundtrip Fares
to California Playgrounds
in effect throughout the summer season.

Long limits; stopovers.
Now a trip to fit your vacation budget; let our agents help you plan it. Thus get the right ticket and complete, accurate travel information.
Save money—go via Southern Pacific Lines. These suggestic ns—

Del Monte Lake Tahoe
Santa Cruz Yosemite
San Francisco Sierra Lakes
Crater Lake Puget Sound

Ask any agent

SOUTHERN PACIFIC LINES

Southern Pacific Lines
Or write to C. L. McFAUL, A. P. T. M., Los Angeles

DE LA GUERRA STUDIOS FROM STATE STREET, SANTA BARBARA.

one copy shall be delivered to the Architectural Board of Review by the Inspector of Buildings for written report thereon, as to the character of design, appropriateness, safety, sanitary arrangement and general construction thereof; if the Architectural Board of Review shall give written approval thereto a building permit may be issued by the Inspector of Buildings provided all other requirements of the Ordinances of the City of Santa Barbara have been complied with; if the Architectural Board of Review present a written report thereon to the Inspector of Buildings recommending changes in design, construction, alteration, which after conference with applicant for the permit the said applicant refuses to make or accept, said report and application for permit shall be referred to the City Council and a public hearing held thereon before issuance of a building permit by the Inspector of Buildings; provided that the Architectural Board of Review shall be deemed to have given its approval thereto if no action be taken by it for more than twenty days after the date of filing of said application for a building permit. No public building or structure, fountain, monument, wall, arch or other structure shall he erected, placed on or upon or removed from or re-located or altered on or upon any public land or allowed to extend over or upon any streets, avenue, square, park, recreation ground, beach or other public property unless plans for same and the location thereof shall first have been approved in writing by the Architectural Board of Review.

Section 5. Members Disqualified from Voting.

Any member of the Architectural Board of Review who shall be employed to execute a building or structure of any kind requiring the approval of the Architectural Board of Review or who shall take part in competition for any such building or structure shall be disqualified from voting thereon; and in such instance the Architectural Board of Review may at its discretion invite an expert to advise with them thereon hut not at the expense of said city.

Section 6. Effect on Existing Ordinances.

This Ordinance shall constitute one of the building ordinances of the City of Santa Barbara and shall never be so construed as to repeal or affect any other ordinance of the City.

Section 7. Individual Enactment.

All of the sections, paragraphs, clauses or phrases of this ordinance shall be construed together, but if at any time it shall be held that any one of said sections, paragraphs, clauses or phrases or any part thereof is invalid or for any reason becomes unenforceable no other section, paragraph, clause or phrase shall be therehy affected or impaired.

Section 8. Emergency Clause.

This ordinance after its passage and authentication shall be published one in The Morning Press, a daily newspaper of general circulation, printed, published and circulated in said city and said Council does hereby find, determine and declare that this Ordinance is an emergency measure and as such shall be in force and effect from and after its passage, authentication and publication, and the facts constituting its urgency are that owing to the earthquake which occurred on the 29th day of June, 1925, many buildings within said city have been damaged or destroyed or left in an unsafe condition and the rebuilding, repair and additions to the same immediately require it to maintain puhlic safcty, health and welfare.

State of California,
County of Santa Barbara—ss.

I, C. M. Andera, Mayor of said City, do hereby certify that the following ordinance was read in full and passed by not less than four (4) affirmative votes of the said council on the 16th day of July, 1925, by the following vote on roll call:

YEAS—Councilmen F. W. Cole, George K. Freeman, George M. McGuire, William J. Mellinger, C. M. Andera.

NAYS—None.

ABESNT—None.

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and caused the official seal to be affixed this 17th day of July, 1925.

C. M. ANDERA,
(Seal) Mayor.

Attest:
S. B. Taggart, City Clerk.

Mt. LOWE

"Earth has no finer view to show"

Mt. LOWE TAVERN and Cottages Enlarged and Improved

at the terminus of this World-Famous Trip afford a most delightful retreat for a long or short sojourn at reasonable rates

5 Trains Daily at convenient hours - from Main St. Station Los Angeles

$2.50 Round Trip Rate

For information and Reservations apply

Pacific Electric Ry.

Information Bureau Phone MEtropolitan 7400-TRinity 3661

JE N'OUBLIERAI JAMAIS

HOTEL GREEN

A well ordered Residential and Tourist Hotel of peculiar excellence. Open all year. Moderate rates. Apartments by the month.

The Green Tea Pot

CHARLES B. HERVEY, Proprietor

The

Biltmore

Salon

Los Angeles Biltmore

PAINTINGS

ETCHINGS

BRONZES

California Southland

M. URMY SEARES - - - - - Editor and Publisher

ELLEN LEECH - - - - - - - Managing Editor

NO. 68, VOL. VII AUGUST, 1925

CONTENTS

		PAGE
THE RESIDENCE OF FRANCES MARION THOMPSON	Cover Design
Wallace Neff, Architect. (From a painting by Norman Kennedy)
SANTA BARBARA'S REHABILITATION	H. C. Nickerson, Of the Allied Architect's Association	9
RECENT BOOKS—REVIEWS	Louise Morgrage	13
WHAT'S AN USHER	Medora Clark	11
COMMUNITY LIFE TWELVE MONTHS IN THE YEAR		14
UP THE VALLEY AND DOWN THE COAST		15
SOUTHLAND OPINION		16-17
SPORTS AT ARROWHEAD LODGE		18
ON THE LINKS AT PALOS VERDES		19
SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA CHAPTER A. I. A.	H. O. Sexsmith, Editor	20
A NEW CENTER FOR MUSIC IN LOS ANGELES		22
ARTS AND CRAFTS	Marion Hugus Clark	25
ARCHITECTURAL CLUB OF LOS ANGELES		26
BULLETIN OF THE ASSISTANCE LEAGUE OF SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA		28

CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND is published monthly at Pasadena, Cal.

Copyrighted, 1924, by M. Urmy Seares

Subscription price $2.50 per year, $1.25 one half year

ADVERTISING

CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND, PASADENA, CALIFORNIA

Mrs. Don Sebastian, 15 Humphrey Rd. Montecito, Assistant to the Publisher, and Representative in Santa Barbara

Robert Ames Winthrop, Pasadena, Advertising Counselor and Director of Display Advertising

Advertisers unaccustomed to furnishing national advertising copy to quality magazines may call Fair Oaks 7034 for assistance During Press Week, 24th to 30th, call TRinity 1501

The Los Angeles

Elizabeth Arden Salon

with

J. W. Robinson Co.

UNDER the direct management of Miss Arden and her New York staff, and offering the same specialized treatments which have made Miss Arden's other salons internationally known.

Round the World Cruises $1500 and up

Mediterranean Cruises $900 and up

Agency for all tours and cruises. Let us arrange your reservations.

C. J. JONES STEAMSHIP AGENCY

294 East Colorado St., Pasadena

Phone Fair Oaks 8026

Patio in the house of Harold Waldmann

MARGARET CRAIG

ARCHITECTURAL PHOTOGRAPHY

Portraits by Appointment

Official Photographer for California Southland

3223 W. Sixth Street

Telephone WAsh. 1653 Los Angeles

Do You Know the Birds in Your Own Garden?

Let

DAWSON'S

"THE BIRDS OF CALIFORNIA"

identify them for you

Sold only by Subscription

SOUTH MOULTON COMPANY

301 Bank of Italy Bldg.

Los Angeles - California

VAndike 4078

THE MANSFIELD SHOPS

Pasadena and Los Angeles

Consulting Decorators

Interiors designed and executed— WAshington 3473

Embroideries— DRexel 1747

Textiles—

CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND
AN ILLUSTRATED MAGAZINE OF NATIONAL INTEREST

THE RISE OF SANTA BARBARA

By H. C. NICKERSON, A. I. A.

OF all our American cities one time teeming with the interest of individualism and romance, the City of Santa Barbara stands unique as one of the few which still tells by its architecture the tradition and history of its people. It is notably a city of distinction; especially it is blessed with a location of unsurpassed natural beauty, lying along a sunny slope, a panorama between the ocean and the mountains. Its early days were begun in conquest, Spanish romance and the pilgrimage of the Spanish monks. There still stands the Santa Barbara Mission, refuge of these pilgrims, the old historic Mission established in 1786 and scarred by the shock of two earthquakes. And here and there throughout the town may be found the homes of the early settlers and many buildings associated with the life and activity of the early days. The simple, straightforward style of architecture of these buildings, typical of the South, is evident in the design of the modern structures, and thanks to the longevity of tradition, the best of the recent homes and city buildings reflect and perpetuate the architecture and spirit of the early times. The charm and enchantment which springs from the wooded hillsides and orange covered slopes seems to penetrate to the very heart of the town and is reflected in the tile roofs and plastered walls shadowed with the dark foliage of gardens. And the influence is keen enough to make itself felt even in the design of store fronts and in commercial buildings which follow the Latin type of design. The value of this beauty is not mythical or imaginary. It has been said that the old Missions are worth more and are a greater asset to Southern California than the oil wells, the oranges or even the climate. Santa Barbara has lead in the battle to preserve the charm of nature and tradition and it is today displaying the same courage and determination that has inspired France in keeping its Verdun inviolate.

Now has come an opportunity which, like all great responsibilities, involves a tremendous task. That the commercial section of the city has been cruelly scarred by the recent earthquake may afford an opportunity for even greater cultivation of its assets. The damage is, fortunately, not as extreme as has been in the case of similar disasters in other cities. The comparatively small loss of life, the quick and heroic action which prevented fire, the restricted area involved and the large percentage of important buildings left intact makes the undertaking more possible and more practical. The citizens of Santa Barbara must realize that the whole country is watching with sympathy and with the hope and expectation that the reconstruction will make Santa Barbara a joy to its residents, a refuge for the traveler and a center of culture.

Already the movement is on foot. Up to date and rigid buildings laws which were accepted just prior to the earthquake are obviously being given their well deserved consideration; the practical requirements of soundness and stability in construction have become of first importance. Reports of many experts are forthcoming and will and should be carefully studied. Before the shock was over, prominent public officials began a series of meetings with architects and property owners with a view to planning a better and more beautiful reconstruction. An Architectural Advisory Committee was appointed. Its Chairman is Bernhard Hoffmann, formerly President of the Community Arts Association and Chairman of the Plans and Planting Committee, which has long had this movement in hand. That the effort representing such varied interests is being synchronized is due to the prompt, well directed response to the "one touch of nature." The entire City Plan is under consideration, but the greatest effort is concentrated on practical ways and means of improving important streets and the necessity for resuming normal business functions is not overlooked. The Architectural Board immediately established a community drafting room to give advice to prospective builders and to point out the possibility of better design. Architects and builders from other cities have been invited to co-operate in the movement.

THE LOBERO THEATER, BUILT BY THE COMMUNITY ARTS ASSOCIATION OF SANTA BARBARA TO HOUSE ITS DRAMA SECTION AND ITS GENERAL OFFICES. THIS BUILDING WAS UNINJURED BY THE EARTHQUAKE AND IS NOW USED BY THE CLEARING HOUSE AND BANKS. GEORGE WASHINGTON SMITH, ARCHITECT; SNOOK AND KENYON, GENERAL CONTRACTORS.

THE SANTA BARBARA MISSION AFTER THE EARTHQUAKE OF JUNE 29, 1925. THIS BEAUTIFUL FACADE WILL BE REBUILT AS SOON AS THE FUNDS ARE RAISED FOR ITS RESTORATION IN CONCRETE WHICH CAN BE SOFTENED AS ADOBE BUT MADE QUAKE-PROOF.

The main features of the contemplated plan and procedure include the elimination of poor architectural design by the establishment of an Architectural Board of Review which will function in the City Offices of the Building Inspector; a better plan for State Street, the principal artery of the city; the encouragement of adherence to consistent and appropriate types of architecture for all new buildings.

The most important duty of requiring better construction is a theme continually in the thought of all and discussed whenever two people start a conversation about reconstruction. The lesson of cheap and unstable structures will not soon be forgotten and no effort will be spared to make the new Santa Barbara proof against any possible contingency. The new building code will help to prevent many deficiencies, to raise the standard of correct engineering design, and promote the proper use of materials and best quality of workmanship in construction. It will be a very difficult feat of salesmanship for an architect or builder to sell his wares at marked down prices or to use the argument "just as good." There is too much discussion current regarding the relative merits of design, materials and workmanship to permit the consideration of second grade work. But it must be remembered that many criticisms of failures due to materials used in Santa Barbara buildings are not always just nor technically correct. Some buildings stand unscathed whose construction appears to be of a less high standard than buildings which have shown failure. And many well designed buildings seem from superficial inspection to have unjustly suffered. In some cases the apparent damage hides a strong internal structure which is almost entirely undamaged. The severe criticism of certain types of building material such as baked clay products is by no means justified. Occasionally the crushing and falling out of panels of brick and tile has saved the main structure and allowed floors and columns to remain intact where the monolithic material showing less external damage has, by its weight and lack of elasticity, pounded and jarred the structure, causing a general demoralization of the structural members of the building. Some buildings properly designed in themselves as a unit have suffered from the vibration and pounding of adjacent buildings of a greater weight and mass.

In general, the damage caused by the earthquake is due to lack of consideration of seismology both as relating to the disposition of the masses of the building and the reactions within the structure itself; poor or too close design; and poor materials and poor construction methods. The conclusions reached by those who have studied the earthquake effects indicate a greater use of structural steel; a checking of the tendency to raise structural stresses in concrete and steel; continuous structural framing around buildings at floors and roof; the requirement of the use of cement mortar; the use of reinforced concrete at stairways and elevator shafts with sufficient tie to the frame of the building; the anchoring of all brick and masonry filler walls to the building frame; the anchoring of all fire escapes to the structural frame of the building; the use of anchors and continuous ties across the building and the tying of bearing plates and lintels in series of openings; the secure bonding of terra cotta and face brick; and limiting of overhanging cornices and masonry projections.

GENERAL VIEW OF SANTA BARBARA FROM EL ENCANTO HOTEL ON THE HILL. THE LOBERO THEATER RISES WHITE IN THE DISTANCE. EL ENCANTO IS BUILT OF WOOD AND IS NOW OPEN. FROM ITS PORCH ONE SEES THE WHOLE CITY LYING ON THE PLAIN BELOW. TO THE RIGHT SAMARKAND CAN BE SEEN FROM EL ENCANTO AND BEYOND IT THE MESA RISES.

The City Council has already appointed the Architectural Board of Review consisting of three practicing Architects and two laymen versed in matters of design and building. It is the intent of the ordinances that no building permit be issued by the Building Inspector until the appropriateness as to elevation or location has been considered by the Architectural Board of Review. A somewhat similar procedure in the case of Public Work has been operating in the City of Los Angeles for many years under the name of the Municipal Art Commission. This is one step to secure better architectural design. Its success depends largely on the personnel of the Board, its co-operation with the public and its ability to expedite the review and approval of plans presented. The Santa Barbara ordinance contemplates that a building permit be immediately acted upon by the Board but that if the Board recommends changes in the design or construction of the building which the owners are unwilling to accept, recourse may be made to the City Council.

The widening of State Street is of great importance to the city. It is already beyond its point of saturation for traffic requirements. Although most of the important stores and business buildings face this street, there is but little opportunity for an automobile to stop and discharge its passengers in the flow of traffic, and most property owners realize that better opportunities for parking in front of their stores mean an enhancement of purchasing power. The necessity for this widening is undeniable, but serious interruption of business functions and the loss of property to present owners must be avoided. As a solution of this problem, it has been suggested that the existing sidewalks be made to serve the purpose of a wider street; and that new sidewalks be placed just within the present building line forming an arcade for the pedestrian traffic. By so doing the upper floors of existing or future buildings will remain at the present property line. From an aesthetic point of view the use of areaded sidewalks and occasional recessed buildings is an undeniable improvement and the suggested treatment offers an unusual opportunity for the imagination and ability of the architects charged with the study of the new structures, to create a State Street which may thus be one of the most distinctive and beautiful thoroughfares of the country.

Many interesting sketches have been developed and exhibited to illustrate what can be done on State Street, in typical city blocks and in the case of isolated buildings. The co-operative drafting room as well as local and outside architects have been busy furnishing new ideas for proposed buildings. The work has been encouraged and directed by the Architectural Advisory Committee who have always kept in mind a consistent and more fitting type of architecture. Special effort has been made to influence property owners and prospctive builders to adopt this style of architecture already so well established in and about the city. It is a style variously named —perhaps the word "Latin" best expresses it, for it eminates from the Mediterranean countries and is sometimes called Spanish, Italian or Southern European. Whatever be the name, it is the architecture of the tile roofs and extensive plastered surfaces with concentration of ornament, deep shadow and deep reveals. It permits of light colored walls which reflect the sunlight and cast off rather than retain the heat and form a fitting background for foliage which is so much a part of the California landscape. At the recent meetings of owners, builders and architects a favorable response to the adoption of uniformity in design was observed. Many prominent business men about to erect or alter their buildings expressed an approval of this method of procedure and an appreciation of its value to the city and also to themselves.

IN THE COURT OF THE DE LA GUERRA STUDIOS THE MEMBERS OF OLD SPANISH FAMILIES POSED FOR THE FIESTA SCENES LAST YEAR. THESE MODERN BUILDINGS IN SPANISH STYLE ARE BUILT OF HOLLOW TILE WITH CONCRETE GIRDLES AND STOOD THE SHOCK WITHOUT ANY HARM.

SUGGESTION OF BLOCK TREATMENT IN THE NEW SANTA BARBARA STYLE WITH CONTINUOUS ARCADES. ALLIED ARCHITECTS ASSOCIATION.

VIEW FROM SAMARKAND HOTEL AND ITS BEAUTIFUL GARDENS. TO THE LEFT THE CITY LIES ALONG THE OCEAN LEVEL AND BETWEEN SAMARKAND AND THE HIGH MESA IS A LITTLE STREAM. THE LOW GROUND ON WHICH MOST OF SANTA BARBARA IS BUILT IS ALLUVIAL SOIL FILLING IN AN OLD GEOLOGICAL CANYON ACCORDING TO THE EXPERTS, WHO EXPLAIN THAT SUCH SOIL VIBRATES WITH A LONGER WAVE THAN DO THE ROCKS OF THE MOUNTAINS AND HIGHER GROUND.

This program of rehabilitation is broad and far-sighted. In its execution, the use of ornament, painting and decoration in each new building should not be overlooked. Every architect and prospective builder can do much to enhance the final result of adding his individual touch to the general plan. A recessed area for grass and shrubs, a courtyard lined with flowers or a blank wall brightened with treatment of color is an integral part of the architectural effect which is desired. The use of statuary has been sadly neglected in this country, although it plays an important part in the architectural setting of Southern Europe. These are details which give life and sparkle to the picture.

So it is hoped that nothing will interfere with this courageous plan for the rehabilitation of Santa Barbara and that its people are determined to prove that, combined with good construction, beauty pays. For the future, may Santa Barbara be notable for its successful achievement of turning a calamity into a victory.

A SUGGESTION FOR STREET TREATMENT OF A BLOCK IN THE SANTA BARBARA STYLE SHOWING VARIETY IN OUTLINE, ARCADES AND RECESSES.

SANTA BARBARA'S BETTER HOMES COMMITTEE

BETTER HOMES IN AMERICA
An Educational Organization Incorporated in the State of Delaware, 1923
1653 Pennsylvania Ave., Washington, D. C., July 9, 1925.

Miss Pearl Chase, Secretary,
Community Arts Association,
33 East Canon Perdido Street,
Santa Barbara, Calif.

My dear Miss Chase:

I am delighted to be able to report to you that our Committee on Awards for the 1925 campaign for Better Homes in America unanimously voted to divide the First Prize between the committees of Santa Barbara and Atlanta, Georgia. I am enclosing a check for $250 herewith. Official announcement will be made in the newspapers on July 14.

Our Committee was particularly interested in the remarkable quality of the furnishing and decoration of the demonstration homes at Santa Barbara, and were agreed that yours was the best demonstration of home furnishing in this year's campaign. They were impressed, also, with the quality of the architecture and with the scope and excellence of your program.

I wish to congratulate you and your committee and all who were associated in your campaign upon its unusual merit. You have made a remarkable contribution to this important national movement for Better Homes in America, and we feel deeply indebted to you for it.

Cordially yours,
(Signed) James Ford, Executive Director, Better Homes in America.

DEMONSTRATION HOUSE NO. 2, ADJOINING A HOUSE OF SIMILAR FLOOR PLAN, WHICH IT WOULD HAVE EXACTLY RESEMBLED WITHOUT THE ADVICE OF BETTER HOMES COMMITTEE.

DEMONSTRATION HOUSE NO. 3. THREE HILLSIDE APARTMENTS, DESIGNED AND FURNISHED BY OWNERS, OPEN TO PUBLIC DURING THE WEEK.

DEMONSTRATION HOUSE NO. 1—"THE HOUSE THAT BUDGET BUILT." DESIGNED, BUILT AND FURNISHED BY MEMBERS OF THE BETTER HOMES COMMITTEE OF SANTA BARBARA IN THE AMBASSADOR TRACT. THE INTERIOR WILL BE SHOWN IN OUR NEXT ISSUE WITH A REVIEW OF THE COMMITTEE'S PROGRAM FOR THE WEEK.

HOUSE REMODELED FROM OLD BARN, COLONIAL STYLE.

SIX-ROOM STUCCO HOUSE. LISTED FOR OBSERVATION DURING BETTER HOMES WEEK. CARLETON M. WINSLOW, ARCHITECT.

HOUSE REMODELED FROM OLD BARN, AFTER STYLE OF SPANISH FARM HOUSE. SOULE, MURPHY AND HASTINGE, ARCHITECTS.

THREE-ROOM, $1500 HOUSE PLANNED AND EXTERIOR IMPROVED BY BETTER HOMES COMMITTEE AFTER FRAMEWORK WAS IN PLACE. DEMONSTRATION HOUSE NO. 2 SEEN IN THE FIRST PICTURE AT LEFT.

HOUSE REMODELED FROM AN OLD BARN, BOARD AND BATTEN. THIS IS AN INEXPENSIVE TREATMENT. THE INTERIOR IS COMMODIOUS.

RECENT BOOKS—REVIEWS

By LOUISE MORGRAGE

THE CHRYSALIS OF ROMANCE

By INEZ G. HOWARD, The Times Mirror Press

Light airy graceful "nothings" gathered up in the most inconsequential manner, form here a combination, which is an altogether pleasant "something." We are well aware, as this author informs us, that many of our daily customs and institutions, as well as material objects in constant use, have their origins in more or less romantic incidents hidden from our vision, far back in the misty shadows down the corridors of time. These lurking depths have been explored by this lady, with her mind's eye whereof the happy results have been set down in this blend of fact and fancy which with apt felicity, she names the "Chrysalis of Romance." Of course many of these truths have a familiar place in the back of the consciousness of nearly everybody, but after the ever old issues forth from the crucible of Mrs. Howard's imagination, it assumes the guise of the ever new. Which after all is literature. She has taste, tact, a natural sense of proportion, and so instead of presenting this inert mass of material tediously and ineffectually, as she might very easily have done, she has accomplished an achievement, as transparent as a spider's web, and every bit as competently woven. Fantastic illustrations partaking of the nature of the text, add to the attractive features of this successful book.

MRS. OSCAR ROBERT HOWARD OF LOS ANGELES, AUTHOR OF "CHRYSALIS OF ROMANCE"

IN ZANZIBAR

By RALPH D. PAINE, Houghton Mifflin Company

When the officer of the deck on the scout cruiser "Toledo" reported, "Boat coming off, sir," a weary exasperated, but by this time perfectly resigned captain answered, "I might have known it. I don't know who he is, but I know why he comes." The reader who has followed the brisk and hilarious story up to this point, will shake with mirth and understand. For this is a situation near the end of a tale called "In Zanzibar," containing a merry account of the involuntary exploits of one William Donnelly, machinist's mate of this boat, on her shake down cruise along the east coast of Africa. He was sober, peaceful, intelligent, impulsive we grant, but aroused to anger, only when unrighteously provoked. Yet some imp of a Nemesis used him as a human gadfly, in every port visited, to sting into wrathful action, European and native representatives of law and order, resulting in a continual procession of gorgeous officials, bearing notes of protest to the amazed and distracted captain of the "Toledo." Since Nemesis, merely mischievous in this case and not cruel, really loving her victim, was always furnishing loopholes for his escape.

How William Donnelly and his equally innocent and unfortunate companions, tumbled continually from the traditional frying pan into the fire and back again, on this voyage, is a very funny yarn It is amusing enough to scare away any ordinary woe, inflicted upon human beings, for the time at any rate it takes to read it.

We recommend it especially to ocean-going travellers. Taken in one long and continuous draught, it will surely prove a potion strong enough to bring blissful oblivion for the duration of that particular woe to be expected on such occasions.

PEARLS OF DESIRE

By AUSTIN J. SMALL
Houghton Mifflin Company

The special star, ruling the destiny of fiction purveyors once permitted with malice aforethought, a buccaneer, named Captain Kidd to roam the seas. It would seem the gentleman spent his waking hours in burying treasure, that he could find again, only with the aid of the cryptic directions, which he spent his sleeping hours in dreaming. In "Pearls of Desire," the treasure consists of pearls, of fabulous worth, and the directions, must have been made by Captain Kidd, while he was having nightmare. The semaphore solves them, however, and here we trust that Mr. Small is not perpetrating an anachronism. The search takes the hero, a gentleman, but possessed of a pugilistic fist with plenty of villains to use it on, through the south seas to an uncharted island where he finds something too wonderful for even the Captain's wildest dreams. A lurid tale indeed, but we feel that Mr. Austin's powers of invention are almost more than he can bear.

VICTORY

By LEONIE AMINOFF, E. P. Dutton & Company

This ambitious lady has formed the plan of presenting the meteoric career of Napolon in twelve volumes of fiction. Having completed four, she now offers the fifth, called "Victory," in a series which is named "Torchlight" and designated romances by the publishers. Romances indeed! Her historical characters have about as much romantic glamour clinging to them as is attached to Sidney Smith's "Andy Gump" and his associates. In fact the display of human nature in this book resembles that in the comic strip, a ruthless exhibition of the weaknesses of mankind held up to derision. Such an unconventional aspect is vastly diverting, provided the reader is not so critical as to object to the fantastic web of imagination, wherewith the writer covers the framework of historical truth. Even if this subject matter presents no difficulty, there is still a most eccentric style, bristling with peculiar mannerisms, which may repel some and prove interesting to others.

The story relates Napoleon's experiences during the expedition to Egypt and events occurring there, as well as those taking place in Josephine's life in France, involving all the well known characters of the time. Historical incidents are introduced in a logical sequence much as if the book were pure invention, leading very adroitly up to the culminating point, which is of course the dismissal of the Directory after Napoleon's return, and his establishment as first consul for ten years. These events are described with considerable dramatic force, making perhaps the most vivid impression on the reader of anything in the book.

Sometime in the far distant future, the shade of Leonie Aminoff, while strolling the Elysian fields, may perchance encounter that of Napoleon, or worse still of Josephine. We are certain that the meeting will have unpleasant consequences, and we extend our sympathy to whatever shape may then be representing the lady who has conceived this book.

STEWART EDWARD WHITE, WHO IS NOW IN AFRICA HUNTING LIONS WITH THE LONG BOW, FROM A WOOD CUT BY BERTRAND ZADIG. DOUBLEDAY, PAGE AND COMPANY HAVE JUST PUBLISHED MR. WHITE'S "CREDO," THE BOOK OF HIS OWN PHILOSOPHY OF LIFE

THE CRUISE OF THE NONA

By HILAIRE BELLOC, Houghton Mifflin Company

From Holyhead on the north-east corner of Wales, round by the rugged shore line of England to the Wash on the east coast, is a distance of many twisting miles. Providing a sailing yacht could steer clear of Scylla on the one side, in the shape of projecting cliffs and sharp jagged rocks, lurking just beneath the surface of the seething waters, and on the other side of the Charybdis of shoals fogs and baffling winds, it might safely make a pleasant voyage between these two points. This was actually done by the "Nona," a nine ton sailing yacht which survived all these perils with her owner, Hilaire Belloc, who sailed her on this occasion. We know this because he has written a book, describing his experiences on this adventurous voyage, narrow escapes and all. In fact he says the real Scylla and Charybdis are absolutely nothing in comparison with the dangers menacing the sailor venturing thus around the coast of England.

This is by no means the whole content of the book, however. Not only has he given an account of his perilous adventures, but he has related in detail everything he thought about on this voyage as well. Of course on a sailing boat, there are long lazy safe hours, when there is nothing to do but watch the waves white with salty foam go rolling by and think. This is a pastime for which Mr. Belloc has unusual equipment, since his mind seems to be a whole set of encyclopaedia, from which he can select any subject at will. Naturally as he sailed in and out of places famous in England's song and story, from the days of the Romans down to the recent war, many of his reflections dwelt on these events which so often presaged a chance in the country's destiny. Thoughts like these easily passed on to matters concerning life in ancient and modern times, until in the end we find we have a volume containing comparatively little adventure, and much in the way of contemplative essays.

It is unfortunate that in transcribing this fund of information and theorizing Mr. Belloc should employ so ponderous and dull a style. The reader must work for all he gets, and for this he needs plenty of patience as well as leisure, but given these attributes, he may find some enlightenment on many and varied subjects within the covers of this lengthy book.

For the Review of "Credo," and others, please turn to Page 20

SENORITAS OF PASADENA'S COMMUNITY PLAYHOUSE

WHAT'S AN USHER?

By MEDORA CLARK

IT'S a long leap from the buxom duenna of the Comedie Francaise to the smiling senorita of the new Community Playhouse in Pasadena—so long that it is hard to realize that the two function alike. There are many things that we don't do well in this country but running a theatre isn't one of them. Some one, a long time ago, casting an efficient American eye critically over the European system, paused with a finger on the continental pourboire and said wisely "that must go." That elimination in America made the excursion to the left aisle, seventh row, just after the raising of the curtain, a pleasant preliminary instead of a nightmare and put us on a new basis—salaries for everyone, ushers included.

Our first theatres were a riot of gold, ambitious if misguided. Women were still retiring and men plentiful so we placed them at the aisles of our theatres and as they were servants, we put them in liveries—blue or red bound with gold, but little gold and much blue and red.

Then we began to embellish our theatres and their aisles; we put in women. And we embellished them. With true American impulse we overdid the thing until the ushers outdistanced not only the theatre but the performance. Now we have begun on a retrogressive route in search of our equilibrium. And in southern California we seem to have found it in the costumes of the senoritas of the Playhouse.

It is difficult to say just how so satisfying an effect is produced; one can scarcely analyze such successful simplicity. They are Spanish —not ultra-Spanish; no boleros, no tassels, no fringe, no short satin skirts, no red heels; not even combs nor earrings. Such accessories cost money and the Playhouse costumes were evolved from mist. But they are harmonious, gala—perhaps the rose in the hair does that—and informal enough to achieve a note of welcome.

They so charmed me that I was eager to learn their history—or their evolution. It was the usual Playhouse story, each one to whom I was sent modestly disclaiming all credit.

"Don't talk to me," protested Marion Brackenridge, "it was Loretta Japs; she was really wonderful. She ——"

"But didn't you suggest the silhouette—the mass, so to speak?" I persisted. She is a sculptor and I felt a certain swing in the design.

"Well, I knew," she admitted, "that Mr. Clark wanted long full skirts and that he wanted the shawls—but we couldn't have long ones because they must be practical, so we chose the shawls of Andalusia."

"Did you know about shawls—and Spanish provinces?" I pressed.

THE USHERS OF THE PASADENA COMMUNITY PLAY HOUSE IN THEIR COSTUMES OF ANDALUSIA. TWO PHOTOGRAPHS BY MR. ALSON CLARK TAKEN WITH AN ACROMATIC LENS.

"No, but I went to the libraries and searched and searched, and made drawings, and shopped and shopped until I haggled over prices and saw samples in my sleep."

"They did take a scandalous amount of material for this abbreviated age—didn't they?" I apologized, "but how did you make them so mellow a part of the theatre without having them insipid?"

"We talked and talked; and tried out such a lot before we finally decided. We had Mr. Clark's curtain always in mind and we worked toward it; we wanted them surely to harmonize with it in color. And we finally chose a cross between—peasant and nobility," she smiled, "do you like them?" And then with a pride of her particular achievement—perhaps the part that had meant most struggle—"I thought the sleeves were good; the two little ruffles just under the shawl. They are sort of ——"

We looked at each other for a word.

"Feminine?" I suggested.

"I think the whole costume is that," she summed.

"Feminine," I reflected afterward, as I crossed the flagstones of the patio; that may be it. But that's not all.

I lingered in front of one of the patio shops; it's glorious display was soothing to look at and made an inspiring spot in which to philosophize. Feminine, that isn't all, I pursued; the fact that they searched and searched and searched—intelligent industry—and that they drew and drew—art combined with patience—and that they talked it over—clearheaded cooperation—and that no one claimed the credit —the joy of work with no thought of recompense other than the pleasure that it might give some one: these are the things that made the costumes. They are the things that made me have to write about them. And for want of a better term—in that futile attempt to name them, I am forced to call so intangible a quality, "community spirit."

THE COMMUNITY

By J. W. MORIN

THE thing that seems to distinguish latter day social conditions is a more general and practical application of the proposition that the individual's real life is not lived of and for himself alone but develops in contact and consistency with the community life. The political, educational and even the industrial achievements of the Anglo-Saxon race which have given it the world leadership, rest in the peculiar affinity of the mind of this race for the conception and application of the rule that the complete supremacy of true community interest should prevail as contrasted with the individualistic interpretation of life.

In establishing therefore the first elementary principal of a community playhouse if it is designed to be a stimulant to true community thought development, it must be declared that first the new institution must be made of and by the community. If this is true in regard to the institution to begin with, the beginning is right, for the community like everything else needs a manifestation of itself. Then if the play is of the people (or the community) the better play it is, the finer the result, but if it be such a fine play that the community on the average will not go to see it it should be recognized that too great a step has been taken in acceleration of the community theatre development for as in all other fields of endeavor, including politics and social advance, there can be no leadership of much practical avail, except the leadership remain in contact with those who are led. A community playhouse cannot live in a community under a leadership which is so far in advance of the average taste of the community that it can be described as born out of its time. A community playhouse whether it be simple or complex is relatively a very expensive thing to maintain and for a few to sustain such a pseudo community institution otherwise than by general community financial and moral support will in the long run inevitably prove an impossible burden. This institution in Pasadena so far has enjoyed consistent support in its maintenance from hundreds of its friends and followers and it is the policy of those in charge of its direction that it were better that it should have a degree of support from hundreds than it should have equal or better support from a few. The leadership of a playhouse movement of this type must take the bulk of the people just as they are found in average large quantities and depend upon them for the various types of work including the work of the cast and for a paying audience. It may be assumed if the play is popular it is pretty nearly true to type as a community playhouse product. The only advance therefore in the type or grade of plays which may be frequently presented consistent with the solvency of the playhouse movement is in a corresponding advance in the interest of the community patrons or in their patience with the efforts of the amateur, if one prefers to express it in that way. This advance in faith and in patience the local playhouse institution has enjoyed in a very appreciable degree in recent years.

In communities where local conditions of leisure, genius and idealism are relatively an important factor, a community playhouse may go very far both in a material and in an ideal sense. In these exceptional communities of the Southwest with the infinite personal resources of spirit and genius, the governing Board has felt justified by its experiments in adopting a policy that the institution can go a few steps beyond the lines of least resistence. In other words while its primary business is of and with the community, for its amusement and general welfare, it is also justified in exhibiting an educational phase and an experimental phase.

These two additional phases or objectives have justified the Board in asking of the community some measure of financial support in the nature of sustaining donations for operation (as well as construction) because the institution proposes and endeavors to be more than a place of amusement, even though it be a Simon pure community institution for amusement. Education is notoriously expensive and experiment is even more so. It has in fact to be endowed and the frontier of experiment in education is sometimes termed a foundation. The Carnegie foundation for example has taken official recognition of the importance of the community playhouse objectives to society by subsidizing one such institution in the Southwest (though it does not happen to be in Pasadena) to a large extent.

English literature alone abounds in worthwhile drama which the professional stage will not and can not afford to produce and outside of an occasional school effort, if the professional producer cannot attempt this class of play, it will remain unplayed due to the inherent risk of production expense. A deserving play unplayed is not of much value to the rank and file of the community as a play. Our local institution has produced in all probability more so called classics, exceptional or educational types of plays by recognized authors in less than seven years than have been produced in all the professional theatres of California since the conquest of California from Mexico. So much for the educational importance of the institution as a justification for its existance, and for its claim for a reasonable subsidy if necessary for those who can assist it.

On its experimental side (in a restricted sense) it can be explained that the professional theatre being without government aid in the United States must remain solvent to live and seldom is there any disposition therefore for it to depart from the minimum conventional production methods. The playhouse, however, seems justified in the assumption that it is called upon to present its plays with all the sincerity of physical detail, properties and costumes and light and are consistent with its financial means and a relatively larger production expense is inevitable. It results in such effective presentation of the environment for the actor as often to leave impressions of lasting character with the audience, as well as to assist greatly in the effectiveness of illusion, which is so much the special object of the spoken drama.

CONCRETE AND BRICK CAN BE MADE BEAUTIFUL. MR. ALSON CLARK SETTING THE BRICKS FOR THE GRILL AS HE HAD SEEN ONE IN MEXICO.

UP THE VALLEY AND DOWN THE COAST

A Letter from Carmel-by-the-Sea
BERNHARD HOFFMANN

Carmel Highlands, January 12, 1925.

My dear Ralph:

This has been our big day! Each day since reaching this charming bit of coast we have tried something more ambitious—picnics on the nearby beach, then the exploring of sea gardens, an inspection of the Theatre of the Golden Bough and to even up, a visit at the Mission San Carlos at Carmel and the tomb of Father Serra with its new recumbent figure of the pioneer in bronze, by Joseph Mora.

Yesterday before our guides, the Duanes and Gladwins, left, we ventured down the coast some seven miles to see some blow holes in the rocks. Like most of these groups of kelp-covered granite rocks, on which the waves pound in from the Pacific, frequently throwing spray high into the air, there are clefts and back passages where the force of waves is broken and the water surges back and forth more or less angrily or lazily as tide and wind determine. Here may be seen gardens—bath-tubs still containing the stones that formerly were rolled about till the holes were reamed out to hogshead capacity. These clefts and tubs and churns are often lined with anemones, and sea urchins—limpits and abalones, snails and other growths. In most cases the colors are startling to one used to the Atlantic coast—purple, bright reds, greens and blues.

We said "ventured down the coast," for to one used to paved roads or country lanes it is an adventure, surely. The Hills slope steeply to the sea with deep, sharp sloped canyon or arroyos running back where the semi-occasional streamlet has cut deep—and so the road, narrow and tortuous at best, dips down and back till a crossing can be made, often doubling back at the low point over a bridge or culvert on such a hairpin turn that it seems as if the car would be too long to track—and then up again and out around shoulders in limestone or adobe banks that have been scraped back and rise sheer above while the natural slope falls way on the outboard side. No wonder the frequent signs Danger—Drive Slowly—Sound Horn on Curves.

Added to the mechanical difficulties of keeping to a road like this is the mental hazard because of the glorious views of sea or lupine covered slope or redwood grove that, like countless Loreleis, seem bound to divert the steersman to his certain doom.

Well, today it was decreed we should adventure to the Big Sur—The Big South River, the Spaniards named it. We were promised 28 miles of thrills. We were almost three hours on the Trail but we found the thrills were to be measured by the yards—not miles. We met two cars on the out journey, each on a turn, number one quite early in the game so we were properly cautious and reverent in approaching the balance of our turns—or more exactly, we only "let her

(Continued on Page 26)

THE COAST OF MONTEREY. ITS PINES AND BLUE WATERS.

SOUTHLAND

State Street, Santa Barbara

THERE are several streets in the world which have their place in history. The Stane Street running across England as an old Roman Road is worthy of the books which have been written about it. Piccadilly, "Boul Miche" Unter den Linden, Fifth Avenue, call up distinctive response from those who love the city they epitomize.

Market Street, with its foot in the Bay and its head in Twin Peaks, is San Francisco; and forming Los Angeles, bringing order out of rapid growth, we find Wilshire Boulevard, Western Avenue, and Anaheim Road flung across the whole metropolitan water front, a street in Long Beach but outside of it a great turnpike connecting the Metropolitan harbor with the orchard towns of Riverside and Orange Counties.

Thus the eyes of the world in which we live, turning in sympathy toward Santa Barbara, meet the amazing spectacle of State Street, rising from the dust of an earthquake, undaunted and full of courage to grasp a unique opportunity and turn even so great a disaster into an asset undeniable.

The name of this street means much more than merely the rehabilitation of Santa Barbara. It represents the whole movement toward the City Beautiful which has occupied the attention of our people for many a year.

This movement is the fundamental desire on the part of a free people to grasp and express in their daily lives all the beauty and pleasure which has in feudal Europe been the portion of the favored few alone.

The towns of Europe were owned by their overlords and each grew slowly as a beautiful unit, now owned by the townspeople who have inherited it.

Our cities, on the contrary, have grown quickly as conglomerates with beauty left out. Whether our reaction from European feudalism has caused us to assume a mask of ugliness and stern denial of beauty, or whether our "Main Streets" in all their ugliness are the expression of our attitude in business, the result has been deplorable.

An ugly thing with an ugly name has grown up with every great city, smothering the finer instincts of our people and making our civic, commercial and industrial building unlovely to look upon, a disguise of finer things.

As in the old fairy-tale of Beauty and the Beast, selfish greed has sometimes courted Beauty, only to frighten her away. The love of money, the selfishness that blinds one to beauty, are the ugly things of life and find expression in a business street which seems to say "Every body on this street is working for himself. Business is business and beauty and the joy of life are things apart. We'll buy those things when we have money enough to retire."

What ugly cities selfishness has built! What grasping competition is expressed in many a row of ugly shops, elbowing each other out of the market and forced by law alone to dwell together in a sort of unity!

Out from under the law, free in an atmosphere created by our modern business and service clubs, we are beginning to express the golden rule in our business blocks as well as in the residence sections.

Concentrated in one city of the California Coast, brought to light by disaster, this spirit of mutual helpfulness shines forth in the new plans for State Street.

A close study of what is being done there today shows every sort of expert, every gift of training and experience, every kindly neighborly instinct laid on the boards and put at the service of Santa Barbara. Community work begun years before has prepared the way and inspired confidence. The traditions of romance, breeding, and fine living which have always been Santa Barbara's in years past are all there today determined to find expression in their new city as it rises, like the Prince in the old fairy tale. The earthquake has been the cruel cause which has laid low the city. But when it rises at the call of "Beauty" Santa Barbara's princely qualities will have thrown off the disguise and will be expressed in a State Street worthy of the name.

The Meaning of a Community Arts Association

Editor's Note—This informal talk was made by Dr. Henry S. Pritchett, President of The Carnegie Corporation, at a membership meeting of the Community Arts Association of Santa Barbara. The first section was published in our July Issue.

TOWARD the end of what we call the Middle Ages there existed an order known as The Brethren of The Common Life. They taught all classes who would accept their instruction. They had no fixed curriculum but they simply held out in one community or another the opportunity to enter into knowledge. With the growth of the universities they disappeared and yet through the Schools of the Brethern of the Common Life, came Erasmus, the leader in the Renaissance; and Luther, the leader in the Religious Reformation.

There is, however, yet another phase of a Community Arts Association and its work which Carnegie Corporation had in mind in making this grant.

There are many agencies in our social order whose purpose is to serve the advancement of knowledge. Often such societies stratify along horizontal rather than vertical lines in society. Commercial, educational, even religious associations tend to become the representation of a group or a class. The commercial bodies, the labor unions, the organizations of religious denominations all have good purposes but they appeal in many cases to special interests or to particular groups and sometimes form barriers in the way of development of a community feeling.

This situation has been characteristic of civilized man ever since human society has been so far developed as to permit the growth of large communities. The Roman Empire as it tottered to its fall was characterized by immense numbers of social organizations. There existed in the city of Rome itself, thousands of these societies called collegia, the parent of our present word college. Under Roman Law three persons were sufficient to organize such a college. Many of these organizations, however, embraced great numbers of persons but nearly always they were representative of a group of a class. A large number of these collegia were burial societies. The spread of the Christian religion in the first four centuries educated the world to an acute sense of the need to preserve the human body after death and many of the colleges of Imperial Rome arose out of that desire. There are people today in our country who seem to think that the colleges have a mortuary flavor.

Among all these organizations with whose history we are acquainted those based upon the broad ground of an appreciation of Art and the development of artistic skill and taste have had a notable effect in the development of wide community interests. The Guilds of the Middle ages, drawn together by a sense of craftsmanship, and having as a common thread of interest an appreciation of beauty and of skill, were not only among the most successful of such organizations but they had a distinct value in the fact that they appealed to the community sense without reference to class prejudice or social distinction. There are neither political nor theological nor class lines in those things which make for the knowledge of beauty or of human skill in the arts. The motive back of such an association is one which appeals alike to all members of a community. It tends to group its members vertically as far as social distinctions are concerned rather than horizontally. Art, as a field for culture for the human spirit is not sectarian. It is essentially democratic.

It goes without saying that the same questions of personal co-operation arise in a Community Arts Association as in any other association of human beings. Men and women cannot work together effectively except as they sink personal prejudice and personal ambitions, whether they work under one name or another. No human organization, church or corporation or labor union ever existed independent of the human qualities of those who composed it. But when an association adopts as its field of common effort the cultivation of the sense of beauty, the training of the members of the community in the skilled practice of the Arts they do not run against the ordinary barriers of political, social and religious antagonism that tends so often to separate man into classes.

OPINION

The history of such associations in the past gives ground for the belief that a Community Arts Association has an unusual value as an agent for the social integration of a community. The by-products of any endeavor are sometimes more notable than the direct work. One may well hope that among the by-products of the labors of a Community Arts Association may be a certain co-operation amongst all the members of a community that shall be free of many of the prejudices that tend to divide the best of men and women into separate and distinct camps.

HENRY S. PRITCHETT.

What of Prohibition?

ANY cross section of life may be viewed by asking the opinion of all persons met in the ordinary day of a business man. Accordingly if one sets out to find the state of affairs on the subject of strong drink and weak wills, he may find the answer by boldly asking questions and using his eyes.

Standing on the edge of the curb waiting for a street car one sees his neighbor, a wobbly young man, ostensibly doing the same thing. But a little close but unobserved watching discloses the fact that he is waiting for no car, but has chosen the edge of the sidewalk for other purposes. The self control he now maintains in order to hide his condition —and avoid arrest—might have been used to better purpose before he drank his fusel oil. No need to ask him where he got it; he is too far gone.

Yet a glance up and down the street is reassuring. Where once the curb was lined we now see but this poor remnant of a day when evidence of man's submission to the reign of drink was everywhere. Main street is cleaning up, and even that short block of First street through which our trolley runs, once a vile tunnel, now assumes a fit and orderly appearance.

Another glimpse of hidden breakage of the law, is caught at night in public hostelry where congregate the newly risen from the ranks of undeveloped aristocracy. Not being to the manor born they do not know that drinking is not now good form and so invite each other out "to see my automobile" as gentlemen of old invited friends—who could control their appetites—to test some good old wine set on the sideboard of their homes.

"A gentleman never drinks alone"—that old maxim of the solid South has saved many a Southern lad from poisoned drink today. For, being too much of a gentleman to offer his friends the makeshifts of the day, he avoids it entirely and is saved many a sudden sickness and eventual disgrace.

The Northerner on the other hand—toughened inside and out by alcohol his ancestors dispensed as hard cider to all workmen in the field, has also inherited the perfect self control his ancestors developed in New England, rough and stern. He avoids the bottles of his would-be friends and cautiously dispenses the last remnant of his inherited wine cellar and estate.

Two, talking on the trolley, summed up the argument. "Take the great mass of ordinary persons raised without it and whose tissues have had time to become normal, and for whom the law was made—if one of them indulges in strong drink as made today, he's gone. How long do you think this breaking of our laws will continue to be be laughingly allowed?"

"It will go on," said the other, "until the nouveau riche have killed themselves off and the costly stuff has vanished; and on the other side the poor stuff will grow worse until even the animal in man rebels and refuses it. The fittest humans will survive by avoiding it entirely; and the fittest drinks will cost so much they cannot do much harm."

The Bible Outside The Schools

THE issue of the trial of School Teacher Scopes is not one of religion, of evolution, or of fundamental faith in the Bible. Clear to all who know the circumstances, the issue stands forth as one of law and the right of the people through their legislatures to control the teaching in the schools which they support. The American citizens who established the public schools in the United States were themselves educated people; but the people of Europe have been allowed to pour into this country and the illiterate of America have the right to say what shall be taught in the public schools of today wherever they are in the majority. Public opinion alone can save the children who enter the treadmill of our public schools; and this trial has furnished the opportunity for the formation of public opinion on this subject.

And yet to outsiders there may still be a question as to why we tolerate such lack of education in our public men. The answer is that this is a representative government and much of our voting is still done for our friends.

Why have we tolerated silly interpretations of the scriptures or the teaching of science as opposed to Bible or spiritual truth? Because this is the land of the free and the home of the brave, and anyone who has nerve enough to do it can get up on the stump of his own ambition and talk to whoever will listen to him. We are a most tolerant nation and we care very little what others think.

To a degree we become criminal in this direction when we remain silent and let demagogues represent us before those whom we are training in our public schools. Are we giving them the best the present age affords? We are not giving them the best moral, social or religious training the present affords because we are afraid to overstep the freedom we are pledged to maintain. Therefore our young people are trained in scientific thought, but left untrained and even uninformed on the subject of what are the fundamentals of religion. The danger is that they, in their advanced knowledge of science and their lack of learning in religion will say, "If this is Christianity, then I am an Atheist." Ignorance as to what is an Atheist or what, a Christian is wide spread.

Since the earliest Christians differed in opinion respecting the Apocryphal Books, how can we be sure that no part of the Bible is lost to us? Must we not, therefore, look upon the Bible as the authorative standard of religion and morals; and "search the scriptures"—not swallow them whole?

Those who love and revere God's holy word as an inspired revelation to mankind, those who have studied it the most profoundly and who take its precepts as a guide to daily life, have learned from the first chapter of Genesis what every one's experience in life teaches, i. e., man's body "returns to the dust from which it came." The body is therefore the least important part of man. It is in the second chapter of Genesis that we find the consolation and hope of man's higher function. For inspired words have no hidden meaning when they repeat, "And the Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life; and man became a living soul." Not until "the dust of the ground" had been "formed" by God through the ages, not until the human body had some sort of "nostrils" did God make man into his own image by breathing into him the breath of life so that man became a living spirit, as God is a spirit. Even so, and those who worship him must do so "in spirit and in truth," and not in ignorance.

Those who follow Christ are Christians. But some, like Peter, seem to follow Him "a long way off." God forbid that such should stand between our children and the truth! "Then shall ye know if ye follow on to know," saith Holy Scriptures; and the text we need most now to preach and broadcast to those who are still living "under the law" is "The Truth shall make you free."

SPORTS AROUND THE LAKES IN SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

By ELLEN LEECH

ARROWHEAD LAKE AND ITS ENCOMPASSING PINES, WHICH ALMOST HIDE THE LODGE.

A FEW of us at least can still remember when the plans for a summer vacation alternated from the mountain tops to the shores of the sea, with much preliminary discussion for and against, but one or the other was chosen for the season with no deviation thereafter. If the ocean won it was due to the delights of the surf, with possibly the chance of a boat, if the mountains were chosen it was because of the hiking or, in the case of streams or lakes, the fishing was stressed. But we can't for a moment imagine this satisfying the ultra-modern family, dear me, no. The majority of resorts are now selected for the varied sports offered and practically all the usual, to say nothing of the unexpected, are offered a mile high as well as at sea level.

We moderns would be bored to death with only one type of entertainment, so we seek the spot that offers the maximum of everything counted as sport, combined always with the highest degree of comfort attainable. And comfort means so much! We talk a lot about quaint, old places but we don't seem to linger around to let their charm grow upon us unless there is electricity, a bath with every room, twin beds, a super-chef, and much, much sport.

The lakes in the mountains of California have always attracted the fishermen; Big and Little Bear in southern California being among the most popular, nor has the change of name from Little Bear to Lake Arrowhead caused any diminution in favor, neither has the fact that the fishermen and their families, instead of camping on the shores, or sleeping in their blankets, now find a perfectly appointed Lodge to house them.

It seems quite a long while ago when we recall that the first automobile went up to Lake Arrowhead in 1908 but in relation to present accomplishments the time seems marvelously short. Sport, both by land and sea, was the object of this story but it is sport in the most interesting sense to stop and think what has been wrought on the shores of the lake and all around among the pines.

Lake Arrowhead is reached, after leaving the boulevard, by a good mountain road, the oil of which not only lays the dust but combines with the pines, aided by the sun, in making a perfume which brings, like incense rising, all the romance and poetry of early California to mind. And when you are haunted by such dreams for the miles intervening it is akin to being the subject of a magician's wand to find yourself suddenly in the midst of surroundings bearing the brand of ultra-civilization. A hotel of the properest menange, bell boys in white flannel and gold braid, guests strolling in and out of the big, shadowy, beautifully appointed lounge, habited for sports of all kinds,—their clothes correct in detail yet obviously worn for sport usage,—and proving that something is offered for every "what-shall-we-do-next" guest. You may take your choice, then change your mind a dozen times but there is always something to be done. There is riding, hiking, swimming, canoeing, fishing, a country club to offer tennis and golf, of course dancing, and, to give an added novelty to jaded fans, an outdoor movie theater.

One delightful thing about the sports at Lake Arrowhead is the so evident lack of design, there is no slight compulsion about it. The lake is always there beckoning one onto or into its waters. The motor launch, gay with awnings invites you to bring your Japanese parasol and add another dash of color. The canoes of every hue are calling to you, crimson, lemon, yellow, brightest blue and deepest orange, filled with girls who seem to select their frocks to contrast with the canoes until the sweep of water is a big marine garden blossoming in water lilies.

And again, with no intention of being overlooked, is the disapproving little tut-tut-tut-tut of the smaller motor boats, as if inquiring why time is wasted ashore when the lovely water awaits. Then, as if in answer, comes the splash as a diver leaves the tower of the raft and his cheery call as he swims back to do it all over again.

Early breakfast rides, and rides under a full moon, followed by a gay supper, are pleasant incidents of the weeks. If motoring is desired there is a beautiful drive encircling the lake, from which lead the roadways to any number of beautiful summer homes, mentioned as cottages, which they are not in point of size but are architecturally perfect, conforming to the mountain country with its pines and rocks.

The country club, reached either by motor or by launch,—as it lies almost directly across the lake from the lodge,—is on this lovely pine bordered highway, and attracts the golfers and racquet wielders alike, whether they are in search of sport or only want to spend an idle moment under the black and gold umbrellas of the porch.

The wonderment grows with residence; a walk to the village is undertaken almost at once—it sounds so distant and so the thing to do—and behold it is just around a curve in the road but hidden from the Lodge. Here is provided more sport, guessing how on earth any village open to man could be kept so spotlessly clean. It is exactly like a movie set, in one way at least,—it must have a director and one always to be obeyed or it could never be kept so immaculate. One gorgeous pine, not far from the center of the village, is surrounded by a garden of its own, principally iris, fern and columbine in varied and exquisite shades, and not one sprig of it is ever disturbed.

THE ENTRANCE TO ARROWHEAD LODGE WHICH LEADS DIRECTLY INTO THE SHADOWY DEPTHS OF THE LOUNGE.

The terrace of the Lodge, overlooking the lake is always filled with gay groups, arranging for a swim, a walk or a ride, exchanging gossip, or surrounding a returned fisherman as he declares his successful skill, but late in the afternoon with the swiftly waning sun it is doubly popular. Then one after another the loiterers quietly drop into restful poses and the serenity of the place enfolds them. All the lovely evening sounds drift up and hover around; the plaintive cry of the small bird as he seeks his home, the tiny insects that add their wellnigh indistinguishable but pleasing harmony, perhaps the thud of a pool ball from the game room mingles with the clinck of the mah jongg tiles as some late player gathers them up, through and above it all is the soft lapping of the waves and the murmuring whisper of the great pines. One seeks for a word to bring the whole charm into being, "Fabelhaft" breathes my neighbor, and fabelhaft it is, a combination of marvels that seem to partake of fables.

DO THE SPRITES OF THE FOREST DANCE IN THE MOONLIGHT? SOME TIMES THEY DO.

THE PLUNGE AT THE VALLEY HUNT CLUB, PASADENA, IS FILLED WITH THE JOYOUS JUNIOR MEMBERS THROUGHOUT THE LONG DAYS OF SUMMER.

GOLF IN THE HOSPITABLE PALOS VERDES ESTATES

DOWN at the shore in these modern times the ocean is as comprehensive in divertisements offered as of old. We find it most useful for swimming and yachting, and it still offers fish, but between times we must have a round of golf, a set or two of tennis, a little, perhaps a lot, of jazz.

All along the coast we find golf courses, one of the pleasantest being at Palos Verdes, where the eighteen hole course, with its grass greens and fairways not only offers entertainment to residents of Palos Verdes and the neighboring towns of Redondo and Hermosa but calls to the golfers of Pasadena and Los Angeles.

It may be that the spirit of hospitality which so marked the lives of the early Spanish owners of those lovely rolling hills is still diffused throughout this domain, and thus we may explain the warm and pleasant welcome extended visiting golfers. All residents of Palos Verdes are members of the club, and through the ownership of a lot one becomes automatically a member but even beyond this the hospitality reaches in extending courtesies to friends of the members, and members of other clubs. Their hospitality has had very evident proof in the fact that the club house has been enlarged twice since the first opening.

The golf course and park includes two hundred and thirteen acres, and the length of the eighteen holes is six thousand, one hundred and eight yards. Mr. James Fiske, the club's professional, is very proud of the condition of the course and very circumspectly explains a few of the hazards, remarking that while the course is not too difficult for the average player of around 100, it proves difficult enough to a player endeavoring to better 90.

AT THE CORNER OF GRANVIA VALMONTE AND THE VIA CAPAY, NEAR ENTRANCE TO PALOS VERDES ESTATES.

If the first rule in golf is to keep your eye on the ball it would seem impossible to follow this requisite on this wonderfully located course. There are only four holes of the course which do not give a view of the ocean, so possibly from those one might drive more carefully but then again the beautiful, bare brown hills in contrast to the green of the course makes a vista equally attractive to a Californian,—and soon to an adopted resident.

The club house, on rising ground, overlooks not only the whole course but gives varied views of the ocean, the country inland towards Los Angeles, and the long range of mountains from which old Baldy rises majestically. In the charming sun room, an indoor garden of growing plants and singing birds, the non-golfing women gather for tea and cards, or if they come earlier in the day find it convenient to have lunch in the pleasant grill.

Then, too, they have such a perfect color scheme out there, throughout the estates, bits of the ocean are constantly being repeated in the landscape, here is a rolling mass of low growing blue flowers and rising in billows of white is the oleander to break against the low hills.

A WONDERFUL OPPORTUNITY FOR A LONG SHOT DOWN THE GREEN FAIRWAY ON THE PALOS VERDES GOLF COURSE.

RECENT BOOKS—REVIEWS

Continued from Page 13

CREDO

By STEWART EDWARD WHITE

Doubleday Page & Company

No more opportune time than the present could have been chosen for the appearance of a book like "Credo," since it deals with the subjects of science, faith, and evolution, just now particularly interesting to the public. The author of this stimulating volume, we have known hitherto as a writer of fiction concerned with out-of-doors, or purely nature books, adventure, and exploration. But apparently while thus engaged in creating entertaining literature, an entirely different part of himself was absorbing the works of the authorities on natural sciences and philosophy As a result of this extensive course of reading we discover him in "Credo" in the guise of student and philosopher.

The reader of this book soon becomes aware that Mr. White has assimilated a vast amount of scientific knowledge, which has been fused in its passage through his comprehension, like the caterpillar in the chrysalis, which he so carefully describes. In issuing forth, this material assumes another form, while remaining the same in its essence. In other words writing as a layman for the layman, by using concrete examples and finite terms which appeal to the average limited intelligence, he has simplified much that readers of scientific works usually find difficult to understand. For instance in discussing the interrelated trinity of substance, life and consciousness, he traces clearly step by step, the gradual building up from electron to substance; likewise he indicates the slow process from the lowest to the highest demonstrations of life as we see it; and what is the most difficult, he shows the intangible growth of consciousness, evolving from mechanical reactions to the complex phenomena appearing in the human being. In every case the beginnings are utterly simple, while the endings are eternally complicated, with the distance between occupied by a series in orderly procession.

Mr. White is not writing all this to show how much he knows. He has a purpose. From this wide experience in reading and studying, he has formed a faith for himself, and he wishes to give to others an opportunity for receiving the same benefits. Therefore, having brought his reader to a certain point, he turns him in the right direction, with instructions to find his way by himself. Only how does Mr. White know it is the right direction? We admit his argument sounds rational, but after all his reasoning is pure speculation.

We trust that "Credo" will have a wide circulation in Tennessee. There as elsewhere, the man who reads it with discernment, may very well use it for a foundation upon which to build a fund of wisdom. The scientist however, will probably find it too primitive and diffuse.

ONE HOUR WITH HIM

By THE VERY REV. MSGR. JOSEPH L. J. KIRLIN

The Macmillan Company

The publishers recommend this volume especially to members of religious orders, and to priests looking for suggestions for sermons on unusual topics.

MODERN AUCTION 1925

By GRACE G. MONTGOMERY

Charles Scribner's Sons

Do persons exist who are willing to read books on auction? If so, the publishers offer a revised edition of this book, brought up to the very minute by an author who has been writing on this subject since 1912.

DILEMMA

By JOHN D. BARRY, The Four Seas Company

This is a pamphlet containing an account of an actual scene at an execution at San Quentin, written by a young newspaper man on the San Francisco Call. It is in the form of a drama, and is an grim presentation of something most of us would prefer not to think about.

THE VENTURE

By JEAN KENYON MACKENZIE

Houghton Mifflin Company

This is a book containing a slender collection of short lyrics somewhat pleasing in poetic substance and form. Those bearing the title of "African Exile," are more attractive perhaps than the earalier ones, with the exception of the poem called "The Venture."

CORONA
TYPEWRITERS
With Standard Keyboard
$60 Complete With Case
Also All Makes Sold, Rented, Repaired, Exchanged
Anderson Typewriter Co.
84 E. Colorado St. Pasadena

QUALITY SERVICE
THE ELITE
DRY CLEANERS AND DYERS
Plant: 797 So. Fair Oaks Ave.
Colo. 1349 Pasadena, California

LAUNDERERS DRY CLEANERS
ROYAL LAUNDRY CO.
461 South Raymond Colorado 67
Pasadena, California

S. M. Wershow
LADIES TAILOR
Riding Habits, Coats and Suits
Furs Stored and Repaired
7066 Hollywood Boulevard
Hollywood
GRanit 4254

Permutit Soft Water Saves Clothes
TROY LAUNDRY
In Business for Twenty Years
Pasadena, Cal. Phone C. 146 Alhambra 243-J

Welcome to call and Browse
Rare & Art Books
Dawson's Book Shop
627 So. Grand Ave.
First Editions
Early Printing
Autographs
Americana
Books Notable for Printing Illustrations and Binding.
Catalogues sent on request:—

PHONE TERrace 0127
Lunch, Tea or Dine at
El Patio Tea Room
COMMUNITY PLAYHOUSE BUILDING
37 SOUTH EL MOLINO PASADENA, CALIF.

FLORNINA
Gowns · Negligees · Accessories and Bathing Suits
Ready to Wear or Made to Order
Unusually Attractive Frocks in Tub Silks and Dotted Swiss
95 South Los Robles Ave., Pasadena
Phone Fair Oaks 113

HEWSON HAND CRAFT STUDIOS
Handwoven One Piece Dresses, Coats and Scarfs, Canadian and Candlewick Bedspreads
Dutch and East Indian Brass, Beads, Fine Pendants and Objects of Art in Great Variety
F. O. 6555 DUnkirk 4909
602 E. Colorado St. 2508½ W. 7th St.
Pasadena Los Angeles

GEORGE · D · HAIGHT
159 · NO · MEREDITH · AVE ·
PASADENA · CALIFORNIA
TELEPHONE F · O · 5133
ARCHITECTURAL · PHOTOGRAPHS

HILLER'S STUDIO
OFFICIAL PHOTOGRAPHER FOR CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND
49 EAST COLORADO STREET
PASADENA, CALIFORNIA
ALBERT HILLER Phone, Fair Oaks 155

French and Italian Arts
Imported by
ELEANOR AND HOLLINGSWORTH BEACH
Italian Sports Hats Antiques
Old Furniture Brocades
Embroidered Linens Old Prints
French Faience Italian Majolica
Large Parchment Portfolios for Prints and Photographs
630 E. Colorado Street, Pasadena, California
Fair Oaks 6028

T. W. Mather Co. Inc.
PASADENA, CAL.
Dry Goods
Women's & Children's Wearing Apparel
Colorado Street at Marengo

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA CHAPTER A. I. A. MONTHLY BULLETIN

HAROLD O. SEXSMITH A. I. A.
Editor

COMMENTS ON THE JULY MEETING

ORDINARILY a hot night and a Chapter meeting are a fatal combination at least to those gentlemen who are in the habit of "eating their heaviest meal at dinner." We are glad to report, however, that none of this type of gentlemen showed signs of weakening during the evening although several of them were present. We will pursue the subject no further but relieve all minds by explaining that the subject of the evening was the Santa Barbara earthquake. Several of the men who visited the stricken town (by the way, were there any who didn't?) were called upon to give their impressions and so far as they could, their conclusions upon what they saw. Both Mr. Myron Hunt and Mr. Sumner Hunt, Mr. Arthur Hutchason and Mr. C. E. Noerenberg gave their impressions. Mr. Noerenberg's talk was particularly well organized and contained much information relative to proper construction methods to safeguard against earthquake. It is fortunate that the observations of these men and those of Mr. Edwin Bergstrom and Mr. Loyal F. Watson are to be published in the Bulletin of the Allied Architects.

MR. BERGSTROM'S TALK

IN SPEAKING of the Santa Barbara earthquake, Mr. Edwin Bergstrom urged that members of the Chapter give all possible assistance to the architects and the other citizens of Santa Barbara in the rehabilitation movement which had been started there. He spoke of the organized effort of the Santa Barbara citizens to improve the structural and architectural design of the buildings and indicated the new plans for widening State Street by removing the present sidewalks, putting the curb lines back to buildings, and providing new sidewalks under the buildings. This would relieve the traffic congestion and effect a continuity in design of the buildings on the street.

He further told of the adoption by Santa Barbara only a few days before the disaster of a building code and a zoning ordinance which should receive the support and attention of all who are connected with the new projects of Santa Barbara.

He told of attending a meeting with the Santa Barbara architects and leaders in this movement, where aid in preparing their drawings had been offered to the Santa Barbara architects by the Los Angeles architects, and where tentative plans for arcade treatment had been presented. Later meetings had crystallized the suggestions of the earlier meeting and sketches illustrating architectural advantages of a continuity of design for State Street had been placed in the hands of the Advisory Architectural Commission and put on exhibition.

He told of the new architectural board just created by ordinance in Santa Barbara, which board was to function parallel with the Building Department and make suggestions regarding the architectural treatment of the buildings for which permits had been requested.

Among the leaders of the campaign for better architecture are Mr. Bernhard Hoffman, and the Santa Barbara members of this Chapter. Mr. Bergstrom hoped that the Chapter members would help these men by encouragement, council and assistance. This is an opportune time to write to them offering aid and congratulations for their strong, courageous stand.

GOOD CONSTRUCTION

THE Santa Barbara earthquake again offers a remarkable lesson to all owners, architects and engineers. Inglewood, a suburb of Los Angeles, suffered a similar experience a few years ago. Practically all poorly constructed buildings showed signs of failure or completely collapsed. Yet, since that time a great number of buildings have been built in Santa Barbara, in fact throughout Southern California, of practically the same type of construction. In Santa Barbara they failed in identically the same manner as ni Inglewood. Such types of failures will be inexcusable in the future.

FOUNTAIN FOR THE GARDEN OF MR. AND MRS. STEUART FRENCH, PASADENA. MAUD DAGGETT, SCULPTOR.

It is a most encouraging fact that practically all well designed and constructed buildings stood the test with only slight damage, if any; certainly nothing that might have caused personal injury.

As to just what type of construction is best, is a debatable question. There are many factors which enter into the matter of earthquake resistance, many which still remain unknown. However, three of the most important which effect the stability of any structure may be briefly outlined as follows:

First, the shape and general outline of a building apparently holds many secrets as to its success or failure to resist the force of the earth shocks. Naturally, a low or square building, perhaps with hollow courts or slightly projecting wings will suffer less than one in which the plan is long and narrow, or where projecting wings have their greatest length at a different angle than the main axis of the central mass. In general, masses which vary greatly in height or ground plan will sway and vibrate at different velocities and tend to shatter one another where they abut. We can not always govern the shape, height or soil conditions upon which we must build our buildings, but we can take proper precautions where those dangers exist.

Second, the materials selected should be of the same structure, or, where different materials are used great care should be taken to bond thoroughly one to the other. The building should be thought of as a homogeneous mass and be so constructed in so far as is possible. Where mortar must be depended upon to hold unit construction together the mortar must be equal in strength to the unit itself. Small units laid in full mortar beds more nearly approach a homogenous mass than the larger units with small mortar beds unless reinforced by steel mass or bars.

Third the building should be tied together in all directions, horizontally, vertically and diagonally at corners. Such ties should be uniform and continuous. To tie a building horizontally and not vertically is to court disaster as much as to erect columns without lateral support. Beams, floors and roofs should be anchored into walls and columns and around corners. Earthquakes produce rack and tortion in buildings and more failures result from lack of tieing the structure together than from any other cause.

Some day the probable force of earthquakes will be calculated and the strains which they produce in buildings measured so that construction can be engineered accordingly. At present it appears to be an economic impossibility to construct a building which will not show some damage under a severe shock. However, it has been demonstrated that it is possible to construct our buildings to resist earthquakes to such an extent that they will not suffer structurally nor cause any great damage.

Our greatest responsibility is to build structures which will not collapse and cause personal injuries. Failure to recognize the fact that there will always remain the danger of carthquakes and failure to build upon the lessons that have been shown us can be considered nothing short of criminal negligence.

ARTHUR R. HUTCHASON.

STREET IN BEVERLY HILLS, DESIGNED BY W. D. COOK, A. I. L. A., CURVING STREET, UNIFORM TREE PLANTING, AND UNIFORM PARKWAY PLANTING OF LOW BLOOMING PLANTS WHICH SOFTENS THE HARD EDGES OF THE STREET CURB. THE BRIDLE PATH OCCUPIES THE PLACE OF FORMER RAILROAD RIGHT OF WAY. PLANTING BY MISCHE AND COOK.

PHOTOGRAPH SNAPPED FROM AN AUTOMOBILE (WINDSHIELD AT CENTER) HILLHURST PARK, HOLLYWOOD. DESIGNED BY COOK. A FINE EXAMPLE OF OGEE PARKWAY. SIDEWALK SEVERAL FEET ABOVE DRIVEWAY, REDUCING CUT ON HILLSIDE STREETS.

LOS ANGELES ARCHITECTURAL CLUB BULLETIN

John M. Gamble, Esq.,
Secretary, Santa Barbara Art Club,
Dear Mr. Gamble:

Your letter of July 6th is at hand and I am glad to have it.

Every citizen of vision in Southern California, whether he be business man, artist or architect, cannot but appreciate the unique opportunity presented to the people of Santa Barbara in the present crisis to raise their city of the future above the commonplace average of typical American middle-class cities. Into this type Santa Barbara will naturally gravitate if the uncontrolled development of the former State Street is permitted to repeat itself.

If proper ordinances and design control are now established, as has been recommended, and broad-visioned planning put into effect and lived up to in the development, Santa Barbara of the future will be a city unique in this country.

The first city in California to appreciate the monetary value of an effect of grace, charm and atmosphere in its street architecture will find itself repaid a thousandfold commercially for such foresight.

The rest of this country expects Santa Barbara to have this quality, as the world at large knows Paris and Seville and Granada to have it, and is willing to contribute millions to these cities yearly that they may flourish and continue to be worth visiting.

No city in California is in such position to capitalize, in commercial terms, this element of commonsense, wise and beautiful planning as is Santa Barbara now. She has made a start that is already widely known and she must go forward.

Your Club is standing for a fine and infinitely worthwhile thing in its fight for a distinctive architecture and it is to be hoped that those in authority may have a proper sense of the meaning to their city of decisions they will make within the next few days and weeks.

Yours very truly.
(Signed) DAVID C. ALLISON, President.
Southern California Chapter A. I. A.

THE HOUSE ON OUR COVER

THE Frances Marion Thomson residence now under construction will be one of the most beautiful residences in the Spanish style in Southern California. The cover cut in this issue only shows a small portion of the forecourt, but one can get some idea of the magnitude of the house by looking at the floor plan.

Situated on the highest view point in Beverly Hills and commanding one of the finest views of the surrounding country and ocean the house has been particularly planned taking advantage of all the vistas.

Wallace Neff, the architect, was chosen by the owners and has been given carte blanche and has shown extraordinary skill in the general layout. Although only one floor plan is shown, there is an extensive basement containing ball room and other entertainment rooms; the second floor being devoted to bedrooms and also a business suite for Frances Marion Thomson where she can write her scenarios.

Both Mr. and Mrs. Thomson are very prominent people in the moving picture industry, Frances Marion Thomson being world renowned for her clever scenarios, having recently published her latest book called Minnie Flynn.

Mr. Fred Thomson has successfully conducted many productions and is now carrying out entirely his own company. He has met with great success and popularity with his Western Plays.

THE Executive Committee of the Club have turned over to the Allied Architects' Library as a loan, all the books in its library which up to the present time have been located in a room at the Atelier. The reason for this action was the fact that the books and plates could not be properly cared for under the present arrangement. They will now be carefully filed and a trained librarian will have them in charge. The books will be available as heretofor but loaned to club members under the same rules as are in force for the loan of other books of the Allied Library. The Allied library is pleased to get the loan of club books and the Club is in turn glad that its property will now be taken care of.

SMALL HOUSE PLAN SERVICE

The Executive Committee has held two meetings concerning the Small House Plan Service and hopes to have some very interesting recommendations to make to the club regarding the Plan Service and other matters related to it. The scheme involves the re-organization of the club, perhaps its incorporation, with a full time executive secretary in charge of all club activities. The executive committee feels that some such scheme will make the club a force in our architecture.

THE ARCHITECTURAL CLUB OF LOS ANGELES

OFFICERS

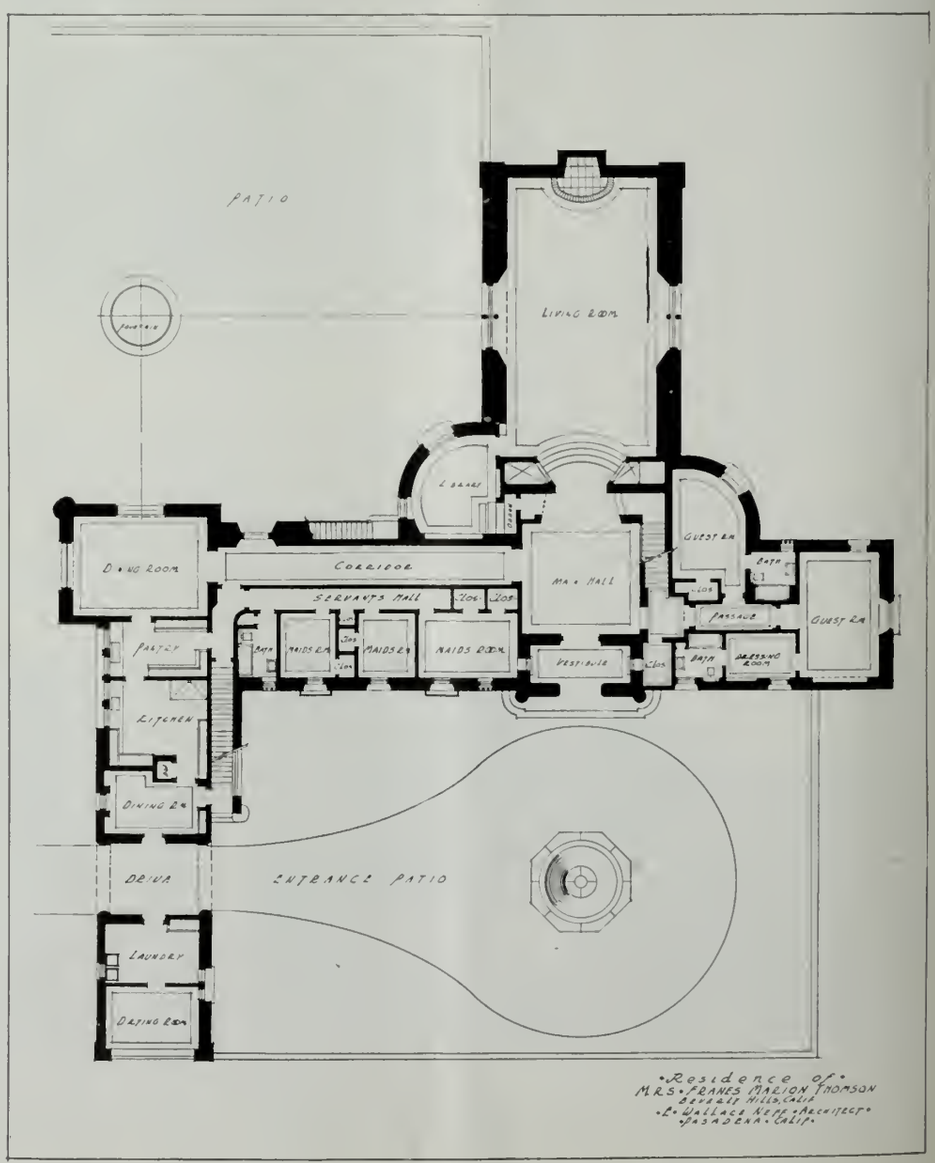
for 1925

J. E. GARNSEY, PRESIDENT
ROY H. KELLEY, VICE-PRESIDENT
H. O. SEXSMITH, SECRETARY
PAUL W. PENLAND, TREASURER

DIRECTORS

WALTER S. DAVIS, DIRECTOR
J. E. STANTON, DIRECTOR
H. C. CHAMBERS, DIRECTOR

CIVIL SERVICE EXAMINATION



A letter has been received from the State Civil Service Commission calling special attention to an examination by the Commission to take place in the near future, for the position of Architectural Designer. Information regarding the duties and the examination plan as well as application blanks may be secured from the State Civil Service Commission, Room 1007 Hall of Records, Los Angeles, California. The duties of the position include the design and planning of important buildings and the salary is from $285.00 to $350.00 a month.

AUGUST MEETING

The August meeting of the Club will be held at the Tropico plant of Gladding-McBean Company. Tropico will act as hosts.

The following letter was received from Mr. Myron Hunt's office. It will be self explanatory. The executive committee had already planned for such a meeting and feel that Mr. Hunt's suggestion of inviting in all architects is an excellent one. There will be more to report on this matter when our illustrious vice president returns from a hurried trip to New York.

"Last night there was a meeting of the Southern California Chapter, American Institute of Architects, at which many of the members discussed the various phases of the Santa Barbara earthquake, and photographs of the buildings there were shown on a screen. The discussion was very interesting and Mr. Hunt believes that the Los Angeles Architectural Club should, as soon as possible, have a meeting devoting the entire time to a discussion of the effects of the Santa Barbara earthquake. The meeting should be open to all architects and draftsmen of this city and vicinity, whether or not they are members of the Architectural Club. If possible, arrangements should be made for reproducing photographs on a screen."

THE MUSICAL CENTER OF LOS ANGELES

The Southern California Music Company

EXTERIOR AND MAIN FACADE OF THE SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA MUSIC BUILDING, 806 SOUTH BROADWAY, LOS ANGELES. DESIGNED AND BUILT BY MEYER AND HOLLER, LOS ANGELES.

A TRIP East will convince any doubting Thomas who resides in this, our much maligned Los Angeles, that in spite of its malignancy, the East still wonders at the spirit and confidence which is manifested here. To admit residence in Los Angeles to a group of Easterners means that one will at once become the center of an interested group of questioners. "How do you keep the blamed thing growing? How many died of the plague? How many were killed in the earthquake?" are the questions one must answer. When we admit that the problem is not how to "keep the blamed thing growing," but how to stop it from growing too fast, and that we haven't had a plague nor yet an earthquake, some shake their heads and go away sorrowing doubting our veracity. Others, thank goodness, stay to hear the truth, which they don't get from Eastern newspapers.

This subject of the indomitable spirit of Los Angeles goes deeply into the fabric of our economic and social life and examples of it bob up sometimes in the most surprising and interesting places. More often than not it blooms all unbidden without the stimulus of high powered chambers of commerce. More often than not the motive is an honest and simple pride in this great city. Hundreds of business firms in Los Angeles have in the past few years housed their activities in structures of great architectural merit believing in the great destiny that awaits this city. There is always a reason for the spirit, be it good or bad, which prevades a business organization. If the business is one which must maintain a contact with the public, this spirit is the fore-runner of success or failure. There is one at the head of the Southern California Music Company who radiates good will and friendliness. The manager Mr. Edward H. Uhl has solved the riddle of success. He has learned how to make others work for him by making them first love him. When such faith and pride take form in a beautiful building it is the desire of California Southland Magazine to call it to the attention of its readers that they too may enjoy its beauty and patronize the activities carried on within its walls.

The building for the Southern California Music Company, located at 806 South Broadway, is such a structure. The motives impelling its erection included all those we have dwelt upon above and many others of an equally commendable type. The Southern California Music Company has provided several floors of studios which are let out at rental below that received for office space in adjacent office buildings. A recital hall, Chickering Hall, is made available for recitals and concerts. The hall is a busy place where scarcely an evening passes without its gathering of music lovers.

The building was designed and constructed by Meyer & Holler, whose corps of skillful designers have produced many fine buildings in and around Los Angeles. The street facade of the building is of terra cotta and is designed in a restrained and dignified manner inspired by the Italian Renaissance. The fenestration shows much study, which has brought about a happy balance between openings and plain wall surfaces. A feature of the display windows which is often admired by the passerby, is the colorful wall and ceiling decoration, representing tapestries hung upon pegs. The ceilings are stencilled in color upon wood and show much skill in the handling of design and materials. The architecture of the sales room is an echo of the days of troubadour and ballad-monger. Its composition of deep revealed opening, vault, leaded glass, and wrought iron, accented by a beautifully decorated ceiling is a thing of much merit and well worth a trip of inspection. The small rooms provided for the hearing of phonograph records are reached through low arched doorways and remind one of the approaches to the monk's cells of the great cloister of the Certosa di Pavia. The comparison is not so badly stretched, for some of Italy's most lovely medieval music came from those cells.

AN INTIMATE VIEW OF THE ITALIAN ROOM OF THE SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA MUSIC COMPANY STUDIO BUILDING. DESIGNED, AS ARE ALL PARTS OF THIS STRUCTURE, INTERIORS AS WELL AS THE EXTERIOR, BY MEYER AND HOLLER.

One feature of the furnishing of the sales room which has been done particularly well is the lighting fixtures which are made by the Meyberg Company of 631 South Grand Avenue. Both in design and execution the fixtures seem to "belong" and have a large part in the charming effectiveness of the room. The work of the Meyberg Company is always interesting and their show room is an intriguing place for the person interested in beautiful iron work. Lighting fixtures are a feature of the decoration often brought in as an afterthought if there is enough money left in the budget when the essentials are met. The Southern California Music Company apparently have not done things in such a half-hearted manner. It is quite evident that their ideal has been to discover to the public a friendly personality which finds joy in serving not just for the cold profit involved, but because it is expected that all Los Angeles stores exemplify the Los Angeles spirit. They have sought definitely to produce an atmosphere typical of Los Angeles and they have succeeded.

IS THERE A MORE BEAUTIFUL SALES-ROOM IN AMERICA THAN THIS ONE OF THE SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA MUSIC BUILDING, THE LIGHTING FIXTURES FOR WHICH WERE SUPPLIED BY MEYBERG COMPANY.

A CORRIDOR OF THE SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA MUSIC COMPANY STUDIO BUILDING.

Homer Grunn

Teacher of PIANO

808 So. Broadway, Suite 715
Phone TUcker 8850

KATHRYN
WENTZ
SOPRANO AND TEACHER
Authorized Pacific Coast Representative of MME. DELIA VALERI, N. Y.
614 So. Calif. Music Co. Bldg.
Res. WHitney 5562, Studio VA-9411

Idabelle Russell Snell
PIANISTE
Alhambra Studio
129 No. Fourth Street Phone 1218-J
Tuesdays and Fridays
Phone VAndike 8604
719 Southern California Music Bldg.
Broadway at Eighth LOS ANGELES
Mondays and Thursdays

La Solana

A quiet, well-appointed small hotel on the West Side near Orange Grove Avenue.
Each menu is carefully planned and prepared every day.
Grand Ave. and Lockhaven St.
Pasadena

Edith Lillian Clark
TEACHER OF PIANOFORTE
AND CONCERT PIANISTE
720 Southern California Music Bldg.
Phone TUcker 6418 Los Angeles
Residence Studio: 1100 Victoria Ave.
Phone 768-910

51995 TUcker 8853
Orchestration Composition
CHARLES E. PEMBERTON
VIOLIN INSTRUCTOR
HARMONY AND COUNTERPOINT
Wednesdays and Saturdays
Member of Faculty College of Music
University of Southern California
Studio Suite: 617 So. Calif. Music Co. Bldg., Los Angeles

ADELE DOROTHY LAUTH
PIANO—HARMONY—THEORY
Augmented by Classes in All Departments
620 So. Calif. Music Co. Bldg.
Phones:
Res., 712-32; Studio, TUcker 9451

Antiques
JOHN W. CONDIT
Dealer in rare old pieces selected from private homes. Specialist in the proper restoration of heirlooms.
199 S. Fair Oaks Ave., Pasadena
Telephone Terrace 0315-W

THE WESTERN TILE AND MARBLE CO.
Importers and Contractors
386 SOUTH RAYMOND AVENUE
PASADENA

For the convenience of patrons planning houses, gardens, patios, and any other building in tile this Company has on display tiles from every portion of the world.

Spanish	American Encaustic
Mexican	Pardee
Persian	Batchelder-Wilson
Moroccan	Gladding-McBean
Holland	California Clay
English	California Art Tile

TELEPHONE, FAIR OAKS 3157

Decorating and Finishing Exclusive Furniture
W. G. Pesenecker
Interior and Exterior Painting
34 North Broadway
Phone Col. 5656 Pasadena, Calif.

WE offer for investment of Personal or Trust Funds sound Securities returning highest rates consistent with safety.

WILLIAM R. STAATS COMPANY
Established 1887
Government, Municipal and Corporation Bonds
311 East Colorado St.
PASADENA, CALIF.
Los Angeles San Diego San Francisco

Lenz HAT Studio
643-645 East Colorado St.
Pasadena, Cal.
Near the New Community Playhouse
Phone Fair Oaks 573

ARTS AND CRAFTS SOCIETY

By MARION HUGUS CLARK

CURTAINS

WE have chosen curtains as the subject for discussion this month. We know one woman, a prominent suffragist in the begrimed city we came from, who was so emancipated that she used no curtains. The reader is acquainted with those very un-emancipated ones who hang various kinds of lace, usually cold white, against their windows for curtain drapery. But between the ones who use none and the other extreme of just anything, we have the woman who is an artist herself or who considers the importance of color first as to its hue, value and intensity and the material second and both in relation to the rest of her furnishing and who feels that as a decoration curtains are important enough to hunt up some craftsman who knows the subject.

To give the reader the benefit of the specialist's knowledge, we have gone to two craftsmen for information and we will refer to several others who have been markedly successful in the curtain game.

When we spoke to Mr. Douglas Donaldson about curtains, he said: "Well, you know, I have only one reason to speak of curtains and that is from the standpoint of the psychology of art in relation to living." Then he told us a little story and illustrated it with three small sketches.

The first sketch was of a small cave-like structure, having a door and two very small windows. Like the cliff dwellings, it was entirely for utility. You were comparatively safe from enemy and weather.

The next sketch was a leap in point of time but the windows were small as in the first house. This was our colonial house, built to with-stand the cold. You went in and were glad to shut out the weather.

In summer the old colonial homes were surrounded by beautiful gardens with but little opportunity to enjoy them from within. With better heating systems, the sun porch was added. The third sketch of a house of many windows leads to our modern need for more air, more light and more color. It brings in the very source of light color and beauty and it brings the garden into its own. The modern house demands a more beautiful outlook.

"The curtain is the unifying element that draws the garden into the house." We are quoting again from Mr. Donaldson.

Last Spring at the Easter Season, son Bob and I dined in the Williams Hotel of the Fred Harvey System. The curtains were beautiful in the railway dining room and their use was exactly opposite to that of drawing the garden into the house but they expressed Mr. Donaldson's philosophy of beauty in relation to living for the ugliness and noise of a busy railroad was shut out.

The curtains looked like Miss Waldvogel's work and later, when we were in Miss Emma Waldvogel's own place in Monterey, we saw the original curtain, from which these were ordered. Miss Waldvogel's curtains are made of various materials with designs applied by stitchery, a patented chain-stitch machine being used and the addition of hand-work supplying the last bit of color and special design-stitch. The kind of stitch, and there are dozens, helps in the execution of the design.

Miss Fannie Kerns and her two sisters have another kind of curtain, related to the Waldvogel in that the chain-stitch machine is used but totally different in effect. We speak of Miss Fannie Kerns who is supervisor of art in the Pasadena schools, first although both Miss Page Kerns and Mrs. Willie Mansfield are important members of this family of excellent craftsmen. Miss Fannie Kerns does the design, Miss Page Kerns and a corps of women execute and Mrs. Mansfield takes care of the business. Theatrical gauze is dyed and the greyed hand dyed yarns are applied both by machine and hand.

We cannot pass lightly over the subject of curtains without mentioning Mr. Ken Webber, a real specialist in curtains. Mr. Webber studied in Vienna in the Joseph Hoffman School. He is a modernist, doing work for a well-known house.

We have a letter before us in answer to a request made for more light on this big subject. The letter-head was made by a famous artist as a gift to the writer, herself an artist. It reads: Gertrude Belcher, Decorations. Our enthusiasm for beauty in the crafts is so great that we could write a story about each one of the craftsmen, we have mentioned. They are all our friends and their history has its beginning in a love for beauty. Gertrude Belcher started her career by painting in oil. Then came home decoration for herself and family. The love of color and design lead to a subconscious knowledge that without light you cannot have color, without color you cannot have beauty. Mrs. Belcher experimented with one color over the other in different materials until now her work is a simple expression of her own happiness, a reflection of joy inside. She, like Mr. Webber, is associated with a well-known firm. Mrs. Belcher's letter follows:

"There are so many branches of home decoration that each one should have consideration and study. Every branch, too, has its many phases creating opportunities for many craft workers who could direct their efforts and ability in certain lines. A group of artists blending their ideas to the problem at hand with a spirit of co-operation would make home decoration the vital art it should be.

"In curtains alone there is need of many influences. The flexibility in the treatment of windows and doors should give curtains the last consideration since the whole room may be united in color by this medium.

"There is such a wide scope in combinations of colors with one over the other or applied and with the great variety of fabrics, that each home may reflect its own spirit in a simple manner. The complete scheme of a room should require the combined thought of many artists—each restraining his own ideas until all sides of the problem are met.

There are many other craftsmen doing good work in curtains. The Amy-May Studio did the lovely Batik curtains in the Flintridge Country Club. This article deals with the curtain specialist, who adds cushions and bed-spreads to balance a room. Textiles next time.

. . . The fireplace is a symbol of hospitality. Los Angeles Pressed Brick Company offers a great variety of mantel designs and a wide range of colors in face brick, permitting a perfect harmony with the interior decorative scheme of any room. Those interested in fireplaces will find much helpful information at the display rooms, 6th floor of the Frost Building, Second and Broadway, Los Angeles. The telephone number is TRinity 5761.

The Assembly Tea Room

The In and Out-of-Town House of Los Angeles serves

LUNCHEON, TEA AND DINNER

INCIDENTALLY

The Very Choicest Food

Special Sunday Dinner 5 to 8

644 South Flower St., Los Angeles

Phone VAndike 7177

PAINTINGS OF THE WEST

STENDAHL GALLERIES

OF THE PACIFIC COAST

The Ambassador Hotel—Los Angeles Hotel del Coronado—San Diego

CHRISTINE SQUIRES

INTERIOR DECORATIONS

MATERIALS

Exclusive Furniture

Designing

3217 WEST SIXTH STREET

WASHINGTON 3433

An Ideal School for Young Women

Cumnock School

COLLEGE WORK IN THE FOLLOWING COURSES:

Vocal Interpretation of Literature

Literary Appreciation	Voice and Diction	Short-Story
Public Speaking	French	Dancing
Dramatics	Story Telling	Psychology
	Journalism

Art and Art Appreciation

An accredited High School and Junior School under same management

HELEN A. BROOKS, Director

5353 West Third Street — Los Angeles

WHitley 3427 —TELEPHONES— WHitley 7311

Urban Military Academy

The Great Outdoor School for the Building of Body and Brain and Character Under Matchless Conditions

Fall Term, September 16, 1925

Open All Year. Address

MISS SALEY, Registrar

637 Wilcox Ave., Los Angeles. HEmpstead 7602

NEW HOME OF

PACIFIC MILITARY ACADEMY

Culver City, California

Boarding and Day School. Fireproof Buildings. Completely Equipped Laboratories. Grammar and High School. Enrollment limited.

Fall Term, September 16, 1925

For Catalogue Write Mrs. Loughan or telephone Culver City 3294

The Westlake School for Girls

333 South Westmoreland Avenue

Residence and Day School

Lower School, College Preparatory, Junior College

Fully Accredited

Departments of Art, Music, Home Economics

Fall Term Opens September Thirtieth

JESSICA SMITH VANCE FREDERICA DE LAGUNA

Telephone DRexel 0052

GREENWOOD SCHOOL FOR GIRLS

5928 Franklin Avenue, Hollywood

Select Resident and Day School

Lawns, Tennis Courts, Outdoor Swimming Pool. Special advantages in music, under Mrs. Elsa Spencer.

Fall Term, September 17, 1925

Principals:

Mrs. M. Greenwood, Newnham College, Cambridge

H. F. Greenwood, Corpus Christi College, Cambridge

Telephone HOlly 2886

SECRETARIAL COACHING

For cultured people desiring personal attention. Refined, harmonious surroundings. All Secretarial subjects. Parliamentary Law. Bride's Budget.

Registrations begin August 17th.

Management, Mrs. Frank Rutherford. 711 South Vermont Ave. Fltzroy 1763.

A LETTER FROM CARMEL

(Continued from Page 15)

THE ARCHITECTURE OF MONTEREY IS PLANNED TO FIT THE LANDSCAPE

out" on the rare and infrequent stretches where we could see a bit ahead. There were plenty of other thrills than traffic hazards—the pounding surf that threw the waves so high and shattered them so they seemed to drift off like smoke—the myriads of both sea and land birds that, by their tameness and great numbers, testified to the remoteness of man-made changes in the scheme of things. The flowers, though just beginning, were thrilling to one who hasn't yet got used to California's lavish use of color, and her coast line's meagre knowledge of frost. Purple lupine in the southern sheltered nooks as evidence of what would show when hillsides gray with lupine should bloom—paint brush to set them off—and in the damp places, buttercup—and once in the redwoods' shade the first trillium. Not yet the middle of January, yet the sycamore leaves were falling, pushed off, no doubt, by the new buds, and the alders were laden with dainty catkins. The bay was in bloom and the willow stems were many hued and bright. The thrills continued—up a long zigzag, winding grade—a view of the sea, distant peaks and nearby hills, and down again in the same twisty-turning roller coaster fashion with only semi-occasional signs of ranch house or cabin or stock barn.

The creeks and canyons were all named—big rough sign boards that told of landmarks due ahead—one bridge labelled "Mal Passo" hinted at the difficulties of the early traveller. The sign labelled "Palo Colorado" seemed more fitting than our use of Redwood or Sequoia. Here and there one or two boxes on rude posts stood by the road—mail boxes for some remote ranch or camp and more than once the shape of the supports and weather beaten shelter reminded us more of a simple roadside shrine in Italy than any "approved by the Postmaster General" tin mail boxes seen along our "rural" routes. The place names were mostly Spanish—a formal yellow painted box carried the legend: Mail Box for Sur Point Light—and later, while high on the next hill, we saw the little collection of white buildings perched on a rock—like Mont San Michel—or our "Morro", miles away from any town or port, or even far from our "road". The redwoods and the canyons with their brooklets have brought the summer campers, and roadside signs pointed to footpaths to "Hoffmann's camp in the Redwoods"—or "Nine mile to Pfeiffers—Please close the gate". To save fencing the gates were across the roadway. You let yourself in to a pasture, of how many thousands of acres you know not—and then a mile or so later—and perhaps a thousand or more feet above or below, came another gate.

Cattle were grazing—some dozing—several we surprised on rounding a turn, and the surprised and awkward cavortings showed us that we had less right there than they. The valley rancher might well envy the owner of these sleek, fat cattle and sheep—the hills were bright green probably as much from sea fog as rains for the brooks were none well filled. After the third gate and after dropping down some several thousand feet into a canyon which reminded me of the American River canyon, we were alongside the Sur. In a prior canyon we had crossed the north and south forks of Little River and had climbed the ridge between through redwood groves carpeted with fern and oxalis. We later learned from Dr. MacDougal that a group in Carmel have acquired over 800 acres of untouched redwood and it is safe. To me it all seemed safe for to get redwood lumber out over the trail that led us in seemed far from an economic possibility. The thrills continued—a flock of magpies—blue birds and blue jays aplenty, and of course a road runner, apprehensive but curious, raising and lowering his long tail as he watched us get out to open a gate; and then way down in the narrow valley of the Sur—forty miles from any railroad, twenty-five from anything that could be called a settlement—we came upon a large ranch house and buildings and about the house, wonderful in the sun, were peacocks, perhaps 25 or 30 of them, the hens dusting themselves in the roadway. The

KENWOOD HALL

Resident and Day School for Girls. Sub-Primary through High School. Open throughout the year. FALL TERM, Sept. 21, 1925.

Directors: Ruby Mildred King, Grace Baylor Bobbitt.

Tel. WAshington 1612 675 So. Vermont Ave., Los Angeles

signs showed the owner to be one of the old Spanish families. Perhaps the peacocks were a tie to the gardens of some Casa Grande of his forbears in Spain.

The signs had lured us on to "Rainbow Lodge" which turned out to be a barn of a house with shed and outhouses and, of course, a "Gasoline for Sale" sign—but "Closed till April" prevented us from looking for trout or pots of gold or other things we associate with rainbows though the canyon itself, elbowing out between two sixty degree green slopes toward the sea, made us resolve to visit here again.

Down by the river it was damp—foliage was luxurious—the cotton woods still carried their golden leaves up high where the sun could get them and made me think of Fernand. At the river we stopped in a redwood grove that seemed to me almost equal to the Muir Woods. The road had been narrow, poor and difficult, yet across the river was a graded embankment, wide uniform gradient, and for all save its pitch, fit for a standard railroad. It was the road south—13 miles were cut through and graded—part of the plan to connect with the road up from Morro and form a seaside link like that from Crescent City to Eureka—but economy at Sacramento or a greater pull by some other county or project has cut off appropriations and, while the bridge will be finished, the new road goes nowhere until the 35 miles between it and the Morro northward road are done. Carmel dreads the day when this is done. They have discouraged "tourists" as much as possible but this would put them on the most popular of scenic coast routes in California. The bridge approaches were not done—but the resident road representative, a kindly old timer, told us with pride of the new road and urged us to take the ford and go down the new road to the place where it was blocked by slides. Finding a wide, graded boulevard starting at nowhere and 28 miles from anywhere was a thrill and so we took the ford—but rather too impetuously for, in fear of getting stuck, I had hurried across and so piled up a wave in front of our radiator—net result a cough and we "died" about six feet from the shore. When the high tide due to my haste had subsided and the starter had whirled out some gallons of water from fan and air intake and carburetor we coughed again, sputtered and finally crawled out of the riverbed—registering the nth thrill. The views of the sea and the sugar-loaf like hills below the Big Sur gave us more. What a road that will be! San Marcos Pass, but with the sea at hand and just below, high bluffs. Irene had prepared the lunch—so that was a thrill—and seeing if we could get back across the ford was decidedly another. The big hawks were some more—the sun filtering in shafts of hazy light into the redwood groves, as through a window in a high Cathedral, thrilled us more than once—and so back again. Coming out I had hugged myself as well as the bank when I was inside on the turns, and now I found that for every inside track there was an outside track—but when they were one and the same track and a skimpy one at that, every invitation offered to roll down over a 45 degree lupine slope, I felt I knew why we only met three cars all day.

We were back at the Highlands in time to call on Dr. MacDougal and hear some of the latest gossip about the Carnegie Institution, (he is director of the Desert Laboratory at Tucson)—the Goodhue Exhibit at the Century Club, and a few of the one thousand and one absorbing interests with which he is connected all the way from coast to coast. We were much interested in his comment on the architecture of the various houses on the cliff sides and in the woods here. The varying success with which the builders and owners have succeeded in fitting their houses to the unique settings had intrigued us—and we had made a special pilgrimage to Pebble Beach to see the Vincent House just finished by our George Washington Smith of Santa Barbara—a remarkable walled house, with a U shaped patio, terraces and most daring wall and gateway—all white except for red tile terrces and a red tile top on the striking scolloped wall. A daring and brilliant piece of work but one which the quiet hillside and cliff dwellers will probably vote an intrusion—a disturbng element that would be wonderful in a southern setting of more urban character. We were more pleased with the fittingness of the house on the point and the house and garden of Mrs. Bigelow on the Hotel grounds, started by Mr. Craig, but changed and completed by the owner and the artist, Mr. O'Shea.

And so back to our quarters at "Lower Stone." Fancy a little "Stone House" built on a ledge, and overlooking the coves and headlands and just above the constant swish and roar of the surf. From its long glassed sitting room with a rough stone fireplace we look through the tops and branches of the pines, around and below us, at the bluest of seas—broken into snow white where the brown granite ledges or sharp rocks contest the right of the waves to smash on the beach or against the jagged shoreline cliffs. The back of our fireplace is a zigzag screen of water pipe from which rises the hot water for our hotwater boiler.

Next morning: With all this to look back upon, it's small wonder we turned our back on the Highlands with regret. The business of stowing our belongings into the roadster and saying farewell to the Amazon, known as the Portuguese Pirate, who did for us at the Lower Stone, was soon over and we were off for Monterey. While I got "gas" at Carmel, Irene made another call on the "Cabbages and Kings" and bought more sweaters—this time for Margaret, and for sister and for me. We had a farewell word with Mrs. Porter and a cheerful wave from Dr. "Mac", and so to Monterey—with its sardine flavor greeting us from afar, while we gloried at the view of the blue bay as we rolled down the long hill from Carmel.

In one of the Monterey gardens overlooking the low street wall, we saw a wonderful English Holly—tall, straight, with its glossy, deep green leaves and reddest of deep red berries. What a range of flora we can have in California!

In honor of the olden days with you we lunched at Pop Ernsts—thinking of the days with you and our Walter and the Von Shrenks. Can I make you "homesick" by reminding you of the abalone chowder and the sole?—and French bread that melted away at a crunch? Out on that flimsy gallery over the water and not minding the slow service at all for the joy of seeing all the high prowed fishing boats, of every size and type, rocking lazily at their moorings, with here and there a pile of brown net, or a hip-booted "furriner" swobbing a deck or tinkering an engine. Almost every boat had its trim of blue or at least some blue somewhere—all of which "went" so well with the brown nets and stamped them as not "out of Gloucester".

As we sat at Pop Ernsts we had a fine chance to view California then and now—there sat the old Custom House, used in turn by Spain, Mexico and the United States, low, adobe and with a moss green tile roof that was a joy, and as we looked and enjoyed it—thinking of Father Serra, Fremont and Consul Larkin, and later "R. L. S."—the view was cut off by a S. P. freight train, a modern engine hauling oil tank cars, box cars laden with cases from the nearby fish canneries or with supplies for the lodges of the fastidious at Pebble Beach.

Monterey seems to prize her adobes: they are labelled and apparently well cared for, but she will have to live down and build over a Main Street that is almost as cheap and nondescript and "new West" as any I ever saw, before she can really deserve her inheritance. We saw quite a few of your Japs, with their murderous knives, enroute for the packing houses for the post lunch whistles, and later went in to see the women deftly trimming abalones, piled high before them, while further along men were pounding the humped muscle till it was flat enough to pack well in wooden tubs. Did I remind you of those silly gulls perched in all sorts of ungainly attitudes on rails or roof ridges and looking so awkward till they took wing again and flying, made their querulous cries or fought for offal floating in the bay? And did I tell you of the black crested jay we saw in Carmel, all blue but his crest, and as large as a cockatoo? You would have been interested in the two big, brown speckled hawks we saw tied to the fence in front of different ranches; and similarly we saw a skunk strung up in front of a rancher's gate, warnings to marauders.

We took the River Road from the Salinas Bridge at Spreckels and so had all the way to Soledad (30 miles) a wide, well dragged dirt road through stock ranches, mostly dairies. Miles of fine, black, well tilled and recently seeded acres, and never a gas station or a bill board to yank us back from Serra's green hills and the joys of "back country" to the modern speeders' highway with its procession of Fords and more pretentious cars, all bent on their various and, we hope, "lawful occasions."

A plan for street parking designed by W. D. Cook, A. I. L. A., of the firm of Cook and Hall. The entrance to Griffith Park from Los Feliz Boulevard, Los Angeles.

ASSISTANCE LEAGUE OF SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

OFFICERS:

MRS. HANCOCK BANNING, President
MRS. EDWARDS LAUGHLIN, First Vice President
MRS. WILLIAM GIBBS MCADOO, Sec. Vice-Pres.
MRS. ERWIN P. WERNER, Third Vice-President
MRS. E. AVERY MCCARTHY, Fourth Vice-Pres.
MRS. JAMES REED, Secretary
MRS. J. WARREN TATUM, Treasurer.
MR. D. C. MACWATTERS, Auditor

CALENDAR

Aug. 3rd, 10:00 a. m.—Meeting Day Nursery Committee.
Aug. 4th, 10:30 a. m.—Meeting Board of Directors.
Aug. 4th, 12:15 p. m.—Round Table Luncheon. Mr. Karl de Scheinitz, of Philadelphia, author of "The Art of Helping People Out of Trouble."
Aug. 12th, 10:30 a. m.—Meeting of Shut-In Committee.
Aug. 13th, 10:30 a. m.—Meeting of Good Samaritan Committee.
Aug. 18th, 10:30 a. m.—Meeting of Executive Committee.
Aug. 26th, 10:30 a. m.—Meeting of Shut-In Committee.

THE offer of the Vanishing Luncheon Committee to make the Assistance League of Southern California a participant in the Vanishing Luncheon Fund came at a most opportune time, our funds being extremely low and our needs many. The proceeds of these luncheons are to be divided among the following organizations:

Boys' and Girls' Aid Society of Pasadena (Furnishing Fund).

The Castelar Creche.

The Community House of Southern California (to be applied to our departments not participating in the Community Chest.)

All checks are made payable to the Vanishing Luncheon Fund and sent to Mrs. Robert Monroe, Vanishing Luncheon Committee, 833 West Twenty-eighth St., Los Angeles.

This Committee, consisting of Mrs. Harold Wrenn, Mrs. John Mel, Mrs. William Gibbs McAdoo, Mrs. John C. MacFarland, Mrs. Henry Toulmin, Mrs. Robert Monroe and Miss Anne Patton, has most successfully launched this bright idea which was so cleverly evolved by Lady Richardson in London reaping tremendous results for a good cause. Paris, New York and San Francisco have followed and now Los Angeles and Pasadena must demonstrate their ability to measure up to the high standard already established.

A beautiful idea this, as well as a serious responsibility to each and every one to "Carry On," for one failure means the loss of thousands of dollars to the cause—DON'T YOU BE THE ONE TO FALL, BUT—

Eat! Treat!
(AND BRING A DOLLAR)

Sing our song o' six-pence,
(And bring a dollar, too!)
Eat a lunch and treat a lunch,
That's all you'll have to do.

What's the use, if Mother Goose
Puts blackbirds in the pie?
Here's a song o' six-pence,
For you and me to try.

For Mother's in the sick ward,
And there's nor bread nor honey
While Daddy's looking for a job
Without a cent of money.

You'll help these sick and needy ones,
One Dollar . . . see the hunch?
While friends and friends of their friends (and more)
Are eating and treating—one lunch!

There are little orphan children
Without a place to stay
And you can fill their greatest need
In this quiet, easy way!

Eat a lunch and treat a lunch!
(Take care no one goes wrong!)
There'll be dollars Ninety Thousand
While you sing this six-pence song.

Miss Kate O'Reilly has been appointed Assistant Secretary of the Assistance League to be in charge of administration at the Community House. All matters pertaining to the League may be taken up with her directly. HE-5133.

THE PLAYGROUNDS OF THE DAY NURSERY, 5612 DE LONGPRE. PHOTOGRAPHS, ALBERT HILLER

The Good Samaritan Committee: has on its list an Armenian — an expert mender and cleaner of Oriental rugs for whom they are anxious to secure work. His charge is reasonable. Telephone HE-5133.

The Soldiers Committee: have asked that another appeal be made for clothes for the veterans. Clothes may not make the man, but they give him the courage to ask for work. Bundles sent for this Committee should be marked plainly when sent to the Community House.

Studio Tea-Room: Dinners are now being served in the Studio Tea-Room every evening —$1.00 per person. A special chicken dinner is served on Thursday evenings.

Have you visited our Shops in the Woman's Athletic Club Building, 833 So. Flower Street?

THIS IS A PICTURE OF A DESERTED MOTHER AND HER FIVE CHILDREN WHOM WE HAVE BEEN ABLE TO PUT ON THEIR FEET

OUR Mrs. Gilmour the Case-worker of our Wilmington Unit of the Assistance League is doing most excellent work in that district.

As you know we receive the money from the Community Chest to maintain this Unit. The Chamber of Commerce of Wilmington has asked the Community Chest to make it possible for the Assistance League Unit to take charge of all its charities in Wilmington.

REGARDING the Community Chest Funds and the specific territory which it covers in relationship to the Assistance League we make the following statement: As far as it was possible for us to become participants of the Community Chest we have done so, but from the very nature of some of our activities it was not possible, nor did we deem it right to participate further in the Community Chest Fund this year.

A representative of the Community Chest visited the Assistance League and investigated our work in detail and the conclusion was reached that the Good Samaritan work, the Wilmington Relief Unit and our Day Nursery were the only activities which should be included in the Chest this year and in consequence we went in on this basis. After a year's operation, should the Community Chest deem it advisable, our other activities may be included in the Chest.

As regards memberships—the Community Chest, while it does not discourage memberships, does ask that its participants limit their dues to approximately $1.00 a year. This we have done. In asking for a $5.00 general membership fee, we are asking of League members one dollar for each of the following departments which are our participants in the Community Chest: The Good Samaritan, the Wilmington Relief Unit, and the Day Nursery. The remainder of the fee is our support for the earning plant at 5604 de Longpre Avenue, Hollywood.

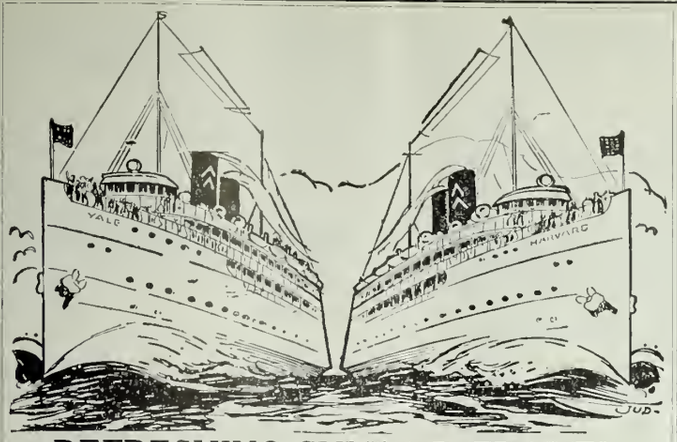
Be Sure to Visit the Studio Tea Room of the Assistance League of Southern California

5604 De Longpre Ave., Hollywood

HEmpstd 5133 HEmstd 5506

We specialize in delicious home cooked food. Special luncheon and Afternoon Tea served daily except Sunday.

Luncheon 75c



(Arrangements for special luncheon parties or afternoon Teas may be made by telephoning to the Community House.)

Please take me to the Day Nursery of the Assistance League at 5612 DeLongpre Ave., Hollywood, where I will be happy and well cared for from 7 a. m. to 6 p. m. All the other children are there and it will cost my mamma but a few pennies a day.

Telephone HO-9031 and ask them to PLEASE take me in.

REFRESHING SUMMER TRAVEL

For residents of this Golden State as well as for travelers bound for California from other states, the trip supreme is a voyage over the blue waters of the Pacific on one of the Palatial Sister Steamships

HARVARD OR YALE

From LOS ANGELES South to SAN DIEGO—a 5-hour Daylight ride—

From LOS ANGELES North to SAN FRANCISCO—an 18-hour Overnight voyage De Luxe

Four Sailings Weekly between Los Angeles and San Diego.

Any railroad ticket agent will, upon request, route passengers via these steamships between these three ports.

Los Angeles Steamship Co.

517 S. Spring St. Los Angeles

Dance!

at the

Ambassador

Cocoanut Grove

to the World-Famous Music of

ABE LYMAN

(Brunswick Recording Artist)

and his incomparable orchestra

SPECIAL NIGHTS Every Tuesday

COLLEGE NIGHTS

With Dancing Contest every Friday.

Tea Dances

every Saturday at 4:00 in the Fiesta Room, Tea Service. $1.00

Wars are won by brave men who think and act together in their effort to serve their country. In this building, the gift of a grateful County to its Veterans of all wars, the seventy members of the Allied Architects Association of Los Angeles have thought and acted together to give to their County and her Veterans the highest type of architecture.

PATRIOTIC HALL

Carrara Marble Neptune Fountain, Reproduction by a Pupil of the Great Sculptor Gianbologna, of his Celebrated Fountain of Neptune in the Piazzo del Nettuno, Bologna, Italy.

THE MEYER AND di SEGNI GALLERY
Antique Furniture, Paintings, Fabrics, Marbles and Bronzes.
640 South Figueroa Street Telephone VAndike 2936
Los Angeles

Lamps

THE HIGHLIGHTS in the picture made by your rooms are the lamps. They should be worthy their prominence. The lamp shown has a base of Cinnabar lacquer, a shade of Kossu tapestry and a finial of carved amber.

Gump's
S. & G. GUMP CO. 246-268 Post St. | San Francisco California

George A. Clark Company
"Correct Dress for Men"
265 East Colorado Street, Pasadena

FOR POLO

Imported caps	$14.50
Steel lined whips	3.50
Rawhide lined whips	4.00
Polo stick	3.50
Polo boots imported	$35.00
Polo boots domestic	17.50
Felt boots imported	9.75
Felt boots domestic	5.50

Super Show Bridle . . $13.50

Super grade throughout, ½x⅝ reins, our own design sliding caveson, complete with lip strap and complete set of English never rust bits, including curb, bit, bradoon, chain and hooks.

Write for Catalog
Special Discounts to Riding Academies and Saddlery Stores

Little joe Wiesenfeld Co.
Baltimore, Md.

THOMAS FRANKLIN POWER
ARCHITECT
AND
ARCHITECTURAL ENGINEER
DUNKIRK 1442 2615 W. SEVENTH ST. LOS ANGELES

MT. WILSON STAGE LINE

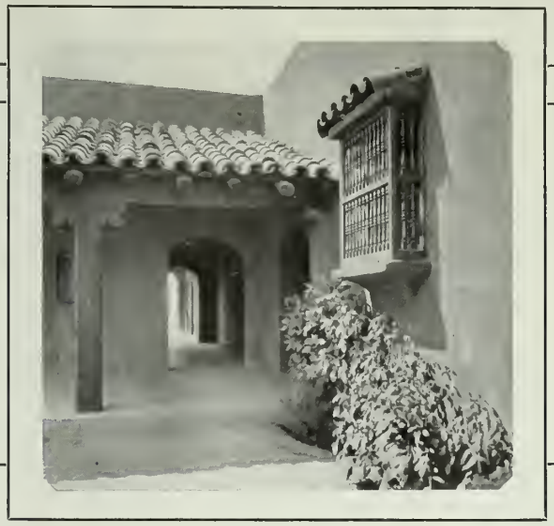
The Mt. Wilson Observatory and the hotel and cottages on the summit of the Sierra Madre Mountains may be reached by excellent motor stages driven by experienced drivers. For information call the Union Stage Depot, 55 South Fair Oaks Avenue or Colorado 2541. Free tickets for Friday nights at the Observatory must be secured at 813 Santa Barbara street, Pasadena.

Designed and Built by Heating Experts

BETTER HOMES
ARE HEATED WITH
OHRMUND BROTHERS
Unit System of Heating
ELECTRICALLY CONTROLLED

Thousands in Use in Southern California. Let us show you why Ohrmund Brothers Units are superior.

HEATING AND SHEET METAL CONTRACTORS



PASADENA GAS APPLIANCE CO., INC.
901 E. Colorado Street
Pasadena Fair Oaks 9393

OAK
BEECH
—
Furnished Scraped

H. G. BENNETT
HARDWOOD FLOORS EXCLUSIVELY
524-26 SO. RAYMOND AVE,
COLO. 178 - PASADENA, CALIF.

MAPLE
BIRCH
—
Laid Finished

Estimates Cheerfully Given
Old Floors Resanded and Polished

A little bit of Old Spain. Corner of School Building RANCHO SANTA FE

The Place to Make Your Dreams Come True!

IF you are going to retire someday and are dreaming of that ideal scenic spot where you can build your home and spend your days in peace and serenity, Rancho Santa Fe should appeal to you irresistibly!

Winding drives. Shady trails. Wooded knolls. Ocean vistas. Beautiful flower gardens. Landscaped walks. Rose-covered pergolas. Perhaps a little private lake. The witchery of friendly old California mountains. An imposing Spanish home crowning a hilltop—Are these your dreams? Then, by all means, visit this lovely place which noted country-estate planners have pronounced "the most distinctive community development in America." You'll find conditions here almost perfect for the working out of such comprehensive visioning; you'll find here other men with similar objectives.

Yet Rancho Santa Fe and what it offers is not for the man of means only. Men with but modest incomes, too, find this 9,000-acre tract and its many profit-producing areas the place they have been looking for.

The culture of avocados, lemons, valencia oranges, apricots, grapes, walnuts and several kinds of deciduous fruits is excellently adapted to the rich and fertile soils on the Rancho. In fact, thousands of trees are now thriving here—ready for your critical inspection. So for both the man of means and the man who must seek all or part of his income from his land, here is Opportunity with everything available. Lake Hodges, impounding 12 billion gallons of water for home and irrigation uses. Electricity for domestic and other purposes. 53 miles of fine surfaced roads leading to each individual homesite. A very artistic Spanish Guest House for the accommodation of residents, non-residents and their friends. A beautiful Civic Center with administration headquarters, offices, store, grammar school, garage and service buildings. A staff of expert horticulturists and engineers to supervise the development of orchards and home construction. In short, here is a complete organization ready to work with you in the furtherance of your interests. All these are here; all are daily available.

Rigid, yet highly desirable restrictions protect your investment here at Rancho Santa Fe. Only permanent, beauty-loving residents are wanted. And more! To assure the certain development of this property each purchaser is required either to plant one-third of his acreage to suitable fruit trees or to build his home within one year. No home costing less than $5,000 can be constructed. In some localities it must cost not less than $15,000.

Rancho Santa Fe is a subsidiary of the Santa Fe Railway. Tonnage for the railway—not profit from the sale of land—is the objective. Hence this land is being sold at cost, plus improvement charges only. 15% cash. Balance in equal annual payments, 6%. Land improvement work and home building are cash considerations.

If you can qualify for home ownership here, you have many wonderful and exclusive opportunities. It is the place to make your dreams come true!

Choicest land $300 to $450 an acre—None Higher!

Come in or write us for further information. The Sales Office in Los Angeles will be glad to arrange for you to visit the Rancho.

Rancho Santa Fe is located in San Diego County, 5 miles inland from Solana Beach or 7 miles from Del Mar.

Rancho Santa Fe

SANTA FE LAND IMPROVEMENT CO.

SAN DIEGO COUNTY CALIFORNIA — 601 SECURITY BLDG. LOS ANGELES

MAIL THIS—FOR BOOKLET C.S.-8-25

SANTA FE LAND IMPROVEMENT COMPANY, 601 Security Bldg., Los Angeles.

Kindly send me your illustrated Booklet and further information about Rancho Santa Fe.

Name..... Address.....

Lake Arrowhead

A lodge in Arrowhead Woods combines the comfort of home with the delights of California's Finest Playground.

THE FRANK MELINE CO

Sales Representatives for Arrowhead Woods Lodge Sites

CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND

YOUTH, Sometimes Called "The Blue Girl"—From a Painting by DAVID ANTHONY TAUSZKY

No. 69 SEPTEMBER, 1925 25 Cents

CALIFORNIA'S HOME AND GARDEN MAGAZINE

What Does the Mailman Bring You?

During the year he delivers over 300,000 letters carrying quarterly dividend checks to the Edison Partners who now number over 80,000

Make a Small First Payment and you soon can have your name added to this list. It pays.

EDISON 6% CUMULATIVE PREFERRED STOCK
(Authorized by the Railroad Commission of California)

PRICE: $97.00 per share cash
$98.00 at $5 per share per month.

YIELD: Approximately 6.19%

Southern California Edison Company

"UP THE VALLEY AND DOWN THE COAST"

YOSEMITE

And all the fascinating features of the High Sierras await you in California

The
Californian
HOTEL

FRESNO, CALIFORNIA

is the logical stopping place in the San Joaquin Valley from which the high Sierras rise

First Class, Fireproof
Correctly Appointed

Reasonable Rates for High Class Service

Management of H. WINGATE LAKE
FRESNO

The
Serendipity Antique Shop

Antiques Lamps Decorations

22, 26 and 30 SOUTH LOS ROBLES AVENUE
PASADENA, CALIFORNIA
BRADFORD PERIN, Proprietor
Telephone F. O. 7111

Announcement

The new Interior Decorating Department, has on exhibition many Lamps, Screens, Cushions and Foot-stools made in our own work-room by specialists, as well as fine fabrics for draperies and furniture coverings.

MARTHA

WATSON-KERBY

Exclusive Fashions for Women

GOWNS WRAPS SPORTS CLOTHING

2224 WEST SEVENTH STREET
LOS ANGELES

WESTLAKE SQUARE PHONE FITZROY 0823

Clarence P. Day Corporation

Engineers — Contractors
Builders

205 Boston Bldg.
Pasadena, Calif.

Phone
WAkefield 6841

THE LOS ANGELES MUSEUM OF HISTORY SCIENCE AND ART

LOS ANGELES MUSEUM OF HISTORY, SCIENCE AND ART

There is no type of building which belongs more intimately to the people of a community nor one which tells more of their development and intelligence than a Museum such as this.

Here, from the prehistoric remains of the La Brea tar pits to the inventions of modern science, the progress of the race is told. In order to make this Museum, not only a fitting shrine of History, Science and Art, but to give to Los Angeles a building commensurate with her dignity the Allied Architects Association of Los Angeles has devoted its unequalled resources to the personal examination of every great museum in the United States, taking only the best thoughts from each and incorporating them under one roof; a museum for the people of Los Angeles.

go now before Sept. 30th final sale date
of summer roundtrip

reduced fares

for vacation travel in California and the Pacific Northwest.

There's yet ample time for a happiest vacation ever—at surprisingly low cost.

So start now. Visit one or several of your favorite vacation playgrounds.

Your local Southern Pacific agent will supply you with tickets, reservations and complete travel information. Consult him today, or write to Popular trains every day everywhere.

Low Fares
Back East,
on sale until Sept. 15th.

SOUTHERN PACIFIC LINES

Southern Pacific Lines
C. L. McFAUL, A.P.T.M.
Los Angeles, Calif.

So Goes Milady
With luxury attending

Golden State Limited East

Full half a train devoted to woman—greater recognition of her just dues in travel than ever before planned. Perfect in every appointment—of course.

All-Pullman—women's lounge, shower bath, maid, manicure, expert hair bobbing in the barber shop—comfort for the men, too—club car, bath, valet and barber.

Leave Los Angeles 12:01 p. m. [via Southern Pacific]; San Diego 10:45 a.m. [via S. D. & A.]; arrive Chicago 10:00 a. m. third day [via Rock Island].

Thru Pullman daily from Santa Barbara 8:00 a. m. [via Southern Pacific].

For tickets, reservations, personal service, call on
Southern Pacific City Ticket Office
937 State St., Santa Barbara, Calif.
Phone 243
or address B. F. Coons, General Agent
Rock Island Lines
809 Van Nuys Bldg., Los Angeles, Calif.

Rock Island
SOUTHERN PACIFIC LINES
Meals? "The best on wheels"

893

SOUTHLAND CALENDAR

Announcements of exhibitions, fetes, concerts, club entertainments, etc., for the calendar pages are free of charge and should be received in the office of CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND, Pasadena, at least two weeks previous to date of issue, the 10th. No correction can be guaranteed if they are received later than that date. California Southland is published monthly at Pasadena, California. One dollar and twenty-five cents for six issues, two fifty per year. Addresses will be changed as many times as desired if notice is given before the first of the month for which the change is made.

Entered as second class matter, July 28, 1919, at the Post office at Pasadena, California, under act of March 3, 1879.

Clubs

VALLEY HUNT CLUB, PASADENA:
The formal season at the Valley Hunt Club closed with May, after which time no programs are arranged. The tennis court and swimming pool offer the outdoor attractions during the summer, and individual parties, both afternoon and evening, are arranged as desired.

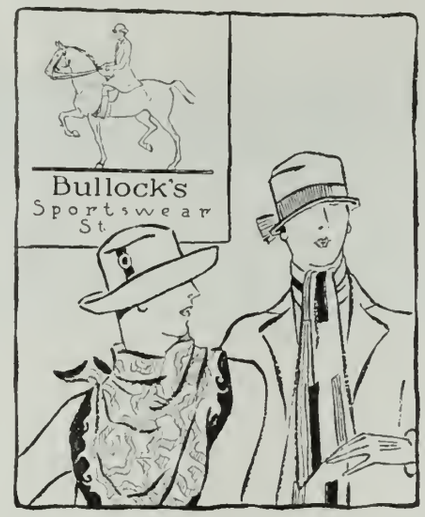
ANNANDALE GOLF CLUB, PASADENA:
The afternoon bridge, Mah Jongg and tea parties have been discontinued for the season, but tea will be served as requested and tables for cards are always available.
Every Friday is Ladies' Day.
The usual Wednesday and Saturday sweepstakes each month through the summer.

FLINTRIDGE COUNTRY CLUB:
Tuesday is Ladies' Day and a special luncheon is served. In the afternoons informal bridge parties may be arranged, followed by tea.

LOS ANGELES COUNTRY CLUB:
Ladies' Days, second Monday of each month.
Music during dinner, followed by dancing, every Saturday evening during the month.
Luncheon served from 11:30 to 2 .p m. on Saturdays.
Sunday night concerts during month.
Tea served as requested and tables for cards always available.

WILSHIRE COUNTRY CLUB:
Ladies' Days, third Monday of each month.
Dancing every second and fourth Saturday during the month.
A musical is arranged for each Sunday night in the month.

MIDWICK COUNTRY CLUB:
Ladies' Days, fourth Monday in each month.
Tea and informal bridge every afternoon.
Polo, Wednesday and Saturday of each week.
Dancing every Saturday night.
Buffet luncheon served every Sunday.
Match polo games every Sunday, preceded by luncheon parties, followed by teas, during season.



LOS ANGELES ATHLETIC CLUB:
Dinner dances, Tuesday and Friday nights of every week, Tuesday night informal; Friday night semi-formal.
Plunge open to the ladies Tuesday and Friday of every week.

SAN GABRIEL COUNTRY CLUB:
A dinner dance is arranged for the third Thursday of each month.
On Friday of each week a special luncheon is served, with bridge in the afternoons.
Ladies play every day starting after ten a. m., and not before two p. m.

MONTECITO COUNTRY CLUB:
Provides an 18 hole golf course, two concrete and two dirt courts for tennis, bowls and croquet.
Tea is served and informal bridge parties arranged as desired.
A buffet supper is served every Sunday night.

LA CUMBRE GOLF AND COUNTRY CLUB, SANTA BARBARA:
Offers a course of eighteen holes, rivaling any in hazard and beauty. A recent purchase of additional acreage will provide an extended and even more interesting course.
Luncheon is served every day, and tea may be arranged as desired.

REDLANDS COUNTRY CLUB:
Golf tournament for men is held every Saturday. Monday the course is reserved for the women and a special luncheon served. Those who do not play golf or who have had a round in the morning, devote the afternoon to bridge or mah jongg. Every Saturday afternoon tea is served.

Bullocks
Broadway—Hill and Seventh
Los Angeles
'One o'Clock Saturdays'

Where the Treasures of a Collector May Be Purchased as Gifts

A. Schmidt & Son

For Fifty-six Years Importers of Antique and Modern Silver, Sheffield Plate, Fine China and Glass.

2320 W. Seventh St., Los Angeles
391 E. Colorado St., Pasadena

Boston New York Washington

PALOS VERDES GOLF CLUB:
Offers an eighteen hole, all grass, seaside course, delightful for summer play.
Tea and informal bridge every afternoon.
Lunch and dinner served every day.
Under the direction of George Clark, chairman of the L. A. A. C. golf committee, plans have been perfected for the L. A. A. C. Tournament at Palos Verdes, Sept. 2 to 7.

LAKE ARROWHEAD GOLF CLUB:
Nine hole course, designed by William Watson, is built in the valley, back from the lake, easy of access to guests of the Lodge, as well as the cottage colony.

FLINTRIDGE RIDING CLUB:
The club does not follow a program of events during the summer, but each rider or group of friends follow their own devices and trials. Tea is served on the lawn, under the oaks, and many members remain for dinner. The new outdoor grill is under construction.

NEWPORT HARBOR YACHT CLUB:
September 4, 5, 6 and 7 Joint stag cruise of Southern California yacht clubs to Johnson's Landing, Catalina Island. One design power runabout class Grudge race. Star class Grudge race, bay course. Small sailing boat Grudge race. Bang and go back Grudge race.
October 10 Winners' ball. Banquet, 6:30 p. m. Presentation of trophies.

CALIFORNIA YACHT CLUB:
Saturday, September 5, to Monday, September 7—Stag cruise to Johnson's for all Southern California clubs.
Saturday, September 12—Sailing races.
Sunday, September 13—Sailing races.
Saturday, September 19—Sailing races.
Sunday, September 20—Sailing races.
Saturday, September 26—Motor boat races.
Sunday, September 27—Motor boat races.

Art

LOS ANGELES Museum of History, Science and Art, Exposition Park announces: September 2 to 27, Exhibition by California Water Color Society; Exhibition of Water Color Paintings by Alfred Hayward; Exhibition of Water Color Paintings by Dorothy Kent.

The Pan-American Exhibition of Oil Paintings, in which the prominent artists of the two Americas exclusively will be represented, will open November 3 and continue through January 1. Dr. William Alanson Bryan, Director of the Los Angeles Museum, has long anticipated bringing to Los Angeles an exhibition to be made up of the work of artists in Latin-America, the United States and Canada, and proposed that the opening of the new unit of the Museum be commemorated by an exhibition in which the art development of the two Americas be shown. Five hundred paintings, two hundred and fifty from each main division will be assembled.

SOUTHWEST MUSEUM, Marmion Way and Avenue 46, Los Angeles. Exhibition of old European Masters.

Educational courses begin at the Museum in September, with the usual lecture course, including the Sunday afternoon lecture at 3:00 o'clock. Unusually interesting speakers are on the programs. The children's hours are well planned.

CANNELL AND CHAFFIN announce that opening August 31 and continuing through September 26, in the larger galleries, 720 West Seventh street, Los Angeles, a carefully selected general exhibition will be shown, including fine examples of the work of George Innes, William Keith, Thomas Moran, Hovsep Pushman, Carl Blenner, Maurice Braun, Emma Ciardi, Bruce Crane, Bernard De Hoag, Gordon Grant, John Gamble, Charles B. Hudson, and Frank Tenney Johnson. Opening September 28 and continuing to October 10 recent paintings by Jack Wilkinson Smith and Arthur Hazzard. In the Print Room, August 24 to Sept. 14, colored etchings by I. F. Simon. A general exhibition of etchings, Sept. 14 to Sept. 28.

PASADENA ART INSTITUTE, in the galleries at Carmelita House, will continue through September to show the work of local artists.

THE BILTMORE SALON will continue a general exhibition throughout September, with a change of pictures and artists every two weeks. The Print Room will offer a different series of etchings beginning September 1st.

STENDAHL GALLERIES, Ambassador Hotel, will continue to show examples of the work of famous French masters, including Monet, Sisley, Cazin, Jacque, Le Sidaner, Jules Dupre, Julien Dupre, Ziem, Millet, Jules Breton, and Rosa Bonheur. Such well known American artists as Guy Rose, Alson Clark, John Frost, Orrin White, Colin Campbell Cooper, Edgar Payne, Hanson Puthuff and Armin Hansen, will have canvases in another gallery. One of the smaller galleries will be reserved for an exhibition of a half dozen or more canvases by Thomas Moran; this exhibition will be composed of examples of Mr. Moran's earlier pictures as well as some painted within the last three years.

AARON KILPATRICK and Hansen Puthuff have returned from their trip into old Mexico, bringing with them not only sketches and photographs but the results of a motion picture camera, that they might continue to be surrounded with atmosphere as they work out the preliminary sketches.

THE first exhibitors in the Dalzell Hatfield galleries, 3142 Wilshire Blvd., were William C. Emerson and Benjamin Eggleston, painters of the East, and Harold Swartz and Merrill Gage, Los Angeles sculptors. The gallery is large, well lighted and admirably adapted to the display of both paintings and sculpture.

LELAND S. CURTIS will hold a one-man show during September at the Carmelita House galleries, Pasadena.

MAURICE BRAUN will show his most recent paintings in his new studio on Point Loma, San Diego, during the month of September. The studio will be open to visitors on Thursday afternoons and Saturday evenings. Many of the woman's clubs of Southern California are planning pilgrimages to Point Loma to visit the new Braun home and studio.

JACK WILKINSON SMITH, Clyde Forsythe, and F. Tenney Johnson are back from their trip into the High Sierras, which included Mammoth Lake, and are all three busy transferring to canvas their impressions.

HELENA DUNLAP has taken a studio in Paris, where she will work for several months.

DUNCAN GLEASON held the only one man show in Los Angeles during August, exhibiting for two weeks at the Biltmore Salon, and showing many more of the ships, big and little, which he paints in so masterly a way.

KATHRYN LEIGHTON continues to paint in Montana, with her husband and son, occupying the cabin, which they took for the season, above Lake McDonald, Glacier National Park.

ARTHUR HILL GILBERT is delighted with his stay in the Painted Desert, miles and miles from the railway, or other disturbing elements, and hopes to be able to put his impressions on canvas before his return.

MR. AND MRS. MAURICE BRAUN leave for New York City the first of October. Mr. Braun will paint during the autumn in these environs, while Hazel Boyer Braun will make an especial study of several of America's collections of Art. They will return to California for Christmas.

PAUL LAURITZ has returned after several months in Norway, which he spent most pleasantly visiting his family and sketching the mountains and fjords of his native land.

MINNIE M. TINGLE held recently a one-man show in the Los Angeles Athletic Club, this being the first time a woman has been invited to exhibit either paintings or sculpture in this club.

FOUR ETCHINGS by Loren Barton have recently been acquired by the Los Angeles Museum for their Print Collection. They are "Manuel", "George Arliss as Disraeli", "Gypsy" and Meiggs Wharf".

ONE of the new pictures which will be hung in the Harrison Gallery, the new unit at the Los Angeles Museum, on its completion this fall, is "Autumn in Cornwall" by Walter Elmer Schofield, N. A.

Music

LOS ANGELES Grand Opera Association Benjamin F. Bledsoe, president, Merle Armitage, business manager, announces the opening of the second season of Grand Opera, Monday, September 29, with "Lakme," six operas will be given as follows: Tuesday, Sept. 30, "Aida"; Thursday, Oct. 1, "Rigoletto"; Saturday matinee, Oct. 3, "Carmen," and Saturday night, double bill, "La Navarraise," "Cavalleria Rusticana." The leading roles will be sung by the following artists, Alice Gentle, Rosa Raisa, Anna Ruzena Sprotte, Maria Kurenko, Mme. Elizabeth Rothwell, Charles Hackett, Giocomo Rimini, Richard Hageman, Edward Johnson, Vincente Ballester, Kathryn Meisle, Desire Defrere, Margare M. Morris, Ulysses Lappas, Eduard Couriel, John Marshall Brumbaugh, Flora Myers Engel, and Marjoric Dodge. Richard Hageman will conduct, and William Tyroler is director of the chorus. The opera will be given at the Philharmonic Auditorium.

FOLLOWING the opera season in San Francisco, under the direction of Gaetano Merola, the principals of the California Grand Opera Company, with scenery and stage properties, will open a Los Angeles season at the new Olympic Auditorium, on Grand Avenue at 18th Street, October 6.

THE San Diego Opera Company has announced tentative plans to present grand opera with visiting artists, in the Spreckels Theater, October 8 to 15. Buren Schryock is the general director, and among the artists are Marguerite D'Alvarez and Julia Claussen, contraltos; Ulysses Lappas and Ernest Davis, tenors; and Edmund Burke, bass, with Carmen Judah as dramatic soprano.

ALFRED HERTZ, conductor of the San Francisco Symphony, was chosen to conduct the eighth and final week of the Hollywood Bowl concerts. Mr. Hertz was the director in the first season when the Bowl was practically an experiment, and again last year added to his first triumph. This season the Bowl has offered many conductors, eleven in all, including such celebrities as Fritz Reiner, Sir Henry Wood, Ethel Leginska, Willem Van Hoogstraten, Edgar Stillman Kelley, Howard Hansen, Samuel Gardner, Walter Henry Rothwell, Ernest Bloch and Rudolf Ganz. Due to repeated vacations abroad this is the first time Walter Henry Rothwell has conducted what is practically his own orchestra,, as he conducts the same combination of players during seven months of the year. Ethel Leginska, one of the few women orchestral conductors, appeared in the fifth week in a triple role, as conductor, pianist and composer, and drew, perhaps, the largest audience of the season.

THE "Little Symphony", founded and conducted by Adolph Tandler, will give a series of concerts during the winter season, opening early in the fall at the Biltmore ballroom, Los Angeles. Ten concerts have been arranged by this ensemble for the Pasadena Community Playhouse, and three programs are planned for Long Beach. Alma Dorothy Preister is the business manager for the season.

THE Coast Opera Company gave "Pinafore" during August, as the first of a series of light operas for Los Angeles. Joseph Rose was the conductor and the cast contained twenty principals, forty choristers and a twenty piece orchestra. Mme. Alma Stetzler appeared as "Buttercup". The setting was realistic and nautical to a degree as the good ship was built and proudly rode in the Ambassador Hotel plunge.

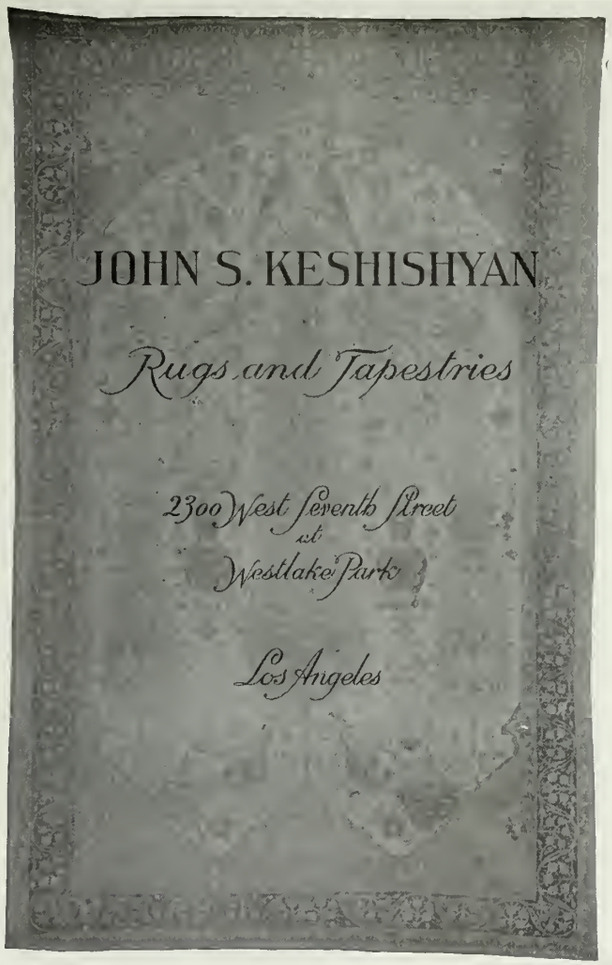
THE Auditorium Artist Series, George Leslie Smith, manager, will present an interesting list of artists during this, their third season. Among the artists are Maria Kurenko, Russian coloratura, who will make her American debut with the Los Angeles Grand Opera Association; Margaret Matzenauer, contralto; Thamar Karsavina, one of the most famous of Russian dancers; Vincent Ballester, Spanish baritone; Edward Johnson, tenor of the Metropolitan Opera Company, with Joan Ruth, soprano, will give scenes from the more famous operas; Roland Hayes, the negro tenor will return.

ANTOINNETTE ZOELLNER, first violin of the Zoellner Quartet, was married August 19 to Earl Frank Chapman of Sunland, California.

FRIEDA PEYCKE, popular pianologist, is planning to make a tour of the world this fall, leaving New York in October. Miss Peycke will appear in Salt Lake, Chicago, and other Eastern cities en route to New York.

UNDER the auspices of the Pasadena Chamber of Commerce and Civic Association open air concerts are given each Sunday afternoon, at 3:30, in Carmelita Gardens.

LOS ANGELES Opera Reading Society will open its season, September 4, at the Gamut Club Theater, 8:00 p. m., with W. Vincent Wallace's opera, "Maritana". Judge Benjamin F. Bledsoe will make the opening address. William Tyroler will be the musical director and pianist, and Lucile Spencer-Kelly is the reader.



FANNIE DILLON, gifted composer of Los Angeles, conceived the idea of a mountain theater dedicated to music, and founded the "Theater of the Stars" at Fawnskin, Big Bear Lake. Miss Dillon invited Arthur Farwell of Pasadena to join with her in the production of outdoor music drama and through their efforts well arranged programs have been given on Saturday nights, which were open to the public. The Russian String Quartet, composed of Calmon Luboviski, Julian Brodetzsky, Georgi Menhenick, and Misha Gegna gave the final concert of the season on the last Saturday in August.

L. E. BEHYMER announces a few of the interesting artists who will appear under his management during the winter season. Lhevinne, pianist, will appear in November, while another famous pianist, Ignaz Friedman, will not arrive until spring. During the season Anna Case, Claire Dux. Elizabeth Retgberg and Elena Gerhardt will all he welcomed. The violinists are Efrem Zimbalist, Paul Kochanski, and Mischa Elman. An innovation in the new courses will be the "Barrere Little Symphony", under the direction of Georges Barrere.

REDLANDS' Community Music Association, Mrs. G. E. Mullen, manager, has arranged throughout the summer artists' concert programs for each Friday evening, and on Tuesday evenings the Redlands Community Orchestra presented a program and Gage Christopher led the community sings. These were held, as last year, in the Redlands Bowl and there was no charge. The first concert, June 19, featured Esther Dale, dramatic soprano, and during the season Charles Wakefield Cadman, Margaret Messer Morris and Victor Edmunds appeared.

Announcements

PASADENA Community Playhouse: "You Never Can Tell" by George Bernard Shaw, August 27-September 5; the first Shavian offering in the new playhouse, and is the final play of the summer before beginning on the fall and winter schedule.

MEXICAN Fabrile GLASS

MEXICAN FABRILE GLASS may be purchased in the following California Studios:

Berkeley
Reginald Markham
Jos. Mckeown

Beverly Hills
The Fanfare

Carmel
Tilly Polak

Coronado
Harold A. Taylor Co.

Hollywood
Mary-Helen Tea Room

Los Angeles
Hewson Studios
J. F. Luccarine

Monterey
Mission Art Store

Oakland
The Copper Shop

Pasadena
Cheesewright Studios
Sam Farrington

Riverside
Mission Inn

San Francisco
Jones and George
O'Hara, Livermore & Baken
Vickery, Atkins & Torrey

Santa Barbara
Robert L. Lewis

Santa Monica
The Attic

Ventura
La Floreria

Imported by TALAVERA IMPORTING CO., Pasadena

From the Alameda in Mexico City, comes the authority for the use of Talavera Glazed Tiles in Civic Architecture for California.

Glazed Tiles from Old Mexico

We are now carrying a stock of Mexican Talavera Tiles and Tile Panels, which is added to regularly by the shipments received from our connections in Mexico. Ask your architect or tile dealer to show you the possibilities and decorative qualities of Mexican Talavera Glazed Tiles; or write to us directly.

TALAVERA IMPORTING COMPANY
322 E. Colorado St.,
Pasadea

The fall season will open in October. Two plays a month are produced throughout the year. Each play begins on a Thursday and ends on the second Saturday; eleven performances, matinees on Saturdays only.

THE Pilgrimage Play, which opened the sixth annual season in July in the impressive outdoor theater in the Hollywood hills, has closed. During the last few weeks Reginald Pole portrayed the role of the Christ, due to the return of Ernest Lawford to New York. Mr. Pole played the leading character during the first season but this year has been serving the play as director.

CALIFORNIA Federation of Women's Clubs announce the opening of new offices and conference rooms on the eighth floor of the Chamber of Commerce Building, Hill street at Twelfth, Los Angeles. A luncheon will be held in these rooms, September 3, 12:30 o'clock, as a "get acquainted" day.

SIXTII Annual Convention of the California Federation of Business and Professional Women's Clubs will be held in San Jose, September 10-11-12. Headquarters will be the Scottish Rite Temple.

THE Mission Pageant at San Juan Capistrano will close the season September 7, with an unusually attractive program. A new episode was added to the pageant-play during August.

PASADENA Center of the Drama League of America announces the opening of its annual playwriting contest, held for the purpose of stimulating and encouraging the writing of plays by amateurs. All contestants are urged to send for the rules before submitting their manuscripts. Corresponding Secretary, Mrs. Gertrude M. Fuller, 499 Ellis Street, Pasadena, California. The contest opens Nov. 1, 1925, and closes March 1, 1926.

LOS ANGELES County Fair, September 22-26, at Pomona, commemorates both the diamond jubilee celebration of California and the golden anniversary of the establishment of Pomona fifty years ago, and for these two reasons will feature pioneer pageants, with Spanish motifs.

THE Diamond Jubilee celebration in San Francisco will open September 5 and continue for one week. This is one of the outstanding events of the California Festival year, which will end in Pasadena on January 1, 1926, with the Tournament of Roses.

CALIFORNIA Institute of Technology announced the immediate erection of the new seismological laboratory, which is expected to be the finest of its kind in the world.

THIRTEENTH Annual Southern California Fair, September 30 to October 6, to be held in Riverside, will also commemorate the seventy-fifth birthday of that city. The fair grounds and the town will be decorated with the gay colors of Spain, and in addition to the fair a pageant will be held telling the history of Southern California in nine episodes.

COMMUNITY dances, sponsored by the Pasadena Center,, Drama League of America, will be continued Friday evenings, 8 to 11 o'clock, throughout the month at Tournament Park, Pasadena.

GEORGE B. BRIGHAM, JR., Architect, announces the removal of his office, August 24, 1925, to 531 Pacific-Southwest Bank Building, Pasadena, California. Telephone Wakefield 8037.

Pomona College, Claremont

POMONA COLLEGE officially opens the new year Friday morning, September 18. Beginning at 8:30 a. m. Convocation services will be held in the Bridges Hall of Music. Members of the incoming freshmen class will participate in Pomona's first Freshmen Week, designed to acquaint the new students with the traditions and spirit of the college before the arrival of upperclassmen. Beginning on Monday, September 14, freshmen will be guests at Student-Faculty council dinners, general assemblies, and special entertainments. Registration for freshmen will be held September 15 and 16 and registration for the remaining three classes is scheduled for September 16 and 17. A general assembly Saturday morning, September 19, and a College Night party and program in the gymnasium open the student events of the year.

Santa Barbara

RODERICK WHITE, violinist, assisted by Grace Kaplun, pianist, and May Hogan Combern, harpist, gave a delightful program at the Lobero Theater, Friday, August 21st. The concert was a benefit one, and the proceeds were donated to the musical activities of Santa Barbara.

DE WITT PARSHALL, N. A., and Douglass Parshall, held exhibitions of paintings in the Lower and Upper Studios, August 23rd to August 30th, Montecito.

Extended Service

LAKE ARROWHEAD LODGE (formerly Arlington Lodge), on Lake Arrowhead, California, once known as Little Bear Lake, is eighty miles from Los Angeles, reached by boulevard to San Bernardino and then over oiled and sprinkled mountain roads, and offers all the sports at this mile high resort that may be enjoyed in the valleys or on the shore. Fishing, swimming, boating on the lake, tennis, golfing, hiking, horseback riding make up delightful days, with dancing in the evening. In the dining room the food and service is uniformly good. E. K. Hoak is the present owner and managing director.

THE EDGEWATER CLUB, Santa Monica, has opened the Solarium Dining Room and Lounge on the Esplanade and the Bathers' Grill in the main building, and work is progressing rapidly on the entire building. Mrs. Egelhoff Rundel is in charge of all social functions at the club and it is now possible for members to entertain their guests at luncheon, tea, or dinner.

HOTEL VISTA DEL ARROYO, Pasadena announces the date of the third and last buffet supper and outdoor concert of the summer season as September 6. The program will be given by Henri J. Van Praag and his Artist Ensemble.

IN the Wilshire District, 3191 West Seventh street, Los Angeles, Hotel Chancellor has just opened and offers well furnished rooms, each with private bath, moderate rates, and a cafe in connection.

HOTEL VAN NUYS CAFE is a part of the old Los Angeles but it is not by tradition alone but by present performance that it maintains the reputation for excellent food and service. No overpowering air of dignity chills, but a touch of conservatism precludes dancing and jazz, and a good concert orchestra appears each evening during dinner.

LA VENTA INN, Palos Verdes, on the cliffs overlooking the ocean, is constantly filled with gay luncheon and dinner parties. Within less than an hour's ride from Los Angeles it attracts many motor parties throughout the long summer days.

The Cheesewright Studios, Inc.
Decorators and Furnishers
PASADENA CALIFORNIA

FOR POLO

Imported caps	$14.50
Steel lined whips	3.50
Rawhide lined whips	4.00
Polo stick	3.50
Polo boots imported	$35.00
Polo boots domestic	17.50
Felt boots imported	9.75
Felt boots domestic	5.50

Super Show Bridle . . $13.50

Super grade throughout, ½x⅝ reins, our own design sliding caveson, complete with lip strap and complete set of English never rust bits, including curb, bit, bradoon, chain and hooks.

Write for Catalog
Special Discounts to Riding Academies and Saddlery Stores

Little joe Wiesenfeld Co.
Baltimore, Md.

HENRY C. FOES
INTERIOR DECORATOR
Studio, in Patio of the Community Playhouse
33 So. El Molino Ave. Pasadena
Phone Terrace 0883

MT. WILSON STAGE LINE

The Mt. Wilson Observatory and the hotel and cottages on the summit of the Sierra Madre Mountains may be reached by excellent motor stages driven by experienced drivers. For information call the Union Stage Depot, 55 South Fair Oaks Avenue or Colorado 2541. Free tickets for Friday nights at the Observatory must be secured at 813 Santa Barbara street, Pasadena.

Antiques
JOHN W. CONDIT
Dealer in rare old pieces selected from private homes. Specialist in the proper restoration of heirlooms.
199 S. Fair Oaks Ave., Pasadena
Telephone Terrace 0315-W

NO. 121—TALMAGE VASE

Beautiful Garden Pieces
in
Sculptured Terra Cotta

Italian Terra Cotta Co.
W. H. Robison
1149 MISSION ROAD
Opposite County Hospital
Phone Lincoln 1057 Los Angeles

JAMES CINI & COMPANY
of Italy
Antique and Foreign Jewelry
Italian and French Novelties
390 E. Walnut St. Pasadena, Calif.
Fair Oaks 5583

El Paseo Patio

Lunch Out of Doors or Dine

at

"EL PASEO"

23 E. de la Guerra St.

Santa Barbara

CUMMOCK SCHOOL, under the direction of Helen A. Brooks, A. M., opens its thirty-first year, September 29, 1925. The beautiful English type school has a campus of nearly five acres. The School of Expression includes training in voice, diction, liberty interpretation, public speaking, dramatics, and related subjects. There is a Junior School and the Academy which is an accredited high school. Mrs. Beulah Wright Comstock, of U. S. C. will have charge of the "School of Speech." Miss Cora Patton, of Chicago, and Mrs. Ella M. Hugh will be on the Cummock faculty this fall.

ELLIOTT SCHOOL FOR GIRLS, under the direction of Martha Collina Weaver, A. M., will begin the fall term September 21, 1925. Sub-primary through the eleventh grade, with special advantages in music, dramatics, pageantry, dancing, is the course of study offered. The attractive gardens for out-door study and recreation are much enjoyed. Cultural development in a home atmosphere is considered of paramount importance.

GIRL'S COLLEGIATE SCHOOL, is opening its thirty-fourth year October 1, 1925, in the beautiful Glendora Foothills, overlooking San Gabriel Valley, in a 50 acre estate. New buildings, five of which will be completed for the fall term, are of Italian renaissance type, and will be among the finest in the country. All sports, and especially riding will be a feature of the outdoor life possible in a country school. Special transportation for day pupils will be most convenient for Los Angeles, Hollywood and Pasadena students. Miss Parsons and Miss Dennen, the principals, will be assisted by the same faculty.

GREENWOOD SCHOOL FOR GIRLS will open for the fall term September 17, with Mrs. Greenwood, Newham College Cambridge, and Mr. H. F. Greenwood, B. A., Corpus Christi College, Cambridge, as principals. In addition to the academic course, special advantages are offered in music under Mrs. Elsa Spencer. The spacious lawn, tennis courts and outdoor swimming pool are among the attractions of the Greenwood School.

KATHARINE BRANSON SCHOOL FOR GIRLS, a country school in Marin County, occupies an estate of eleven acres in the shadow of beautiful Mt. Tamalpias. "To give girls a thorough foundation in the elements of those branches of knowledge which fit them to enter any of the American colleges and universities open to women, and to take an active and intelligent part in the activities of any community" is the aim of the school. Primary, intermediate and high school grades are courses of study; and music, art, dancing, riding and tennis instruction may be arranged for.

KENWOOD HALL, a day and boarding school for girls, under the direction of Ruby Mildred King and Grace Bobbitt, opens for the fall term September 21, 1925. The school is open throughout the year and students may enter at any time. Spanish, French, expression and dancing are included in the regular tuition and work covers sub-primary through high school grades. The school gardens, with attractive pergolas and outdoor classrooms permit outdoor life the year round. All sports are encouraged, including riding, swimming, tennis, archery, etc.

NORMA GOULD STUDIO OF THE DANCE. Of a special interest is the studio, designed by Miss Gould, of Spanish architecture, with an attractive patio and pool. A spacious lobby and office is followed by the large studio, with a generous sized stage, of varying levels. Unique lighting features afford interesting possibilities in the school's recitals and pantomine productions, which are a feature of the season. Fall terms in all departments begin October 1.

PACIFIC MILITARY ACADEMY will open for the fall term in the beautiful new buildings of Italian renaissance type, constructed of reinforced concrete and trimmed with Moorish tile. Strictly fireproof, situated on ten acres of high ground adjoining the California Country Club, the new school will accomodate 125 cadets with only two cadets to each sleeping room. The main building contains the administration offices, large airy classrooms, well equipped gymnasium and a large auditorium. The athletic department is one of the finest in the west, with six acres of athletic field, and an outdoor swimming pool. Mrs. Katherine Loughan is managing director and Major E. H. Baker, commandant.

SECRETARIAL COACHING SCHOOL, under the direction of Mrs. Lee Ruthford, is now in the new school in the heart of the Wilshire district. Fitting the individual for his life work, training him along specialized lines, is the aim of the school, and a field in which Mrs. Ruthford has been unusually successful. The new school is light and well ventilated, with small rooms for individual instruction, all with outside windows. In addition to fundamental subjects, and instruction in special subjects, classes will be held in parliamentary law and housekeeping budgets.

URBAN MILITARY ACADEMY begins its twenty-second year September 16. Known as "The School After a Boy's Own Heart," the outdoor features are stressed. After so many years of practical demonstration, the directors of Urban feel that building up the student physically, with sports and pastimes under most favorable conditions, is the best foundation for academic work and character building. Urban cadets are always leaders in athletic events and their riding in California horse shows is always an event of interest. The school has its own cavalry and band and much interest is being shown in the new indoor swimming pool nearing completion. Of tile construction, properly filtered, ventilated and lighted, it has excellent appointments throughout. A new unit is now under construction, a large building of Georgian Colonial type, three stories high, containing library, promenade, recreation rooms, a dining room with a seating capacity of 300 and a completely equipped gymnasium. The upper floors will be given over to separate rooms and baths for the larger boys and dormitories and nurses and matrons' quarters for smaller boys.

WESTLAKE SCHOOL FOR GIRLS, in beautiful Westmoreland Hills, begins the fall term September 30. Miss Jessica Vance and Miss Frederica De Laguna are the principals, assisted by a competent staff. College preparatory and college courses are offered and the school is accredited East and West. Added to the faculty of the Junior College this year are Dr. Theron Clarke, mathematics, and Dr. David K. Bjork, history, of the University of California. Dr. Kate Gordon, University of California, psychology, and Dr. Frederick Leonard, astronomy, and Mlle. Eva Pamburn, French, complete the Junior College faculty. Special advantages in music are offered at Westlake and instruction with any of the following members of the faculty music department may be arranged; Mr. Leslie Carl Marsh, Miss Lucile Roberts, piano; Virginia Goodcell Byrne, voice; Oscar Seiling, violin

THE SANTA BARBARA STUDIOS

SCHOOL OF THE ARTS

(A Branch of the Community Arts Association)

Frank Morley Fletcher, Director

GRAPHIC, DECORATIVE AND PLASTIC ARTS—DRAMA, MUSIC, DANCING

Semester October-May; Summer School six weeks July-August; short courses arranged for non-residents.

Address, 916 Santa Barbara Street, Santa Barbara

F. W. Riedell

Interior Decorations

Technical knowledge and wide experience gained in connections with best decorators for many years. Shops equipped for service to those of most exacting demands.

Fine Draperies

Upholstering

ANTIQUES
REPAIRED AND RESTORED

Parchment Lamp Shades

Awnings of Venetian Sail Cloth

Wall Fabrics Slip Covers

Mihran Studio Bldg.

Santa Barbara, Calif.

25 E. Carrillo St. Phone 1735

R. K. Earle

CONSULTING ENGINEER
LANDSCAPE ARCHITECTURE

PRIVATE ESTATES :: GOLF COURSES

1308 PERSHING SQUARE BLDG.
LOS ANGELES
VAndike 3681

THOMAS FRANKLIN POWER

ARCHITECT

AND

ARCHITECTURAL ENGINEER

DUNKIRK 1442

2615 W. SEVENTH ST.
LOS ANGELES

SANTA BARBARA, CALIF.

H. G. CHASE

(Established 1903)

Real Estate and Rentals

1012 State St. Phone 125

LEONARD WOODRUFF

Studio of Antiques

37-39 East de la Guerra St.

CLARENCE C. KNIGHT

REALTOR

"Worth While Homes"

112 East Figueroa St. Phone 105

Santa Barbara, California

Mt. LOWE

Earth has no finer view to show.

Mt. LOWE TAVERN and Cottages
Enlarged and Improved

at the terminus of this World-Famous Trip afford a most delightful retreat for a long or short sojourn at reasonable rates

5 Trains Daily at convenient hours - from Main St. Station Los Angeles

$2.50 Round Trip Rate

For information and Reservations apply

Pacific Electric Ry

Information Bureau Phone MEtropolitan 1400-TRinity 3661

HOTEL GREEN

A well ordered Residential and Tourist Hotel of peculiar excellence. Open all year. Moderate rates. Apartments by the month.

The Green Tea Pot

CHARLES B. HERVEY, Proprietor

The
Biltmore
Salon

Los Angeles Biltmore

PAINTINGS
ETCHINGS
BRONZES

California Southland

M. URMY SEARES - - - - - Editor and Publisher
ELLEN LEECH - - - - - - - Assistant Editor

NO. 69, VOL. VII SEPTEMBER, 1925

CONTENTS

	PAGE
YOUTH—From a painting by David Anthony Tauszky...Cover Design
SOUTHLAND CALENDAR—Ellen Leech	4-5-6
POOLS IN OUR GARDENS.....Theresa Homet Patterson	9
COMMUNITY ORGANIZATION.....Edwah Aiken	11
THE PARKS OF SANTA BARBARA.....M. C. W. Nordhoff	12
RECENT BOOKS—REVIEWS.....Louise Morgrage	14
PLAY PRODUCTION.....Robert R. Sharpe	15
A CRITIQUE OF THE OPENING PLAY.....Alexander Inglis	15
SOUTHLAND OPINION	16-17
PEOPLE WE KNOW ON THE FIELDS OF SPORT	18-19
THE ASSISTANCE LEAGUE BULLETIN	20
THE PAGEANT OF DRESS IN PASADENA	21
A HOUSE AT PALOS VERDES.....KIRTLAND CUTTER, ARCHITECT	23
UP THE VALLEY AND DOWN THE COAST	25
EVENING SNOW.....Ernest G. Bishop	25
ARTS AND CRAFTS—AN INTERVIEW.....Marion Hugus Clarke	27
SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA CHAPTER A. I. A.	28
ARCHITECTURAL CLUB OF LOS ANGELES	29

CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND is published monthly at Pasadena, Cal.

Copyrighted, 1925, by M. Urmy Sears

Subscription price $2.50 per year, $1.25 one half year

ADVERTISING

CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND, PASADENA, CALIFORNIA

Mrs. Don Sebastian, 15 Humphrey Rd. Montecito, Assistant to the Publisher, and Representative in Santa Barbara

Robert Ames Winthrop, Pasadena, Advertising Counselor and Director of Display Advertising

Advertisers unaccustomed to furnishing national advertising copy to quality magazines may call Fair Oaks 7034 for assistance During Press Week, 24th to 30th, call TRinity 1501

The Los Angeles
Elizabeth Arden Salon
with
J. W. Robinson Co.

UNDER the direct management of Miss Arden and her New York staff, and offering the same specialized treatments which have made Miss Arden's other salons internationally known.

Round the World Cruises $1500 and up

Mediterranean Cruises $900 and up

Agency for all tours and cruises. Let us arrange your reservations.

C. J. JONES STEAMSHIP AGENCY
294 East Colorado St., Pasadena
Phone Fair Oaks 8026

Patio in the house of Harold Waldmann

MARGARET CRAIG
ARCHITECTURAL PHOTOGRAPHY
Portraits by Appointment

Official Photographer for California Southland

3223 W. Sixth Street
Telephone WAsh. 1653 Los Angeles

A Twentieth Century Rare Edition.

DAWSON'S
"THE BIRDS OF CALIFORNIA"

Complete in four volumes.

De luxe format priced $225.00 to $500.00

Smaller formats priced $45.00 to $110.00

SOUTH MOULTON COMPANY
301 Bank of Italy Bldg.
Los Angeles - California
VAndike 4078

La Solana

A quiet, well-appointed small hotel on the West Side near Orange Grove Avenue.
Each menu is carefully planned and prepared every day.

Grand Ave. and Lockhaven St. Pasadena

CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND
AN ILLUSTRATED MAGAZINE OF NATIONAL INTEREST

GARDEN POOLS IN CALIFORNIA

By THERESA HOMET PATTERSON

THE VOICE OF THE STREAM CALLS THROUGH THE SHRUBBERY. THE SEVERANCE GARDEN—PASADENA. PAUL THIENE, LANDSCAPE ARCHITECT.

SOME stepping stones through the shrubbery led me to a sloping lawn with oak trees glorified by the light of a nearing sunset—the magic hour for the Grosbeak's song. The thicket vibrated with the trill of the spurred Towhees, one call answering another like an echo. The very shape of the lawn invited us to go down to the stream which idled along its rocky way at the foot of the hill to the pool. A true stream? Well, there apparently was the spring in the bank as its source! The path wound through bamboo and tropical growth as impenetrable as a jungle. On the opposite bank tree ferns spread their lacey umbrellas. Everytime "jungle" was mentioned the man from Tennessee corrected us saying "cane-brake" and told us how, when he was little, their ox team got stuck in a cane-brake and they had to stay over night, how the ca-plunk of the frog located water for the oxen to drink and how the wolves howled! Some frogs in the pond made it very realistic but the gentle little song sparrow allayed our fears. Gold fish jumped and dragon flies shot to the right and to the left for bugs and mosquitos. We applauded these hunstmen and approved the new name of mosquito hawk. Long grasses and small ferns grew between the rocks and trailed their tender green in the pool; climbing roses, honeysuckle and jasmine wove themselves into the thicket and lent fragrance and feathery softness. Funny little water bugs zigzagged their boats about never knowing where they wanted to go. A Japanese elm looked much like a green waterfall, papyrus was growing on a wee island, and a crocodile basking on one of the rocks would not have been surprising. A bridge sends one back to another walk between green walls to the conventional pool in its classic setting which, with the house, was designed by Mr. Reginald Johnson. The long corridors with leafy walls and flower bordered carpets and rose rooms are not less stately than the pillars and loggia which surround three sides of the pool. Opposite the loggia and high above the pool at the fountain end is a paved court with seats. On the right the hedges give way for the gently rolling lawn broken by four tiers of large stones, each marginal with green. Fancy saw a wedding party descending these steps and there was the reflection in the pool! This garden by Paul Thiene is a genuine work of art.

From the paved court a lawn sweeps back to the main entrance like the nave of a great cathedral crossed by its transept. I was loitering, dreaming of the beauty and enjoying the vesper music when the sprinkling system was turned on. Being a warm night a drenching was not uncomfortable, but rather disastrous to clothes.

How sweetly on the woodgirt town
The mellow light of sun-set shone.
Each small, bright lake, whose waters still
Mirror the forest and the hill,
Reflected from his waveless breast
The beauty of a cloudless west,
Glorious as if a glimpse were given
Within the western gates of heaven,
Left, by the spirit of the star
Of sunset's holy hour, ajar."
—Whittier.

No southern California garden is old in the sense that Italian or even eastern ones are. The Watson garden is spoken of as an old garden and has every earmark of age in its towering trees, sturdy box hedges, ivy, and forest of shrubbery. Its pergolas and garden houses are drowned by a flood of vines and two gardeners can not stem the tide of growth. No one past the hey-day of youth can expect to see a garden reach maturity in the East. It is not one of the least of California's joys that growth is so rapid one may enjoy the fruit of his labor. Indeed the trouble is in too rapid growth. Trimming comes soon and constantly—such reckless and wanton cutting away is necessary. Even with experience one's imagination cannot realize that baby shrubs and trees spring into grownups over night; and about three are planted where only one has room to round out. It is so hard to take out a shrub or cut a tree, for every one takes root not only in the ground but in the heart of the true garden lover. The Japanese have the art of dwarfing by pruning so that their miniature landscapes do not appear to change. A plum tree a foot high may be years old and show its age in every way except size. So exact is their science of gardening that a stone may be brought from great distance as one would hunt for a word to fit into a poem.

THE GARDEN ABOVE THE ARROYO A BARE HILLSIDE TWENTY YEARS AGO NOW A MASS OF SHRUBS AND TOWERING TREES. RESIDENCE OF MRS. PLINY WATSON, PASADENA

Twenty years ago one would have found a cow pasturing in a corner of the Watson place and two horses stamping in the stables impatient for the calling hour when they might in creaking harness prance up and down the village avenue. A part of what was then a large vegetable garden is kept for such things as need to lose no time between the picking and the pot. Corn with its long rustling leaves, and peas with delicate tendrils and white flowers are truly decorative and whet one's appetite at the same time. If avacadoes are recommended as serving a double purpose why not some of our vegetables—parsley, purple cabbage, tomatoes, Jack's beanpole hung with old ivory pods, and beruffled lettuce. The pumpkin may be a large fruit for a genteel garden but it is matchless for color in an October cornfield. But most of the old garden and the pasture are given over to flowers and what a revel of color and sunshine. From this the box-bordered walks lead up into the deep shadows of evergreens. This is an ideal summer garden, for even at noontime its cool looking paths would lure one on to the pool which nature is ever trying to reclaim. Japanese iris and water-lilies are as much at home as if all their ancestors had lived there. Ferns and umbrella plants shade along the edge keeping close to the box border. Ivy has curtained the trees for a background.

"And I peered through a vista of leaning trees
"Dressed with long tangles of vines

* * *

"And there like a dream in a swoon, I swear
"I saw Pan lying—his limbs in the dew
"And the shade, and his face in the dazzle and glare
"Of the glad sunshine; while everywhere
"Over, across, and around him blew
"Filmy dragon flies hither and there,
"And little white butterflies, two and two,
"In eddies of odorous air."

THIS FOUNTAIN POOL IN THE CALIFORNIA GARDEN AT RANCHO BELLA VISTA, SARATAGO, HAS BEEN THE JOY OF SEVERAL GENERATIONS OF CHILDREN. ABOVE IT IS ONE OF THE MOST BEAUTIFUL OF CALIFORNIA'S MODERN HOUSES ON THE SITE OF THE OLD RANCH HOUSE BELONGING TO THE FAMILY OF CHARLES D. BLANEY. ON THE HIGH GROUND OF THE LLANO DE LOS ROBLES DEL PUERTO DE SAN FRANCISCO (THE SANTA CLARA VALLEY) THIS DELIGHTFUL ESTATE OF MRS. CHARLES D. BLANEY IS THE HISTORIC ARROYO DE SAN JOSE CUPERTINO, WHERE ANZA CAMPED IN 1776.

A GARDEN BY KATHRYN BASHFORD, LANDSCAPE ARCHITECT, PLANNED FOR MRS. HARRY GRAY, PASADENA. REGINALD JOHNSON, ARCHITECT. BETWEEN THE HOUSE AND THE STREET IS A MASS OF SHELTERING SHRUBS. BEHIND A GARDEN GATE IS THIS SECLUDED RETREAT. A FOUNTAIN—MAUD DAGGETT'S FAMOUS "GOOSE-GIRL"—ADORNS THE SOUTH GARDEN WALL AND LARGE MASSES OF BAMBOO, SHRUBS AND EVEN TRANSPLANTED TREES, MAKE A BACKGROUND FOR ANNUALS. THIS SUCCESSFUL PHOTOGRAPH WAS TAKEN BY ALBERT HILLER, PHOTOGRAPHER, BY PLACING HIS CAMERA VERY NEAR THE GROUND.

COMMUNITY ORGANIZATION---THE ORDER OF THE DAY

A SUMMARY: By EDNAH AIKEN
On Visiting the Pasadena Playhouse

WHETHER we accept the Nazarene as a farseeing sociologist, or inspired savior, our social ethics have not yet outrun his teachings. We are still laboring with the group idea, with the conception of man as a part of a larger organism whose health depends on the health and integrity of the human unit.

Sociologically speaking, the Group has become recognizable; we are even said to be overorganized. As someone has put it, our towns are full of skidding circles. Biologically, it is becoming comprehensible even to the man on the street. Thanks to the analogy furnished him by the electron, he can conceive of himself, without much mental strain, as a more or less freely moving part of a larger, socialized organism. The lesson of the past two generations was to teach man, and more especially the home escaping woman, to function in those groups, or circles. The lesson of this generation is to teach the skidding circles themselves to co-operate as do the wheels of a clock. The plan is called, technically, community organization.

Should the United States become more government ridden, or should it be jolted towards a finer spiritual consciousness enabling its citizens to get along with less governmental toggery, less taboos, it seems inevitable that our clumsy, overgrown populations must be prepared to meet the dangers of civic and national overcentralization by some such parallel, unifying program.

EL EN CANTO, SANTA BARBARA

AUTHOR OF: THE RIVER,
IF TODAY BE SWEET, and other novels

Jefferson, seized by the same paralyzing fear which made Tennyson see the hungry peoples as a panther drawing nigher talked yearningly of his civic hundreds. Woodrow Wilson, had the war not engulfed him, would have made the school center his distinguishing experiment. The idea, detested by politicians, has been sent again to the catacombs of unlabeled obscurity. To keep it alive, understood by its apostles, and yet protected from its enemies, is a problem of this decade.

Fortunately there is scarcely a community which does not harbor some pale Cassandra or lean John the Baptist preaching the civic doctrine of the golden rule made practical and specific. New York, Rochester, have made glorious experiments, and have set signposts of unsafe thoroughfares. Cincinnati has achieved her Social Units. All progressive towns hold the germ of community organization in some apparently unrelated social activity. Palo Alto has its community house as the mainspring of its social-civic life. Santa Barbara has as its heart the finely conceived community Arts. Pasadena has its Community Playhouse. No city can boast of more splendidly planned social centers than San Francisco, and Los Angeles and Oakland are on the way. But because the label is dangerous, many members who enjoy the benefits and privileges of these groups might be surprised to learn that they are furthering a program for a New State.

THE VALUE OF A COMMUNITY ARTS ASSOCIATION

THE BANDSTAND, CENTER OF MANY ACTIVITIES IN ALAMEDA PARK.

TROPICAL GROUP PLANTING, ALAMEDA PARK, SANTA BARBARA.

SANTA BARBARA, in the past two months, has gained a new knowledge and appreciation of its parks. The days following upon the earthquake saw them in use, not only as a refuge, but as the center of the town's life—canteens, hospitals, banking and business houses even, for one day, a newspaper was set up in the city Plaza. In the Alameda Plaza many people were allowed to cook their meals and to sleep; public-spirited men and women arranged for Saturday afternoon concerts, and the churches held union services there. In Oak Park and the Plaza del Mar tennis tournaments, games and music were kept up. Altogether, many children owe what sense they had of safety and normal pleasure in those days to the fine co-operation of the community, and to the existence of parks.

Over a hundred acres of land has been either donated or otherwise acquired by the city for its recreation grounds. Distributed as the parks are, each quarter of the city has its open space for turf, trees and flowers; each park has also its especial character and uses.

To the West, 17 acres bordering upon Mission Creek have been made a center for picnicking and games. There are few restrictions in Oak Park; save for lawns, the country has been left to itself. Fine old oak trees and sycamores shade the play-ground, the cement tenis courts, the benches and tables for picnickers. Special arrangements have been made for barbecues, and Oak Park is rarely without its guests. The Mesa forms a natural boundary to the West; to the East shrubs border and protect the park from the street.

Just above the business district, in the center of town, is Santa Barbara's oldest park, the Alameda. Many years ago newcomers from Spain set aside the land of which this ten acres is a part, and the care and thought of succeeding generations have made it of interest to horticulturists. Planted there are fine specimines of the Montezuma Cypress—a Mexican species reported to antedate anything on the continent; the Hawaiian koa tree; kawrie pines from New Zealand, and the Central American wine palm, among other tropical trees. There, also, the King and Queen of Belgium planted 3 redwoods as a memorial of their stay in Santa Barbara. The park has been laid out in such a way as to frame and give full value to the trees; on its thick turf the children hold their May-pole and Folk dancing—and since the earthquake Mr. Clerbois conducts well-attended community "sings."

Vera Cruz Plaza is a blessing to East Santa Barbara—at noon the trees offer shade for the eating of lunches and rest; at night the Mexicans sometimes meet there for their "sings." To hear them is a privilege, and to realize Mexico's rare instinct for music.

Along the East Boulevard the city has acquired two miles of land from Salt Pond—the Bird Refuge—to Santa Barbara street. Bonds for its development cannot now be issued, but when this becomes possible the highway will be moved back, an esplanade laid down, and the planting for two miles of ocean park in order. Mr. David Gray has promised the city a public bath-house and play-house there.

The Plaza del Mar at the Boulevard's West end, contains tennis courts, a swimming bath is nearby, and the baseball field of Pershing Park adjoins the Plaza. Mr. Ledbetter has given the city an additional 15 acres in this district which will one day be filled in and used, in part, for new tennis courts.

The recently acquired Hillside parks offer a splendid view of the coast and islands. The numbers of people who came here for the view resulted in the building of a "Look-out," off the road, and some decrease in danger to Riviera traffic. In the future when Santa Barbara has recovered from her disaster, unusual conditions will make this land, sloping from the State College and El Encanto Hotel to the residences below, a center for exotics.

The Park Commissioners hope also, with time, to make the Plaza de la Guerra a typical Spanish plaza paved with flagstones and bright with flowers and fountain. The moving of the town hall to one side of the square makes such a plan feasible. It is here that one gets a sense of what the city with courage and patience, may become; within these few blocks, overlooked by the Lobero Theatre, beauty and peace have survived an earthquake.

Altogether, Santa Barbara owes much to its benefactors and to park commissioners of the past—all the more to Winsor Soule, president of the present board; Ralph T. Stevens, Fred D. Jackson, F. A. Wright and Mrs. George A. White, the secretary. M. C. NORDHOFF.

ONE OF THE STREET DANCES IN FRONT OF ALAMEDA PARK SANTA BARBARA, CALIFORNIA. THESE DANCES, SPONSORED BY THE COMMUNITY ARTS ASSOCIATION, WERE GIVEN WEEKLY DURING THE PERIOD FOLLOWING THE EARTHQUAKE. OVER TWO THOUSAND ATTENDED EACH WEEK

IN AN EMERGENCY—SANTA BARBARA, CALIFORNIA

THE SURVEY, which has recently taken up several interesting California enterprises, speaks of our Community Arts Association of Santa Barbara as "a society of unusual scope and great influence which has coordinated cultural activities in that city, providing a federation through which plans can be effectively promulgated in this period of regeneration." It publishes, also, in its issue of August first "Santa Barbara Resurgent," by Pearl Chase, Secretary of the Community Arts Association, to whose competent direction and strong stand among her fellow citizens "in sickness or in health" is due much of the "great influence" and all embracing efficiency of the work of the community of Santa Barbara.

SYCAMORES IN OAK PARK, SANTA BARBARA. THIS TREE IS BELOVED BY CALIFORNIA'S ARTISTS

That Santa Barbara had in times of peace prepared for emergencies is shown nowhere better than in this notably well written account of what happened on June 29, at 6:44 a. m. and in the hours immediately following. Surely, co-operation has proved its vital place in a democracy; and Santa Barbara leads the way in organized community work.

Those who have never experienced an earthquake may well be grateful to Santa Barbara for this noble example of how to be prepared and how to act.

San Francisco's citizens were brought very close together by the fire which drove them out to the cemetaries for shelter; but San Francisco was not prepared, by years of co-operation, to carry a united front after the fire. Santa Barbara, so closely in touch with San Francisco that many of her people experienced both earthquakes, knew how to act and acted quickly; but her success in carrying out the unique plan of rebuilding in pure California style is possible only because the city itself was already convinced as to the necessity of a renaissance and had made great strides toward a plan into which this rebuilding in the original Santa Barbara style fits.

The work of the Plans and Planting section of the Community Arts Association under the inspiration of Mr. Hoffmann's broad vision and comprehensive organizing powers, has prepared the people to work as a community rather than as individuals; as the Survey says, "has stirred the inhabitants to rebuild with integrity and beauty." M. U. S.

THE BEACH BELOW MONTECITO, CALIFORNIA, HAS BEEN A GREAT SOURCE OF RELAXATION FOR THE PEOPLE WHO LIVE NEARBY AND FOR THE HUNDREDS WHO HAVE SPENT THE SUMMER THERE. FROM SAN FRANCISCO COME MANY CALIFORNIANS WHO GREW UP IN SANTA BARBARA COUNTY AND WHO ARE NOW LIVING IN THE CITY. OTHERS, FROM THE SOUTHLAND HAVE LEARNED THE SHIBBOLETH AND MEET HERE THEIR FRIENDS FROM OLDER SECTIONS OF CALIFORNIA. ON THE POINT AMONG THE TREES THE BEACH CLUB HAS BUILT ITS CLUB HOUSE AND HERE OPENED ITS HOSPITABLE OUT-DOOR DINING-ROOM TO MEMBERS OF THE MONTECITO COUNTRY CLUB WHILE THAT CLUB HOUSE WAS TEMPORARILY CLOSED.

RECENT BOOKS—REVIEWS

By LOUISE MORGRAGE

MAY FAIR

By MICHAEL ARLEN, George H. Doran Company

A year ago perhaps, who had heard of Michael Arlen? Now who has not? Publicity will of course accomplish wonders, especially since the war, when the world and his wife learned exactly how to do it, but it will not keep people continually talking. So we decided to investigate, and began on "The Green Hat." Now this proved to be for us a strange region in the literary world, and right in the middle we lost our way in what seemed like a hot moist greenish and shimmering miasma. That hat of course was responsible. Fortunately we extricated ourselves before our person got contaminated. And still the talk went on. Well we simply must go exploring again, so we plunged, with serious purpose, this time into "May Fair," determined to find that charm or perish.

We found it. First we must execute a solemn duty and advise no one whose principles are not glove-fitting to even think of entering this demoralizing domain. Mr. Arlen, being apparently a youthful cynic, who was born with his wisdom teeth all cut, is but a questionable guide for the weak or feeble-minded. He seems to regard the world with an amused and supercilious condescension, having absolutely no faith in its sincerity, idealism or morality. In short he sees every one as a sinner, and considers it his mission to show the individual how to commit his little pecadillos in a graceful manner. To this end he gives as examples, members of England's upper crust, executing their sinful acts, with a sprightly affability, that well might be a lesson to us all. Whoever heeds this may do so with the comforting assurance, that he is following in the steps of rank and fashion.

We trust by now the would-be reader has received sufficient warning concerning the risk he runs in deciding to read these sparkling tales. We advise him then, to lay aside his principles in some place safe but also convenient, since he is likely at any moment to need them in a hurry. Before him lies unalloyed enjoyment of wit unparalled; of neatly turned and twisted diverting phrases; of a marvelous dexterity in the use of words, with every shade of meaning allowed them by scholarly lexicographers, and then some; in short he is in for some hours of chortling glee. And while revelling in this orgy of advice, we would like to pass some on to Michael Arlen; to keep his head; not to lose his wits; and to do more of these charming people for our blissful contemplation, should we ever commit the social error of indulging in the vulgar feeling of remorse.

MICHAEL ARLEN, AUTHOR OF MAY FAIR. COURTESY OF GEORGE H. DORAN COMPANY

SEDUCERS IN ECUADOR

By V. SACKVILLE-WEST, George H. Doran Company

However misleading at first, this title may appear to the casual reader, it is perfectly consistent with the theme of a decidedly unusual flight of fancy. Certainly the characters are anything but seducers, and as the scenes are laid in Egypt, on a yacht in the Mediterranean, and finally in London, we do not advise people desiring information on Ecuador, to seek it within the covers of this book. The inscrutability of fate links this whimsical title to the events in this capricious tale, exactly as in life, unprecedented course of conduct on the part of an individual, puzzling both to himself and his associates may be traced, did he but know it, often through devious ways, to a blind force set in motion in a far distant spot. Awareness of such freakish irony displayed by fate makes the significance of this slender volume.

The innovation of foretelling at the beginning exactly what happens to the characters at the end, may also appear startling, but it is irrelevant. In fact the substance of the tale, which is suggested rather than related, is like a seed, which may grow to almost any proportion, depending on the fertility of its reception. The author has an efficient literary style, but is unable here at least, to do little more than dally with the tremendous theme, upon which rests the claim of the old Greek dramatists to immortality.

SEIBERT OF THE ISLAND

By GORDON YOUNG, George H. Doran Company

When he first started writing this narrative, the author had considerable trouble with his constructive machinery. But after a period, he got control over its spasmodic motions, and it went to humming in right good earnest. We can almost hear in our fancy its steady rapid throbbing, as we read the tale it spun out of the coarse human material, peculiar to one of the south-sea islands. The result is a fabric of a surprisingly fine texture. Although it is stark undiluted melodrama, it may very well be founded on incidents of actual occurence. The predominent figure of the island planter, has a striking quality of visibility, reminding the reader of some noticeable individual continually encountered in public places, until one comes to know every feature of his outward appearance, while his inner life remains always a baffling mystery.

TEN YEARS AFTER

By PHILIP GIBBS, George H. Doran Company

The original Pandora's box of troubles was as nothing compared with the evils, which the crisis of 1914 loosed upon a world just beginning to pride itself upon accomplishing much in matters of justice and humanity. The resulting calamity found civilization in 1918 very sick indeed, with a complication of ills so inextricably entangled that even could a cure be found for one or several, no appreciable improvement would be likely to follow for the patient. Probably there is no man living who can diagnose correctly this illness in all its ramifications; certainly diplomats, statesmen, politicians and financiers have been busy with nothing else, since the end of the war. The literary output on this critical condition however has been comparatively small, doubtless because writers and students understand the appalling difficulties of undertaking any analysis. But now as time is widening the perspective, the literary tide is beginning to surge and the crest of the wave brings to our attention at least one admirable and extremely valuable book, "Ten Years After," written by Philip Gibbs.

The author of this brief but illuminating summary and discussion of what has happened to civilization in the last decade, is a well known newspaper correspondent. More than that, he has an unusual capacity for keen penetration into matters of vital moment and the power of exercising sane and impartial judgment. Since 1912 he has had remarkable opportunities for observing events that sooner or later will form the subject of volumes of history. In that year he was at the front in the Balkan war; during the Great War he visited all the fronts; since then he has been in many European countries and even several times in America. His wide experience then, has given him every chance to do some independent thinking, making this discussion of conditions, of much value; a value much increased by his lucid and virile prose, as stimulating to the layman's mind as a tonic to his system. At best it is a perplexing subject with many and varied aspects, but the general reader will find worthy of consideration the views of a man, so evidently one who has looked steadily at the matter and seen it as whole as is humanly possible for the individual mind.

GORDON YOUNG, AUTHOR OF SEIBERT OF THE ISLAND. COURTESY OF GEORGE H. DORAN COMPANY

A GYPSY OF THE HORN

By REX CLEMENTS, Houghton Mifflin Company

One of the anomalies of literature is the failure of one man to make a record of daily life, a pleasure to read, while another succeeds in coloring it with an appealing charm. Of course as everybody knows, success or failure depends on the whim of the particular Muse whose business it is to attend to such matters. Certainly no one can be expected to accomplish much with this lady frowning disapproval at his elbow. But she apparently had nothing but smiles for the author of this English rival of our American classic, "Two Years Before the Mast," while he was writing "A Gypsy of the Horn," a book so widely appreciated in England, that it is now in its second edition. Its subject is a graphic description of a long voyage in a windjammer, taken twenty years ago, by the writer, then a sailor's apprentice literally learning the ropes. Out of no material other than the sea and sky, and the mysterious ways of a sailing ship, by means of a style most simple, unaffected and unpretentious, he has traced for us a pathway of silvery brightness, through the trackless waters, from England to Australia, by way of Good Hope, and thence across the Pacific to Peru, and home again around the Horn. A very leisurely recital, it is still not monotonous, and never ceases to hold the reader's attention from beginning to end.

The entertaining quality of this narrative does not depend on its human interest, nor its exciting experiences, although naturally there is included a little of both. A really splendid piece of vivid narration, describes the terrific struggle which took place below the Horn, when old Father Neptune decided to add the Arethusa to his trophies at the bottom of this lonely and tempestuous sea. Although all his minions rushed to aid him, he lost out, but it was a thrilling battle.

(Continued on Page 24)

PASADENA COMMUNITY PLAYHOUSE IN ACTION

SET AND CAST FOR "THE GREEN GODDESS." POSED BY GILMOR BROWN ANR HIS CAST IN THE NEW COMMUNITY PLAYHOUSE, PASADENA

PLAY PRODUCTION

By Robert R. Sharpe, Art Director of Pasadena Playhouse

SETS BY ROBERT R. SHARPE
PHOTO GRAPHS BY MARGARET CRAIG
COSTUMES BY MRS DAVID BLANKENHORN

AFTER the stage designer has conceived the settings, the work of making the actual scenes really begins. How little does the public realize the stupendous amount of thought, emotional force, and physical labor that contributes to the creation of beautiful stage pictures.

Stage sets must have the double virtue of visually aiding the plot and underlying meaning of a play, and of providing a charming background for the actors. Therein lies the basic motive of scenery: it must always remain a background, no matter how important its symbolical influence upon the play. Subtlety and subordination are essential.

Then the designs must be made practical, so that the carpenter, painter, and electrician can adapt them to the actual working limitations of the stage. The scenery must at no time impede the action; the lights must be revealing as well as beautiful in effect; the costumes, furnishings, and sets must harmonize.

Take for example, the item of furniture: here the Pasadenans prove their true Community spirit. Unless the play be bizzare—in which case we must rent our things from a property-firm in Los Angeles—the local stores and shops are wonderfully helpful. From

THE FAIRYLAND OF PIER GYNT

Cheesewright's we get lovely hangings, and stunning modern furniture: from Serendipity fine antiques; Miss Nicholson and Mr. Bentz lend us beautiful Chinese objects; Ely gives us exquisite ornaments; Nash and Model Grocery help us with household goods. Sometimes a kindly shop in Los Angeles, honoring our prestige, will contribute props—otherwise almost impossible to obtain because of their expense; such an one is Meyer Di-Segni. And then, often, people lend us things from their very homes, so anxious are they that our productions be in perfect taste.

IN "THE SHOW SHOP," the farcical satire which James Forbes has written around the professional stage, Pasadena Community Players have selected a production which should start the local playhouse off on the most successful season in its history. As a play for such a purpose, "The Show Shop" is singularly well chosen. It is clever, bright, in places even brilliant; it is overflowing with wit, with humor; it vibrates with kindly qualities of human interest and it is pregnant with a subtle satire, incisive yet delicious.

"The Show Shop" does for the professional theatre what "The Torch-bearers" did for the little theatre. It reveals the actor's life in all its raw ramifications and it satirizes the professional producer, the professional play and the playgoer as well. The author, in mocking

(Continued on Page 18)

COMMUNITY PLAYERS OF PASADENA IN "THE LADY OF THE LAMP." SET BY ROBERT SHARPE, COSTUMES BY MRS. DAVID BLANKENHORN AND STAFF.

SOUTHLAND

The Community Playhouse is a Social Laboratory

THE attitude of those who affiliate with the Playhouse Movement must be of unselfishness in the ultimate sense—this in itself is a great attainment. The theory of the Playhouse is that the work is not to glorify or advertise the individual who takes part, but that he who takes a part, great or small, is a useful unit in a great social scheme. Idea of individual material compensation, direct or indirect, is definitely impossible; the actors, though occasionally professional, are when engaged in Community Playhouse work as actors receiving no compensation. Directors on the Board of the corporation regardless of the burden an dresponsibilty of their duty receive no compensation, direct or indirect, or patronage, or tickets, or concessions of any sort, manner or form. Whatever they do is for the community utterly and entirely and without equivocation.

The staff in the sense of the producing head, the stage crew and the business division are on living salaries and devote their full time to their duties even as teachers and preachers do to theirs. But lest the institution might be criticized for the size of the staff used to man this machinery, it might be well to remember that the thousand and one details of producing a play have to be consummated by persons who are busy business people at work in the daytime and who can rehearse only in the evenings and all rehearsals and preparations of the cast must be done in after-work hours, in evenings and under great pressure by relatively small group of professional actors working days, as well as evenings, might do much work around a theatre and learn parts and rehearse in the daytime as well. In other words it is relatively more expensive to train a novice cast who are working free than a paid professional cast who may more or less train and assist one another.

The Playhouse is unique among other institutions, because it frankly makes an appeal to all normal men and women. Even at the risk of repetition the writer again urges that the amusement and drama presented at the Playhouse is but a manifestation of the spirit that has wrought the conception known as the Community Playhouse Movement, and has kept its home fires burning in Pasadena brighter year after year. We would not pretend that it is the only community institution, because it is not. Their variety is legion in every highly organized city; nor shall we contend it is necessarily the most important community instiution, for many men have many minds and one's own personal needs may color their judgment on the relative importance of those particular institutions that meet their needs. The general proposition that the writer stands for is this however, that the Playhouse, or what it stands for, is an institution of instituions in the growth and cultivation of pure community spirit. The suggestion may be at least tentatively advanced that the good fortune and progress of such a peculiar thing as the Playhouse Movement in a community may be a very fair test of the real vitality of communal spirt without which all the general so called community institutions must languish.

If a function is to be retained it must be exercised and if a community is to retain a normal, wholesome brand of genuine community spirit, not just promotion or politics or wheels within wheels, but real intelligent and discriminating devotion to the perfection of the human type in a given community—pure, unselfish community spirit must be studied and its laws discovered and then observed. The Playhouse as it stands to-day, therefore, is a manifestation of the idea of a laboratory for the study of the laws of the development of community spirit.

From what has been suggested in the foregoing paragraphs the reader may be justified in inferring that the Community Playhouse as it stands organized and housed in Pasadena did not spring fully panoplied from Minerva's brow. It has been a result both of thought and experiment. One must arrive at a common meeting ground for all humanity. In the presence of political upheaval economists are always much concerned by the tendency of the "middle class" to be ground between the upper and the lower.

We deplore this because it is a fact that what they call middle class always represents the vital force of society and its promise for the present and immediate future. Their upper and lower classes both emerge without much damage —the upper class because of its resources—the lower because it has little to lose and also because so much attention to its assistance is rendered by society. The middle class though greater in number is unstable in the presence of great social or economic changes. So, often even when society is considered from an American basis,there is an analogy to the foregoing in that the well-to-do have the resources with which to improve their environment at will and society pours out its resources to countless institutions of a eleemosynary nature to assist and subsidize those who are weak.

Every community is full of institutions and organizations engaged in advancing one particular program or idea to meet some special need. There are those to promote trade, those to alleviate suffering, to help the weak or restrain the over strong. There are the churches, the clubs and the lodges, but the Playhouse is the monument particularly for normal average Americans who in life are neither especially strong nor especially weak, neither exalted nor oppressed, and yet feel an instinct for self expression and the joy of living and it is of such as these that the true community Playhouse Movement must be made. If it succeeds all other legitimate business in the program of other community institutions will be advanced with a renewed vitality. Thus we may hope to learn how to live together and the art of living together is the sum of civilization.

J. W. Morin.

Share With Santa Barbara

THE appeal which the State Chamber of Commerce has sent out to every citizen of California should be answered so spontaneously that there will appear no question of our ability to take care of our own.

All the world is glad to respond in cash to San Barbara's dire need and then to come out to the coast to see what was done with it when San Barbara arises. Just now Santa Barbara is prostrate and the Chamber of Commerce have undertaken to rise the one million one hundred thousand needed. It must be raised rapidly if we are to save our own reputation and Santa Barbara's life as a community.

$15,000,000 out of an assessed valuation of $30,000,000 is the extent of the damage done to Santa Barbara by the recent earthquake. Business buildings, hotels, homes, hospitals, orphanages, schools, churches, charitable institutions, Library, Court House, Jail, streets, highways, water and sewer systems were destroyed or seriously wrecked.

Of this huge sum Santa Barbara business men and citizens, by heroic effort through years of economy, will carry $13,900,000.

$1,100,000 must be secured from sources outside of Santa Barbara in order that the citizens of that city may have a "fighting chance" to come back. Without this aid it becomes a crushing load.

The money will be spent in reconstruction and repairs to hospitals, orphanages, charitable organizations, emergency health and sanitation work, and for temporary schools.

Santa Barbara, in the past three years, has financed a program of civic betterment including schools, streets, water and sewers, to the legal limit for bonded indebtedness. Even if it legally could be done, the effect of double or excessive taxation on the affairs of men now in business, or those who might want to start in business in the future, is so apparent that it needs only to be stated.

In appreciation of Santa Barbara's true California spirit;

In thanksgiving that your loved ones, and you, were spared the paralyzing terror of that hour when Santa Barbara crumbled;—

Share with Santa Barbara by making out a generous check payable to the order of the Santa Barbara Relief.

OPINION

The Greatest Law

ON Sunday morning, May 31, Dr. Harry Emerson Fosdick preached his first sermon as pastor elect of the Park Avenue Baptist Church in New York.

This sermon had been preceded by a meeting of the members of the church on May 22nd at which it had been voted to extend a call to Dr. Fosdick to become pastor of the church.

Irrespective of what this may mean in denominational circles the kernel of this sermon is epoch making and we present its main argument as a great, clear, electric light shining "in a naughty world."

But this morning, above all, I wished to speak about something that would illumine and exalt the kind of adventure that we are about to undertake in this church. From no better place could we start than from the passage which Dr. Woelfkin read for the Scripture Lesson (Mark 12:13-17, 28-34). The scribes had gathered around Jesus to try Him. They had thought of all the teasing questions they could lay their minds to. This one was ready with a query about the tax; another asked about the Sabbath law; that one proposed a problem about circumcision; that one enquired about clean and unclean foods. They were heckling Jesus about religion, and one of them finally asked what the greatest law was anyway. Then the Master saw His chance. Then He turned on them and into the triviality of their questioning He projected a few great words that the world never has been able to forget: "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind, and with all thy strength. . . . Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." And Mark's Gospel tells us, "No man after that durst ask Him any qeustion."

Why not? Why did the carping questions cease? Why did that next interrogation about some detail of the ritual law die on the questioner's lips, ashamed of its own utterance? Does not the explanation lie here?—Jesus had led them when they were least expecting it into the presence of something in religion so great that for the time being their querulous questions died out. They supposed they had been talking about religion. Then Jesus talked about it—Love God with all your heart; love your neighbor as yourself—and in spite of their littleness they knew that that really was religion.

You see the theme of this first sermon that I preach as your minister elect. That thing is always happening to religion which happened to it in Jesus' day. It runs out from its main propositions and becoms absorbed in its corollaries. It entangles itself in trivialities. It starts with the weightier matters of the law, justice, mercy, faithfulness, but it ends by tithing mint, anise, and cummin. And then it has to be reformed. Only, a vital reformation is not well done by controversy. You cannot get at it negatively. The Master's way is the only constructive solution—lead men positively into the presence of something in religion so great, so redeeming, so beautiful, that central things become central.

This morning I wanted to talk with you about that method of meeting a disturbed and confusing religious situation.

For I cannot preach to you today merely a formal sermon. Under most extraordinary circumstances you have called me to be your pastor. I marvel at you. The sacrifice which you are making, both in substance and in sentiment, is very great. It did not seriously occur to me at first that you would actually do it. Now that you have done it you have done a courageous and sacrificial thing. As a great religious journal said about us this last week, this is a "thrilling adventure" which we are undertaking here.

But what is it an adventure after? What are we trying to do? Some will describe it in negative terms: we are against this or we do not believe in that. That, however, is surely an utter misrepresentation of our spirit and this morning I wanted to say that, as I see it, we are endeavoring to do what the Master did in this passage—to exalt the central and spiritual elements in Christianity, to make great things great and small things small, and to make this so explicit in the organization of our church that nobody can mistake our sincerity in meaning it. We want to say to this city that just one thing is central in Christianity—discipleship to Jesus—and that anybody who has that spiritual root of the matter sincerely in him ought to be welcome on equal terms with everybody else in the Church of Christ.

* * *

You cannot fit Jesus into the idea of an exclusive church where people are kept out on non-spiritual grounds. He will not stay there. You cannot make Him any sectarian thing under heaven. And this is the reason: He always was thinking about the one who had been left out. You get ninety-nine sheep all safe in the fold and evrybody else perfectly satisfied, only He is not satisfied. He said Himself He could not keep His mind at home from the one who had been left out. He did not want anybody left out. He lamented it even when He left Himself out. He wanted everybody included.

* * *

What are the requirements if this venture of ours is to be a success? You can tell the quality of any adventure by the things in us which it requires. And the requirements of our new endeavor are very noble. First, it demands a real care about people. We must get the Master's balance between people and institutions when He said, "The sabbath was made for man, and not man for the sabbath." There are many people who need the kind of church we plan because they really are much more religious than they think they are. Frequently young men come to me saying, for example, "I do not believe in God."

"Tell me," I say, "the kind of God whom you do not believe in." Then they describe the God in whom they have lost faith. Nine times out of ten I answer, "I do not believe in that God, either, whom you describe. Let us start as atheists together with reference to such a God and then see what we can find to believe in. Do you really think that dynamic dirt going it blind is an adequate explanation of this vast and varied universe and of us within it, and that mothers and music and the laughter of children at play are nothing but the sublimated consequence of the fortuitous concourse of eighty-odd chemical elements?" Almost always the youth refuses to acknowledge any such blank and barren materialism. Upon which I say. "Then you are a flat failure as an athcist. You are an absolute and complete failure as an atheist. You really do believe in some kind of God," and after we are through such youths often go out surprised to discover that they are not nearly so irreligious as they thought they were, that they had been deceived as to what religion really is, that churches which put non-spiritual things in the show window have misled them as to what the spiritual stock was which they carried on their shelves. There are so many in this situation—like that boy who came to me a few weeks ago, saying pugnaciously, "I do not believe in the divinity of Jesus," and went out, an hour afterward, saying, "My, if that is what you mean, I believe in the divinity of Jesus with all my heart."

* * *

My friends, we cannot say it to ourselves too often that Christianity is a personal experience. One evening in the West Point delegation at the Northfield Student Conference, conversation fell on serious lines and one of the men threw this question into the circle: "What is Christianity, anyway?" After a long pause one of the cadets gave this answer: "Oscar Westover." Exactly! I do not know who he was. May God have kept him through these terrific years that have befallen since. Only, he was one of the cadets living a kind of life so that when the boys thought of Christianity they defined it in terms of him. That is the only way you ever can define it. It is "Oscar Westover." It is not a creed, nor an organization, nor a ritual. These are important, but they are secondary. They are the leaves; they are not the roots. They are the wires; they are not the message. The thing itself is life: it is "Oscar Westover."

What Is Christianity?

What is Christianity? Is it the Nicene Creed? That is a great creed, I think the greatest of all the creeds. But it is not Christianity. What is Christianity? Is it the Catholic Church, or the Episcopal Church, or the Baptist, or the Presbyterian Church? No. These are important. They have made great contributions, but they are secondary. They are not Christianity. What is Christianity? Is it baptism or the Lord's Supper? They are very beautiful symbols and those of us who know them find in them deep significance. But they are not Christianity.

What is Christianity? Christianity is the spirit and quality of life breathed into people from fellowship with Jesus, and the people in whom it is you will find among all creeds and churches . Father Damien, the Catholic, going out to help the lepers and, as Robert Louis Stevenson said, shutting the door of his own sepulchre—that is Christianity. George Fox, the Quaker, proving the reality of the inner light that God had given him by the radiance of his living—that is Christianity. The Protestant missionary, murdered by the Boxers in China, sending back word to his ten year old son that when grown he should go out to China to tell the people who had killed his father about the love of God—that is Christianity. And the folks whom we have known, through whom God hath shined marvelously to make life beautiful—our fathers and mothers and friends—they are Christianity. When you are all through discussing the formal and elaborate things that are needed for the improvement of the church, this is what the church needs most of all: more real Christians, to whom Christianity is keeping fellowship with the Master and learning how to live.

May God bless you in this adventure which we have undertaken. For a long while I have been looking forward to the year of sabbatic leave and rest that awaits me. For the first time now, I am almost sorry that I am going to take it. I know that I shall be tugging at the leash before I get back. I should like to begin at once upon this enterprise that is so full of promise and that is certain to enlist the interest and devotion of many forward-looking men and women. In the meantime let us pray for one another that God may watch over us all, keep our judgments sound, keep our heads level, keep our hearts sweet.

Out of the confusion of present day controversy and unbelief, comes this clear, ringing statement of what religion means to life. "And I, if I be lifted up will draw all men to me," said Jesus. Happy the church and happy the people whose leader can thus lift up the Christ before the world.

M. U. S.

ON THE GAY FIELD OF SPORTS---EAST AND WEST

CALIFORNIA HAS MANY SILVER STRANDS THAT OFFER INVITATIONS TO EQUESTRIANS, ALL EQUALLY ATTRACTIVE THOUGH NOT ALL SO WELL KNOWN AS THIS BEACH NEAR THE GOLDEN GATE.

THE fields of sport were so crowded all during the past month as to suggest a traffic jam, with various attempts to swim the English channel as a marine outlet.

Perhaps tennis had a little the best of it in point of general interest, certainly to Californians, with Helen Wills, of Berkeley, winning the National Tennis Championship for the third straight year, giving her permanent possession of the silver championship trophy. Miss Wills and Mary K. Browne, also of California, won the Women's National doubles championship over Elizabeth Ryan and Mrs. May Sutton Bundy, for many years National champion, from California and who returned to the courts this year after several years' retirement.

The fifth annual regatta of the Southern California Yachting Association, held at Santa Barbara, was naturally of much more interest to the nautically inclined. The first regatta of the south was held in Santa Barbara in 1921, she was hostess again in 1923, and this year the hospitality was not lessened despite the recent catastrophe.

The opening of new golf clubs is as continuous as the winning of championships. No mountain or beach resort is complete without at least a nine hole course.

The outstanding event of September, however, is the annual California State annual amateur golf championship tournament, opening at Del Monte, September 14. This, of all the tourneys of the year, holds the greatest anticipation, as it promises nearly two weeks of golf with the delightful social diversions that always form its background.

Photograph by Margaret Craig

POLLY HOLBERT AND DOUGLASS MONTGOMERY, OF THE PASADENA COMMUNITY PLAYERS, WHOSE INTEREST FOR THE MOMENT IS TENNIS. POSING FOR CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND BEFORE THE PLAYERS OWN FOUNTAIN.

—Golden State Limited Photo Service

MRS. WILLIAM CARTER, AND MRS. A. E. D. TRABUE, CHAIRMAN OF THE WOMEN'S AUXILIARY OF THE SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA GOLF ASSOCIATION, ARE OFTEN SEEN ON THE ANNANDALE COURSE. MRS. CARTER PLANS TO PLAY IN THE MIXED FOURSOMES DURING THE OPENING OF EL CABALLERO COUNTRY CLUB, SEPTEMBER FIFTH, SIXTH AND SEVENTH.

THE "SHOW SHOP"

Continued from Page 15

the art, reveals a fine appreciation of dramatic technique. Out of the chaos of fun, and from the virulent enthusiasms which mark the earlier stages of the play, there comes an excellently conceived dramatic touch which rises to strong heights of force and ability and climaxes the third act of the play with unexpected and delightful finish.

The thing is a satire, pure and lively. It could easily be a burlesque, bright and rollicking. Fortunately, Pasadena Community Players can offer a cast that will give this play a presentation that will make the production stand out as one of the most original performances ever offered here. I am looking forward to it. For I know, from my reading of the play, that if any group in this country can present it as it should be shown, it is the local players.

Characterization is a feature of the play. Here is where the work will be given its truest interpretation. There is a Mrs. Dean, for instance, who should rank as one of the unforgettable figures who will haunt the local playhouse. Indeed, the leaders in the lengthy list of characters are all marked with a rich individuality. They are all kindly, lovable figures, filled with human virtues and failings, working together in humorous harmony and aiming at delectable ends. Again, I say, I am looking forward to seeing the players present "The Show Shop." For I have mentally cast the production in my own mind; and I realize that Gilmor Brown has the very talent for this particular play among the confreres he has surrounded himself with, in the South El Molino avenue theatre.

LOIS AUSTIN OF THE PASADENA COMMUNITY PLAYERS, AS THE PRINCESS ALEXANDRA IN THE "SWAN," THE ONLY WESTERN PRODUCTION OF THE FRANZ MOLNAR PLAY. POSED BY MARGARET CRAIG IN THE FOES STUDIO.

"The Show Shop" is claimed to be the only play ever written in this country which reveals the actual conditions prevailing in the theatrical profession. It was produced in the Hudson Theatre, New York, on the last day of 1914 and it is interesting to record that Douglas Fairbanks took his farewell of the legitimate stage with the production. Since the local players decided to revive the play, the management of the Actors' Theatre, New York, has similarly decided to present it.

Gilmor Brown sees the play as one possessing that distinctive calibre which should prevent it from being lost to the stage. It is not a work that would typically represent an interesting topic for stock companies, and with qualities which are too fine to permit the play lapsing from theatrical annals, the local players hail the opportunity of assisting in making it a vital thing for this later decade of play-goers. For an evening's genuine entertainment I doubt if anything will surpass the first Coast production of "The Show Shop."

ALEXANDER INGLIS.

MORE AND MORE THE PASADENA COMMUNITY PLAYHOUSE BECOMES THE CENTER OF THE SOCIAL LIFE OF ITS DEVOTEES. Margaret Craig

THIS UNUSUALLY BEAUTIFUL SPANISH ARCADE, IS PLANNED FOR COLORADO STREET, PASADENA TO HOUSE STUDIOS AND SHOPS OF DISTINCTION. WALLACE NEFF, ARCHITECT

ASSISTANCE LEAGUE OF SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

OFFICERS:

MRS. HANCOCK BANNING, President
MRS. EDWARDS LAUGHLIN, First Vice President
MRS. WILLIAM GIBBS MCADOO, Sec. Vice-Pres.
MRS. ERWIN P. WERNER, Third Vice-President
MRS. E. AVERY MCCARTHY, Fourth Vice-Pres.
MRS. JAMES REED, Secretary
MRS. J. WARREN TATUM, Treasurer.
MR. D. C. MACWATTERS, Auditor

CALENDAR

Sept. 1st, 12:15 p. m.—Round Table Luncheon. Dr. Margaret Carhartt will speak on Modern Plays.
Sept. 3rd, 10:30 a. m.—Meeting of Shut-In Committee.
Sept. 8th, 10:30 a. m.—Meeting of Executive Committee.
Sept. 11th, 10:30 a. m.—Meeting of Good Samaritan Committee.
Sept. 14th, 10:00 a. m.—Meeting of Day Nursery Committee.
Sept. 15th, 10:30 a. m.—Meeting of Executive Committee.
Sept. 17th, 10:30 a. m.—Meeting of Shut-In Committee.
Sept. 22nd, 10:30 a. m.—Meeting of Executive Committee.
Sept. 24th, 10:30 a. m.—Meeting of Good Samaritan Committee.

POSED BY THE STAFF OF THE ASSISTANCE LEAGUE GOWNS FOR SALE IN THE THRIFT SHOP. PHOTOGRAPH BY MARGARET CRAIG

In the passing of Mr. Hancock Banning the Assistance League has lost a valued friend and loyal advocate. As an expression of sympathy and affection for our President and as a testimonial of the high order of our friendship for Mr. Banning, the Board of Directors and close friends of Mr. and Mrs. Banning will complete the Tiny Tim Hospital Bed Endowment Fund to be known as the Hancock Banning Memorial.

We knew him to admire him and found great pleasure in his friendship, his understanding and his ever gracious hospitality. We mourn his passing and our great loss.

LAVENDAR AND OLD LACE

A glimpse of the dignity and grace of yesteryear was afforded the visitors and patrons of the Thrift Shop through the generous donation of a number of beautiful costumes worn several generations ago. Lustrous silk! Quaint chintz! Rare lace! to delight the casual visitor and to attract the attention of the picture producer and director. No make-believe is necessary with costumes like these available. Even New York of thirty years ago is present in a costume worn to the Charity Ball by Lady Astor. Such donations are a boon both to the League and to the purchaser.

DAY NURSERY

The Children's Day Nursery goes on uninterruptedly in its work of building men and women of tomorrow into good, healthful citizens. Careful examinations are made upon admission to the nursery and if there are unhealthful or unwholesome conditions in the homes, immediate attention is given to the correction of these. Thus the children of the nursery go from their proper day-time care into good home conditions and are the means of raising the standard of living in the family.

Our very devoted staff are administering their duties intelligently and the children show rapid improvement from the day of admission. We have had an average daily attendance of 38 children. We wish every reader could see these thirty odd mothers coming in from their day of bread winning with the look of deep contentment shining from their eyes, in spite of the long hours of work made long beyond their industrial tasks by keeping the little home going Without an institution like our Day Nursery, it is a hard choice these mothers must face—either staying home and starving with them, or leaving the babies alone in their little abode, chancing, hoping and wondering as they stand at their day long tasks: "Is my baby safe?" for there have been many cases of asphyxiation and other tragic endings to these little ones while Mother was at her work earning the bread.

We cannot do too much for our children. There can be no question as to the wisdom of such charity as this. Such assistance does not have the weakness of charity to older people, in that it so often weakens their efforts to do and encourages them to depend upon others. Children cannot feel a stigma or humiliation, nor can they be made indolent by this help, but it is the making of good citizens and the shaping of human lives. The future of this country rests upon its children, and if they are to be right, they must be saved from ignorance and vice, and the first step is to give them good food, fresh air and clean, fine play, so that they will have strong, clean little bodies.

This work is supported by the Los Angeles Community Chest.

OFF TO THE SUMMER CAMP

The Assistance League has sent 34 children to summer camps for outings of from two to four weeks—some to the seashore, others to the mountains—to sleep in tents, to tramp the hills and to live, literally, on the fat of the land. With but one exception, the camps have been conducted by agencies financed by the Community Chest. The children for the most part have been those of widowed or deserted mothers and would otherwise have had to spend the extra time out of school in the cluttered yards of tenements called home. The faces happy with anticipation as the buses left for the camps, and sunburned and rosy-cheeked when they returned, fully repaid the time and effort spent in arranging these trips. One of the mothers had become so discouraged in her struggle to support two little lads that she felt she couldn't go on and said: "If I were out of the way, someone would care for my boys." When the boys went off to camp for three weeks, we found a place for her in a rest home, where the good food, rest and freedom from worry have restored her courage.

And thus the work of the Good Samaritan, instead of lessening in the summer, as was anticipated, has increased considerably. We are now facing the Fall and Winter months, when all social agencies in their various capacities will be called upon to meet the increasing need for assistance. A full time case worker is being added to the staff to help our manager with this work.

GOWN DONATED TO THE THRIFT SHOP. A GLIMPSE OF THE GRACE OF YESTERYEAR. PHOTOGRAPH BY MARGARET CRAIG.

SHUT-IN

One of our Shut-Ins, a little old lady, whose fingers are crippled and whose knees bend under her weight, has sent us a large consignment of kitchen aprons made on her electric machine. She will take orders for aprons of any pattern. We are hoping to sell enough of these to make her self-supporting. Remember our Shut-Ins when buying aprons, tea towels, luncheon sets and woven goods.

Membership renewals are now past due. Have you sent in yours?

Now that our members are returning from their summer holidays, may we urge those who have not already done so to send in their membership renewals at once? Our membership year is from May 1st to May 1st.

Kitchen aprons, maids' aprons—any pattern desired—ranging in price from 50c to $2.00, made by a little old lady of our Shut-In group on her electric sewing machine. May we count on you for an order?

When you are renovating your rugs this fall remember our expert mender and cleaner of Oriental rugs. A number of our Board members have been very well pleased with his work and his charges. Place your order at the office—HEmpstead 5133.

MORE CLOTHES FOR THE THIRFT SHOP!!!

Men's, women's, children's shoes, hats, suits, dresses, underwear, old sheets for make-up cloths for the Movies. Just everything you don't need we can use.

California Clothes
Photographed in Pasadena
by Margaret Craig

POSED IN THE PATIO OF THE PASADENA COMMUNITY PLAYHOUSE NEAR THE STATUE AND FOUNTAIN IN AZTEC STYLE, DONATED TO THE EMBELLISHMENT OF THE COURT BY THE COMMUNITY PLAYERS. MISS WADE, WHO IS NOTED FOR HER HORSEMANSHIP AND IS ASSOCIATED WITH MISS SMITH, OF THE GRIFFITH PARK SCHOOL OF RIDING, HAS HERE POSED FOR SOUTHLAND IN THE EQUESTRIENE GARB IN WHICH, WITH NINE PUPILS OF THE MARLBOROUGH SCHOOL SHE RODE IN THE LOS ANGELES HORSE SHOW LAST WINTER.

MISS WADE IN TWO OF HER NOTABLE JUMPS
—Hughes

RIDING HABIT BY UHRICH, PASADENA. BREECHES OF BEDFORD CORD WITH SEAMS OR BUTTONS ON INSIDE OF THE KNEE, LEATHER FACINGS ENGLISH PATTERN.

MEN'S RIDING CLOTHES MADE BY UHRICH MAY BE SEEN AT FLINTRIDGE AND ON OTHER LOCAL RIDING TRAILS AROUND PASADENA.

AT THE PATIO TEA ROOM TABLES IN THE PLAYHOUSE COURT. SUMMER HAT FROM LENZ STUDIOS, HOME-SPUN COAT GOWN FROM HEWSON STUDIOS, MADE BY HICKERSON, 790 GARFIELD.

Back of the Satin Brocade

Note the godets which indicate the coming styles

Left—Black satin brocade gown dignified and smart for numerous occasions in Pasadena. Posed with the baekground of foyer and Patio tea room, Community Playhouse Pasadena, where the social and dramatie interests center.

Mrs. M. Millicent Schaffer, who kindly posed for Southland's readers has just received this and many other attractive gowns in large sizes. The Gown Shop is at 566 East Colorado St., Pasadena.

THE CAMERON HOUSE AT PALOS VERDES

KIRTLAND CUTTER, Architect

SOUTH of Redondo Beach and far removed from the hurdy gurdy and the din of the beach resorts, lies Palos Verdes. Its cliffs and rolling hill sides bathed in the spray of its booming surf have waited throughout countless ages watching the sun set over the blue Pacific. Day followed day in ceaseless beat of time. The Spaniard came and claimed the land and Palos Verdes with its more than 16,000 acres became the possession of a great Spanish grandee. Its green slopes echoed to the shout of his vaqueros as they tended the cattle which roamed its wide range. Then came the days so vividly described by Dana in "Two Years Before the Mast" but still Palos Verdes basked peacefully in the bright California sunshine. Almost a century slipped past. The eyes of the world were upon Southern California for in that space of time the tiny scattered settlements which Dana found had changed to great cities and millions lived where he had left only the far, rolling plain.

One day a small group of men stood on the great bluff at Palos Verdes and looked far out over the sparkling blue sea. The grandeur of the scene and the magnificence of its scale awed them to whispers. In the group were renowned planners of cities, famous architects, landscapists, and financiers. They were drinking deep of the inspiration which has made possible the realization of a great dream. The dream was that of a community where the lavish beauty which nature had bestowed could never be destroyed by the works of selfish or ignorant men. The dream is coming true even more rapidly than most of them had dared hope possible. Palos Verdes will soon be the most beautiful community in America. It has already been called the Riviera of America and is indeed a duplicate of the French Riviera overlooking Nice. Four hundred and fifty acres have been set aside for parks, playgrounds, schools, churches, theatres, and other community buildings. There is an excellent eighteen hole golf course where play can go on every day of the year. There are hidden miles of bridle paths "where you ride with nothing but hills and sea and sky, as alone as the first vaquero that ever spurred a broncho over this ancient Spanish grant."

Among the first houses to be built at Palos Verdes was one designed by Mr. Kirtland Cutter, A. I. A. for Mr. A. E. Cameron. It is situated high on the hillside overlooking the tremendous vistas of the Pacific.

It is low and rambling and designed in the true Spanish manner with patio and fountains and broad simple surfaces of gunite walls to form a background for a wealth of beautiful flowers. Formerly the walls of the old Spanish Colonial houses in California were constructed of soft adobe bricks which were plastered crudely by hand. Those which are still standing possess great charm, but their lack of permanence prevents the frequent use of adobe walls. The walls of the Cameron house have this same hand made art which came from the trowel of the Indian workmen, but are made of a material so hard and dense that it will outlast the adobe by centuries. The material is known as Gunite and is composed of rich cement mortar shot on to the wall surfaces by compressed air. A heavy steel fabric is imbedded in the Gunite which adds greatly to its strength and to the rigidity of the house. Numbers of houses at Santa Barbara with Gunite walls came through the earthquake with a remarkable showing. The extreme density of the Gunite is such that it can be subjected to water pressure for hours without a trace of moisture showing through the wall. These desirable qualities coupled with its beautiful texture as a wall finish make it of great value to the architect or home owner. Complete data on this wonderful material may be had from the Cement Gun Company of Los Angeles.

It has been an appropriate movement on the part of California architects to adapt the Spanish Colonial architecture to our complicated modern house plan. It has done much to preserve the precious traditions which are one of California's chief assets. It is particularly happy that this style should be one of the first to appear at Palos Verdes. Perhaps the thing which has brought the most pleasure to the heart of the architect and the connoisseur in this return of the Spanish manner, is the revival of an almost lost art; that of the iron craftsman. In the Cameron house three groups of workers in iron have collaborated. At every turn in the house their handiwork has brought the atmosphere of old Spain.

WROUGHT IRON GATE OF THE CAMERON HOUSE MADE BY THE ATLAS ORNAMENTAL IRON WORKS, LOS ANGELES. KIRTLAND CUTTER, ARCHITECT, LONG BEACH, CALIFORNIA.

It would seem that a door handle, a key hole plate, a hinge, would be meagre material indeed for the designer-craftsman to work upon. The work of the Earle Hardware Company upon the wrought iron hardware in the house shows a love for the craft and an intelligence in design that is a joy to behold. Every piece is appropriate to its position and a true expression of the material. The smallest bits of hardware made by these craftsmen are as carefully thought out and executed as if they were the most important elements in the scheme of decoration. The shop of the Earle Hardware Company is located at 2369 East Fifty-first street. Another notable piece of work which Mr. Earle has recently done is to be found in the Bourne House. It has attracted much admiring comment and will be shown when that house is featured in our next number.

The second of the three craftsmen in iron, who, like the first one, believes "the gods see everywhere" is the Meyberg Company of 633 South Grand Avenue. Except for a few beautiful imported pieces which Mr. Cameron possessed, the lighting fixtures and andirons were designed and executed by the Meyberg Company. They are all in excellent scale and the wokmanship on them shows the thought and care which always goes into the pieces turned out by this fine organization. Seldom can one visit their shop without finding some new and beautiful object to admire. They are constantly alive for new ideas which will raise their excellence in workmanship or design. One of the members of their design department is now in Europe searching for appropriate material.

One of the best known of Los Angeles iron craftsmen to add his bit to the beauty of the Cameron house, was Mr. Rall of the Atlas Ornamental Iron Works. The wrought iron gates and window grilles came from this busy shop. Mr. Kutter was indeed fortunate in the selection of The Atlas for this work, for Mr. Rall is a capable designer and a practical craftsman as well. He has executed work from most of the architect's offices in Los Angeles and is widely known as one of the best. The Atlas shop at 2510 East Fifty-second Street is never a dull place to visit, for the sparks are flying and the anvils ringing from early 'til late. The busy hammers of the Atlas force have left their mark on many of California's most beautiful homes.

Interior of the A. E. Cameron House, Palos Verdes. Kirtland Cutter, Architect.

FURNITURE FOR FINE HOMES AT BARKER BROS., INC.

By M. URMY SEARES

FURNISHING the hundreds of thousands of homes which spring up over night in this intensively settled corner of California is a very extensive and prodigious undertaking. Twenty years ago this section of the state made little of its own furniture, and even the packing boxes which brought heirlooms to the Coast were preserved and made use of. Many people in ignorance of conditions left even treasured pieces behind.

Growing and developing to supply the needs of such an extensive community as has been established in Los Angeles and vicinity during the decades just past, the firm of Barker Bros., Inc. organized its forces and built up a service which met the conditions in a uniquely successful way. So many new householders came each month, so many houses were built each year, that ordinary salesmanship was not equal to the task of supplying the demand of furnishing the homes, the offices, the hotels and apartment houses of this new metropolis and its suburban towns.

The standard, too, has been shown to be above the average of ordinary homes in Eastern cities for California is prosperous and there is no reason why every one should not have good things in the home.

The desire on the part of many homemakers in Los Angeles "for something better than they had known" has led this firm of furnishers of homes to do much in the way of education and exhibition and to exhibit rooms already complete in detail, as well as period rooms fully expressive of the ancient, and modern copies of antiques.

But with the increase of leisure to study, and the adaptation of needs to our simpler Californian living there has arisen a wider demand for individual, fine pieces and a finer choice in the individual home.

To meet this demand and the demands of the architects who are now designing houses in the Mediterranian style so appropriate to Pacific Coast houses, Barker Bros., Inc. have answered with a large stock of furniture from Europe and a series of studios of interior decoration, textiles and fine copies of historic pieces which they can reproduce in their own shops. A library, extensive and well selected, will be at the disposal of students and architectural draftsmen and thus along with our changing ideas of what a beautiful home contains we shall have the opportunity to furnish our individual homes with good furniture we have chosen for it instead of having to go to the Atlantic Coast or to Europe ourselves or send our architect.

THE GLORIOUS XVI CENTURY CLAIMS THIS OLD VENETIAN DESK. A FINELY CONCEIVED PIECE WITH RICH ORNAMENTAL DETAIL IN FLAT, SHALLOW CARVING AND PUNCH WORK BACKGROUND. THE VARIOUS PANELS DEPICT PHASES OF VENETIAN RENOWN. UNUSUAL BECAUSE OF PRIMITIVE EFFECTS IN DESIGN AND COLORS IS THIS SARDINIAN EMBROIDERED TAPESTRY OF THE EARLY XVI CENTURY.

The amount invested by this firm in fine furniture to serve as models or to grace some new and elaborate residence in the Spanish or Italian style is guarantee enough to architcets that they can find what they want in these studios of interior decoration so conveniently set before them by a firm which does what it does in a thorough and comprehensive way.

No attempt is made in these studios to dictate or even to suggest to architects; nor, on the other hand can the finer materials and furniture be entirely segregated for the benefit of those who do not know what they want but want only the best. Those who do know what they want to fill a certain space or to give a certain touch of color in an interior may well investigate the unrivalled display of interesting pieces now set forth for their delectation or stored away to be shown on demand.

Architects who do not expect a commission—and no reputable architect does—will find this new arrangement to their liking for the Italian and Spanish houses are being built faster than furniture to fill them can be brought to the Coast or properly made at home. As our Arts and Crafts article in this month's issue emphasizes, we must develop our own fine furniture along with our new California architecture and in training our local craftsmen and our youth to do good cabinet work we need just such a generous bringing in of good old pieces as this enterprising firm has accomplished in the last few months.

In this new venture for California homes, standardization is not possible; individuality is encouraged, and distinctive taste is served as efficiently as it can be in one extensive store.

RECENT BOOKS—REVIEWS

Continued from Page 14

The arduous duties exacted from this sailor seem pretty strenuous, but still he found time to indulge his intense passion for natural history, and to read to tatters his copies of Shakespeare, and the Bible. If this sort of reading be responsible for the literary craft and culture displayed in "A Gypsy of the Horn," by all means, let's put the growing generation on a mental diet, consisting only of these famous masterpieces.

LORENZO THE MAGNIFICENT

By DANE COOLIDGE, E. P. Dutton & Company

There still exists one corner of our country so alien as to preserve the atmosphere of a foreign land, and it is used as the scene of the novel "Lorenzo the Magnificient." The story concerns events in New Mexico just after the exploits of Geronimo, when pioneers from Texas were driving great herds of their cattle into the vast pasture lands in the central part of the state. Trouble arose from the opposition of the old Spanish settlers, descendants of the conquistadores. In the making of this tale unfortunately divine fire seems lacking and the author has not made the most of the romantic situation. Ilis characters are like flat figures painted on canvas that seem to have no sides or backs. On the other hand he has given a conscientious description of customs and men forming a part of the historical period during the amalgamation of this state into our union. So that at least we gain some reliable information even if we find no thrills.

TEA-ROOM RECIPES

By LENORE RICHARDS AND NOLA TREAT

Little Brown & Company

At the present time the operation of tea-rooms is a popular occupation. Women thus employed will find very convenient this book especially prepared with their needs in mind as well as those of home-makers, desiring dainties for entertaining at luncheon or tea. The method of offering these recipes is very systematic. A list of the necessary ingredients is arranged in a row, with the directions for putting together following, and ending with notes mentioning the number of servings, the amount of one, the number of calories and the cost.

Schaffer Gown Shop

Specializing in

Gowns in the Larger Sizes

For tall women who are slender, for short women who are not. There are special numbers easily adjusted.

566 EAST COLORADO
PASADENA

QUALITY SERVICE

THE ELITE

DRY CLEANERS AND DYERS

Plant: 797 So. Fair Oaks Ave.

Colo. 1349 Pasadena, California

Original Frederick Remington for sale.
Oil Painting, size 40 inches by 26 inches.
Unusual style and action

Address: George F. Rogers,
2410½ W. 7th St., Los Angeles, Calif.

CORONA

TYPEWRITERS

With Standard Keyboard
$60 Complete With Case
Also All Makes Sold, Rented, Repaired, Exchanged

Anderson Typewriter Co.

84 E. Colorado St. Pasadena

FRENCH HOME COOKING

By CLAIRE DE PRATZ, E. P. Dutton & Company

Cooking among the French people is considered an art, and its success depends on the artistic temperament of the operator. This is true, whether the cookery happens to be the type, called La Haute Cuisine, the expensive luxury of the wealthier classes, or the more moderate La Cuisine Bourgeoise used by the average family. The recipes in this book belong mostly to the latter, and have been collected by Madam de Pratz from persons to whom they have descended like furniture and other heirlooms.

Those who having lived in France, have developed a taste for the native food, may find in these pages just how it is done. Others not so fortunate in looking for novelties, may use these receipts for adding zest to the monotony of the daily menu, thus pleasing all the family. Recipes however are not all we get out of this book. While turning the pages, we gain glimpses into a domesticity, which would ordinarily be hidden from a foreigner.

Welcome to call and Browse

Rare & Art Books

First Editions
Early Printing
Autographs
Americana

Books Notable for Printing Illustrations and Binding.

Dawson's Book Shop
627 So. Grand Ave.

Catalogues sent on request:—

LOS ANGELES

PHONE TERrace 0127

Lunch, Tea or Dine at

El Patio Tea Room

COMMUNITY PLAYHOUSE BUILDING

37 SOUTH EL MOLINO PASADENA, CALIF.

FLORNINA

Gowns · Negligees · Accessories and Bathing Suits

Ready to Wear or Made to Order

Unusually Attractive Frocks in Tub Silks and Dotted Swiss

95 South Los Robles Ave., Pasadena
Phone Fair Oaks 113

HEWSON HAND CRAFT STUDIOS

Handwoven One Piece Dresses, Coats and Scarfs, Canadian and Candlewick Bedspreads

Dutch and East Indian Brass, Beads, Fine Pendants and Objects of Art in Great Variety

F. O. 6555
602 E. Colorado St.
Pasadena

DUnkirk 4909
2508½ W. 7th St.
Los Angeles

LAUNDERERS DRY CLEANERS

ROYAL LAUNDRY CO.

461 South Raymond Colorado 67
Pasadena, California

Permutit Soft Water Saves Clothes

TROY LAUNDRY

In Business for Twenty Years

Pasadena, Cal. Phone C. 146 Alhambra 243-J

HILLER'S STUDIO

OFFICIAL PHOTOGRAPHER FOR
CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND
49 EAST COLORADO STREET
PASADENA, CALIFORNIA

ALBERT HILLER Phone, Fair Oaks 155

French and Italian Arts

Imported by
ELEANOR AND HOLLINGSWORTH BEACH

Italian Sports Hats — Antiques
Old Furniture — Brocades
Embroidered Linens — Old Prints
French Faience — Italian Majolica

Large Parchment Portfolios for Prints and Photographs

630 E. Colorado Street, Pasadena, California
Fair Oaks 6028

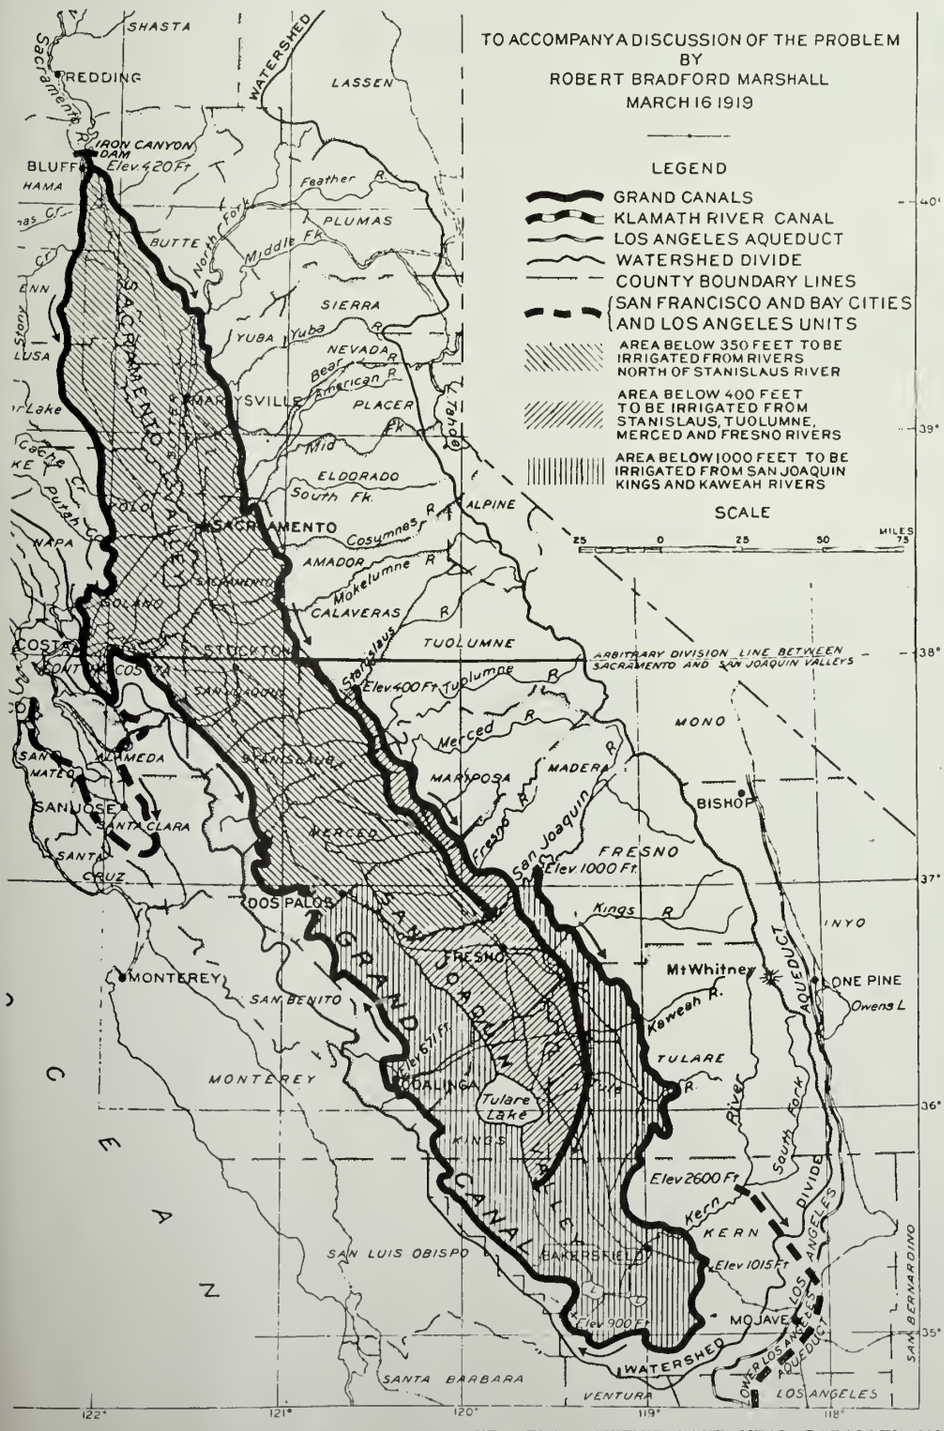
T. W. Mather Co. Inc.
PASADENA, CAL.

Dry Goods

Women's & Children's Wearing Apparel

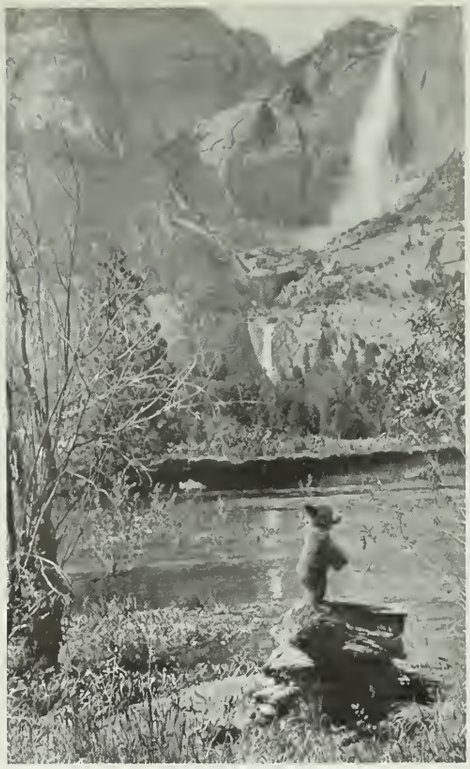
Colorado Street at Marengo

UP THE VALLEY AND DOWN THE COAST



THE MARSHALL PLAN

IN the November 1920 issue of California Southand the advantages of uniting in one great circulatory system the life-giving waters of the state, so that all parts should have a share and none should waste, were set forth from the standpoint of the United States Geological Survey. Col. Robert Bradford Marshall, Chief Geographer of the U. S. Geological Survey, has for twenty-five years surveyed and topographically mapped areas in California. During most of that time he had administrative charge of the State Co-operative Survey as well. He has now assembled and laid before those interested in development by water, the results of his twenty-five years of study.



As shown in the map, part of which is here presented, Col. Marshall's plan would turn the waters of the Klamath River, now going to the sea unused, into the Sacramento River by means of a great canal. The added supply would be carried down both sides of the San Joaquin and Sacramento Valleys and, with the impounded waters from the Sierra Nevadas controlled by properly situated dams, would form grand canals in a system reaching from Red Bluff to a point below Bakersfield.

This would allow the turning of the waters of the lower Kern River into the sections of southern California which even now need more water. The only ample supply of water for this section of California is the Kern River which from the inexhaustible snows of the high Sierras, will supply the desert sections and southern cities for centuries to come.

Map of the Great California Valley and Its Water Supply

LOS ANGELES IS ON A LINE DRAWN DIRECTLY SOUTH FROM OWEN'S LAKE NEAR PARALLEL 118. CONTINUING THIS LINE NORTH UNTIL IT STRIKES THE NEVADA STATE LINE WE STRIKE A POINT ALMOST DIRECTLY EAST OF SAN FRANCISCO WHICH IS AS FAR WEST OF LOS ANGELES AS IT IS NORTH. PARALLEL 120 DIVIDES THE STATE ABOUT EQUALLY, INTO EASTERN AND WESTERN CALIFORNIA.

YOSEMITE VALLEY AND FALLS. BEHIND THIS ARE THE HIGH SIERRA WATER SOURCES

EVENING SNOW

By Ernest G. Bishop

FROM the door of my mountain cabin I look out across a broad expanse of level range covered with myriad wild flowers among which blue and gold and pink are the predominating colors. In the immediate foreground are frail, delicate California bluebells and sturdy little fly-flowers so massed that they form rich tapestries of blue and gold. Beyond these gleams the pink of filaree blossoms blending harmoniously with the green of young barley in an adjoining field.

In another direction, in the midst of a meadow verdant with tall waving grass, islands of ream-cups lift their ereamy, yellow cups to the sun and ripple onward until they merge with another carpet of golden fly-flowers lying along the base of the hills.

The same fields present different colors and aspects at different times of the day. When the sun begins to sink beyond the western hills and the long shadows of evening lie over the land, behold the miracle that has taken place! The prevailing golden and pink tints become faded and subdued, and in their place a sea of pure white dominates the landscape.

The cause of this rather abrupt transformation is the frail little flower commonly known as Evening Snow (Gilia dichotoma). When the California poppy, wild dandelion, and ream-cup fold their petals for a night's rest, the Evening Snow unfurls its waxy-white flowers and keeps watch over the silent fields throughout the long night. This plant is rather difficult to detect in the daytime because the tightly-rolled flower resembles closely the bare ground in this way: underneath each petal is a margin of brown spread in such a manner that when the flower is closed no white is visible.

It is interesting to wateh the fields as the sun begins to decline and sink from sight. Behind bushes from which the shadows of night first commence to lengthen, the Evening Snow begins to expand and unfurl its pure white petals. Being very sensitive to clear light many plants await the complete disappearance of the sun before they begin to open. An hour after sunset parts of the fields, especially in the sandy washes, appear as if lightly sprinkled with snow, hence the most appropriate name, Evening Snow.

It is when a full and mellow moon beams down upon the silent earth that the Evening Snow is seen in all its beauty and loveliness, with its pure white blossoms bravely keeping vigil over the sleeping flowers of the night.

GREENWOOD SCHOOL FOR GIRLS

5928 Franklin Avenue, Hollywood

Select Resident and Day School

Lawns, Tennis Courts, Outdoor Swimming Pool. Special advantages in music, under Mrs. Elsa Spencer.

Fall Term, September 17, 1925

Principals:
Mrs. M. Greenwood, Newnham College, Cambridge
H. F. Greenwood, A. B., Corpus Christi College, Cambridge
Telephone HOlly 2886

The Westlake
School for Girls
333 South Westmoreland Avenue

Residence and Day School
Lower School, College Preparatory, Junior College
Fully Accredited
Departments of Art, Music, Home Economics

Fall Term Opens September Thirtieth

JESSICA SMITH VANCE FREDERICA DE LAGUNA
Telephone DRexel 0052

NEW HOME
OF PACIFIC
MILITARY ACADEMY
Culver City, California

Boarding and Day School. Fireproof Buildings. Completely Equipped Laboratories. Grammar and High School. Enrollment limited.

Fall Term, September 16, 1925

For Catalogue Write Mrs. Loughan or telephone Culver City 3294

Urban Military Academy

The Great Outdoor School for the Building of Body and Brain and Character Under Matchless Conditions
Fall Term, September 16, 1925
Open All Year. Address MISS SALEY, Registrar
637 Wilcox Ave., Los Angeles. HEmpstead 7602

The Elliott School for Girls

Residence and Day School. Fall Term September 21.
Ideal Home Life Character Building
Superior Educational Advantages. Sub-Primary through Eleventh Grade.
Martha Collins Weaver, M. A., Principal. Pico Blvd. at Grammercy Place.
EMpire 5347

An Ideal School for Young Women
Cumnock School

COLLEGE WORK IN THE FOLLOWING COURSES:

Vocal Interpretation of Literature

Literary Appreciation	Voice and Diction	Short-Story
Public Speaking	French	Dancing
Dramatics	Story Telling	Psychology
	Journalism

Art and Art Appreciation

An accredited High School and Junior School under same management

HELEN A. BROOKS, Director

5353 West Third Street Los Angeles
WH itley 3427 —TELEPHONES— WH itley 7311

SECRETARIAL COACHING

For cultured people desiring personal attention. Refined, harmonious surroundings. All Secretarial subjects. Parliamentary Law. Bride's Budget.
Registrations begin August 17th.
Management, Mrs. Frank Rutherford. 711 South Vermont Ave. Fltzroy 1763.

ARTS AND CRAFTS SOCIETY

By MARION HUGUS CLARK

GO to any good library and you will find one or two volumes of valuable information on weaving, textile-printing, their art and archaeology; but upon their application to interior decoration in our modern age, there is very little. The men and women who are doing things are too busy to write about it. What they could tell you is of the greatest importance; but you cannot learn what that is unless you present the proper credentials and then hunt them out.

An interview with Mr. Kem Weber has value.

Mr. Weber is connected with a very big firm. From a craft point of view that might seem fatal to an artist-craftsman's originality inspiration and whatever it is that spells joy in his work. Your modern craftsman often invents and works for his own pleasure and that of his fellow craftsmen alone. Mr. Weber has carried this war for progress, originality and beauty into the enemy's camp.

Let us say something for this so-called enemy.

A business house to live must give people what they want. People have been educated for generations to want period furniture and we can scarcely expect a buyer with this desire to recognize the rococo and other bad influences that enter into the later periods of the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries.

It remains for men like Mr. Weber to act in the capacity of a lawyer to his client. As Mr. Weber told us: "Although you can't be entirely free, you can tell your client why what she wants is wrong, why the proportion is bad and why this is not the right color combination."

"The average decorator is more or less of a salesman. He will say to the woman wanting curtains: Oh, Mrs. Jones, you will like that beautiful pink. Mrs. Jones says that she abhors pink. Pink may be be the popular shade in curtains and Mrs. Jones shows her independence by prefering purple.

"The conscientious decorator, having seen her house knows that the room in question requires a cold color. The decorator may have a personal preference for cold green, but he knows that purple it must be to meet Mrs. Jones requirements, so he tells her that she shall have purple but he serves her best by giving her a cold purple. You can make a cold red if need be.

"I want to state," Mr. Weber continued, "that we are living in a modern age and I am not sold on the idea of copying an old.

"We are vain enough and conceited enough to think that we can copy the old periods. One would think that the modern colonial house built by Americans was a true copy of the early colonial also built by Americans. But we have added modern fixtures and modern appliances that, in the old houses, seem foolish.

"The discrepancy between the old Spanish architecture and the modern is greater. For here we are Americans copying the architecture of another nation. Our modern conveniences fit even less well than in the early Colonial. There are the baths. The Alhambra itself had its bath. It was glorious—large enough to take up a modern house. A bath was a performance in those days with half a dozen servants.

The Art of
Norma Gould
Authentic Dances—Pantomime
Eurythmics
Ball Room Dancing—Miss Kramer
Fall Terms Opening October
460 N. Western Ave.
HEmpstead 3530

The Katharine Branson School
Ross, Marin County, California
A Country School for Girls College Preparation
One Hour From San Francisco Outdoor Athletics

The Girls' Collegiate School 34th Year October 1
NEWLY LOCATED IN THE COUNTRY
Boarding and Day School. Accredited East and West. Out-Door Life a Reality. 50-acre estate. All sports. Saddle Horses. New Buildings. Italian type. L. A. Office, 1008 W. Adams St.
Glendora, Calif. Miss Parsons and Miss Dennen, Principals

KENWOOD HALL
Resident and Day School for Girls. Sub-Primary through High School.
Open throughout the year. FALL TERM, Sept. 21, 1925.
Directors: Ruby Mildred King, Grace Baylor Bobbitt.
Tel. WAshington 1612 675 So. Vermont Ave., Los Angeles

ARCHITECT'S DRAWING OF THE NEW HOME OF GIRLS' COLLEGIATE SCHOOL IN THE GLENDORA FOOTHILLS OVERLOOKING BEAUTIFUL SAN GABRIEL VALLEY. OF ITALIAN RENAISSANCE TYPE ARCHITECTURE, THE SCHOOL WILL BE ONE OF THE FINEST IN THE COUNTRY. MYRON HUNT, ARCHITECT.

"Our requirements are different. We have electric heated bathrooms that are small. The bed-rooms are the same. The way I see the problem is that we have to use our modern essential necessities as a foundation. There is no objection to using period design as a suggestion of motifs. In which case it requires a designer to combine the modern with the period we happen to admire.

"Now instead of copying a room to its minutest detail, let us note and enjoy the effect of sunlight percolating through the leaves of a pergola. How it throws just the right light upon the walls and ceiling. Not whether the top of that door is round or an exact reproduction of the period we have in mind.

"Of course you have, as I said at first, to meet the requirements of your client."

We asked Mr. Weber how it was possible to meet the needs of all the people who come to him.

"Well," he answered, "you have to study the client's characteristics first."

"Second. You have the character of the room. "Third. Expenditure.

"Fourth. And this is the sum of all the other points. It is your design. You have got to use your proper judgment and you get a room perfect to the situation. Afterwards comes color harmony, proportion, all the possibilities.

Parenthetically speaking, we are not sorry for the people who can afford to employ Mr. Weber. Our sympathy goes out to the larger number who love beauty and do not know where to find beauty that they can afford. It is these people that the Arts and Crafts Society in their educational work hope to serve. Mr. Weber, who is in sympathy with our aims, will give a talk before the society this fall.

CHRISTINE SQUIRES

INTERIOR DECORATIONS
MATERIALS

Exclusive Furniture
Designing

3217 WEST SIXTH STREET
WASHINGTON 3433

WE offer for investment of Personal or Trust Funds sound Securities returning highest rates consistent with safety.

WILLIAM R. STAATS COMPANY
Established 1887
Government, Municipal and Corporation Bonds

311 East Colorado St.
PASADENA, CALIF.
Los Angeles San Diego San Francisco

the cool summer way east

Santa Fe "all the way"

Through the Arizona, New Mexico and Colorado Rockies. You are a mile or more up in the sky most of the way.
FRED HARVEY Dining Car or Station Hotel meal service.

daily back East
Excursions

—to principal points in United States and Canada at reduced round trip fares.

See Grand Canyon National Park en route.

Santa Fe Ticket Offices and Travel Bureau
Santa Fe Station, PASADENA
221 South Broadway, LOS ANGELES
6405 Hollywood Blvd., HOLLYWOOD
915 State St., SANTA BARBARA

Where the most delicious creams and ices, cakes and pastries are made. Catering to small and large parties!

The Elite
CATERERS AND CONFECTIONERS
629-641 S FLOWER ST LOS ANGELES CALIF
In Pasadena 634 East Colorado

BREAKFAST
LUNCHEON
DINNER
Hollywood
4902 Hollywood Blvd.

BULLETIN OF SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA CHAPTER A. I. A.

HAROLD O. SEXSMITH, Editor

COMMENTS ON THE AUGUST CHAPTER MEETING OF THE SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA CHAPTER, AMERICAN INSTITUTE OF ARCHITECTS

An August night in the hills beyond Pasadena is always one to be remembered. The Chapter was the guest at the O. W. Morgan ranch near Glendora, where a very pleasurable meeting was held. The summer meetings of the Chapter have always been pleasant affairs and no doubt have caused some strenuous work on the part of our busy secretary in arranging for them. We would like to bear witness right here to the fact that we appreciate his efforts. We also take this opportunity to thank our hosts for their kind invitation.

Charles Lummis was a guest and made some interesting remarks relative to the restoration of the Santa Barbara Mission. Mr. Lummis stated in part that the California Missions ahve a deep significance in the economic life of Southern California, for they have brought thousands of people to this section to visit them. While the Missions are the property of the Catholic Church, in a larger sense they are really a heritage of all Californians and should be looked upon as such in the present emergency. It is greatly to be hoped that generous contributions will be forthcoming for the restoration work. We were also pleased to hear Mr. Lummis remark that the Mission at Santa Barbara must be restored in a historically correct manner and not as some architect might conceive that it should be.

Oscar Maurer
TZIN TZIN TZAN, MEXICO

ADDRESS OF MYRON HUNT, GIVEN AT THE 58th ANNUAL CONVENTION OF THE A.I.A., 1925

THE architect's palette in the optimistic, arid southwest is my topic. I fancy what I really want to talk to you about is the development of local color, and perhaps the development of some local color in the southwest. In locating the great southwest, if you draw a line from San Francisco to Salt Lake, thence to Phoenix, thence to El Paso, thence along the Mexican line to San Diego, you would find that if you were able to pass along this line by railroad it would take you nearly as long as it would to cross the continent.

We are all familiar with the brick which seems to me to have made the architecture of Boston and particularly of Cambridge—brick with a peculiarly fortunate variety of color. In the same manner, we find field stone in the districts of western New Jersey and eastern Pennsylvania. These have lent themselves to the creation of a definite local color. Similar things could be said of old New York—Dutch New York. Then there is a style which I should call Baltimore Colonial, which has a local flavor which is truly Baltimore. The same thing can be said of Charleston and of New Orleans.

Now a word in reference to the influences which it seems to me have brought about local color such as this which may in part be brought about again, despite the fact that transportation has made local color a difficult thing. Let me tell you something that happened in Chicago about thirty years ago. Somewhere in Philadelphia there is a very green stone. The people in Chicago were building their residences and one man wanted to build a house in such a manner that his neighbors would be certain to realize that he had made money. He sent to Philadelphia and got this stone. The result was not local color; easy modern transportation had made the blight possible. They had to transport stone a long way in Egypt; but we transport stone, brick and materials from one part of the country to another, until it is increasingly hard to discover a local color in any one district which is the product of the material of that district.

The natural influence of tradition—the Georgian influence of the Eastern coast, the Dutch influence, and I am constrained sometimes to think a little of the Scandinavian influence in New Jersey, the French influence in Louisiana and the Spanish influence of the southwest—are all recognized by us.

Then there are the climatic influences—the preparation for snow loads in New England, the lack of that preparation in the south—the amount of sunlight required in New England, sunlight obtained through windows, and the amount of sunlight required in the Gulf district. There is still less sunlight required in the southwest, where the light is so penetrating.

In the southwest, the first traditions originated in Spain, sifted through Mexico. I had hoped to be able to show you today a collection of colored lantern slides of Mexican work of the period of Mexican building, a period almost as rich as the period of Cathedral building in France. The lack of ability to run a lantern here has made that impossible. Suffice it to say that I think it would be a matter of surprise to some of you to know that there are probably twice as many examples of worthwhile Spanish buildings in Mexico as there are in Spain.

We have in Los Angeles in various libraries, in private and public collections, photographs following up the original work of Bertram Goodhue, who published a collection some years ago, which make you feel as though Mexico were as rich as all of southern Europe.

An interesting thing is the influence of the Indian workman, coupled with the traditions brought by the Spaniards. These Spanish settlers moved northward. In their company were the Franciscan Fathers. They built missions a day's journey apart, beginning a few miles below the present line between Mexico and the United States, and extended all the way to a point north of San Francisco. Many of these buildings are still in existence. They form our original tradition. It is true that even more than in Mexico there buildings were influenced by the labor as well as by the material used. The material was coarse rubble, when it wasn't mere adobe. The laborers were Indian converts, and everywhere you find, when you are anywhere near Aztec traditions among the Indians, the influence of the workmen who actually executed the work.

I am reminded of that early Renaissance attempt in France wherein one feels the remnants of Gothic by workmen who were unable to keep the Gothic touch out of what was intended to be an execution of Italian architecture.

Then in California we have the old, original "49" families, those people who were big and strong enough to have resisted the weeding out process of getting across the plains. They brought with them truly American traditions from all parts of the eastern coast and middle states.—To be continued.

Remarks of Mr. Beresford Pite, of the Royal Institute of British Architects, given to the Draftsmen at the 58th Annual Convention of the A.I.A., 1925.

IF I were in England I should be addressing an audience of "ghosts."* In the spiritual frame of mind I view you as the inspiring element of American architectural life. May this term "ghost" have a blessed spiritual import, and not merely indicate some ghostly skeleton inhabiting the architectural cupboard.

I am a draftsman, have always been a draftsman, and wish to be a draftsman, and have from the bottom of my heart a contempt for an architect who is not a draftsman. (Applause.)

I like to reflect that my friend the artist, the painter, is a man who draws things as they seem to be, as they appear to be. He is an impressionist. But apart from your own selves the practical has taught that things are not what they seem to be, and it is the part in life of the architectural draftsman to draw things as they are. The glory of our geometrical occupation is that it represents that secret of philosophic difficulty, reality.

And who and what is the architect's best friend? In a word, the India rubber. (Laughter.) This blessed little bit of India rubber signifies not only that, but the aspiration which refuses to be satisfied until perfection is accomplished; with that continual sacrifice of effort to perfection which is the mark of every true artist. You don't get paid for what you rub out. Keep on rubbing out until you do something that is worth being paid for.

Oscar Maurer
THE CATHEDRAL, OAXACA

In England we are welcoming into the draftsmen's ranks a steady flow of charming ladies. I hope that it is the condition in America. We find them apt in draftsmanship, infinitely industrious in application, and delightfully refined executives. Under these circumstances one looks forward in the words of your own poet again:

Wives of great men all remind us,
We can make our wives sublime;
And departing leave behind us
Widows on the sands of time.
Widows which perhaps another
Traveling o'er life's troubled main—
Some forlorn and shipwrecked brother—
Seeing, may take heart again.
Let us then be up and doing,
With a heart for any fate.
Still achieving, still pursuing,
Learn to labor and to wait."

A "ghost" in an English architect's office is the man in the draughting department who produces the actual work of the office, but is not known outside, or as a member of the firm.*

THE ARCHITECTURAL CLUB OF LOS ANGELES

OFFICERS

J. E. Garnsey, President
Roy H. Kelley, Vice-President
H. O. Sexsmith, Secretary
Paul W. Penland, Treasurer

DIRECTORS

Walter S. Davis, Director
J. E. Stanton, Director
H. C. Chambers, Director

GLADDING-McBEAN ENTERTAINS

The announcement that the club was to be entertained at its August meeting by the Gladding-McBean Company, was greeted on all sides with acclamation. The hospitality of Tropico et al is known of old and consequently there were about two hundred who responded and lined up army style for the barbecued Mexican dinner which was served hot off the block by swarthy gentlemen in long white aprons. There were plenty of guides to show the party around and much valuable information was gleaned, but perhaps the most absorbing of all was the inside of kiln thirteen. All roads seemed to end at the entrance to its gloomy interior. However, the gloom was in the kiln and not in the hearts of the loyal men and true who came grinning from its yawning depths. A. C. Martin and Don Parkinson are better qualified to enlarge on this subject than is the writer. Can anyone imagine the taciturn Don voluntarily making a speech. Nuf sed.

The club greatly appreciates the hospitality of the Gladding-McBean Company. We've known the excellency of Tropico products for some time and can now truthfully say that Tropico hospitality is "up to the specifications."

JESS STANTON RETURNS

It was a real pleasure to greet Jess Stanton again after his recent trip to Europe. He evidently used the seven league boots judging from the wide geographical range of the beautiful sketches he made on the trip. Another thing which surprised us was the stunning photographs he took. He had some forty or fifty hung for our inspection at the Tropico meeting of the club. We had always thought that William Clark had a corner on the art of architectural photography, but—well, we're just fortunate to have two such geniuses among us.

Jess has also brought back some very beautiful tiles and pottery from the Mediterranean countries. We prophesy that Gladding McBean tile is due for a rise.

PENCIL POINTS TAKES US UP

Had you noticed that the program of the last club party was published in the Pencil Points Magazine for August? Man, man, the half has not been told!

SHARE WITH SANTA BARBARA

Those of us who cannot contribute to the fund as much as we would like to in cash have the opportunity now of helping Santa Barbara in other ways as well. The reaction has set in and most of us have gone back to our own daily grind forgetting that the tired people who have carried on so bravely are more tired than ever and will not be able to put over their splendid plans for California architecture unless everybody who knows anything about good building and good design does his bit.

No one person, no one hundred people can rebuild a whole business street. It takes a whole community working together to do it. It take a whole state helping with generous purses and constructive suggestions to realize the splendid thing Santa Barbara has undertaken. Plans of small, tiny homes are needed to help visualize the new scheme to the hundreds of laymen who want to conform but do not konw how. Encouragement is needed from outside. Give to the fund first: it is needed —but give of your best thought, your time, Invite the friends you know in Santa Barbara to change places with you that those who went through the terror may get away for a week and rest—or if you can't do that go up there and spend some money in the town shops. Send a plan, send a sketch. Don't hesitate to help—just as a big-hearted neighbor ought to help a friend. Send your suggestions and contributions to 15 de la Guerra street, or to the Architectural Advisory Board. You may say California Southland suggested it—or you may send it here and we'll print it.—M.U.S.

ARTHUR KELLY RETURNS FROM THE BIG CITY

Shortly after kiln thirteen closed for the evening Roy Kelly appeared at the Tropico party having just returned from New York. It is not reported whether the Tropico ladle slingers opened up the kiln again for Arthur. Whether or no, we can always trust an Irishman to take care of himself. We are glad to see our vice helmsman back again safely.

OLD MEXICO HAS LOST ITS CHARM

At least we should judge so for one our esteemed club members has just come back from there after a two and a half months stay with the architectural department of the Southern Pacific. He blew into the office the other day wearing a cork helmet. He says the helmet is the best thing he brought back with him. We understand that Horace Moses (by the way he is the man under the helmet), was standing in the street by a safety sign last Saturday and the paymaster from the department of streets came up and tried to pay him $14.37 for a week's work. He was really quite embarrassed when he found that Mose was not the man he was looking for.

NEXT MEETING

It is probable that the next meeting of the club will be an open meeting to which all architects, draftsmen and contractors will be invited to hear about and discuss the Santa Barbara earthquake. It is planned to have stereopticon pictures to illustrate several short discussions. Much very valuable information has come from the quake and no man can afford to be uninformed on the subject. Further notice will be forthcoming.

DURING THE YEARS OF ITS DEVELOPMENT THE PALOS VERDES PROJECT HAS PLANNED WHOLE TOWNS LIKE THIS PLAZA SET IN THE MOST APPROPRIATE LOCATION AND SURROUNDED BY ROLLING COUNTRY AND THE SEA. KIRTLAND CUTTER IS THE ARCHITECT OF THIS PLAZA.

THE BATCHELDER TILES

BATCHELDER-WILSON COMPANY

We produce Tile for Fireplaces, Fountains, Pavements, Garden Pots---anything that is appropriately made from clay. :: :: :: :: ::

2633 Artesia Street

LOS ANGELES, CALIFORNIA

Choose your own architect from the representative styles shown in "California Homes" by California Architects. Price $1.00.

Address: ELLEN LEECH,

544 So. El Molino Avenue Pasadena, Calif.

Coromandel Screen, 8 leaves, 5 ft. 11 in. by 9 ft. 4 in.
Favorite Chinese Subject "Boys at Play"

CHINESE ART

SCREENS

Antique and Modern

Coromandel, Cinnabar, Gold Lacquer
Teak with Porcelain Insets,
Carved Stone Incrustations
Kossu Tapestry

Gump's

S.&G. Gump Co. 246-268 Post St. | San Francisco California

Stained and Leaded Glass in the Modern California Home

By THE ASSOCIATED STAINED GLASS CRAFT, Los Angeles
Address—2512 West Seventh Street

FOR many years stained glass has been extensively and continuously employed as one of the outstanding features in the finer European homes. This constant use developed craftsmen in the art to such an extent that a high state of artistic perfection was reached with beautiful examples of their skill everywhere extant.

Several years ago American Architects, striving for these glass effects so finely expressed in the homes in England and the Continent, sought the same results with the artists and craftsmen at their command in this country. While the product was commendable, when our limitations were taken into account, the work was not altogether satisfactory nor pleasing. This was due to the lack of background, training, and experience, therefore the art languished and its use declined. American pluck and persistence never cease however and for the past decade our glass makers have not only made a study of the craft at close range in Europe, but have been bringing to this country, in ever increasing numbers, the best artists and artisans available abroad.

Nowhere in the world are there more progressive Architects than those right in our own California. They are buiding homes in the Southland which equal, to say the least, any of those which the world traveler may see. To a great many of us our local progress appears to have gone far beyond anything heretofore attempted. Certainly nowhere in the world can the Architect find equal opportunity for the expression of the art that is within him.

The "growing vogue of stained glass in the home" is due largely to the Architect. He has recognized that the workers in glass in this country and especially in this locality have been improving and that today the craft is rivaling that of the old world. To the faith and belief of the architect will the craft ever be grateful, for this faith has led architects to specify stained glass at a price that makes it possible to make the finest without continually "taking a loss."

And what a difference it has made in the homes! One steps into an English style home and he sees lead mullioned windows in the halls—with simple heraldic devices—and the atmosphere is proper and correct. In the Italian as well as the Spanish, stained glass true to type and color, lends an air that can be indicated by no other medium. We should not overlook our brightness of atmosphere in the Southland, for nothing subdues and cools like fine stained glass.

PAINTINGS OF THE WEST

STENDAHL GALLERIES

OF THE PACIFIC COAST

The Ambassador Hotel—Los Angeles Hotel del Coronado—San Diego

R. F. Angula Tile Works

Genuine Hand Made Roof Tile

Plant 1, Santa Barbara—Phone 2983-W
La Cumbre Ave. between Highway and Modoc Road

Plant No. 2, Reseda, California, Phone Owens 30-J-2
Los Angeles, California

Designed and Built by Heating Experts

BETTER HOMES
ARE HEATED WITH

OHRMUND BROTHERS

Unit System of Heating

ELECTRICALLY CONTROLLED

Thousands in Use in Southern California. Let us show you why Ohrmund Brothers Units are superior.

HEATING AND SHEET METAL CONTRACTORS

PASADENA GAS APPLIANCE CO., INC.
901 E. Colorado Street
Pasadena Fair Oaks 9393

TERRA-COTTA FOUNTAIN IN LILY POOL

THIS piece of garden pottery was specially designed and made for the garden of a Los Angeles home. The figure is about life-size, and is in a mat glaze ceramic finish of approximately the color of Tennessee marble. Similar special work can be executed from architects' designs.

Prices upon request.

Gladding, McBean & Co.

Los Angeles Office: Los Feliz Blvd. and S. P. Tracks

Tropico Plant: Glendale, Los Angeles County, California

Decorating and Finishing Exclusive Furniture

W. G. Pesenecker

Interior and Exterior Painting

34 North Broadway

Phone Col. 5656 Pasadena, Calif.

THE WESTERN TILE AND MARBLE CO.

Importers and Contractors

386 SOUTH RAYMOND AVENUE

PASADENA

For the convenience of patrons planning houses, gardens, patios, and any other building in tile this Company has on display tiles from every portion of the world.

Spanish	American Encaustic
Mexican	Pardee
Persian	Batchelder-Wilson
Moroccan	Gladding-McBean
Holland	California Clay
English	California Art Tile

TELEPHONE, FAIR OAKS 3157

Carrara Marble Neptune Fountain, Reproduction by a Pupil of the Great Sculptor Gianbologna, of his Celebrated Fountain of Neptune in the Piazzo del Nettuno, Bologna, Italy.

THE MEYER AND di SEGNI GALLERY

Antique Furniture, Paintings, Fabrics, Marbles and Bronzes.

640 South Figueroa Street Telephone VAndike 2936

Los Angeles

A little bit of Old Spain. Corner of School Building RANCHO SANTA FE

15 Square Miles of Uniform Beauty

53 Miles of Excellent Roads . . . Lovely Spanish Homes . . . A Civic Center . . . Orchards . . . Scenic Grandeur . . . The Finest Rural-Estate Community In America!

You cannot visualize the vivid unusualness of Rancho Santa Fe. You must see it! It is unlike other developments; it stands quite alone. Imagine, if you will, 9,000 acres of Southern California's choicest sea-and-mountain country being developed to conform to the artist's ideal of exquisite colorings and community oneness. Is the picture not intriguing? Would you not like to live in such a place always . . . in unbounded contentment?

You who have the love of Nature in your souls, you who hear the flutey call of nesting birds, you who would be friends with nodding flowers—you will be charmed beyond measure at the glories of Rancho Santa Fe. It is a new experience—one you will not soon forget.

Fifteen square miles of uniform beauty! Yes, that's the story—the story you cannot help being interested in if you seek serenity . . . and a sunset home place. A subsidiary of the Santa Fe Railway. Ample development resources available. $3,000,000 already spent, $7,000,000 more to be represented in the ultimate investment. 53 miles of splendid roads. Lake Hodges, impounding 12 billion gallons of water. One of California's finest underground, steel and concrete irrigation systems. A beautiful Civic Center Group—administration offices, store, garage, first unit of grammar school, service buildings, plaza. "La Morada" the charming Spanish Guest House, with practically every convenience and luxury of any metropolitan hotel. Electricity for lighting and cooking. These are not promises. They are actual facts and actual accomplishments awaiting your careful investigation!

For you who want land within the Rancho Santa Fe Irrigation District, conditions are extraordinary. Extremely fertile soil; famous San Diego climate; abundant water; a staff of expert horticulturists maintained for your guidance and profit. Resident or non-resident care of land. Thousands of avocado, lemon, valencia orange, apricot, walnut and deciduous fruit trees now thriving in remarkable fashion and all giving promise of returning most gratifying incomes.

Rigid, yet most sensible, building and cultural restrictions assure a permanence of uniform charm and beauty. No home costing less than $5,000 can be constructed; on some of the more desirable beauty spots, not less than $15,000. Each purchaser must plant one-third of his arable acreage or build his home within one year. . . The land is being sold at cost, plus improvement charges only. 15% cash; balance 7 equal, annual payments, 6%. All land improvement work and home building is a cash consideration.

It's a wonderful place, with a most wonderful natural setting. If you can qualify for home ownership here you have the unusual opportunity of living in a colony comprising 15 square miles of uniform beauty! See Rancho Santa Fe! See it soon!

Choicest land $300 to $450 an acre—None higher!

Rancho Santa Fe is located in San Diego County, 5 miles inland from Solana Beach or 7 miles from Del Mar.

Come in or write us for further information. The Sales Office in Los Angeles will be glad to arrange for you to visit the Rancho.

Rancho Santa Fe

SANTA FE LAND IMPROVEMENT CO.

SAN DIEGO COUNTY CALIFORNIA — 601 SECURITY BLDG. LOS ANGELES

MAIL THIS—FOR BOOKLET C.S.-9-25

SANTA FE LAND IMPROVEMENT COMPANY, 601 Security Bldg., Los Angeles.

Kindly send me your illustrated Booklet and further information about Rancho Santa Fe.

Name..... Address.....

CALIFORNIA STATE LIBRARY

CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND

Courtesy of Cannell and Chaffin Galleries. From a Painting by Ivan Olinsky

No. 70 OCTOBER, 1925 25 Cents

THE WOMAN'S ATHLETIC CLUB OF LOS ANGELES

A Favorite Investment

Southern California Edison securities are recommended for women investors because they are safe.

Of the 80,000 Edison Partners, 32,848 are women.

WRITE FOR PARTICULARS

Southern California Edison Company

Los Angeles

Dance!

at the

Ambassador

Cocoanut Grove

to the Entrancing Music of

COCOANUT GROVE ORCHESTRA

Under the Leadership of Ray West

SPECIAL NIGHTS Every Tuesday

COLLEGE NIGHTS

With Dancing Contest every Friday.

Tea Dances

every Saturday at 4:00 in the Fiesta Room, Tea Service $1.00

The Serendipity Antique Shop

Antiques Lamps Decorations

22, 26 and 30 SOUTH LOS ROBLES AVENUE
PASADENA, CALIFORNIA
BRADFORD PERIN, Proprietor
Telephone F. O. 7111

Announcement

The new Interior Decorating Department, has on exhibition many Lamps, Screens, Cushions and Foot-stools made in our own work-room by specialists, as well as fine fabrics for draperies and furniture coverings.

MARTHA

WATSON-KERBY

Exclusive Fashions for Women

GOWNS WRAPS SPORTS CLOTHING

2224 WEST SEVENTH STREET

LOS ANGELES

WESTLAKE SQUARE PHONE FITZROY 0823

Clarence P. Day Corporation

Engineers — Contractors
Builders

205 Boston Bldg.
Pasadena, Calif.

Phone
WAkefield 6841

"UP THE VALLEY AND DOWN THE COAST"

The
CALIFORNIAN HOTEL
MANAGEMENT H. WINGATE LAKE
FRESNO, CALIFORNIA

A modern, model Hotel devoted to sincere hospitality and dedicated to California's Guests.

THE LOGICAL STOPPING PLACE IN THE SAN JOAQUIN VALLEY FOR ALL POINTS OF INTEREST IN THE HIGH SIERRAS.

EUROPEAN PLAN
258 ROOMS - 258 BATHS
$2 & PER DAY AND UP
ALL OUTSIDE ROOMS

PASADENA

The Ideal Home City

—a city of rare educational and cultural advantages, of exquisitely beautiful gardens and homes, of flowers and trees, of charming shops and delightful people. Detailed information may be had at the

Pasadena Chamber of Commerce and Civic Association

TERRA-COTTA FOUNTAIN IN LILY POOL

THIS piece of garden pottery was specially designed and made for the garden of a Los Angeles home. The figure is about life-size, and is in a mat glaze ceramic finish of approximately the color of Tennessee marble. Similar special work can be executed from architects' designs.

Prices upon request.

Gladding, McBean & Co.

Los Angeles Office: Los Feliz Blvd. and S. P. Tracks

Tropico Plant: Glendale, Los Angeles County, California

SOUTHLAND CALENDAR

Announcements of exhibitions, fetes, concerts, club entertainments, etc., for the calendar pages are free of charge and should be received in the office of CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND, Pasadena, at least two weeks previous to date of issue, the 10th. No correction can be guaranteed if they are received later than that date. California Southland is published monthly at Pasadena, California. One dollar and twenty-five cents for six issues, two fifty per year. Addresses will be changed as many times as desired if notice is given before the first of the month for which the change is made.

Entered as second class matter, July 28, 1919, at the Post office at Pasadena, California, under act of March 3, 1879.

Clubs

VALLEY HUNT CLUB, PASADENA:
The formal season at the Valley Hunt Club closed with May, after which time no programs are arranged. The tennis court and swimming pool offer the outdoor attractions during the summer, and individual parties, both afternoon and evening, are arranged as desired.

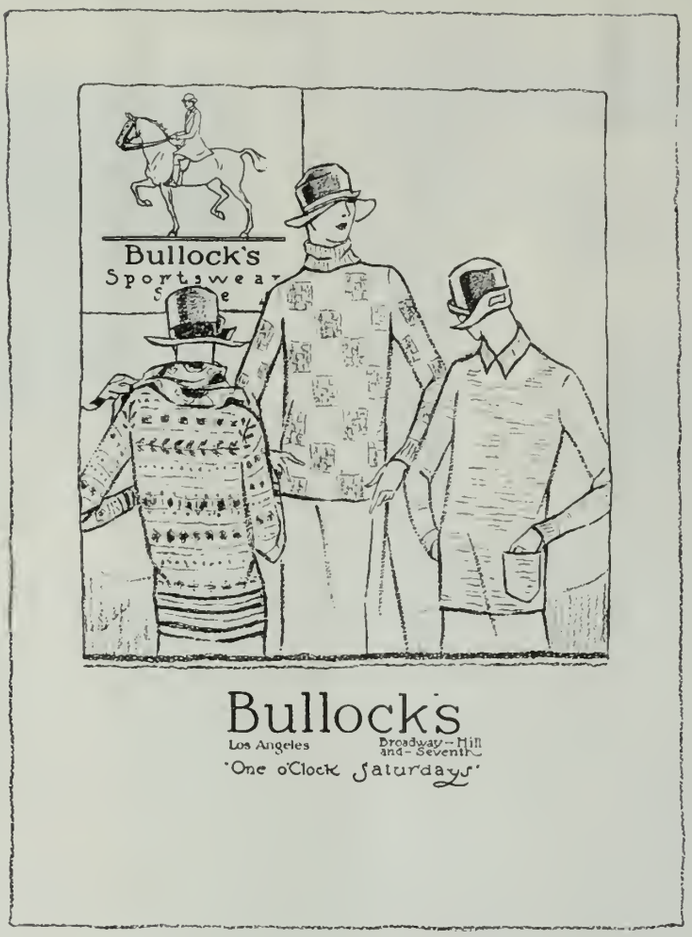
ANNANDALE GOLF CLUB, PASADENA:
The afternoon bridge, Mah Jongg and tea parties have been discontinued for the season, but tea will be served as requested and tables for cards are always available.
Every Friday is Ladies' Day.
The usual Wednesday and Saturday sweepstakes each month through the summer.

FLINTRIDGE COUNTRY CLUB:
Tuesday is Ladies' Day and a special luncheon is served. In the afternoons informal bridge parties may be arranged, followed by tea.

LOS ANGELES COUNTRY CLUB:
Ladies' Days, second Monday of each month.
Music during dinner, followed by dancing, every Saturday evening during the month.
Luncheon served from 11:30 to 2 .p m. on Saturdays.
Sunday night concerts during month. Tea served as requested and tables for cards always available.

WILSHIRE COUNTRY CLUB:
Ladies' Days, third Monday of each month.
Dancing every second and fourth Saturday during the month.
A musical is arranged for each Sunday night in the month.

MIDWICK COUNTRY CLUB:
Ladies' Days, fourth Monday in each month.
Tea and informal bridge every afternoon.
Polo, Wednesday and Saturday of each week.
Dancing every Saturday night.
Buffet luncheon served every Sunday.
Match polo games every Sunday, preceded by luncheon parties, followed by teas, during season.



LOS ANGELES ATHLETIC CLUB:
Dinner dances, Tuesday and Friday nights of every week, Tuesday night informal; Friday night semi-formal. Plunge open to the ladies Tuesday and Friday of every week.

SAN GABRIEL COUNTRY CLUB:
A dinner dance is arranged for the third Thursday of each month.
On Friday of each week a special luncheon is served, with bridge in the afternoons.
Ladies play every day starting after ten a. m., and not before two p. m.

MONTECITO COUNTRY CLUB:
Provides an 18 hole golf course, two concrete and two dirt courts for tennis, bowls and croquet.
Tea is served and informal bridge parties arranged as desired.
A buffet supper is served every Sunday night.

LA CUMBRE GOLF AND COUNTRY CLUB, SANTA BARBARA:
Offers a course of eighteen holes, rivaling any in hazard and beauty. A recent purchase of additional acreage will provide an extended and even more interesting course.
Luncheon is served every day, and tea may be arranged as desired.

REDLANDS COUNTRY CLUB:
Golf tournament for men is held every Saturday. Monday the course is reserved for the women and a special luncheon served. Those who do not play golf or who have had a round in the morning, devote the afternoon to bridge or mah jongg. Every Saturday afternoon tea is served.

Where the Treasures of a Collector May Be Purchased as Gifts

A. Schmidt & Son

For Fifty-six Years Importers of Antique and Modern Silver, Sheffield Plate, Fine China and Glass.

2320 W. Seventh St., Los Angeles
391 E. Colorado St., Pasadena

Boston New York Washington

PALOS VERDES GOLF CLUB:
Offers an eighteen hole, all grass, seaside course, delightful for summer play.
Tea and informal bridge every afternoon.
Lunch and dinner served every day.

PASADENA GOLF CLUB:
Programs covering October social events are out:
October 17: Afternoon Circus Party for Junior Members.
October 31: "All Halloween Night."
Wednesday is Ladies' Day, with cards and mah jongg from two to four-thirty, when tea is served.
Dinner will be served on Sunday from five-thirty to seven-thirty. The usual luncheon and dinner service will prevail through the week.

FLINTRIDGE RIDING CLUB:
The club does not follow a program of events during the summer, but each rider or group of friends follow their own devices and trails. Tea is served on the lawn, under the oaks, and many members remain for dinner.

CALIFORNIA YACHT CLUB:
October 3-4-10-11, Sailing Races.
October 17-18, Motor Boat Races.
October 31, Closing Banquet.

NEWPORT HARBOR YACHT CLUB:
October 10—Winners' Ball. Banquet, 6:30 p. m. Presentation of trophies.

Art

LOS ANGELES Museum of History, Science and Art, Exposition Park, announces: Seventeenth Annual Exhibition of the California Art Club, October 1 to 30. November 3 to January 1, Pan-American Exhibition of Oil Paintings.
The Museum is open daily from ten to four, excepting Wednesday afternoon. Sundays from two to five.

SOUTHWEST MUSEUM, Marmion Way and Avenue 46, Los Angeles, Exhibition of old European Masters.
Educational courses opened at the Museum in September to continue through the winter, including the usual lecture course, with the Sunday afternoon lecture at three.

THE BILTMORE SALON will continue into October the exhibition of portraits by Herbert Acker, which opened September 22, and which will be of special interest during opera week as the exhibition includes a portrait of Alice Gentle. Hanson Puthuff will hold the first one man show of the season in the Salon through the first two weeks in October. The Print Room will show a new series of etchings opening October 1st.

THE CANNELL AND CHAFFIN galleries, 720 West Seventh Street, Los Angeles, announce two shows to October 10; Jack Wilkinson Smith showing marines and landscapes, Arthur Hazard showing water colors of Cuba.
October 12 to 26, new paintings by the leading California artists will be exhibited. In the Print Room to October 10, etchings by Henri di Kruif and Troy Kinney; October 28 to November 12, Neal Ordayne.

MRS. A. B. WENZELL has opened her studio at 3002 Wilshire Boulevard, for the exhibition of paintings and drawings by A. B. Wenzell. There are landscapes that have not been exhibited before and some very lovely and unusual sketches. This is a remarkable and interesting collection of the work of one of our famous American artists, who bore an international reputation for his paintings of beautiful women. The studio is open daily from three until six and at other times by appointment.

THE EBELL CLUB, Los Angeles, resumes the monthly exhibition of pictures, with the first show, October 3, including the following artists: Norman Chamberlain, Carl Oscar Borg, Clyde Forsythe, Anna Hills, Hansen Puthuff, Roscoe Shrader, Jack Wilkinson Smith, and William Wendt. Lurah C. Davis has been elected chairman of the art committee.

THE prizes in the sixth anniversary exhibition of the Laguna Beach Art Association, held throughout September, were awarded as follows: The Sherman Stevens' prize of $100 for the best picture in the exhibition regardless of subject, went to Karl Yens for his study, "The Nightingale and the Peacock." The prize for landscape, given by Mrs. William Montgomery of Hollywood, was won by Irving Manoir's "Fairyland Country, Taos, N. M." The prize given by the St. Ann's Inn for the best marine went to Edgar Payne, and the association's prize for figure painting was awarded to Donna Schuster. Honorable mention was given to William A. Griffith, Norman Chamberlain, Clarence Hinkle, and Ruth Peabody.

WEST COAST ARTS, Incorporated, composed of women painters and sculptors, held their September show on the fifth floor of the Y. W. C. A. building in Los Angeles. The club now has under discussion the possibilities of building an art center in the Hollywood Bowl. This has the approval of Mrs. J. J. Carter, sponsor for the musical programs of the Bowl, who has suggested that the club make an arrangement with the county, similar to that made by the musicians, that the county hold the land, while the club stipulates for the ownership of the buildings to be erected.

PASADENA ART INSTITUTE, Carmelita Gardens, will hold a very interesting exhibit during October. One room will, as usual, be given to the work of the best local artists, including Alson Clark, F. Carl Smith, Frances Clark, Louis H. Sharp, Benjamin Brown, Frederick Zimmerman, Orrin White, Isabel Champlin, Carl Moon, Guy Rose, Jean Mannheim, Harold Streeter and W. D. Doss. Karl Yens will show recent oils in one room, and prints in another.

Pastels and water colors will be shown by Mrs. McCaig, and Anna Marie Wirth will exhibit a few choice miniatures. The gallery is open daily from ten to five, and on Sundays from two to five. Admission is free. Mrs. Margaret Conless is assistant secretary of the Institute.

STENDAHL GALLERIES, The Ambassador Hotel, Los Angeles, will show during the month, woodcuts by Rodliha, Checo-Slavakian artist; Etchings; and French paintings by Millet, Julian Dupre, Charles Jacque and Millais. Several canvases by William Keith and by George Innes.

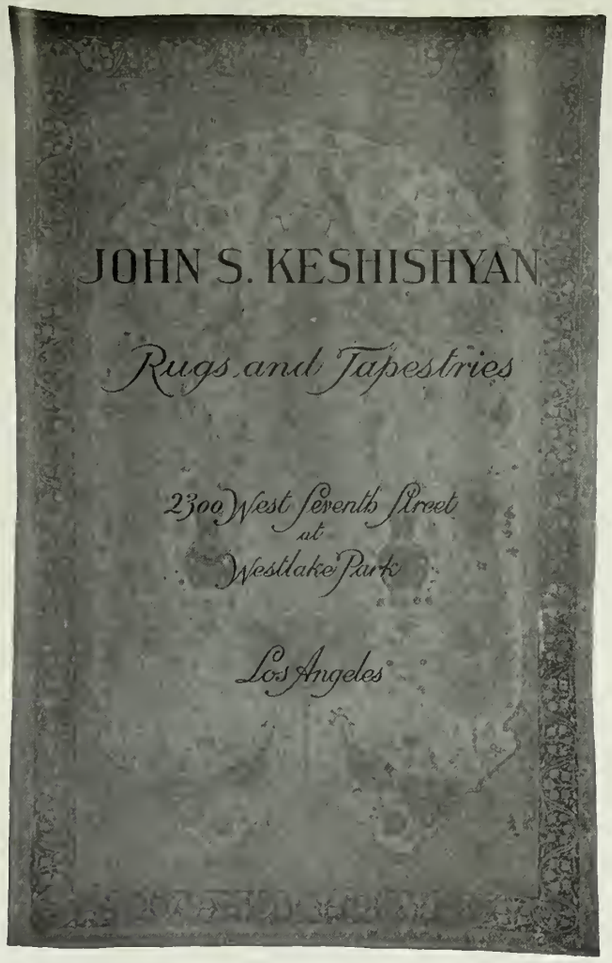
ARTS AND CRAFTS SOCIETY of Southern California have taken new quarters in the twenty-eight hundred block on West Seventh Street, Los Angeles, with gallery and show rooms. Monthly meetings in the studios of members are planned for the winter, the first was held last month in the studio of Mr. and Mrs. Francis William Vreeland.

CALIFORNIA ART CLUB held the opening dinner at the Club Rooms in the Otis Art Institute last month. The dinner honored the art committee chairmen of the woman's clubs.

ARIZONA STATE FAIR at Phoenix, November 9-14, is the twenty-first State fair and the eleventh annual art exhibition. These exhibitions always carry liberal prizes, and the Woman's Club of Phoenix buys each year one good canvas from the paintings exhibited.

PRIZE winners in the art exhibition at the Los Angeles County Fair, Pomona, are as follows: "Frederica" by John Hubbard Rich, first prize for oils; "Girl" by Edouard Vysekal, second prize; "Sierra Dawn" by Leland Curtis, third prize. In water color painting: "Ravello, Italy" by Romilda Castuccio, first prize; "At the Market" by Barse Miller, second prize; "Interrupted" by Henry Richter, third prize. In sculpture: "Mantel Piece" by Roger Noble Burnham, first prize; "The Flutist" by Merrell Gage, second prize; "Prodigal Son" by Ella Buchanan, third prize. Prize winners from the Otis Art Institute are Lillian Dayton, Dorothy Dowiatt, Jessie E. Herron, George Hinckley, and Robert Genung; those from the Chouinard School of Art are Ross Dickinson, Cecil Watkins, E. W. Bagard, and Benjamin Messick. Stanley Miller of the Franklin High School was also awarded a prize.

THE PAN-AMERICAN exhibition of oil paintings, which is to open at the Los Angeles Museum, Exposition Park, on November 3, 1925, is of international importance. This year there will be held in the United States three great exhibitions of paintings: The National Academy Centenary Exhibition, to which the Corcoran Gallery at Washington will devote all its exhibition space; the Carnegie International Exhibition, to be held in Pittsburgh, and this Pan-American Exhibition to be held in Los Angeles. The first will be devoted to American art and will be largely a retrospective exhibition. The second will include modern American art, together with contemporary paintings from England and the continent of Europe. The Pan-American Exhibition will include paintings by artists of North, South and Central American, with about thirty paintings from Mexico by representative Mexican artists.



AARON KILPATRICK is driving north on a sketching trip which may extend to Vancouver.

THE SAGEBRUSH ART CLUB of Tujunga held their fourth exhibition last month at the studio of Laura Lee Sweet.

EVYLENA NUNN MILLER exhibited a collection of paintings, representing a "round the world tour" at the Pasadena Art Institute, Carmelita Gardens, last month, including studies of Egypt, Palestine, India, Malay, Singapore, China, Japan, Italy, France, England and Scotland.

Music

LOS ANGELES GRAND OPERA ASSOCIATION, Benjamin F. Bledsoe, president, Merle Armitage, business manager, announces the revised presentation schedule of the second season of grand opera: "Carmen," Thursday, October 1; "Lakme," Saturday (matinee), October 3, and "Cavalleria Rusticana," and "La Navarraise," Monday, October 5. The season opened with "Aida," September 29. Artists appearing in the leading roles are: Alice Gentle, Rosa Raisa, Anna Ruzena Sprotte, Maria Kurenko, Mme. Elizabeth Rothwell, Charles Hackett, Giocomo Rimini, Richard Hageman, Edward Johnson, Vincente Ballester, Kathryn Meisle, Desire Defrere, Margaret M. Morris, Ulysses Lappas, Eduard Coutriel, John Marshall Brumbaugh, Flora Myers Engel, and Marjorie Dodge. Richard Hageman conducts, and William Tyroler is director of the chorus. The opera will be given at the Philharmonic Auditorium.

The Cheesewright Studios, Inc.

Decorators and Furnishers

322 EAST COLORADO STREET

TELEPHONE FAIR OAKS 8820

PASADENA CALIFORNIA

CALIFORNIA OPERA COMPANY, under the direction of Gaetano Merola, with Alexander Bevani, art director, will open a Los Angeles season at the new Olympic Auditorium on Grand Avenue at 18th Street, October 6 to 12. The opening opera will be "Manon" with Rosina Torri in the title role. Other principals of this organization include Claudia Muzio, Elvira de Hidalgo, Vittoria Trevisan, Marguerite D'Alvarez, Riccardo Stracciari, Fernand Ansseau, Tito Schiapa, Oliviero, Nicholich, Journet, Ceasare Formichi and Antonio Cortis, also the Los Angeles singers, Eleanor Marlo, Mary Teitsworth, Leoto Castellau and J. H. Beauparlant.

Other operas of the season's repertory include "Aida," "La Tosca," Samson and Delilah," "Barber of Seville" and "Love of Three Kings."

THE Philharmonic Orchestra, Walter Henry Rothwell, director, will open the seventh symphony season, Friday afternoon, October 23, and Saturday night, October 24. The first soloist of the season, Felix Salmond, English 'cellist, will be heard at the second pair of concerts, November 6 and 7. The concerts will be given, as usual, at the Philharmonic Auditorium, Fifth and Olive Streets, Los Angeles.

THE LOS ANGELES TRIO, May MacDonald Hope, pianist and founder, Sylvain Noack, violin, Ilya Bronson, 'cello, will give their six evening concerts in the Music Room of the Hotel Biltmore, Los Angeles, opening October 28.

THE eighth regional conference of the California Eisteddfod Association was held Saturday afternoon, September 26, at the Fine Arts Building, California University, Southern Branch. Supper was served in the Indian Village Tea Room, near the University, open to members and guests. There was a musical program and jinks. Circulars containing the music contest selections and rules of the 1926 Eisteddfod were distributed. These include contests for pianists, singers, violinists, choral clubs and church choirs, orchestras, college glee clubs, elementary and high school choruses, men's service or luncheon clubs, and community singing groups. The next regional conference will be held in Oxnard, October 24.

L. E. BEHYMER announces the opening of the Tuesday Evening Artist Course Series, October 20. The artist is Elizabeth Rethberg, dramatic soprano of the Metropolitan. Under a new arrangement for this season patrons are offered a selective course by which fourteen events may be chosen from the twenty-one listed under the Tuesday and Thursday Artist Courses. All recitals will be held at the Philharmonic Auditorium, Los Angeles.

AUDITORIUM ARTIST SERIES, George Leslie Smith, manager, will open the third season with Vincente Ballester, baritone, Metropolitan Opera Company, November 2.

SAN DIEGO OPERA COMPANY, INC., announces the second season of Civic Grand Opera, October 8 to 15, to open with "Aida," which will be followed by "Il Trovatore," "Faust," "Martha" and "Samson and Delilah.' The performances will be given at Spreckels Theater.

ARTHUR FARWELL'S masque, "The March of Man," closed the musical season at Fawnskin, Big Bear Lake, last month, with four delightful performances.

THE Seven Arts Club of Long Beach, Kathryn Coffield, director, announces a series of thirteen concerts and lecture events for the season. There will be seven Tuesday afternoon attractions, opening with Alice Gentle, October 6, followed by Dr. Robert A. Milliken, scientist, November 3, Grace Wood Jess, costume recitalist, December 1; Cecil Arden, Metropolitan contralto, January 19; Ethel Leginska, pianist, February 16; Thelma Green, violinist, March 2; and Gay MacLaren, reader, April 20.

PASADENA Oratorio Society, Robert E. Clark, director, began rehearsals in the music rooms of the Pasadena High School early last month.

THE Opera Reading Club of Los Angeles and Hollywood, Mrs. Ralph Waldo Bucknam, president, announces the opening program of its fourth year will be held at the Woman's Club House of Hollywood, October 5. Frank Nagel will present the opera, "Samson and Delilah."

THE Glendale Musical Club, Mrs. M. Boyd Jones, president, will present during the season seven musical attractions, including solar recitals by Vincente Ballester, Hulda Leshanska, Margaret Matzenauer, and Olga Samaroff.

THE San Francisco Symphony Orchestra, directed by Alfred Hertz, will begin its fifteenth season October 23. There will be a series of thirty-four concerts.

THE New Music Society of California, at Los Angeles, it is announced, will be the first to play D. Rudhyer's symphonic poem, "The Surge of Fire." It will be directed by Arthur Bliss in October. It is a trilogy for small orchestra: three pianos, a quartet of strings, trumpet, horn, trombone, flute, oboe, clarinet and bassoon.

THE Alhambra Community Sing, Mrs. Mary Harwood, president, opened the third season's work last month, at the High School Auditorium, under Hugo Kirchofer's direction, with Clarence Kellogg as accompanist.

Announcements

PASADENA COMMUNITY PLAYHOUSE: "The Show Shop" by James Forbes, October 1 to 10; "Pharoah's Daughter" by Dr. and Mrs. Allison Gaw, October 15 to 24; "The Main Thing" by Nicolas Everynoy, October 29 to November 7. Each play will begin on a Thursday and end on the second Saturday; eleven performances, matinees on Saturday only.

ALHAMBRA-SAN GABRIEL COMMUNITY PLAYERS will present the mystery play, "The Thirteenth Chair" as the opening offering of the season, October 12.

POTBOILER ART THEATER, 930 South Grand Ave., Los Angeles, is continuing "Fata Morgana," the continental comedy-drama, by Ernest Vajda, into the second week, opening September 28. The cast, directed by Nathaniel Frank, includes Stella de Lanti, Mervin Williams and Michael Dark.

PILGRIMAGE PLAY ASSOCIATION plans to purchase the amphitheater sites on Cahuenga Avenue as a permanent home for this regularly produced Passion Play, which closed the sixth season in September.

SHAKESPEARE CLUB OF PASADENA announces a Spanish Fiesta at the Hahn Rancho, Foothill Boulevard, October 17, for the benefit of the building fund.

PASADENA BROWNING CLUB will hold the regular meetings of the year at the Community Playhouse clubroom, 39 South El Molino Avenue, opening Thursday, October 8. Meetings will be held the second and fourth Thursday of each month and Dr. Bertha Lovewell Dickinson will again direct the study. Mrs. Stuart W. French is president of the club.

BUSINESS and Professional Women's Clubs, Southern District, California Federation, held the sixth annual convention at the Women's Athletic Club, Los Angeles, September 5. The following officers were elected: Miss Sue Brobst was elected president; Mrs. Winters, vice-president; Miss Elsa Beregasy, recording secretary; Miss Octavia Leseur, treasurer; Miss Golda Madden Wright, auditor.

HOLLYWOOD WOMAN'S CLUB is sponsoring the Fall Flower Show to be given October 16-17, afternoon and evening, in the clubhouse and grounds.

THE FRIDAY MORNING CLUB made the newspaper women of Los Angeles the honor guests of the first affair of the season, a luncheon held September 26 in the banquet hall of the clubhouse, Mrs. O. P. Clark presiding.

THE SOROPTIMIST CLUB, after two month's vacation, resumed their monthly luncheons, with programs, at the Biltmore Hotel, Los Angeles, Tuesday, September 8; the first being California Admission Day program, celebrating the Diamond Jubilee, arranged by Grace S. Stoermer. The second was a musical program by Madame Grace Whistler, assisted by her artist pupil, Olive Coles. The third was a business meeting, and at the fourth the program was given entirely by the members.

PASADENA FALL FLOWER SHOW dates are October 22, 23 and 24, at the Maryland Hotel, under the auspices of the Pasadena Horticultural Society. The 1925 prize will be awarded the dahlias, last year the prize was given for chrysanthemums, and next year it will go to roses.

FIESTA DE ANZA is the title selected for the pageant of the Southern California Fair at Riverside, and the first presentation is announced for October 1.

PASADENA PUBLIC LIBRARY serves an increasing number of people every month, and through the Reference Department information on practically every subject may be obtained. The Hill Avenue branch, a Spanish type of building, opened in the Spring, has grown steadily in popularity.

DR. JOHN CAMPBELL MERRIAM, president of the Carnegie Institute of Washington, was in California in September, visiting several departments of the Carnegie Institute, the Mt. Wilson Observatory, the department of plant physiology at Carmel, and the department of ecology, the units of which are in various sections of the state.

MILLS COLLEGE, Oakland, California, will celebrate the one hundredth anniversary of the founder, Susan Tolman Mills, October 2-4. The annual Shakesperian play, "Twelfth Night," given by the Student Drama Association; the Centennial pageant, "The Torch of Youth," written by one of the alumni, will be two of the interesting features. The new art gallery will be formally opened October 4, from two to six.

UNIVERSITY OF CALIFORNIA, at Los Angeles, has secured the services of Captain Paul Perigord as head of the French department and professor of French literature. One course will be confined to French civilization, based upon personal observation and knowledge.

MAURICE BROWNE, one of the founders of the Little Theatre movement in Chicago, is to give courses in acting, staging, and producing at Metropolitan College, University of Southern California, this fall. Mr. Browne, who was casting director for Margaret Anglin, is to have charge of a Friday afternoon group in Preliminary Staging, constituting a foundation course in practical stagecraft, and lighting. On Friday evening a class will be given in Preliminary Acting, which will meet at 7 o'clock for instruction in practical acting, including diction and pantomine. A Producing Group, covering advanced rehearsal work, and including the training of directors, leading to actual production, is to be conducted by Mr. Browne on Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday evenings at 7 o'clock. All of these three coursese are to be given at Metropolitan College, on the top floor of the Transportation Building, Seventh and Los Angeles Streets.

Carrara Marble Neptune Fountain, Reproduction by a Pupil of the Great Sculptor Gianbologna, of his Celebrated Fountain of Neptune in the Piazzo del Nettuno, Bologna, Italy.

THE MEYER AND di SEGNI GALLERY
Antique Furniture, Paintings, Fabrics, Marbles and Bronzes.
640 South Figueroa Street Telephone VAndike 2936
Los Angeles

MEXICAN Fabrile GLASS

Still made as in the days of the "Ancients," this glassware from Old Mexico bears the crude grace, the mark of character, and the distinction of a bygone civilization in which each artisan endeavored to make his handiwork excel.

Sold in America's most exclusive shops, from the importations of the Talavera Importing Co., Inc.

322 E. Colorado Street Pasadena

From the Alameda in Mexico City, comes the authority for the use of Talavera Glazed Tiles in Civic Architecture for California.

Glazed Tiles from Old Mexico

We are now carrying a stock of Mexican Talavera Tiles and Tile Panels, which is added to regularly by the shipments received from our connections in Mexico. Ask your architect or tile dealer to show you the possibilities and decorative qualities of Mexican Talavera Glazed Tiles; or write to us directly.

TALAVERA IMPORTING COMPANY
322 E. Colorado St., Pasadea

Pomona College, Claremont

AN unusually fine program for the Pomona College Music and Drama course has been arranged for the ensuing year. The opening number of the course presents the Metropolitan Opera Singer Hidalgo in concert Friday evening, October 23.

In addition to the Music and Drama course numbers, two lectures have been secured by the college, to be accompanied by motion pictures, the first will be presented in Holmes Hall, October 21, by E. C. La Rue, hydraulic engineer and a member of the last party to go through the Grand Canyon under the conductorship of Claude Bird-eye. He will lecture on the canyon, showing scenery, and experiences of the party. Roy Chapman Andrews, the man who first discovered dinosaur eggs and is now in China, will lecture in November.

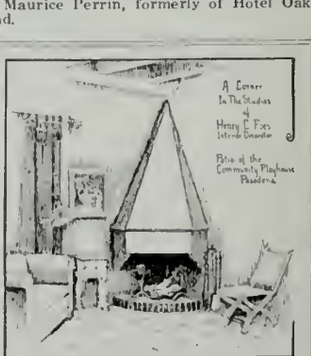
Santa Barbara

SCHOOL OF THE ARTS, Frank Morley Fletcher, director, is an educational movement, maintained by disinterested persons and supported by contributions and fees. Its purpose is to provide instruction for students intending to follow a professional career, students who desire to develop their own interest and talent in a particular branch of art, and others who wish to advance the Santa Barbara Community Arts Assn. of Music, Drama and the Fine Arts. The 1925-1926 term is divided into two semesters: October 12-January 30; February 1-May 15, inclusive.

During the week of October 5-10, the new temporary quarters of the School of the Arts will be open for inspection, and the deferred exhibition of students' work will be held. Address all inquiries to Mrs. Jeanne Auze, Executive Secretary, 916 Santa Barbara Street, Santa Barbara.

THE WOMAN'S CLUB OF SANTA BARBARA will sponsor a series of concerts for the season. The first event to be a concert by Olga Steeb, pianist, and Marjorie Dodge, soprano.

THE COMMUNITY ARTS PLAYERS announce the opening of the Sixth Season of plays to be given in the Lobero Theatre on October 22, 23 and 24, 1925. Under the direction of Colin Campbell Clements, the first half will include: "Merton of the Movies," by Kaufman and Connelly; "Wappin' Wharf," by Charles S. Brooks; "A Kiss for Cinderella," by Sir James Barrie; "Minick," by Edna Ferber.



SPECIAL benefit production for the new School of the Arts, "Mr. Pim Passes By," a delightful comedy by A. A. Milne, under the direction of Ian Wolfe, is announced at The Lobero Theatre, Saturday, October 3, matinee and evening. The cast includes: Maud Morley Fletcher, George McConnel, Dudley Carpenter, Margaret Barr, Richard Seares, Claire Ayles.

Extended Service

LAKE ARROWHEAD LODGE, (formerly Arlington Lodge), on Lake Arrowhead, California, E. K. Hoak, owner and manager, announces that every preparation is being made for sports throughout the season. Snow carnivals and winter sports, skiing, snowshoeing, skating, tobogganing, and sleighing add new pleasures to a winter in California. The Lodge is well heated throughout, with a huge fireplace in the great lounge to insure winter comfort.

"THE AZTEC," the new Monrovia Community Hotel, formerly opens this month.

THE GREEN TEA POT, the charming cafe in the Green Hotel, Pasadena, reopens October 12, under the management of Maurice Perrin, formerly of Hotel Oakland.

HENRY C. FOES
INTERIOR DECORATOR
Studio, in Patio of the Community Playhouse
33 So. El Molino Ave. Pasadena
Phone Terrace 0883

El Paseo Patio

Lunch Out of Doors or Dine

at

"EL PASEO"

23 E. de la Guerra St.

Santa Barbara

School Calendar

ELLIOTT SCHOOL FOR GIRLS—Elaborate Hallowe'en Party and Program for Students, Parents and Faculty about October 30.

GIRLS' COLLEGIATE SCHOOL—Opening of the New School at Glendora, October 8. Four of the School Buildings and the "Five Dormitories Under One Roof" will be ready.

WESTLAKE SCHOOL FOR GIRLS—Alumnae Tea, October 1; Junior College Student and Faculty Dinner, October 29.

NORMA GOULD STUDIOS—Opening of the Season October 3. Dancing Classes for Babies, Children, Young and Older Women. Also Ballroom Classes. Miss Gould and assisting dancers at Ebell Club, Filmore, California, October 27.

Miss Gould and assisting dancers at Woman's Club of Orange, November 2.

Miss Gould and assisting dancers in costume lecture and demonstration, Tuesday Afternoon Club of Glendale, November 10.

KENWOOD HALL SCHOOL FOR GIRLS—Preceding school opening, Al Fresco Breakfast in School Gardens for Faculty and Friends of the School.

URBAN MILITARY ACADEMY—Opening of the magnificent new indoor swimming pool early in October.

Hallowe'en Party for Cadets, October 29.

F. W. Riedell

Interior Decorations

Technical knowledge and wide experience gained in connections with best decorators for many years. Shops equipped for service to those of most exacting demands.

Fine Draperies

Upholstering

ANTIQUES
REPAIRED AND RESTORED

Parchment Lamp Shades

Awnings of Venetian Sail Cloth

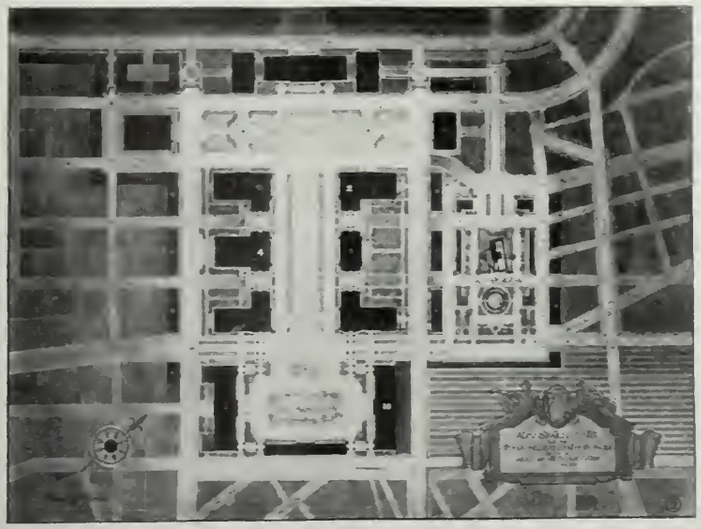
Wall Fabrics Slip Covers

Mihran Studio Bldg.

Santa Barbara, Calif.

25 E. Carrillo St. Phone 1735

FOR SALE: In Montecito, Santa Barbara's exclusive suburb, a charming, newly-built Norman-French cottage (Pierpont & Walter S. Davis, architects). Eight rooms and entrance hall, three master bedrooms, two baths, two maids' rooms and bath. Double garage. Brick terrace. Lot 100x150, attractively planted. Convenient to private school. Less than mile to bathing beach. Price $32,000. Kodak prints and further details sent on application to owner, Miss C. M. Taber, 1519 Bath Street, Santa Barbara.



SANTA BARBARA, CALIF.

H. G. CHASE

(Established 1903)

Real Estate and Rentals

1012 State St. Phone 125

No. 2—Hall of Justice. No. 4—City Hall. No. 10—Proposed Union Terminal

THE ADMINISTRATION CENTER

This gift of service to the City of Los Angeles and the County of Los Angeles by the Allied Architects Association of Los Angeles is an outstanding example of foresightedness, good judgment and civic appreciation. Foresightedness in that it provided for and had faith in the Plaza Terminal; good judgment in that it fulfills all the requirements of other plans: Civic appreciation in that it preserves the Historic Plaza; the sole remaining link between our pioneer founders and this great modern Metropolis.

Mt. LOWE
"Earth has no finer view to show."

Mt. LOWE TAVERN and Cottages
Enlarged and Improved

at the terminus of this World-Famous Trip afford a most delightful retreat for a long or short sojourn at reasonable rates

5 Trains Daily at convenient hours - from Main St. Station Los Angeles

$2.50 Round Trip Rate

For information and Reservations apply

Pacific Electric Ry.
Information Bureau Phone MEtaio-TR3661

HOTEL GREEN

A well ordered Residential and Tourist Hotel of peculiar excellence. Open all year. Moderate rates. Apartments by the month.

The Green Tea Pot

CHARLES B. HERVEY, Proprietor

The
Biltmore
Salon

Los Angeles Biltmore

PAINTINGS
ETCHINGS
BRONZES

California Southland

M. URMY SEARES - - - - - Editor and Publisher
ELLEN LEECH - - - - - - - Associate Editor

NO. 70, VOL. VII OCTOBER, 1925

CONTENTS

	PAGE
FROM THE CANNELL AND CHAFFIN GALLERIES.....Cover Design
SOUTHLAND CALENDAR.....Ellen Leech	4, 5, 6
THE WOMAN'S ATHLETIC CLUB.....Mrs. William H. Anderson (Allison & Allison, Architects)	9
AN INTERIOR DECORATOR WHO WORKS WITH THE ARCHITECT..	11
PORTRAITS AND PAINTINGS BY TAUSZKY....Richard Walgrave	12
PARIS EXHIBITION OF DECOPATIVE ARTS.....Ethel Rose	13
RECENT BOOKS—REVIEWS.....Louise Morgrage	13
LITTLE THEATER OR COMMUNITY PLAYHOUSE...Mary Nordhoff	14
MURAL DECORATION IN EL PASEO PATIO.....John W. Gamble	15
SOUTHLAND OPINION	16, 17
THE DEL MONTE TOURNAMENT.....	18
OTHER PLACES, OTHER SPORTS.....	19
ASSISTANCE LEAGUE OF SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA.....	20
A LOVELY HOME ON LOMBARDY ROAD..... (Wallace Neff, Architect)	22
YOSEMITE VALLEY, CALIFORNIA.....Edith Thomas	25
A COURSE IN THE APPRECIATION OF ARCHITECTURE..... (Prepared by Nell Huntington Gere, Associate Professor of Fine Arts, U. C., at the Request of Mrs. R. B. Peters, State Chairman, Art Division, California Federation.)	26
SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA CHAPTER A. I. A.....H. O. Sexsmith	28
LOCAL COLOR IN ARCHITECTURE.....Myron Hunt	28
BULLETIN OF THE ARCHITECTURAL CLUB.....	29
ARTS AND CRAFTS SOCIETY.....Marion Hugus Clark	30

CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND is published monthly at Pasadena, Cal.
Copyrighted, 1925, by M Urmy Seares
Subscription price $2.50 per year, $1.25 one half year
RALPH B. URMY, ADVERTISING MANAGER
CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND, PASADENA, CALIFORNIA
Mrs. Don B. Sebastion, 2410½ W. 7th St., L. A., Pub. Representative
Advertisers unaccustomed to furnishing national advertising copy to quality magazines may call Fair Oaks 7034 for assistance
During Press Week, 24th to 30th, call TRinity 1501

J. W. Robinson Co.

Order Now

Personal Engraved Greeting Cards

DISTINCTIVE designs, interesting color effects, novel envelope linings combined with skillful engraving contribute to the effectiveness of the new cards.

Many of them are designs exclusive to Robinson's, meeting the requirements of good taste, appropriateness to the season and individuality.

Large Norcross masterpiece folders with name and greeting hand lettered on each folder priced as high as six hundred dollars for one hundred cards.

Other cards priced as low as $8 for 100 Cards.

Round the World Cruises
$1500 and up

Mediterranean Cruises
$900 and up

Agency for all tours and cruises. Let us arrange your reservations.

C. J. JONES STEAMSHIP AGENCY
294 East Colorado St., Pasadena
Phone Fair Oaks 8026

Patio in the house of Harold Waldmann

MARGARET CRAIG
ARCHITECTURAL PHOTOGRAPHY
Portraits by Appointment

Official Photographer for California Southland

3223 W. Sixth Street
Telephone WAsh. 1653 Los Angeles

La Solana

A quiet, well-appointed small hotel on the West Side near Orange Grove Avenue.
Each menu is carefully planned and prepared every day.

Grand Ave. and Lockhaven St. Pasadena

JAMES CINI & COMPANY
of Italy
Antique and Foreign Jewelry
Italian and French Novelties
390 E. Walnut St. Pasadena, Calif.
Fair Oaks 5583

THE MANSFIELD SHOPS
Pasadena and Los Angeles
Consulting Decorators
Interiors designed and executed— WAshington 3473
Embroiderie — Textiles— DRexel 1747

CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND
AN ILLUSTRATED MAGAZINE OF NATIONAL INTEREST

THE WOMEN'S ATHLETIC CLUB OF LOS ANGELES

By JESSICA CALHOUN ANDERSON

IN the rush and confusion of Los Angeles downtown business district in Flower street near Eighth, one comes upon a building of quiet grandeur and great architectural beauty, the Women's Athletic Club of Los Angeles. It is in seven stories in the highest part. the remainder in six, and of solid reinforced concrete, covering one hundred and fifty feet square.

The interior produces the same impression of dignity and loveliess. The ceilings are high and vaulted, the downward curves melting low into the walls. The halls and rooms are spacious. Their harmony of proportion, arrangement, outlines and the design of decoration give a sense of poised, cultural intention and form a perfect example of the Velesquez principle in art—"low in color, high in tone."

The whole building, inside and out, is an expression of the taste and ability of the women who gave about two years of their lives almost exclusively to directing its construction and furnishing, from the inception of the idea to the completion. And its general effect is to inspire the conviction that womanhood is given to earth to conserve in all things, beauty, wholesomeness, grace, and nobility.

The club home is an achievement upon which any group of people anywhere could be congratulated, not only as a great financial feat of over a million dllars' scope and an artistic creation of modern architectural magnificence, but also as a thorough, practical institution in its utilitarian aspects. The hardware, draperies, furniture, and service appointments are of the very best and newest workmanship, and are the pride of the local factories and artcraft shops where they were made. In fact, the requirements of the present-day woman's social, business and club life are met in a way that not only gives satisfaction but alluring charm.

One of the most refreshing features is the patio, sixty by sixty-five feet, on the second story above the street, enclosed on the east by a high stone wall and on the other three sides by the building. Its gay flowers and olive trees bordering the lawn make a colorful frieze and lacy patterns of tall, soft green foliage against the gray stone walls. This delightful spot with its loggia for statuary, is overlooked by the library bay, by balconies and the windows of private rooms, and is entered through wide opening French doors from the great reception hall and private banquet rooms.

The club affords its members, resident and nonresident, not only congenial living quarters, overnight rooms, conference, writing and reading rooms, but a downtown place for luncheons, dinners, all sorts of entertainment for usual guests and distinguished visitors, besides offering the best the age affords in well equipped plunge, showers, baths, dressing rooms, "beauty parlors," gymnasium and a provision for a roof tennis court. It is elastic in its ability to give accommodations for all sorts of occasional requirements.

Women who have seen women's clubs in the world's great capitals have said that this is the most beautiful and highly satisfactory of them all. Guests from this country and abroad have here a haven of rest and members find it the acme of California life.

THE GARDEN PATIO OF THE WOMAN'S ATHLETIC CLUB OF LOS ANGELES. ALLISON AND ALLISON, ARCHITECTS. PHOTOGRAPH BY SEDILLA

THE MAIN FACADE. PHOTOGRAPH BY MARGARET CRAIG
THE WOMAN'S ATHLETIC CLUB ON SOUTH FLOWER STREET, LOS ANGELES

ALLISON AND ALLISON ARCHITECTS

THE problem of the architects was manifold. They must design an exterior expressive of the building's purpose and yet limited by the restrictions of a cast iron city street.

That he succeeded is manifested in the tall, slender, and remarkably graceful structure which looks out over the city with the calm poise of a woman who has lived fully and exquisitely. In detail the exterior has many qualities of charm and strength, and its perfect proportions and delightful decorations will fill days of study for those who are looking for growth in the appreciation of fine architecture.

The interior is here shown mainly in photographs, for pictures speak more subtly than words to those who know how to appreciate beauty in the finer application of art to walls and furnishings.

Dignity and reserve greet the guest and the club members as they enter the spacious hall on the street floor.

These qualities remain with one as she goes up to the living quarters of the club. Everywhere there is mastery of color and line. Color greets one as it does in a landscape, subtle, satisfying, never obtrusively, never out of place. The ceilings are as rich as is the sky above us, the hangings balance in luscious tones so controlled that they keep their place and sing as a symphonic whole.

Chosen by the architects and working with them from the inception of the plans until their completion, Mr. Tierney and Mr. Lawford went to New York to look over the local field and importations, for materials which might be available. In composing the picture they planned to make of these quiet, exquisitely colored rooms, they left no corner of the art market unsearched. Every piece of furniture was designed for a certain spot and its textiles and fringe changed if it did not suit the artist's eye.

Thirty-five important manufacturers and importers of furniture and fabrics contributed and thousands of samples were studied before these artists were satisfied.

Knowledge of what the world of Art has to offer is the first essential in an interior decorator's success. Then when the fabrics and the designs are selected, taste and skill will weave them into a perfect whole.

THE INTERIOR OF THE WOMAN'S ATHLETIC CLUB WAS COMPLETELY IN THE HANDS OF TIERNEY AND LAWFORD, OF LOS ANGELES—THE ENTRANCE

THE MAIN DRAWING ROOM OF THE CLUB HOUSE OPENS UPON THE GARDEN AND IS BRILLIANTLY LIGHTED, SHOWING THE SKILL OF THE ARCHITECT IN AN INTERIOR AND THE SYMPATHETIC COLLABORATION OF THE DECORATOR—TIERNEY AND LAWFORD, DECORATORS

TIERNEY AND LAWFORD, DECORATORS

DETAIL OF THE DRAWING ROOM. PHOTOGRAPH BY MARGARET CRAIG.

THE DINING ROOM AND BALLROOM. TIERNEY AND LAWFORD

FROM THE HANDSOME SHOW ROOMS OF TIERNEY AND LAWFORD ON SEVENTH STREET THE FURNITURE WAS SUPPLIED, EACH PIECE MADE TO FIT ITS PLACE IN FORM AND COLOR. PHOTOGRAPH BY MOTT

THE painter, out of the alchemy of his brain, places on canvas the picture formed by pigments of differing colors: the decorator works with colors and pigments too, but his is a more complicated task. Upon a cubical canvas which the observer views from the inside, he must place his flat colors, his hangings, his objects of art and of usefulness so blended by the skill of his talent and training that his constantly changing audience may wander from room to room and find new delight at every turn, new pleasure and new evidence of harmony.

These brilliant, harmonious pictures were made by the genius of trained architects and trained decorators working in sympathy.

MR. TIERNEY AND MR. LAWFORD WENT TO NEW YORK TO LOOK OVER THE MARKETS OF THE WORLD IN TEXTILES AND FURNISHINGS AND SUPPLIED FROM THEIR OWN SHOPS THE DESIGNS AND THE DETAILS OF FURNISHINGS WHICH UNITE THE WHOLE INTERIOR SO SUCCESSFULLY

THE ART OF DAVID TAUSZKY

By RICHARD WALGRAVE

WISTARIA, BY TAUSZKY, SALMAGUNDI CLUB, NEW YORK AND THE ARROYO STUDIO ABOVE BROOKSIDE, PASADENA

ART as exemplified in painting on wall or canvas may be looked at as evolved through the life of the race or through the life of an individual. In either case the process is the same.

First the childish effort at representation with occasional rewards that startle and inspire, leading the race, or the painter, on to further efforts. Then the concentrated thought on improvements in tools, medium, skill and scientific knowledge—that has mastered perspective, foreshortening, texture, edge and tones.

Always the evolution has been upward; and always the human form, developed through the ages in beauty, has been the difficult ideal of the painters' art, difficult to represent because it is "made in the image of God," a spiritual concept.

Landscape forms the background for human effort. It is outside ourselves. It may be very beautiful and its representation gives great pleasure to the human mind. But to enjoy a great landscape painting we project ourselves into the scene and the observer thus inserts his own humanity into a picture otherwise bereft of that highest object of art.

Pasadena has entertained many painters who are proficient in landscape; and her arroyo and her mountains, her oaks and sycamores have spread abroad in the field of art, the beauty of her environment. But during all the half century of her existence her young students have had little opportunity to gain skill in the life class but have wasted their student years on background alone.

The coming of more and more professional painters will place Pasadena in position to train good painters and cultivate her evident talent to the highest point. An interview with Mr. David A. Tauszky, whose beautiful painting, "Youth" appeared on the September cover of CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND records the training of the painter schooled in New York and Paris.

Mr. Tanszky says:

"The question has often been put 'How best to study art'? There always has been a diversity of opinion on this score as on every other, "Taut homines, taut Sententiae."

However, now that the schools of sensationalism are slowly dying a natural death, and the more or less academic school, the school that has studied and profited by all the work that has been handed down the ages; is to be seen still holding its own;—I think one can speak of Art as the term has always existed and always will exist.

In order to have a well-rounded training in Art for the purpose of becoming a professional painter or sculptor, it is absolutely necessary to be an almost perfect draughtsman; to have a thorough knowledge of construction, of modeling, of values, of composition. The mixing of color, the understanding of the juxtaposition of warm and cold color; the knowledge of color values, can only be acquired by work.

PORTRAIT OF MRS. T. R. COE, NEW YORK, BY TAUSZKY.

THE WHEREFORE OF THE DECORATIVE ARTS IN PARIS

By ETHEL ROSE

OVER MANTEL, "A MAID OF VENICE," BY DAVID TAUSZKY, PAINTED FOR MR. AND MRS. E. S. SKILLEN, PASADENA, TO BE PLACED IN THEIR BEAUTIFUL HOUSE ON LOMBARDY ROAD

THE United States is not represented in the great exposition of decorative art which is attracting the world to Paris this year, our government having declined to participate on the grounds that we could not afford the expense.

It has therefore interested me as I think it may others, to learn why France, poor in money and drained of so much of her productive life and resources, should at this time not only have felt that she herself could undertake such an enterprise, but have obtained the official co-operation of eighteen other countries, among them those who were the worst sufferers from the war as well as newly born nations that are still struggling for existence.

One of the government architects of the city of Paris has sent me an address delivered by Monsieur H. W. Magne, professor of the National Conservatory of Arts and Industries, at one of their meetings, the president of the conservatory being the general commissioner of the exposition.

From this address we learn that art in manufactures and in decoration is in Europe considered as a national asset rather than a negligible luxury. Instead of being an extravagance this exposition is in response to an economic necessity and on its now assured success depends the industrial renaissance of a new era of prosperity for France.

Until, roughly, one hundred years ago, design in such things as architecture, gardening, furniture, silverware, jewelry, cabinet work and textiles was original and contemporary with their manufacture, both of which simultaneously developed and adapted themselves to the ideas, needs, and manner of life of the times, as had been the case from the dawn of history in all countries.

Since then however, with the exception of woman's dress, design in decoration has been

THE MONUMENTAL ENTRANCE TO THE PARIS EXPOSITION OF ARTS AND CRAFTS. DRAWING BY ETHEL ROSE

copies or adaptations of things already in existence. Added to this, the growth in world communication and the greatly increased facilities for fine work abroad have led to other countries supplanting France as purveyors of such things.

Thus the greater and finer part of our surroundings and accessories are leftovers from another age different in almost every way from the present.

Since 1900 when the happily short-lived "nouveau art" made its appearance there has been an increasing trend toward a new form of expression, an urge such as has occurred again and again in history.

In 1912 the French government, always observant of the artistic mood of the nation, saw its opportunity to encourage this and had planned an exposition for 1916 when the war intervened. At the end of the war two chances for the rehabilitation of French industry showed themselves. With the supremacy in the manufacture of steel assured by victory certain ones desired to compete for the world markets, but it was finally decided that on account of a reduced industrial population as well as the lack of native coal and certain other essentials that France should rather count in developing her commerce on the superiority of design and workmanship of those manufactured articles which always have been and always will be desired by other countries.

The entire public service was unanimous in desiring this end and to its carrying out have gone an immense amount of energy, work and perseverance.

Not only did the government see the meaning and value of such an effort but the French people, by individual subscriptions, covered the entire cost of the project so that not one cent of the public funds will be called for.

Every entry in the exposition has had to pass a jury and absolutely no account has been taken of names and firms; so anxious have they been to encourage new men and talent that young artists and artisans have been aided financially to enable them to show their work.

The four principal groups are: architecture and decoration; furnishings of all kinds including vehicles; clothes and objects for personal use and adornment; and the theatre, streets and gardens; the whole presenting a complete picture of modern life. For one of the distinctive ideas of the plan is not to show the exhibits like specimens in a museum but as they would be used in life, each in its proper frame and circumstance.

To this end an astonishing collaboration of all the architects has been necessary and a remarkable discipline has been exhibited in controlling the five thousand Frenchmen, all individualists, so that they should work together to produce a harmonious ensemble.

Besides the great state exhibits each region of France has its special program in which its characteristic production is shown as the central theme and the secondary industries are used as surroundings and decoration. Thus Lyons and St. Etienne specialize in silks, Nancy in ironwork, Bourges the metairie, Normandy the cider industry with a typical Norman farm, etc.

Fifth and last of the main groups is that of instruction, housed on the first floor of the marvelously re-constructed grand palace, where one sees not classes learning, but real work shops with workers producing the thing shown in the other four groups. There are about sixty of these ateliers where one can see the processes of stone cutting, frescoing, modelling, wood carving, forging, enamelling, metal working, and the making of mosaics, glass, silver, hand and machine embroidery and lace, the weaving and decorating of fabrics, shell and ivory working, etc.

Individuals and firms also have concessions and there are all sorts of attractions and amusements from the village of toys to the restaurants; among the latter are a dance pavilion and the three red, white and blue "peniches" or barges of Paul Poiret with their unique decorations and lighting. These are moored to the quai directly in front of the great luminous fountain that plays at night.

The Pont Alexandre is transformed into a street of little shops, and the great dreary "Place des Invalides," directly beneath which is the railway station of that name, has blossomed magically into a gorgeous garden whose sudden fertility is due, not to irrigation, but to pots and tubs, all hidden by remarkable decorations, for the soil there is not deep enough for planting. All the French colonial possessions are represented by native work and there is a Tunisian market in a building that looks as though transplanted bodily from Africa.

The foreign countries participating with restaurants, exhibits and official buildings are Czecho-Slovakia, Holland, Poland, Sweden, Monaco, Austria, Japan, Belgium, Great Britain, Turkey, Denmark, Greece, Switzerland, Italy, Spain, Jugo-Slavia Luxembourg, and the Social Republican Union of the Soviets.

RECENT BOOKS—REVIEWS

By LOUISE MORGRAGE

HARRY HERVEY IN INDIA. MR. HERVEY IS THE AUTHOR OF WHERE STRANGE GODS CALL, AND ETHAN QUEST, REVIEWED IN THIS ISSUE. PHOTOGRAPH BY COURTESY OF CHARLES B. HERVEY, HOTEL GREEN, PASADENA, CALIFORNIA, THE INTERESTING CENTER FOR WORLD TRAVELERS ON THE PACIFIC COAST

THE TALE OF GENJI

By LADY MURASAKI, Translated by ARTHUR WALEY, Houghton Mifflin Company

In the year 1000, Europe, the chief protagonist on History's stage, was just emerging from a vague chaotic period, designated as the "Dark Ages." The Saxon kings were still on the throne of England, and emperors of the same house governed, or attempted to govern the Holy Roman Empire of the German nation; in France the Capet family, destined to rule for centuries had just seized the power, and a part of Spain was still in the hands of the Mohammedans. It is an age that seems like far off unhappy times, when men were cruel, comforts and luxuries unknown, and ignorance and superstition common to all classes. And yet here is a tale of Japan, written at that very time, curiously modern in many respects and entirely free from evidences of that barbarity, which we associate with the age in Europe.

In translating this tale of the erotic adventures of Genji, son of the emperor and his favorite mistress, Mr. Waley has apparently caught the spirit of the original, or achieved a distinctive work on his own account. It is a quaint and sensuous narrative, presenting in a languorous fashion, a picture of a court, which in its artificial elegance, its serious occupation with affairs of gallantry, its eccentric, standards of morality, might be compared to the court of Louis XIV of France. The central figure is the youthful prince Genji, gravely pursuing his business of love making, much as a butterfly flits capriciously from flower to flower in search of sweets. The poetic and artistic quality of this work is not to be questioned for a moment, but after reading the varied experiences along this line of the youthful sybarite we shall certainly turn with a feeling of relief to the latest foot-ball classic and the joyful contemplation of the sporting exploits of young men in modern times.

THE HARP

By ETHELREDA LEWIS, George H. Doran Co.

It is rarely that we come across an author, with such decided talent, who fails notwithstanding to make a convincing book. This is due, it would seem to a wrong sense of values. The lady who wrote this tale of South Africa, has a delicate touch, much finish and individuality to her style, and a really considerable gift for poetic imagery. Yet the result of her writing is pale and colorless, with scenes and characters reminding us of those viewed through a mist.

This is a story with a hero only, a boy deeply emotional, born and brought up in South Africa. Readers familiar with that far-off land may find the descriptions of nature very alluring as well as truthful. We others who know so little about it, may gain illuminating glimpses of modes of living, of racial antipathies, and of attitudes and viewpoints different from our own, as would be natural. But the novel as a whole is dreamy and inclined to lean so far toward the sentimental, that it fails to gain the confidence it would otherwise deserve.

ETHAN QUEST

By HARRY HERVEY, The Cosmopolitan Book Corporation

Mr. Hervey is a young man who has every appearance of having taken long draughts from the Pierian Spring. Even more than that he has bathed his brow therein, and while still under its inspiring charm, has accomplished a noteworthy contribution to the artistic literature of the present day. He calls it a "saga," this psychological study of the mind of gifted youth, searching vainly and frantically through the world for the aesthetic but elusive ideal of his dreams. It is done with sincerity, a deep appreciation of beauty, and well sustained emotional force, all of which shows this youthful author, to be possessed of talents of a high order. His faculty for understanding seems limitless, so much so that he has been almost too lavish in its use, but in time he will learn to practise conservation. Also if he is to continue with this sort of colorful and impressionistic diction, he needs a more distinctive manner, although the one he has is adequate enough for ordinary material. There is not one false note. He is inexorable in his fidelity to his artistic conception, never once yielding to the temptation of adding banal touches. Even at the end, where he might do so with no sacrifice to art. he refuses to allow the tortured and disillusioned youth, to vanish beneath the waters of oblivion.

On the fly-leaf is a dedication, so poignant that it stabs the consciousness. We can have no idea of its significance, but it is infinite in its suggestion. We read this bit of exquisite loveliness, and seem to hear the "horns of Elfland faintly blowing," or the reedy notes of Pan stealing forth from some forest glade. Surely we owe acknowledgment to the youthful genius who can write like this, even though we realize that to many readers he will make no appeal. His art is too uncompromising for popularity with the public.

MRS. GERTRUDE ATHERTON, CALIFORNIA'S MOST FAMOUS NOVELIST.

THE CRYSTAL CUP

By GERTRUDE ATHERTON, Boni & Liveright

After reading "Ethan Quest," we took up "The Crystal Cup," and were Mrs. Atherton to have the same experience, she would he quick with her sympathy. And she can well afford to be generous. since her novel will doubtless have hundreds of readers to Mr. Hervey's one. She is occasionally a brilliant

(Continued on Page 24)

SANTA BARBARA'S DRAMA

By MARY NORDHOFF

COLIN COMPBELL CLEMENTS, the new director of the Santa Barbara Community players, has had an interesting and varied career. A student in the Universities of Montana and Washington, he next turned to the Carnegie Institute, where he learned the art of acting under Thomas Wood Stevens, and to Professor Baker's courses in play-writing at Harvard. Since then he has been stage manager, actor and play reader for Stuart Walker's Portmanteau Theatre; director for three seasons of the school of the little theater in Gloucester, Mass., and, through this school affiliated with the Wharf players of Provincetown, directed by Frank Shay.

Immediately after the war, Mr. Clements volunteered for relief work in the Near East. The Armenian town in which he had charge of an orphanage was besieged by the Turks. With starvation at hand, they capitulated; the Turks seized the 500 French soldiers garrisoned there. and slaughtered them. While Americans escaped this fate, they were kept prisoners until, finally, help from outside made possible an escape across the desert.

In situations not quite so engrossing, Mr. Clements found time for a study of the theaters of Roumania, France, Turkey, Greece and Italy. In the Rumanian National Theater, at Bucarest, he directed several plays, one of which was written by Queen Marie.

Returning to this country, he became a lecturer in Emerson College, Boston, and edited for Small, Maynard & Co. He himself is the author of "Plays for a Folding Theater," "Plays for Pagans," and other volumes. His hope as director of the Community Theater is to return to and strengthen the spirit in which it was founded.

The Community players have been, perhaps, too representative of one section of the public; the other, the larger, elements seemed to lose interest. Such a division threatens the life of the community, as opposed to the little theater, and Santa Barbara's greatest need is for a community theater. In larger cities, the little theater, making advances in thought and stage technique which the commercial theater must beware of, has at least a sporting chance of survival. Santa Barbara, while it is not a city, is yet unlike the average town. Its situation has drawn, from all over the world, lovers and creators of beauty; people of leisure and people who are more, or is it less, fortunate. It is this variety of life, and viewpoint, which makes the difficulties and possibilities of a community theater here so great. The majority must settle the nature of their theater, but, whatever the type of play produced, whatever the cast, artists in Santa Barbara stand ready to help and to make the production the best of its kind.

A SKETCH OF COLIN CAMPBELL CLEMENTS, BY HARDIE HUNTER ALBRIGHT

COLIN CAMPBELL CLEMENTS, DRAMATIST, AND HARDIE HUNTER ALBRIGHT, ARTIST, DISCUSSING THE PRODUCTION OF A JAPANESE NOH PLAY GIVEN BY THE GLOUCESTER PLAYERS. THE MASKS USED IN THE PLAY WERE DESIGNED AND MADE BY MR. ALBRIGHT. DARLING, PHOTOGRAPHER.

A small boy at Rugby, struggling over his part in the house debate, echoed an everlasting trouble. "The stage," he scribbled, "like everything else in this world, has got to develop. In Shakespeare's time things were so strict that no girl was allowed to act at all. Well. imagine what would happen today if a bill was proposed that no girl should act on the stage!

"As far as I can gather from the speeches, there is nothing particularly wicked in the plays under discussion, but they are new. The ladies of Cranford, you may remember, were shocked and doubtful when they witnessed a conjuring show, which we see every Christmas at every children's party; and they were only convinced by noticing that "the Church," as represented by the rector, was smiling approval. Similarly, if you took a very low Churchman into a very High Church he would be shocked and denounce the ritual. Very good; let him stop away. But because some people disapprove of certain things of which others approve, that is no reason for stopping the whole show.

"Again, the influence of these plays is surely limited; a few terms ago this house voted that the cinema did not exert a bad influence on the youth of the world. Well, you may have read in the papers a few weeks ago that a lad killed his father with a hatchet because he'd seen it done at the pictures. The cinema exerts a far greater influence than these plays; and the type of person who goes to see them has enough sense, we hope, not to fetch his pater one with a big stick and plead that "he saw it done at the theatre." Just because these plays are new, people attack them. Let us remedy our greater evils and wider influences first. I ask you to vote against the motion."

Mural Decoration in the New Refectory Room of the Paseo de la Guerra Santa Barbara

Mural Paintings by Dudley S. Carpenter whose interpretation of the life of St. Francis has made a charming room.

The Community Theater gives—and must ask for—tolerance. A recent children's play, directed by Marion Craig Wentworth, bears witness to the benefits derived from such a spirit. The lighting, the costumes, the settings, were the work of artists—men and women whose instinct for, and knowledge of, beauty goes deep. The actors, children between 8 and 16, were chosen from a number of public schools; they worked hard, for the love of the work, giving up an evening at the circus for one more rehearsal. At the matinee were many small children in charge of Catholic Sisters; not a few "highbrows," people of all ages and many types. The best of the thing was that children, to whom the commercial theater in Santa Barbara offers so little, might see a play such as "The Golden Touch" and see it given by their own kind.

The newcomer to Santa Barbara may be indifferent to "Community spirit" or he may dislike it. A knowledge of any branch of the C. A. A.—the dramatic for instance—will do much to convert distaste. Both the facts and the atmosphere bear out one truth: Here for a nominal fee any resident of Santa Barbara may find the first-rate instruction in stagecraft, acting, play-writing. If interest and talent keep pace and he "finds himself," the way is open. If talent exists, and the fee is lacking, scholarships are provided. Night classes often meet the demands of those who are engaged by day.

At present, any one interested in the theater, anxious for a part in the coming plays, or advice as to the courses in dramatic technique offered by other branches of the C. A. A. may see Mr. Clements. He is in his office from 10 to 1 of the morning and interested in just this work. So far all who have applied have been given parts.

Last year the variety offered by the C. P.'s was great: "Lilliom," "The Hottentot," "The Beggar on Horseback," "Outward Bound," among others. This year, in answer to public opinion, plays of a different calibre have been decided upon. Announced for the first of the season are: "Merton of the Movies," "Wappin's Wharf," by Chas. S. Brooks, "A Kiss for Cinderella," and a bill of one-act plays.

(1) Wm. Morris (oppressed by the ugliness and waste in life) imagined a Utopia. If the small towns of America demand and support such organizations as the C. A. A., the picture in Morris' "News from Nowhere" may well be less of a contrast to reality. For the C. A. A. proves to its members that one of the greatest, perhaps the only lasting, pleasure lies in the attempt to create beauty of one kind or another. The results, opinions as to what is beautiful, may differ, but that is scarcely the point.

THE Mural Decoration of the small refectory in El Paseo is quite the most important and complete art work which has been done in Santa Barbara, for the purpose of adding to the beauty of a room.

Mr. Dudley S. Carpenter has been engaged upon this work for some months, and has succeeded in so making use of a religious motive that it is not at all out of place in the small private dining room of what is perhaps the most unique and charming restaurant in the United States.

He has designed a double band which follows the side walls of the room and is carried from corner to corner, crossing in the center of the ceiling. In the divisions thus formed are circular medalions, enclosed in the same pattern, representing four episodes from the life of St. Francis. Mr. Carpenter also designed the decorations for the furniture and has succeeded in working out a delicate color scheme quite in keeping with the architecture.

It is to be hoped that the beauty and fame of this little room may encourage others to make use of a form of decoration of which one sees too little in these days.—JNO. GAMBLE.

A VISIT to Santa Barbara has convinced the editor that Estado's charming buildings in the new California Rennaissance will not be monotonously arcaded. Every architect is using the arcade where he can and striving to make his huilding the most interesting on the street. Contributions to the Santa Barbara Relief have been received by CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND as follows, and Eastern readers desiring to help now are invited to come to Santa Barbara next year, or at once, and see how the money is being used.

Mrs. Henry Laws, La Solano, Pasadena.....$ 50.00
Miss Gertrude S. Thomas, New York..... 100.00

SOUTHLAND

In Poetry—The Answer

(The Book of Earth by Alfred Noyes-Blackwood.)

UNDER the surface, which even now is ruffled by its force, the strong current of modern thought flows toward spiritual understanding of life and its relation to the Highest. Alfred Noyes has proved himself the greatest poet of our time by his answer to this deep longing of the race for knowledge.

The first volume of his Torch-Bearers, Watchers of the Sky, caught its inspiration from a visit to Mount Wilson Observatory in Pasadena, this second volume, "The Book of Earth," reads its first lesson in the Grand Canyon of the Colorado. So this section of the country, which ten or twelve years ago attached the big name of Fundamental to a "literal" but wholly selfish and little interpretation of Holy Scripture, may well redeem itself in the eyes of the educated world by reading, studying and assimilating this beautiful and satisfying answer to thoughtless and uneducated scoffers at scientific research as a road that leads to God.

Mr. Noyes, with the profound insight of the poet, has grasped the real fundamentals of creation and has shown, in an exquisite conception of man's groping for knowledge through the ages, how "in the beginning God created the Heavens and the earth" and how He is still directing the evolution of man's spirit.

"New every morning the Creative Word
Moves upon chaos. Yea, our God grows young.
Here, now, the eternal miracle is renewed,
Now, and forever, God makes heaven and earth."

Problems of the Playhouse—Developing a Constituency

IN the growth of social institutions as in the natural sciences, progress of development is characterized by differentiation and specialization of function as time goes on. Thus in the beginning with the playhouse the director was a composite of all functions rolled into one man. Certain earnest and typical community citizens decided to espouse a certain earnest young theatre director who had an idea—which was the germ of the present Community Playhouse Association, in its essence a social experiment. Hitherto it had never been supposed that the community would even pay money to attend a show produced by its self except as an occasional matter for formal charitable or similar objectives. The notion that the community would eventually make itself a well defined constituency for all that its amateur representatives would offer, night after night for over 200 nights each year, was yet beyond the horizon.

Naturally therefore, the first organization plan of the Community Playhouse Association was simple in the extreme. A friend who did not live or belong in Pasadena but had a vision which was greater than any of us who have since followed, contributed to this Pasadena group $2,000.00, and thus made the start in a Community Play program possible and led to the brilliant consummation of the present year.

The community group of Pasadena for its first year had as resources and organization only a director and for financial record only a check book. It had not ever a rudimentary germ of a business or a promotion department. Naturally when faith, hope and enthusiasm get hold on an idea such as this, a deficit soon develops, measured approximately by the good will and the good nature of the community.

It became necessary after somewhat more than a year to have a business department as separate from the production director's department, and the facing of the salary requirements for this first new member of the staff seemed staggering to the Board at the time but it was the wisest step ever taken in the history of the Playhouse.

The institution began to marshall records of attendance, costs, expenditures and various types of experience in the form of statistics which have a greater and greater value as the years go on. For in the eight years that have passed almost everything has been tried and the results have been set down under all sorts of headings and classifications in book records of experience—various policies have been tried in the matter of ticket prices—scrip, discounts, children's tickets, matinee special prices, different prices for different parts of the week, bargain prices in the whole house, free tickets for special objects, together with experiments in different types of plays from the sublime to the ridiculous.

Out of all this welter of figures has come an answer to almost any speculative question which might be asked our business department as to what will and what will not work at the playhouse and it is doubtful if any other novel business without precedent of published record or published literature has ever achieved a more dignified record of real accomplishment and stabilized business policies based on rational thinking in the brief eight years that the Community Playhouse Association of Pasadena has existed.

One of the first discoveries made was that the mere absorption in the production of good plays conscientiously acted would not get the playhouse anywhere. That without something more the institution would starve, fail and disappear and sink "without a trace" and perhaps would already have been a forgotten experiment in this one town. Like every other thing it costs money to run a church, a college or any other institution and thus all have business aspects and every business must have at least two well defined departments, a production department and a sales department.

In other words, the playhouse had to go out aggressively to let the town know that it had a good entertainment to offer at a fair price, but in addition this so called sales department had to begin and maintain a program to convey to the community the value of the intangible contribution it had to make to community life. If it was ever to mean anything except as a medium sort of amusement enterprise, it must learn to describe its wares in understandable language and must get over to the town the notion that it was the embodiment of the community itself at play, that the playhouse was of, for and by the community, belonged to all the community and to each person therein, in a great universality of common interest.

The mere statement of the foregoing proposition no matter how logically sound or truthful, however, will not cause many citizens to see a great light. As in the case of all great causes this idea had to be lived, for with the most of humanity, just as we find it, conviction comes not by debate but by contact and life with the truth, and in the course of eight years the community in Pasadena by the thousands has lived and worked in the Playhouse on committees and casts and has in tens or thousands seen its self at work and verily has been this great truth and it has become a part of the common experience of the community and a part of its life.

It may now be stated that the conclusion arrived at is that by conscientious observance of traditions and standards a certain typical result is achieved in the productions at the playhouse and while the playhouse is true to this—it is true to itself, and an increasing group of followers have come to consider it a part of their life and their possession. The playhouse has developed a constituency of

J. W. MORIN.

Earthquake Proof Santa Barbara

EARTHQUAKES are no longer, have not been for ten years, the enigma they have been through the ages. Structures survived at San Francisco, Messina, Porto Rico, Guatamala, Yokohama and Santa Barbara during the seismic disturbances which visited each in turn. In some cases the survival was more or less accidental but today we know the secret beyond peradventure. Our methods are positive, scientific and have been tested in the fire of mathematics, practical construction and the severest earthquakes in modern times. Buildings which had been designed on the basis of a statical analysis of the stresses induced by an earthquake and honestly constructed came through without seismic damage in Yokohama in 1923 when the convulsions were two to three times as violent as they were in Santa Barbara, last June.

OPINION

California is a seismic country and if we would serve her best interests we would provide for these disturbances. Those who have forgotten San Francisco and El Centro and believe Santa Barbara alone is liable to be shaken, may regard these data as applicable to that locality. We choose to regard the whole state and more in the same catagory.

Before the dust had settled from falling debris there had gathered in Santa Barbara a host of technical men, contractors, material-men, financiers and the curious. And before the post-quake hysteria had quieted down the newspapers, the technical press and house organs fairly overflowed with the "Lessons of the Santa Barbara Disaster." There were many, many "experts on building construction" and a sizable group of seismologists. And the strange part of it all was that nearly all were on the defensive. The architects and the engineers said in substance, "If the materials and workmanship had been as required the damage would have been slight. Only poor structures failed." The material-men sought to find "lessons" to defend their products. The brick, lime, concrete and structural steel advocates cited "proofs" in defense of each. The state of affairs which nearly obscured the real lessons from the San Francisco earthquake and fire were enacted anew. The same attitude of earthquake sufferers caused Dr. Beard, invited to Japan by the Japanese Government after the 1923 catastrophe, to ask that none but purely technical sources of a disinterested nature be drawn upon by the Imperial Reconstruction Board in framing its report.

A reading of all that has come to our attention may be summarized in the injunction, "Build well." This is excellent but insufficient, for a radically different basis of design is necessary; and better construction along the lines outlined by our building codes will not suffice. An earthquake sets up certain forces just as definitely as does a wind or earth pressure behind a retaining wall. A structure can be designed to care for the seismic forces and thousands have been designed and constructed and passed successfully through greater earthquakes than we have ever had in California. There is no guess work any more than in any other type of engineering design.

We wish to help others in their attempts to secure better design, good materials, more rigid inspection and honest workmanship for these are necessary to produce earthquake proof structures; but by "better design" we mean statical analysis which must be the basis for all improvement over present practice. With a thorough knowledge of how an earthquake acts and the stresses set up, types of construction will suggest themselves and the relative merits of different materials for different parts of the structure will recommend themselves to the competent and unprejudiced designer.

After an inspection of Santa Barbara on the day following the quake we would make these statements:

(1) The earthquake was not a minor tremor but much stronger than the San Francisco quake of 1906.

(2) The buildings were as well built as in any coast city. Many of the damaged structures were very well constructed.

(3) The failures were very largely due to defects in design or condition and not from materials or workmanship. We believe, however, that few of the structures were the result of expert technical design. Like the buildings in most of our cities they were "just built."

In California Southland for August we find an article by Mr. H. C. Nickerson, A. I. A., an admirable article indeed, the expression of an artist, his dream "that the reconstruction will make Santa Barbara a joy to its residents, a refuge to the traveler and a center of culture." We add that after traveling and working widely at home and abroad we would submit our constructive criticism to these same ends that this naturally beautiful city in our native state may blossom forth the Athens of the West.

The reconstruction of the commercial center, the schools, the theatres and the public service centers must be viewed broadly as regards city planning features and perhaps general types of architecture and more technically as regards the designs of the buildings themselves. These are distinct services as the writer knows from service on one city planning commission and two committees for the preparation of building codes. Both are necessary, and much value will accrue to the city from this procedure. The personnel of the first should be composed of landscape architects, a civil engineer of municipal experience, a realtor, a traffic expert and one or two business men. The technical commission should embody architects, engineers, contractors and the City Engineer. He should also be represented on the first committee.

The three essentials of a well planned city and its structures,—convenience, beauty and safety, might be divided so that for the city the first committee will act and for the buildings themselves and especially their safety the second committee would preside. These committees should be permanent and should make progress reports to the City Council but they need not be in continuous session. Theirs is to recommend, the council will enact into law and the Building Inspector should be charged with the administration of the act. He should be a trained engineer and should receive a sufficient remuneration to hold a competent individual. He must have several competent technical assistants.

Provide, through the efforts of the technical committee, a building code which requires statical computation of stresses induced by an earthquake of a given intensity and the filing of all calculations. Make sure you have a competent Building Inspector, give him sufficient salary, remove him from wire pulling and "politics" as far as possible, give him an organization and authority and Santa Barbara will never be prostrated by another earthquake.

WENDELL M. BUTTS, B. S. C. E.,
SAN DIEGO, CALIFORNIA. STRUCTURAL ENGINEER.

The Ant or Flowers?

"TO the ant, thou sluggard, consider her ways and be wise," has been quoted to mankind for ages. How many I do not know. But if the sluggard, after considering the ways of the ant, would do what the ant has always done, with all his strength, as compared to the strength of the ant, he had better remain a sluggard. The world would be better with him thus, than with him following her ways.

Nothing grows very close to an ant hill. Though provident, the ant is destructive. Which of her ways is the sluggard to follow?

The flowers do all that it is possible for them to do to make the earth more beautiful, as also do nearly all other inanimate growths. The infinite variety and beauty of shape, foliage, color and bloom, is wonderful and inspiring. To consider, to study and to emulate these is more worth while than is considering the ant, as an example of right living.

The "busy bee" is quite as industrious and provident as is the ant, and is not destructive. And what the bee stores away is of some benefit to others,—humans and bears,—which cannot be said of what the ant hoards.

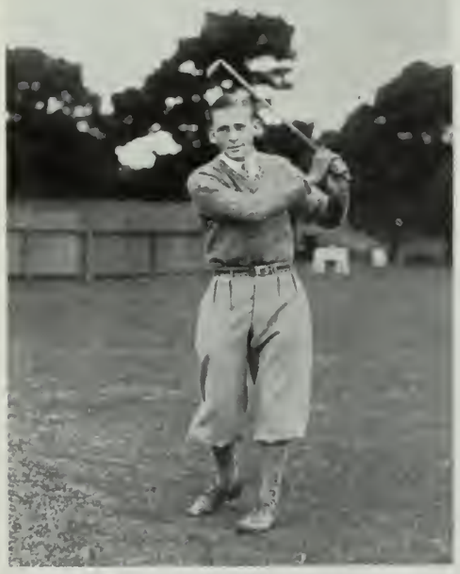
When admiring flowers, I have often thought if we humans did our part in life as well as they do theirs, our lives would be much better and happier. And that reflection will apply as justly to all other forms of life.

Moral: Let's change it to—Go to the bees, the flowers, the shrubs, the trees, thou sluggard, consider their ways and be wise, and happier.

JAMES H. RICHARDSON.

WITH THE GALLERY AT THE DEL MONTE TOURNEY

GOLF with the gallery at Del Monte during the annual California amateur tournament can prove of such overwhelming interest as to displace all pre-arranged plans as to resting, enjoying the soughing of the winds in the pines, the breath of the sea, and the beauty of the rocks and the oaks, and instead to bring not only enmeshment in the toils of golf but adding much divertissement to the enslavement, as witness lines from one heretofore immune to all charms of the game:



"This is the most exciting three weeks I have encountered since I was a girl and lived on excitement. The last three days have been spent in the sacred precincts of the golf course, where I hope I showed the proper reverent spirit. If I hadn't I would have met with such scorn that never again would I have been able to show my face in Del Monte,—most certainly not.

"It's just as well that I am not to spend the rest of my life in Pebble Beach, as I very much desire, else I should be dead before I knew it. This is our last week, and I intend to spend it lying on the pine needles and sniffing, and watching the surf dash against Point Lobos, and seeing the gorgeous sunsets from the upper roads, and wandering around the old houses in Monterey. Probably those are just the things I won't do. I haven't yet.

"Well, yesterday the tournament ended the most exciting week I have experienced for years. You have been following the papers most likely, so you know the winners. M— and I watched the Child make her way through each day's match, with long distance glasses. It was capital sport, dodging from tree to tree and skipping along behind her without her discovering that we were near. The day she qualified we all went along, too, and her score was so bad that we thought she wouldn't play at all. So there was no more of that. But as usual there is not time for details.

"Yesterday, the important day of days, I took pictures of Kathleen Wright, on the last hole she played, and her opponent, Mrs. Sheedy, and then we managed to get over here at Pebble Beach in time to see the last four holes played by Dolp and Von Elm, —very close in both matches, men and women. Over here there was a gallery of about a thousand people. It was thrilling.

"I simply must take time to tell you something priceless. As I said before, we were at Del Monte every day watching the Child literally fight her way through those matches, and of course we got interested in other young women, whose matches we could not help seeing in following hers. One girl in particular I quite fancied, and her golf was very nice. Saturday I met her as she came in from the course and asked her who had won her match and she said she had, whereupon I

GEORGE VON ELM OF THE RANCHO CLUB, LOS ANGELES, WON THE STATE AMATEUR CHAMPIONSHIP AT DEL MONTE IN SEPTEMBER.

DR. PAUL HUNTER, OF ANNANDALE, FORMER STATE AND SOUTHERN TITLE HOLDER.

KATHLEEN WRIGHT, OF PASADENA, WINNER IN THE WOMEN'S CHAMPIONSHIP EVENT AT THE AMATEUR CHAMPIONSHIP TOURNAMENT.

Golden State Limited Photo Service

THE REJUVENATED ANNANDALE COURSE OFFERS EVERY POSSIBLE THRILL TO THE BRASSIE WIELDERS IN THE NEW HILL HOLES

congratulated her very warmly with absolutely no idea of her name. She was surprised enough since she had probably never noticed me before. Then on Sunday morning we all went over with the Child, who was to play off the last match with a woman whom she had never seen, and of course we hadn't. This girl whom I had congratulated so heartily on Saturday came up onto the proch and I said enthusiastically, "Oh, I hope you win!" and she proceeded to the first tee and prepared to play with the Child. It was very amusing, doubly so since we had made a ceremony each day of solemnly kissing the Child and wishing her luck, and there I'd gone and almost done the same to her opponent. They were both so amused that they dubbed the first hole disgracefully."

The annual California Amateur Golf Championship is open to all members of clubs in the California Golf Association and to such other amateurs as may be invited to play by the association. The winner of the championship tournament shall hold the title of Amateur Golf Champion of California for the year, and his name shall be inscribed as such on the association shield.

The tournament each year affords thrills, it being a veritable north versus south championship, as the best amateurs of the country always enter and every hole is contested to the farthest limit of strength. Surprises as well as disappointments appear in the finals; this year proving as full of the former as past seasons.

The match between George von Elm, of the Rancho club, Los Angeles, second ranking amateur in the United States, and Frank Dolp, Oregon State champion, was of intense interest and proved the courage and sportsmanship of each man as well as his skill.

Kathleen Wright of Pasadena returned from abroad in time to enter the tournament and win the women's championship event, to add another trophy to the list she has collected in both golf and tennis during the last ten years.

Mrs. John Frost, of the Flintridge club, probably surprised herself more than she did her friends in playing through to victory in her first competitive event after less than five months of golf.

Nothing is really allowed to interfere with the game and its importance, yet the hospitality for which Pebble Beach and Del Monte are so famed is not dimmed during the tournament and many gay lunches, breakfasts, teas and dances find themselves interwoven with the matches.

THE ANNUAL CALIFORNIA AMATEUR GOLF CHAMPIONSHIP TOURNAMENT AT DEL MONTE, OPENED SEPTEMBER 14 FOR MEN, AND THE 16TH FOR WOMEN. THIS TOURNAMENT IS OPEN TO ALL MEMBERS OF CLUBS IN THE CALIFORNIA GOLF ASSOCIATION, AND INVITED GUESTS

MRS. JOHN FROST, OF FLINTRIDGE, PLAYING IN HER FIRST COMPETITIVE EVENT, WON HER FIRST TROPHY WITH A 4 AND 3 VICTORY OVER MRS. L. H. COCHRAN OF SAN FRANCISCO. MRS. FROST IS ALSO A HORSEWOMAN OF NOTE, HOLDING BLUE RIBBONS AND TROPHIES FROM THE SOUTHERN HORSE SHOWS.

FRANK DOLP, OREGON STATE CHAMPION, WHO PLAYED REMARKABLY GOOD GOLF IN THE DEL MONTE TOURNEY BUT LOST TO VON ELM BY A SCORE OF 2 TO 1

WHILE IRVING HELLMAN DID NOT DRIVE HIS COACH AND FOUR UP TO DEL MONTE TO THE TOURNEY, IT WOULD HAVE FITTED INTO THE PICTURE BEAUTIFULLY

ASSISTANCE LEAGUE OF SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

MONTHLY BULLETIN

"All for Service—And Service for All"

OFFICERS:

MRS. HANCOCK BANNING, President
MRS. EDWARDS LAUGHLIN, First Vice President
MRS. WILLIAM GIBBS MCADOO, Sec. Vice-Pres.
MRS. ERWIN P. WERNER, Third Vice-President
MRS. E. AVERY MCCARTHY, Fourth Vice-Pres.
MRS. JAMES REED, Secretary
MRS. J. WARREN TATUM, Treasurer.
MR. D. C. MACWATTERS, Auditor

CALENDAR

Oct. 1, 10:30 a. m.—Meeting of Good Samaritan Committee.
Oct. 6, 10:30 a. m.—Meeting of the Board of Directors.
Oct. 6, 12:15 a. m.—Round Table Luncheon. Mrs. Ralph Waldo Trine, speaker.
Oct. 6, 10:30 a. m.—Meeting of Executive Committee.
Oct. 12, 10:30 a. m.—Meeting of Day Nursery Committee.
Oct. 13, 10:30 a. m.—Meeting of Executive Committee.
Oct. 14, 10:30 a. m.—Meeting of Shut-In Committee.
Oct. 15, 10:30 a. m.—Meeting of Good Samaritan Committee.
Oct. 20, 10:30 a. m.—Meeting of Executive Committee.
Oct. 27, 10:30 a. m.—Meeting of Executive Committee.
Oct. 29, 10:30 a. m.—Meeting of Good Samaritan Committee.

SANTA BARBARA COMMITTEE

WHEN a special need for clothes for the children of school age in the district of Santa Barbara affected by the flood, which was occasioned by the breaking of the dam during the earthquake, was reported, the Assistance League Unit in Santa Barbara and several of our Board members who were there this summer met to plan ways and means of meeting this need. Mrs. E. Avery McCarthy, who represents the Board of Directors on this Committee, has charge of the collection of clothes in Los Angeles and Mrs. William A. Brackenridge of the collection in Pasadena. In order that the clothes may find their way into the homes where real need exists, the distribution is being carried on with the aid of the Santa Barbara Parent Teachers Association under the direction of Mrs. F. Alexander, District Chairman. Already a large truck load of carefully selected and very serviceable clothes has been sent to Santa Barbara.

League members and friends we know have done their part as individuals in the raising of relief funds and the Board of Directors is anxious to co-operate in every way with the main fund-raising committees, although the Assistance League, as such, solicited no funds. Supplying clothes in this emergency we feel is just a special way in which the Asssistance League may serve the stricken city.

COMMUNITY CHEST

Under the able leadership of our President, Mrs. Hancock Banning, and our Secretary, Mrs. James Reed, Division 16 of last year's Community Chest Campaign made an enviable record—going over the top on the third day, working unabated until the final reckoning showed that 276% of the quota had been collected.

When the call came this year from the Chest the Assistance League responded wholeheartedly. Mrs. Edwards Laughlin, our 1st Vice President, is Chairman of all residential divisions, Mrs. E. Avery McCarthy is Colonel of the Wilshire Division and Mrs. E. P. Werner, Chairman of our Day Nursery Committee, is Colonel of a down-town financial district. It is regretted by all that Mrs. Banning and Mrs. Reed will not be able to take active parts this year, although Mrs. Reed, who was called East by her mother's illness, hopes to return in time to assist during Campaign week.

Volunteer to serve on a team. Call the office and let us list you as a worker.

As you all know, the three departments receiving funds from the Chest this year are the Day Nursery, the Good Samaritan Committee and the Wilmington Unit. This year the entrance of the League as a whole is contemplated.

CHRISTMAS SALE

The Christmas Sale Committee is prepared to take orders for the articles listed below. The prices will be more reasonable than those in the down town shops. League members and friends are urged to place orders at the League as soon as possible. All articles will be ready for delivery not later than December 1st, unless a special request is made for earlier delivery.

Coat Hangers, Hat Trees, Shoe Trees, Mules, Bed Jackets, Maids' Aprons, Washcloths, Silver, Telephone Book Covers, Taffeta Hat Bags for Traveling, Taffeta Chaise Lounge Covers with Pillows in shades to match, Handkerchiefs, Work Bags, Pillows, Perfumes, Boxes, Shades, Pottery, Bath Salts, Sachets, Pajamas, Slips, Dusters, Jellies, Candies, Nuts.

MONOGRAMING

Beautiful monograming and initialing can be ordered for table linens, towels, handkerchiefs, lingerie, dresses, etc. For instance, one woman who has worked for Marshall-Fields has quoted us a price of $8.00 a dozen for three letters an inch and a half high.

BOUDOIR PILLOWS

Pieces of lace sent in will be made into boudoir pillows.

PHOTOGRAPHS

By special arrangement with one of the photographers, who does most artistic work, the League will receive a percentage of all orders taken here.

By ordering your Christmas present through the League you are not only helping to broaden the scope of our work, but you are making it possible for some of the women who are doing this work to enjoy a happy Christmas.

ALL ORDERS SHOULD BE DIRECTED TO THE ATTENTION OF THE CHRISTMAS SALE COMMITTEE.

OPPORTUNITY CIRCLE

This Committee is giving women who must earn something in their homes an opportunity to make sample children's dresses from which orders may be taken. The dresses are distinctive in design, many copied from imported models, and maybe ordered in all sizes. The committee members are compiling lists of mothers whom they think will be interested in these dresses and are themselves calling upon these mothers to show them the samples.

Be ready to receive them when they call or if you are planning to order dresses at once leave a call at the office for them—HE-5133. It will mean an opportunity for you to order dainty, attractive dresses for the little ones as well as to help some other mother to earn a living.

Call Hempstead 5133
When you have a bundle
for the THRIFT SHOP.
The Fall cleaning should net the Shop many welcome donations.

SHUT-IN

Ask to see the baskets and trays made by a Shut-In who has not walked for eight years. Every year his friends gather the needles of the Torrey Pines and he weaves them into beautiful and useful baskets, bringing the scent of the mountains to us. By selling his handicraft we raise him from the position of being dependent upon charity to that of being self-supporting. Your friends back East would appreciate such a souvenir of California. All have heard of our beautiful Torrey Pines.

MEMBERSHIP

In answer to these questions asked us so often: "How does one become a member of the League," we wish everyone to know that membership is open to any one who wishes to join us in "All for Service and Service for All." It is not necessary to wait to be especially invited, your willingness to serve makes you eligible. A call to the office will bring an application blank to you.

THE DAY NURSERY, 5612 DE LONGPRE AVENUE

OUR DAY NURSERY, IN SUPPLYING CARE, IS KEEPING MANY A CHILD OFF THE STREET. SUPERVISED PLAY IS HELPING TO BUILD THEM INTO USEFUL MEN AND WOMEN.

MRS. ERWIN P. WERNER, CHAIRMAN
5612 DE LONGPRE AVENUE.

FIFTEENTH CENTURY MANTELPIECES OF Istrian Stone, which, as in the bridges and palaces of Venice, draws its softened polished beauty from the ages, are among the pieces in our extensive collections which will pique your interest and appeal to your imagination. These antiques are no more expensive than good modern pieces and any of them may be translated to present day settings so economically that cost of shipping is truly incidental.

S & G GUMP CO., 246-268 POST ST. Gump's S & G Gump Co. 246-268 Post St San Francisco California — San Francisco, California

Autumn in the High Sierra —Nature makes its greatest appeal at this delightful season

Gay colors in riotous profusion; clear, bracing air of the high-lands; sparkling mountain streams teeming with gamy trout; long hikes through fragrant forests—mayhap a try at a fleeting four-pointer.

These are the attractions of the high Sierra in Autumn. So visit them now.

Buy Roundtrip Fares

—save money.

Many resorts and mountain inns remain open. Ask our agents about them, and how to reach them conveniently and economically via

Southern Pacific Lines

So Goes Milady With luxury attending

Golden State Limited East

Full half a train devoted to woman—greater recognition of her just dues in travel than ever before planned. Perfect in every appointment—of course.

All-Pullman—women's lounge, shower bath, maid, manicure, expert hair bobbing in the barber shop—comfort for the men, too—club car, bath, valet and barber.

Leave Los Angeles 12:01 p. m. [via Southern Pacific]; San Diego 10:45 a.m. [via S. D. & A.]; arrive Chicago 10:00 a. m. third day [via Rock Island].

Thru Pullman daily from Santa Barbara 8:00 a. m. [via Southern Pacific].

For tickets, reservations, personal service, call on

Southern Pacific City Ticket Office
937 State St., Santa Barbara, Calif.
Phone 243

or address B. F. Coons, General Agent
Rock Island Lines
809 Van Nuys Bldg., Los Angeles, Calif. 893

Rock Island

SOUTHERN LINES PACIFIC

Meals? "The best on wheels"

Where the most delicious creams and ices, cakes and pastries are made. Catering to small and large parties!

The Elite CATERERS AND CONFECTIONERS 629-641 S FLOWER ST LOS ANGELES CALIF

In Pasadena 634 East Colorado

BREAKFAST
LUNCHEON
DINNER
Hollywood
4902 Hollywood Blvd.

A NEW HOME ON LOMBARDY ROAD

WALLACE NEFF, ARCHITECT — HOGAN COMPANY, BUILDERS

IN selecting and presenting the work of California's leading architects, this magazine endeavors rather to give to its readers pictures of the dominant trend in building rather than to show the cities of the Southland as they are today. Rehabilitation is going on all over this section in towns that have not yet experienced their first earthquake. Whole streets of flimsy houses once called "California," because built to be used by temporary inhabitants, are being removed to make way for business blocks and the residence sections are being determined on the edge of town. These are now being covered with houses in a new architecture. It is not a copy of any known style, but it is composed of elements of beauty used in past ages and constructed of local material. Its background was described by Mr. Myron Hunt before the American Institute of Architects in Washington in a talk reprinted in this issue on page 28. Mr. David Allison suggests that it be called "California Renaissance," as it is original and yet draws upon the sources of the past.

No more luscious example of the sheer beauty of this new style of California residence is to be found today than that of the Arthur K. Bourne residence by Wallace Neff, one of our youngest Californian architects, whose prolific work springs up continuously in our midst.

It is set in that eastern portion of Pasadena just north of the Henry E. Huntington estate, spoken of as "Lombardy Road." Viewed from every side it is beautiful and the view from its every window, gallery and grilled balcony is, at present, unsurpassed.

One opens the front door set in an archway off the entrance court and finds directly opposite him another door wide open to a great stretch of lawn, a low wall, and the Sierra Madres beyond. Like the doors through which Alice went into Wonderland, the walls of this lovely house seem to open where one has grown to expect blank walls and the long, low house itself seems to be but a partition between Lombardy Road and the Arcady beyond.

THE HOME OF MR. AND MRS. ARTHUR K. BOURNE. WALLACE NEFF, ARCHITECT. HOGAN COMPANY, PASADENA, BUILDING CONTRACTORS.
Geo. Haight, Photographer.

Yet the house, open as it is to California's great out-of-doors, is perfect in its service, its dining rooms, its great, high-ceiling living room and its exquisitely planned children's wing, where playthings have their place, but where courtesy and hospitality and perfect order reign. In this east wing of the house the craftsmen have done exquisite service, catering to the children's whimseys in door catch and tile work, in painted frieze and beamed ceiling.

MAIN ENTRANCE. HARDWARE FROM WEST & CO.

From the Earle Hardware Company of 2369 East Fifty-first street, Los Angeles, and the West Company of Pasadena, 45 & 47 So. Raymond avenue, came the delightful door knobs and great iron bolt rods that will interest grown-ups as well as the children's younger guests. These were designed by these craftsmen in iron, after consultation with the architect, whose idea was to have each door a unit in itself. The big Spanish sliding bolts were adapted and copied by these master workers in such a manner that they are a genuine contribution to our Californian Renaissance of European craftsmanship. The actual manufacture of this hardware was done in Los Angeles at the Earle Hardware Company, whose exclusive agent in Pasadena is West and Company.

Tiles from every portion of the globe may be found at The Western Tile and Marble Company's showrooms, 386 South Raymond avenue, Pasadena; but in this case Mr. Neff and his client selected colorful and quaint squares of glazed tile from some ancient Alhambra fitting the main stairway or the court.

Introducing color into the walls the architect has had a dado painted on the stucco around the doorways and the children's porch.

The painting of the residence was a "Bliss job," a name that speaks for itself to any architect or house owner who has employed men from the Bliss Paint and Paper Company of 109 North Fair Oaks avenue. Pasadena. Mr. Bliss has established himself as a paint merchant whose workmen can always be depended on for a superior piece of work. So successfully have his men worked on Mr. Neff's houses that it is reported that one of them will accompany the architect to Florida this

Craftsmen have here made their work so subordinated to fitness and use that one longs to live within the low walled court with its potted flowers and planted trees casting dainty silhouettes on white walls and making lacey edges where the shadows of the tiles mark the time of day.

Geo. Haight, Photographer.

Wallace Neff, has chosen for the garden, Miss Katherine Bashford, Landscape Architect, and has left in her competent hands the carrying out of the owner's wishes. This has been done in a manner appropriate to the character of the house and makes the setting a part of the Architect's plan.

ROOF TILE LAID BY FRENCH AND MELOENY
THREE PHOTOGRAPHS BY WM. CLARK

winter to do the painting for him there.

A name that may be new to some, although it comes to us with Mr. Neff's stamp of approval and is therefore worthy of notice is the name of the young man responsible for the electric fixtures, Paul Vauchelet, now temporarily located at 1530 North Western avenue, Los Angeles. Mr. Vauchelet is an artist of high attainments, and the love of the beautiful is manifest in his work as though it were carried over from the medieval ages. We recommend him to any architect who is seeking for a combination of the artistic and distinctive in electric fixtures.

Welcome to all homebuilders is the news that a firm of young, enthusiastic men has taken upon itself the study of the best methods of laying roofing tile. They know the hand-made tiles of California; they realize that care in keeping these tile soaked in water while laying them is vital and they do the work in such a way that Mr. Neff called upon them and placed their names in the specifications. The young men, French and Meloeny, of 517 North Western avenue, Los Angeles, have done such beautiful work on the roof of the house (a striking feature, as one can imagine, above the dazzling white walls) that they have won the praise not only of the public, the architect, and the owner, but also from the other workmen on the job.

Although the illustration reveal no hint of the heating arrangement, this home, in common with many other well built homes in southern California, is equipped with the unit system of electrically controlled heating perfected by the Ohrmund Brothers, whose shop is at 901 East Colorado street, Pasadena. The splendid service of this firm and its quality output has given them a place of permanence in the building world within a comparativly short time.

The architectural advance of California's truly representative houses is accompanied by a construction equally sound and substantial in its improvement over the early "California houses." The Hogan Company of 379 Colorado street, Pasadena, was given charge of the erection of the Bourne residence, not a surprising fact when one considers that they have been the general contractors for other houses which Mr. Neff has designed, such as the Milbank Johnson residence in San Rafael Heights, the fine Carroll Post residence in Oak Knoll and the Mary P. Visscher residence in Prospect Square. Their work is so thoroughly sympathetic and their interpretation of the architect's ideas so faithfully rendered that they are identified with many of the country's most lovely homes, although they are builders in the strictest sense of the word and have no architects in their own firm.

The landscape gardening is the work of Miss Katherine Bushford, selected by Mr. Neff for her ability to translate into the actual trees, and growing things, the pictures he carries in his mind or puts on paper. As early in the season as this it is not possible to do justice to Miss Bashford's work and yet the illustration of her work accompanying this shows her ability to make an effective display of trees and plants in late summer. In another year the Bourne garden will be a place where the trees and shrubs will grow with the air of having belonged forever. It is this sense of fitness, as well as having an eye for unexpectedly lovely outdoor effects, that distinguishes the gardens of this artist, both large and small. In the Bourne garden her fancy has been given full freedom and there she may be seen at her best.

THE CHANDELIER WAS SELECTED AT THE SHOP OF PAUL VAUCHELET

The house as it stands in its completed state is worthy of the admiration that has been given it freely from every privileged visitor. But it has an additional charm when one comes to analyze its many exceptionally good points and to examine the work of the contractors employed by Mr. Neff and The Hogan Company. Mr. Neff is an architect who chooses with a careful eye and once he has found a satisfactory man, he gives over to him much of the work on his various houses, with the assurance that the contractor's ability will meet the demand of the job. This particular job had an unusual amount of co-operation from Mr. Bourne, the owner. In fact, so pleased was Mr. Bourne that he insisted on giving a huge party when the house was finished and he invited to it all the workmen who had any part whatever in the building and bade them to be merry in honor of their achievement and to rejoice with him over its beautiful outcome.

When one realizes the importance of an active and intelligent co-operation between contractors and architect one is far along the road to the solution of the problems of creating more architecturally sound homes in this country of architectural possibilities. Even the problem of co-operation between owner and architect is not so important. Whenever it is as satisfactorily handled as in the case of the Arthur K. Bourne house one has, as the illustrations declare, a superb piece of workmanship and an enviable home to live in.

As an outcome of this co-operation between architects of the California Renaissance the demand for craftsmen has brought to the Coast many skilled workers. Makeshift work will no longer satisfy and the public itself is becoming critical. Each craft, of iron work, plaster work, cabinet work, and pottery is growing rapidly and a descrition of the shops now established will make interesting reading as we find room for it. Designs by our best architects are setting a standard in all these crafts; and skilled workmen from Europe are here teaching our young artists how to execute good designs.

CORNER SHOWING THE EFFECT OF SUNSHINE ON THE WHITE WALLS. PAINTING DONE BY BLISS PIANT AND PAPER CO.

RECENT BOOKS—REVIEWS

Continued from Page 14

writer nearly always with a brittle style, and it is most amusing to find matters of sex, of which the book contains a goodly amount, treated in such fashion. Love affairs expressed in biological terms, like super-active generative hormones, interstitial cells, sublimation of the sex-urge, make a pretty strong appeal to the sense of humor, especially when we contrast this method with the sentimentality with which we frequently meet in fiction. The scene of this novel is Atlantic City, with a little of New York also, and we may surely trust Mrs. Atherton to give an authentic account of the fashionable younger set, in these two cities, showing us how they talk, how they regard life and particularly how they play. Notwithstanding social advantages, it would appear that even in these circles, a woman scorned, promptly gets elemental, and goes after her rival in love with any weapon she finds handy, in this case an automobile, which she uses with murderous intent. Kipling tells us that "the captain's lady and Judy O'Grady are sisters under the skin," and Mrs. Atherton has surely rubbed this sentiment in.

GONE ABROAD

By DOUGLAS GOLDRING, Houghton Mifflin Co.

The fireside traveler is a hungry soul, continually looking for his favorite brand of nourishment. In many cases he has already assimilated the cream thereof, and must depend on the quality of what is offered from day to day, hoping always to discover something to remind him of the rich flavor of that before consumed. He is the person to find some gratification in this commendable description of a rambling journey through the Balearic Islands, especially since they are so far off the beaten track of the ordinary tourist. Mr. Goldring is a travel writer with a reflective mind, who infuses his own personality into his observations with considerable success; and scenes and people are something more than just that to him. So that the narrative proceeds in a lively and spirited manner. The book contains also, some proficient character sketches with the scenes laid in Italy. At least one of these has appeared in Blackwood's magazine, a periodical which may be depended upon to publish worth while articles along these lines.

THE RED LAMP

By MARY ROBERTS REINHART, George H. Doran Company

Writers of this kind of fiction, are mostly content with giving their readers for solution,

MARY ROBERTS REINHART

the mysterious circumstances surrounding one murder only. Not Mrs. Reinhart. She believes in delivering his money's worth to the purchaser of this book. So the medium recording the narrative, a college professor whose style Mrs. Reinhart adopts, mentions just one murder or disappearance after another until we have no idea which is the one to work upon. Nor is this all; there are strange doings in this ghastly and ghostly tale, that even the author does not attempt to solve in the end. For instance, why does the red lamp constantly shed its baleful glow although it is locked away in an attic closet? Very spooky indeed! Who does all that coughing, we should like to know. If Mrs. Reinhart knows she keeps it a secret. At any rate she is a veteran with the pen and so is able to hold the attention of a somewhat bewildered reader, but we prefer her as a flapper or an elderly spinster, to the middle aged professor, who recounts this mysterious tale of events taking place in a summer's vacation.

RED ASHES

By MARGARET PEDDLER, George H. Doran Company

While this novel has a somewhat unusual and unhackneyed theme, and an average amount of narrative skill, it has little else to recommend it. It is capably commonplace. The characters have no illusions and the scenes, no atmosphere, while the situations are theatrically contrived, with their purpose perfectly obvious to the discriminating reader. The heroine of this story of English country life, with its usual accompaniments of hunting and house-parties, has suitors, each with his own method of attack. One with a dark sorrow in his past, no secret to the reader, has to be driven to the point of death, a situation of course prepared for the purpose, before he resorts to osculation. Another on the cave-man order, indulges ruthlessly in the pastime on all occasions especially prepared or otherwise. Then there is the noble and renouncing suitor, who kisses a la saint very brotherly and sacredly on the brow. Nor are these all; everybody in the story is being matched. It would surely take no more craftsmanship to present true conceptions of life and art, and the use of talent in this manner is a literary misdemeanor.

CORONA
TYPEWRITERS
With Standard Keyboard
$60 Complete With Case
Also All Makes Sold, Rented, Repaired, Exchanged
Anderson Typewriter Co.
84 E. Colorado St. Pasadena

Dawson's
"The Birds of California"
Complete in four volumes.
De luxe format $225.00 to $500.00
Smaller formats $45.00 to $110.00
Published and Sold by
SOUTH MOULTON COMPANY
301 Bank of Italy Bldg.
VAndike 4078 Los Angeles, Cal.

S. D. UHRICH
Tailor
188 East Colorado Street
Pasadena, California
Fair Oaks 1602
RIDING BREECHES A SPECIALTY

O'HARA, LIVERMORE and ARTHUR BAKEN
INTERIOR DECORATIONS
ANTIQUE AND MODERN FURNITURE
DRAPERIES
644 E. Colorado St. Pasadena, California
522 Sutter St. San Francisco

NO. 121 TALMAGE VASE
Beautiful Garden Pieces
in
Sculptured Terra Cotta
Italian Terra Cotta Co.
W. H. Robison
1149 MISSION ROAD
Opposite County Hospital
Phone Lincoln 1057 Los Angeles

Welcome to call and Browse
Rare & Art Books
Dawson's Book Shop
627 So. Grand Ave.
First Editions
Early Printing
Autographs
Americana
Books Notable for Printing Illustrations and Binding.
Catalogues sent on request:—
LOS ANGELES

HALF DOME ABOVE THE CEDARS

UP THE VALLEY AND DOWN THE COAST

THERE IS NOTHING ELSE AS INTERESTING AS YOSEMITE

By EDITH RICHMOND THOMAS

THE VALLEY GATEWAY

YOSEMITE FALLS IN LATE SUMMER

"THE most beautiful valley in the World," is the way the Yosemite is usually described, not only by native sons but by rank outsiders as well. And no wonder. Its scenery is absolutely unique. There are numerous pseudo-grand canyons and many duplicate Alps scattered over the earth, but there is only one Yosemite Valley and to find it you must come to California.

On our first trip there we took a Southern Pacific train one evening in Los Angeles and arrived at Fresno, the changing point for the Valley, about eight the next morning. From here a run of four hours brought us to El Portal, the gateway to the Yosemite, and another hour by automobile brought us to our destination. Our way that morning followed the course of the Merced river and as we passed into the Valley its foamy surface kept constantly coming to view among the shrubbery and dark trees that lined its banks in the depression below. After passing beneath a natural rock archway that lends the first touch of the bizarre to the scene we entered a stretch of shady pine forest which vista in turn opened up to a wonderful view of the Yosemite Valley, California's most beautiful scenic feature.

Stupendous rock cliffs towering thousands of feet above the level floor of the valley with walls polished smooth by glacier action greeted us as open arms while we sped into the enchanted enclosure. Our attention was constantly being diverted from one side of the valley to the other by the call of the boisterous waterfalls that lunged from dizzy heights to add their quota to the noisy Merced. But above all, imposing in its grandeur and simplicity loomed El Capitan, the most astonishing feature of the valley. It is said to be the largest mass of solid rock in the world. The first glimpse of it almost appalls and one remains for minutes, breathless in its presence. This towerng, 3,300 foot monster, almost rectangular in shape, stands out in majestic isolation from the rest as though well aware of the commanding position it holds, among the wonders of this picturesque rift of the Sierra Nevadas. It is not as high as some of the others but it creates a thrill and wields unending magic over all who see it as none of the rest can do. It was up its hoary side that the "Human Spider" by special permit took his way only to suffer the eclipse of his mental faculties as the result of his terrible accomplishment.

There is talk of boring a tunnel through the rock to its base and installing elevators for the use of people who wish to make the ascent, but lack of the wherewithal to do it apparently stands between it and its fulfilment. I shall not only always recall El Capitan as the chief wonder of the Yosemite, but also as one of the noblest natural monuments on the globe. The Sentinel, Dome, Three Brothers, Half Dome and Cathedral Rocks may lure away allegiance temporarily, but in the final review the one outstanding feature of the Yosemite Valley will be El Capitan.

By one o'clock we reached Camp Curry, our destination, and lunched in the spacious rustic dining-room beneath the tall, straight fragrant incense cedars that lend this camp its greatest charm. As for the loiterers here in Nature's Mansion they were many and various; dames of portly mein in hiking togs disporting themselves with all the assurance of the flapper class; blase men with Alpenstocks, giving the impression that they had long ceased to be thrilled by Nature's wonders; school teachers, moneyed crones and last but not least, movies. And not the least interesting feature of this cosmopolitan vortex was the unexpected meetings one witnessed on all sides. People who did not know the others were in this part of the world, relatives, friends. The reunions were so numerous that they seemed to be contagious. It happened just at the time of our visit that Camp Curry registered the greatest number of guests for a single day in its history. And by the end of the season, September fifteenth, it had harbored no less than 119,333.

Winding its graceful way down the Valley's center, flows the Merced, its banks lined with poplar, dogwood, and willows. And among the groves are stretches of meadows and camping grounds. Incense cedars, firs and pines thrust their tall spires one hundred and fifty feet skyward and measure nearly a dozen feet in diameter. The bark of the former is a pretty cinnamon brown, in fascinating contrast to that of the other varieties. It was with long strips of this bark that the early Yosemites roofed their wigwams, and they used it in a variety of other ways.

The rim of the Valley stands out clear-cut against the sky and like the Cordillera of the Andes reveals mysterious outlines that appear like colossal ruins left by some antideluvian race. All around are cataracts and falls, leaping and roaring as they tumble headlong from heights many times the height of Niagara. There is the Yosemite Falls, whose plunge is broken by a ledge, dividing it into an upper and lower Falls, lacking but little of half a mile in height! It is by far the highest falls in the world, although in volume, excepting when the melting snows of the High Sierras adds to it, it is surpassed by many. It is difficult to believe that the insignificant stream meandering across the floor of the valley to join the Merced, could have produced such a stupendous sight. Then there are the Bridal Veil, Nevada, Vernal and a considerable number of others some drying up completely during the summer. But this deficit is made up for in the winter when these Brobdingnagian cliffs drip with hundreds of cascades where before they numbered tens.

In watching the water descend from such a height the eye is deceived into beholding it hanging almost pendant in the air, the altitude of the unusual spectacle being temporarily lost, rather than increased by the apparent slowness of the water's movement. Time alone corrects the illusion and only after repeated visits to the Falls does a proper adjustment of vision take place. For those who have gazed at the unrivaled sight, it will set a new standard for comparison for ever afterward.

As the water reaches the floor of the valley it, in many cases, has become but a mist and at certain times of day, especially when the sun strikes directly upon it, all the colors of the rainbow scintillate therein. Circular rainbows too are seen and the sound of falling water echoing and reechoing throughout the valley day in and day out, year after year, adds but another distinctive feature to the Yosemite.

Then there are old trails and places steeped in romance, legend and mystery. Curious markings on a cliff face that has been scoured clean by the Yosemite glacier ages ago, represent evidence for some long told tale. There are nuns with woeful countenances, friars with packs on their backs, lions, soldiers, elephants heads, aborignes and a bona fide map of the United States. The car draws up close to the base of El Capitan. An eighty foot tree nestling in a lofty crevice of its side, two thousand feet up in the air is pointed out and can be seen by those with keen eyesight. Nearby the expansive sheet of rock discloses an aborigine with hand extended toward the west in the direction he appears to be going. This figure is held in great veneration by the few Yosemites still living in the valley. It represents "Choo-toose-ka" one of their ancient chiefs, who, caught in the high tide of love for a stranger maid —that not unlike the Queen of Sheba had journeyed far to imbibe his far-famed wisdom, and unconciously ensnared him with her charms—left all to follow her. It is thought that he set out westward, for that is the direction "Tissaack" took when she surreptitiously fled from the advances of the importunant chief. They were never seen again.

As for Tissaack, her portrait too hangs in the imperishable Yosemite gallery. It seems that after the chieftan's flight, terrible calamities befell his people and their beautiful home. The earth shook and trembled, splitting the rocks asunder. The great rock on which the maiden had made her home while a guest in the valley was cleft in twain, leaving it an almost perfect half dome. Here on its straight flat side as though smoothed for the purpose her likeness is depicted. Her hair is cut straight across her forehead and falls down at the sides, just as they say she used to wear hers.

(To be Continued in November)

The Girls' Collegiate School 34th Year
NEWLY LOCATED IN THE COUNTRY
Boarding and Day School. Accredited East and West. Out-Door Life a Reality. 50-acre estate. All sports. Saddle Horses. New Buildings. Italian type. L. A. Office, 1008 W. Adams St.
Glendora, Calif. Miss Parsons and Miss Dennen, Principals

An Ideal School for Young Women
Cumnock School
COLLEGE WORK IN THE FOLLOWING COURSES:
Vocal Interpretation of Literature
Literary Appreciation — Voice and Diction — Short-Story
Public Speaking — French — Dancing
Dramatics — Story Telling — Psychology
Journalism
Art and Art Appreciation
An accredited High School and Junior School under same management
HELEN A. BROOKS, Director
5353 West Third Street — Los Angeles
WHitley 3427 —TELEPHONES— WHitley 7311

The Elliott School for Girls
Residence and Day School.
Ideal Home Life — Character Building
Superior Educational Advantages. Sub-Primary through Eleventh Grade. Martha Collins Weaver, M. A., Principal. Pico Blvd. at Grammercy Place.
EMpire 5347

GREENWOOD SCHOOL FOR GIRLS
5928 Franklin Avenue, Hollywood
Select Resident and Day School
Lawns, Tennis Courts, Outdoor Swimming Pool. Special advantages in music, under Mrs. Elsa Spencer.
Principals:
Mrs. M. Greenwood, Newnham College, Cambridge
H. F. Greenwood, A. B., Corpus Christi College, Cambridge
Telephone HOlly 2886

MISS HARKER'S
SCHOOL FOR GIRLS
Palo Alto -:- -:- -:- California
"The home of Stanford University"
Outdoor life all the year round. One hour from San Francisco. College Preparatory and Special Courses. Separate residence for girls from 5 to 14 years. Catalog on request.

The Katharine Branson School
Ross, Marin County, California
A Country School for Girls — College Preparation
One Hour From San Francisco — Outdoor Athletics

KENWOOD HALL
Resident and Day School for Girls. Sub-Primary through High School.
Open throughout the year.
Directors: Ruby Mildred King, Grace Baylor Bobbitt.
Tel. WAshington 1612 — 675 So. Vermont Ave., Los Angeles

The Art of
Norma Gould
Authentic Dances—Pantomime
Eurythmics
Ball Room Dancing—Miss Kramer
Fall Terms Opening October
460 N. Western Ave.
HEmpstead 3530

For the Art Study Sections of Clubs

(An Introduction to a Course of Study on Appreciation of Present Day Architecture.)

THE Division of Art of the California Federation of Women's Clubs offers suggestions, from month to month, as to methods that are practicable for the study of art in sections of Women's Clubs. These suggestions are published in the Federation News, the official organ of the Federation.

They include lists of traveling exhibits of original works of art, which the Federation makes available for the use especially of smaller clubs, not accessible to galleries; also lists of books on art, chosen for their readable qualities, as well as for their value in the phase of art they discuss.

Also suggestions as to how our clubs may co-operate in forwarding civic art; for example, by careful study of the new Santa Barbara plan; also suggestions for lines of work and study that may well be taken up in art study sections that have not the advantage of an artist leader.

One of these plans for study sections is concerned with the Appreciation of Present Day Architecture, and as this course needs to be copiously illustrated, the Division of Art, through the co-operation of the publisher of CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND, is presenting the course in this magazine, which is devoted so splendidly to the interests of fine architecture and other worthy community interests.

The Division of Art, of the California Federation of Art, is deeply interested in the finest architectural development of our state. Our thought is, not that by study of architecture, paintings, city plans, etc., we shall become technical experts or technical critics, but simply that by an appreciative understanding of the great possibilities that all these lines of art have to offer, we may arouse in our communities a greater interest in the value of beauty—real fundamental beauty of harmony and proportion.

A speaker in one of our clubs recently said that most people think of art as nothing more than "a decorative fringe on the edges of life"; this is the definition we wish to replace by something quite different.

We should like to have our clubs arouse greater community interest in the type of public building that our tax money is erecting; we believe that these buildings should not be, as they seem too often, merely a matter of so much size and so much cost per foot; but we believe that each of them should be as much a work of art as is a great painting; that by its beauty of proportion and balance, its harmony of line and color, every passer-by who sees it, should be, consciously or sub-consciously, impressed with those qualities of dignity, integrity, and beauty which we think of as the basis, not only of art, but of citizenship.

We think of the Lincoln Memorial in Washington as a great example of the qualities we would have our public buildings to express.

We believe that perhaps there is some relation between harmony and balance in our surroundings, and harmony and balance in our lives; at any rate, we believe that whatever tends to enrich life by bringing in spiritual things, is well worth our while.

We believe, moreover, that beauty is not a matter of dollars and cents, but of understanding and appreciation; that a cottage may be a thing of beauty, through some understanding of design and color; that a palace may be a monstrosity without it.

In this state of California we have a wonderful opportunity for making exquisite pictures of our homes and of our cities, because of our glorious background of mountains and sea and our luxuriant color masses of flowers and blooming trees.

We have, moreover, an inspiration for the building of these homes and cities, in the architecture that is ours by historic lineage, coming to us from the Mediterranean countries, through the Spanish Colonial era and the Mission fathers; an inspiration that the art and skill of modern architects makes suitable and beautiful for our modern needs.

Moreover this architecture is ours because it suits our climate; its color absorbs our bright light; its type fits most picturesquely against our background; it lends itself so readily to hospitality, with its friendly semi-formal patio garden—and above all, it gives us the restfulness of plain walls—surfaces of beautiful texture, unbroken by too much detail—detail which would not accord with the sweep of mountain and sea which characterizes our great outdoor country.

So we have unusual inducements for the delightful study of the appreciation of architecture.

The first subject under our outline—Creative Design versus Tradition, is being discussed on the following page, in an article by Myron Hunt. For supplementary reading on this subject see the June number, 1924, Journal of American Institute of Architects, "Influence of Tradition on Architecture," by Magonigle.

We are most fortunate in having the outline for our course prepared especially for us, by Nellie Huntington Gere, Chairman of the Art Department and Associate Professor of Art, in the University of California, Southern Branch.

In each succeeding issue, one of the subjects under her headings will be discussed by a well known California architect. Each article will be accompanied by pictures which will illustrate specifically the points especially stressed in the article.

Next month's article will be under heading 2, Domestic Architecture, and will be written especially for this series, by David Witmer, Secretary of the Southern California Chapter, American Institute of Architects.

Further suggestions to club sections, for supplementary work which may be done in connection with this course, including the making of portfolios, is given in the October issue of the Federation News.

FLORENCE W. PETERS, Chairman of Division of Arts, California Federation of Women's Clubs.

THE FORE COURT OF THE CHARLES D. BLANEY HOUSE, SARATOGA, CALIFORNIA. THE HOUSE IS PICTURED IN TWO CUTS ON PAGE 29 AND ONE ON PAGE 28.

OUTLINE OF A COURSE IN THE APPRECIATION OF ARCHITECTURE

By NELLIE HUNTINGTON GERE

THE subjects suggested are meant to be considered from the appreciative standpoint, and not for the history or the technique of architecture.

Of all the visual arts, architecture is the most vital and inclusive; it is the reason and the background for all of the other arts. The finest sculpture has grown out of architectural problems. The greatest opportunities of the painter, lie in mural rather than easel paintings. The craft worker and the landscape architect help to realize and complete the vision of the building architect. Interior architecture gives the keynote to the decorator and furnisher; the interior becomes a background for people and costumes. Harmonious and beautiful surroundings influence us toward health, efficiency and a happier, richer life.

I—Creative Design Versus Tradition

Originality, without fine arrangement and unity, results in freakishness or the commonplace. Mere copying of style, on the other hand is the line of least resistance, but leads to no real achievement. The creative architect makes new use of old material, and new combinations to meet modern needs and climatic conditions. He is not a slave to historic styles. The finest of the old is a rich inheritance and is a constant joy and stimulus to the creative mind.

II—Residential Architecture (David Witmer)

The Relation of Building to Site.

Conservation of natural beauty, and making the most of a view. Possibilities of the level lot and the hillside site. Relation of size of building to property, tendency to crowd the small lot with too large a building. Evolution of building design from the ground plan. Lines of walks and drives in relation to building and grounds.

III—Residential Architecture

Adaptation to climatic needs; floor plans for good "circulation"; economy of space, convenience, sunlight and air, beauty of proportion. Exterior through fine design expresses dignity and hospitality. Originality and individuality.

IV—Proportion the most important Principle in Architectural Design

The first proportioning of widths and lengths in the ground plan, the width to height in the facade, the story divisions, size, and spacing of windows, doors and mouldings are all matters of scale adjustment capable of the greatest beauty and refinement. No surface enrichment will compensate for lack of interesting proportion in line and area. The Parthenon and the Companile of Florence are supreme examples of proportion. Fine proportion will however dignify any structure, a little house, a shop or a garage. We find different degrees of excellence in proportion, one building is good, another much finer, and so on up to the supreme example.

V—The Element of Line in Architecture

The roof lines, chimneys, balconies, the staircase, doors and windows. Lines of opposition as in Egyptian architecture, or in any doorway with posts and lintel; lines of transition as in the bracket; lines subordinated to bilateral symmetry as in the Taj Mahal. We find rhythm of line in the old Roman aqueducts, in cathedral interiors, in the beautiful cloisters of Monreale, Viterbo and St. Trophime at Arles and in the cathedral and tower of Pisa—in all of these rhythm in fine spacing. Mosaic frieze, wood carving, and iron grilles often give good examples of rhythm.

VI—Notan, Color and Texture. VII—The Importance of the Garden. VIII—Town and City Planning—The Architect's Greatest Problem. IX—Church Architecture. X—Civic Architecture and Buildings for Commercial Use. XI—The American Sky-Scraper. XII—California Achievements.

Editor's Note—We take great pleasure in co-operating with the Chairman of The Division of Art of the California Federation of Women's Clubs to present this series of illustrated articles on the Appreciation of Present Day Architecture to our readers. In publishing this month the introduction and part of the outline of study we hastened to announce the course before the clubs of the state settle down to work; and therefore we are using illustrations and text already in print for this issue. Our plan is to direct attention each month to page 29 on which we are now running illustrations and articles representing the American Institute of Architects—the final authority on architecture and its profession in the United States.

Mr. Myron Hunt whose extemporaneous speech on California Architecture was begun in the September number is a leading member of the Southern California Chapter A. I. A., and Vice-President of the A. A. A. With Mr. David Allison, Mr. Farquahr, and Mr. C. H. Cheney, three of our Beaux Arts men in architecture. Mr. Myron Hunt is on the Jury of the Palos Verdes Project. Mr. Olmstead and Mr. Cheney as city planners act on this jury which is leading the world in comprehensive city and architetural design. The Editor has been invited "to listen in" at the meetings of this jury and will give to this course of study a monthly glimpse of the great things there being done. The work of Californian Renaissance going on at Santa Barbara will also be recorded and illustrated from month to month.—M.U.S.

On page 28 at the top of the column is a picture of "the tower of Cathedral Alcala de Clushert, Province of Castillon." From "Spanish Farmhouses and Minor Public Buildings by Winsor Soule. This book should be in every club library.

The Westlake
School for Girls
333 South Westmoreland Avenue
Residence and Day School
Lower School, College Preparatory, Junior College
Fully Accredited
Departments of Art, Music, Home Economics
JESSICA SMITH VANCE FREDERICA DE LAGUNA
Telephone DRexel 0052

Urban Military Academy
The Great Outdoor School for the Building of Body and Brain and Character Under Matchless Conditions
Open All Year. Address MISS SALEY, Registrar
637 Wilcox Ave., Los Angeles. HEmpstead 7602

NEW HOME
OF PACIFIC
MILITARY ACADEMY
Culver City, California

Boarding and Day School. Fireproof Buildings. Completely Equipped Laboratories. Grammar and High School. Enrollment limited.
For Catalogue Write Mrs. Loughan or telephone Culver City 3294

SECRETARIAL COACHING
For cultured people desiring personal attention. Refined, harmonious surroundings. All Secretarial subjects. Parliamentary Law. Bride's Budget.
Management, Mrs. Frank Rutherford. 711 South Vermont Ave. Fltzroy 1763.

The Assembly Tea Room
The In and Out-of-Town House of Los Angeles serves
LUNCHEON, TEA AND DINNER
INCIDENTALLY
The Very Choicest Food
Special Sunday Dinner 5 to 8
644 South Flower St., Los Angeles
Phone VAndike 7177

Community Arts Association
SANTA BARBARA
SCHOOL OF THE ARTS
FRANK MORLEY FLETCHER, DIRECTOR
GRAPHIC, DECORATIVE AND PLASTIC ARTS — DRAMA, MUSIC, DANCING
Semester October-May, Summer School six weeks July-August
Address 916 Santa Barbara Street, Santa Barbara, Calif.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA CHAPTER A. I. A. MONTHLY BULLETIN

THE ATTITUDE OF THE AMERICAN INSTITUTE OF ARCHITECTS TOWARD COMPETITIONS

SINCE its foundation, more than fifty years ago, the American Institute of Architects has given much attention to the conduct of architectural competitions. These contests, instituted when the direct selection of an architect could not be made, were for many years conducted without proper regulation and often in disregard of the interests both of the owner and of the competitors. The owner, totally unfamiliar with the intricacies of the subject, assumed, without skilled assistance, to prepare the program, laying down, or more frequently ignoring, rules to govern procedure

With the growth of the country, the increase in expenditures for public and private buildings, and the increase in the number of architects, all the evils of ill-regulated competitions became more marked. Programs varied from loose and careless forms, difficult to understand and often open to the suspicion that only the initiated knew what they meant, to over-elaborate ones necessitating useless study of details and needless drawings. Those instituting the competition often had no legal authority to pay any competitors, still less to employ the winner. There was great economic waste, the total cost of participation exceeding the total net profit accruing to the profession from work secured through competitions.

Architects have learned that the outcome of a competition, unless governed by well-defined agreements, is largely a matter of chance. The owner has, to be sure, a choice of designs, but he is no more likely to make the wisest selection or to obtain the best building than if he selects his architect directly guided by the results previously achieved by the men he is considering.

When a competition is necessary or desirable it should be of such form as to establish equitable relations between the owner and the competitors. To insure this:

1. The requirements should be clear and definite, and the statement of them, since it must be in technical terms, should be drawn by one familiar with such terms.

2. The competency of all competing should be assured. The drawings submitted in a competition are evidence, only in part, of the ability of the architect to execute the building. The owner, for his own protection, should admit to the competition only those to whom he would be willing to entrust the work; that is, to men of known honesty and competence.

3. The agreement between the owner and the competitors should be definite, as becomes a plain statement of business relations.

4. The judgment should be based on knowledge, and since ideas presented in the form of drawings are intelligible only to a trained mind, judgment should not be rendered until the owner has received competent technical advice as to the merits of those ideas.

To sum up: To insure the best results a competition should have (1) a clear program, (2) competent competitors, (3) a business agreement, (4) a fair judgment.

Traditions and Materials

Address of Myron Hunt, given at the 58th Annual Convention of the A. I. A., 1925

(Continued from September Number)

Recently, particularly in the last decade, there is a noticeable influence caused by the large influx of Europeans, southern Europeans, Italians, Portuguese—so that we have a new influence that is going to affect our architecture—the traditions of Europe.

The influence that is represented by climate, the desert and irrigation, is perhaps the strongest—I think even stronger than any racial tradition. The Canadian Hills just north of you are perhaps the oldest mountains in the world, while our Sierras on the west coast are the newest mountains in the world.

The sand and gravel coming down the water ways represent the erosion that occurred everywhere in the early stages of the world's history. Our rivers are so full of sand that they run dry. Those of you who have been out there will understand what I mean.

The Live Oak and Sycamore are our trees and they are beautiful. The Live Oak is as wonderful as anything that is dark and green and big, and doesn't drop its foliage, can well be. The natural result of recent settlement has been to bring the Mediterranean and other exotics to the southwest, some exotics that are not as fortunate as the better Mediterranean things.

"FROM DOMESTIC ARCHITECTURE IN EUROPE" BY WINSOR SOULE, SANTA BARBARA

In regard to the influences that are the result of the materials available, the first to mention, wood. There is substantially no wood in the southwest (except in portions of Arizona) that is available for building and our wood comes from the northern coast. The lumber areas of the north are going and we must fall back on more permanent materials.

Brick-making clay we have, of course. There are to my knowledge only one or two districts where there is a clay that produces such a characteristic local brick as the Cambridge brick, and unfortunately even that is not yet appreciated.

DETAIL OF THE BLANEY HOUSE ON PAGE 29. ARCHITECT—THE LATE WILLIS POLK

The development of the more elaborate clay product, terra cotta, is thoroughly under way and the work of developing polychrome terra cotta is under way. However that can hardly be called anything that represents local color because it is developed everywhere. We have clays that make tile roofs, and we need tile roofs in any such atmosphere and climate as we have to work in.

The Franciscan Fathers used the Spanish method of molding roof tiles by hand, molding over the thigh of the workman. And we have in California, fortunately, developed within the last decade, two or three craftsmen who are making a good living, being rewarded for their craftsmanship, from the production of handmade underburned (I am glad to say), well-colored, clay tile for roofs of the type that will age and that will gather moss, where it isn't too arid to let the moss gather, or will gather soot and dirt to take its place.

There is one thing that ought to be mentioned again, one of the things that we don't have to take into account. We burn oil and consequently we get very much less soot, very much less of that type of soiling of buildings.

The building material we have in plenty is sand and gravel. I want you to feel that it is sand, gravel and cement and the plastic results that follow that naturally and properly are going to produce the local color which perhaps in time will give us a genuinely distinctive note in our architecture.

The Franciscan Fathers, building of the poorest rubble, often used nothing but mud for mortar. They built very thick walls. One reason was earthquake conditions. Well, the resultant reveals on some of their old buildings are stunning. We have made the mistake of two dimensional copies of many of their buildings without those reveals, I am sorry to say. Of late there has been slowly developing, as a result of recent processes, a series of buildings made of hollow concrete walls. I built one building with a thirty-inch wall. The outside wall was four inches thick, inside four inches thick. The webs are four inches wide, leaving twenty-two inches for an air space. Others are doing similar things. This is a natural local development. It gives those reveals and that character which the strong sunlight of the southwest demands.

The lack of snow makes it natural in domestic buildings to keep them close to the ground. If you in the east build a country club to be used almost entirely in summer, you just naturally walk right in from the green to the building, without going up a flight of stairs. A characteristic thing in connection with building anywhere in the Mediterranean district, if you get below the snow line, is that you walk right in off the ground without any flight of steps. That possibly affects the character and design of all the things that we do naturally in the southwest. It also gives us an opportunity to spread a plan out.

There is no frost, and you don't have to spend so much money to get below it, five, six or eight feet underground. So since the frost is not one of our problems the same amount of money per cubic foot can be used to spread out.

The plastic result of building that follows these lines and uses these natural materials, produces a comparatively white wall which is characteristic of all sunny countries. Since a white building throws off the sun, it is the logical thing to build a white building in the desert rather than a black building.

Then the black, exceedingly black green of our foliage with our red roofs, seems to tell the story of what is characteristic in the really typical buildings of the southwest. Along these lines we are trying to develop a certain local color of our own. The worst things are very much worse than your very worst. We have the temporary building of Hollywood and we have worse than Hollywood in the temporary homes.

Twenty-five years ago Goodhue went around the world with James Waldron Gillespie, just before I went to California. A year or two later, Goodhue published his drawings of the Gillespie Villa, at Santa Barbara, and my first pilgrimage was to go to Santa Barbara and see what they had done. More than any one else Goodhue had an opportunity to study the possibilities which climatic conditions and

THE ARCHITECTURAL CLUB OF LOS ANGELES

OFFICERS

J. E. Garnsey, President
Roy H. Kelley, Vice-President
H. O. Sexsmith, Secretary
Paul W. Penland, Treasurer

foliage gave him. His publication of his Mexican photographs and of his Gillespie Villa helped us all. Now that he has gone, there is still being finished in Los Angeles a building for which we are hoping great things. It is the library of the city of Los Angeles, a drawing of which is in the room next to us here.

I jumped in my shoes when I saw the drawing, because he had stuck a bunch of foliage out in front of it. The foliage isn't there, but let us hope that there is space for it. It is a nice thing to be able to say that in fifteen years' time all the foliage which you see on that drawing could be there. He appreciated the value of foliage and helped to teach us its value. We are going to miss him greatly. These are the lines we are working on. We ask you to have patience with us as we make an effort to develop these natural local characteristics, the possibilities of which we see. Thank you.

ARCHITECTURAL CLUB

THE following letter received from Mr. Bernhard Hoffmann, chairman, Architectural Advisory Committee of Santa Barbara, is indicative of what our part as a club might be in helping that stricken city to rebuild in an acceptable manner. It is the intention of the Executive Committee of the Club to gather together all possible material on small house architecture, especially of Latin origin, and make it available to Mr. Hoffmann and his committee. Club members who have such designs available are urged to inform the Club Secretary. The Small House Plan Service of the Club is also pledged to help in any manner possible.

Mr. Harold O. Sexsmith, Secretary,
Architectural Club of Los Angeles,

Re Small House Service Planning:

Dear Sir:

The Architectural Advisory Committee of this City is establishing a Small House Service Bureau.

We are familiar with the fine work you are doing and in addition to the results of the local competition, we desire to present to the public of Santa Barbara suggestions which you have developed in Los Angeles, and therefore would welcome an exchange of ideas in this connection.

You will understand our needs in this matter and all available reference material on this subject which you can spare will be gratefully accepted.

Yours very sincerely,
Bernhard Hoffmann, Chairman.

P. S.—You will be interested to know that Mr. Virgil D. Westbrook, Architect, of Seattle, Washington, will have charge of this department of the work.

EAST SIDE OF THE BLANEY HOUSE, SARATOGA, WILLIS POLK, ARCHITECT.

ANOTHER COMPETITION

MANY Club Members have submitted designs in the competition just closed by the Los Angeles Home Builders, Incorporated, on exhibition where the general public may see them. Southern California and especially Los Angeles, through the many competitions recently held here, has done much to advance the art of small house design. Myron Hunt, Sumner Spaulding, and A. M. Edelman were the judges in this last competition and we are certain their findings will be satisfactory to all who enter drawings.

DIRECTORS

Walter S. Davis, Director
J. E. Stanton, Director
H. C. Chambers, Director

We hope to publish the names of the winners in next month's Club Bulletin. We also take this opportunity to commend the spirit which prompted the Los Angeles Home Builders to spend $2500 to make the competition a success.

SAN JUAN CAPISTRANO

YESTERDAY we took some friends on a little trip from Laguna Beach to San Juan Capistrano to visit the old mission. The coast road is lumpy and follows the ups and downs of the rugged coast line but the sun was bright and the sky the blue one remembers along the Mediterranean. The sea that broke and swirled and foamed among the rocks was even bluer than the sky. The mauve and lavendar hills were the final note in nature's symphony. Our friends were Easterners on their first journey to romantic California. They had just read Dana's "Two Years Before the Mast" before starting their journey and had, en route, absorbed much of California's early history. The Mission at San Juan Capistrano was to be one of the high lights in their trip.

We arrived in the sleepy little town. Our friends had visioned old adobe houses with flat pitched tile roofs, arcaded streets perhaps. We stopped our car opposite the gate to the Mission. We got out and stepped ankle deep in dust to a rise in the ground where we could get a good view of the Mission and its enclosing walls. At our backs were the back doors of a half dozen shanty stores with waste and debris piled high on every side. At our feet and sending up a stench to our nostrils was a pile of garbage. Our Eastern friends exchanged glances in chagrin and edged away. We followed subdued. Inside the Mission gate the dirt and disorder of the town was forgotten. The old garden with its grand and stately pepper tree, is lovely at this season of the year. We would have given much for a magic carpet so that we might have transported our friends again to the clean hard beach at Laguna without asking them to pace the disillusionment of squalor and hodge podge outside the Mission walls.

Speed the day when such conditions are no longer existent and California awakes to her heritage.

CALIFORNIA OAKS HAVE INSPIRED THE ARCHITECT TO PRODUCE IN TRUE CALIFORNIA RENAISSANCE STYLE. SEE ARTICLE BY MYRON HUNT, OPPOSITE PAGE.

PHONE TERrace 0127
Lunch, Tea or Dine at
El Patio Tea Room
COMMUNITY PLAYHOUSE BUILDING
37 SOUTH EL MOLINO PASADENA, CALIF.

FLORNINA
Gowns · Negligees · Accessories
and Bathing Suits
Ready to Wear or Made to Order
Unusually Attractive Frocks in Tub Silks and Dotted Swiss
95 South Los Robles Ave., Pasadena
Phone Fair Oaks 113

HEWSON HAND CRAFT STUDIOS
Handwoven One Piece Dresses, Coats and Scarfs, Canadian and Candlewick Bedspreads
Dutch and East Indian Brass, Beads, Fine Pendants and Objects of Art in Great Variety
F. O. 6555 — 602 E. Colorado St. Pasadena
DUnkirk 4909 — 2508½ W. 7th St. Los Angeles

LAUNDERERS DRY CLEANERS
ROYAL LAUNDRY CO.
461 South Raymond Colorado 67
Pasadena, California

Permutit Soft Water Saves Clothes
TROY LAUNDRY
In Business for Twenty Years
Pasadena, Cal. Phone C. 146 Alhambra 243-J

THOMAS FRANKLIN POWER
ARCHITECT
AND
ARCHITECTURAL ENGINEER
DUNKIRK 1442 — 2615 W. SEVENTH ST. LOS ANGELES

French and Italian Arts
Imported by
ELEANOR AND HOLLINGSWORTH BEACH
Italian Sports Hats — Antiques
Old Furniture — Brocades
Embroidered Linens — Old Prints
French Faience — Italian Majolica
Large Parchment Portfolios for Prints and Photographs
630 E. Colorado Street, Pasadena, California
Fair Oaks 6028

T. W. Mather Co. Inc.
PASADENA, CAL.
Dry Goods
Women's & Children's
Wearing Apparel
Colorado Street at Marengo

ARTS AND CRAFTS SOCIETY

By MARION HUGHES CLARK

2871 West Seventh Street.

PROUDLY, we put our new address at the top of the page, that SOUTHLAND has given us in the interests of the Arts and Crafts.

Mr. Hewson treated us beautifully at 3508 West Seventh Street where we shared with him the beautiful high shop, all iron grills and magnificence. We are proud because the new place at 2871 is an indication of our growth (and of Mr. Hewson's) in that we both need a place all our own.

Our friends will have to seek us out—not that we are hidden or hard to find. If you have found Marshall Laird's Studio, that has only a number in its exclusiveness, you will find our modest little place two doors beyond. It is the kind of place you have hunted and found in any city that has grown artistically. You were rewarded for your effort by finding beauty and perhaps you met the artist or craftsman who designed and executed the piece for you.

There is a vast difference between the commercial arts and crafts and the products sponsored by the Arts and Crafts Society. In the latter case the article in question must be passed upon by a jury competent to judge.

A place of our own meant a manager. We were fortunate in securing a trained craftsman. You will be glad to know Miss Vieva Bigelow who comes to us from the University of Wisconsin.

The third item of interest to our readers is that we expect the December number of California Southland to have the Arts and Crafts emblem at the top of the page. If you have in mind anyone who is clever in design, please pass along the following announcement:

"A contest in designing small emblem to be used by the Arts and Crafts Society as a sticker, letter-head, etc., is announced. It may be a conventionalized bird, boat, anything on land or sea, in air or water. It should be simple and direct so that the winning emblem may be reduced in size to an inch.

"Prizes: Mr. H. L. Hewson offers a handwoven dress pattern for first prize. Mr. Porter Blanchard will give a second prize of half a dozen hand-made spoons.

"The contest closes November first.

"The design should be placed in a sealed envelope without a name. Another envelope containing the name should accompany the sketch. The outside of each envelope will be numbered. The contesting sketches will be taken care of and all but the two winning ones selected by a jury will be returned.

"Address: The Arts and Crafts Society, 2871 West Seventh Street, Los Angeles, California."

THE EISTEDDFOD

333 Magnolia Ave., Oxnard,
July 16, 1925.

Editor California Southland,
Pasadena, California.

Enclosed you will find a statement, made out hurriedly at our request and signed by Mr. Hokin, Secretary of Community Service, Oxnard. Mr. Hokin is the third Community Service Secretary we have had in Oxnard. The first, Miss Josephine Randall, of Stanford University, was organizing secretary only. She remained here for several months and interested the people of the town and surrounding territory in organizing Community Service, Inc., which grew out of the war activities. The community was organized in this manner and Mr. Tam Deering, who is now in San Diego, was the first resident secretary. He organized baseball clubs, tennis, handball and many other activities.

When Mr. Deering resigned to go to a larger field Mr. Fred Hokin was called to serve as Community Service Secretary. His work he has outlined in his own words, which will appear in a later issue. The work of the Art Department, of which Mr. Arnold has been chairman for the past two years, grew out of the Eisteddfod work, as did other organizations of the people which bid fair to be permanent. The first organization was the Choral Club.

A brief summary of the work of the Art Department of the Eisteddfod: During the first year contests were held in fine arts, photography, needlework, commercial art and ceramics, and thanks to Mrs. Leighton, who visited here just previous to the Eisteddfod, an exhibit of paintings by artists of Los Angeles was sent up. From this collection, the community purchased by popular subscription and choice Mrs. Leighton's original sketch of "Desert Bloom," to remain as a permanent memorial of the "First Ventura County Eisteddfod."

EISTEDDFOD SONG

(1)

Master minds have studied
And planned enduring peace,
But humble men have started
A work which shall not cease.
An ancient word has furnished
A name for what they do
Those who rouse the people
To cherish what is true.

CHORUS

Eisteddfods, eisteddfods,
They're meeting everywhere.
And those who love the highest
Their time and money share.

(2)

In little village hamlets,
In cities, grand and gay,
The people all are gathering
In friendly, common way.
Art, literature and music,
In these they glady vie;
He profits by the effort
Who wins no prizes high.

(3)

When art and letters triumph
And music hath her way,
Then men shall kill no longer
And Mars will slink away.
Then lend a hand, my brother,
And raise our emblem high
We'll bear it to all nations
Beneath the vaulted sky.

GERTRUDE THOMAS ARNOLD.

(Copyrighted 1925 by the author.)

QUALITY SERVICE
THE ELITE
DRY CLEANERS AND DYERS
Plant: 797 So. Fair Oaks Ave.
Colo. 1349 Pasadena, California

Schaffer Gown Shop
Specializing in
Gowns in the Larger Sizes
New Fall gowns have arrived; new fabrics are delightful; cut velvet gowns, crepe satin and flat crepe in lovely colors.
566 EAST COLORADO
PASADENA

THE BATCHELDER TILES

BATCHELDER-WILSON COMPANY

We produce Tile for Fireplaces, Fountains, Pavements, Garden Pots---anything that is appropriately made from clay. :: :: :: :: ::

2633 Artesian Street

LOS ANGELES, CALIFORNIA

WE offer for investment of Personal or Trust Funds sound Securities returning highest rates consistent with safety.

WILLIAM R. STAATS COMPANY

Established 1887

Government, Municipal and Corporation Bonds

311 East Colorado St.
PASADENA, CALIF.

Los Angeles San Diego San Francisco

Decorating and Finishing Exclusive Furniture

W. G. Pesenecker

Interior and Exterior Painting

34 North Broadway

Phone Col. 5656 Pasadena, Calif.

BETTER HOMES
ARE HEATED WITH

OHRMUND BROTHERS

Unit System of Heating

ELECTRICALLY CONTROLLED

Thousands in Use in Southern California. Let us show you why Ohrmund Brothers Units are superior.

HEATING AND SHEET METAL CONTRACTORS

PASADENA GAS APPLIANCE CO., INC.

901 E. Colorado Street

Pasadena Fair Oaks 9393

Santa Fe

the

CALIFORNIA LIMITED

Transportation's foremost cross continent carrier Santa Fe service standards plus Fred Harvey Dining car cuisine an unequalled travel combination :: :: The New all-drawing room cars are an exclusive Santa Fe feature ::

Santa Fe Ticket Offices & Travel Bureaux

Santa Fe Station
Telephone
Wakefield 5678
Pasadena, Cal.

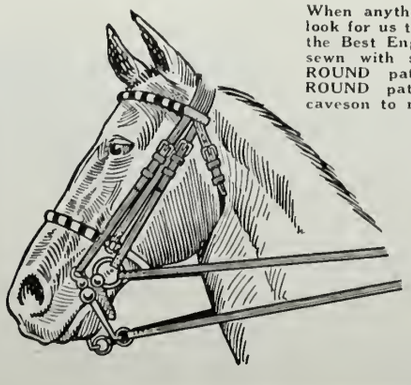
915 State St.,
Telephone 1066
Santa Barbara, Cal.

221 South Broadway
Telephone
BRoadway 8500
Los Angeles

PAINTINGS OF THE WEST

STENDAHL GALLERIES

OF THE PACIFIC COAST



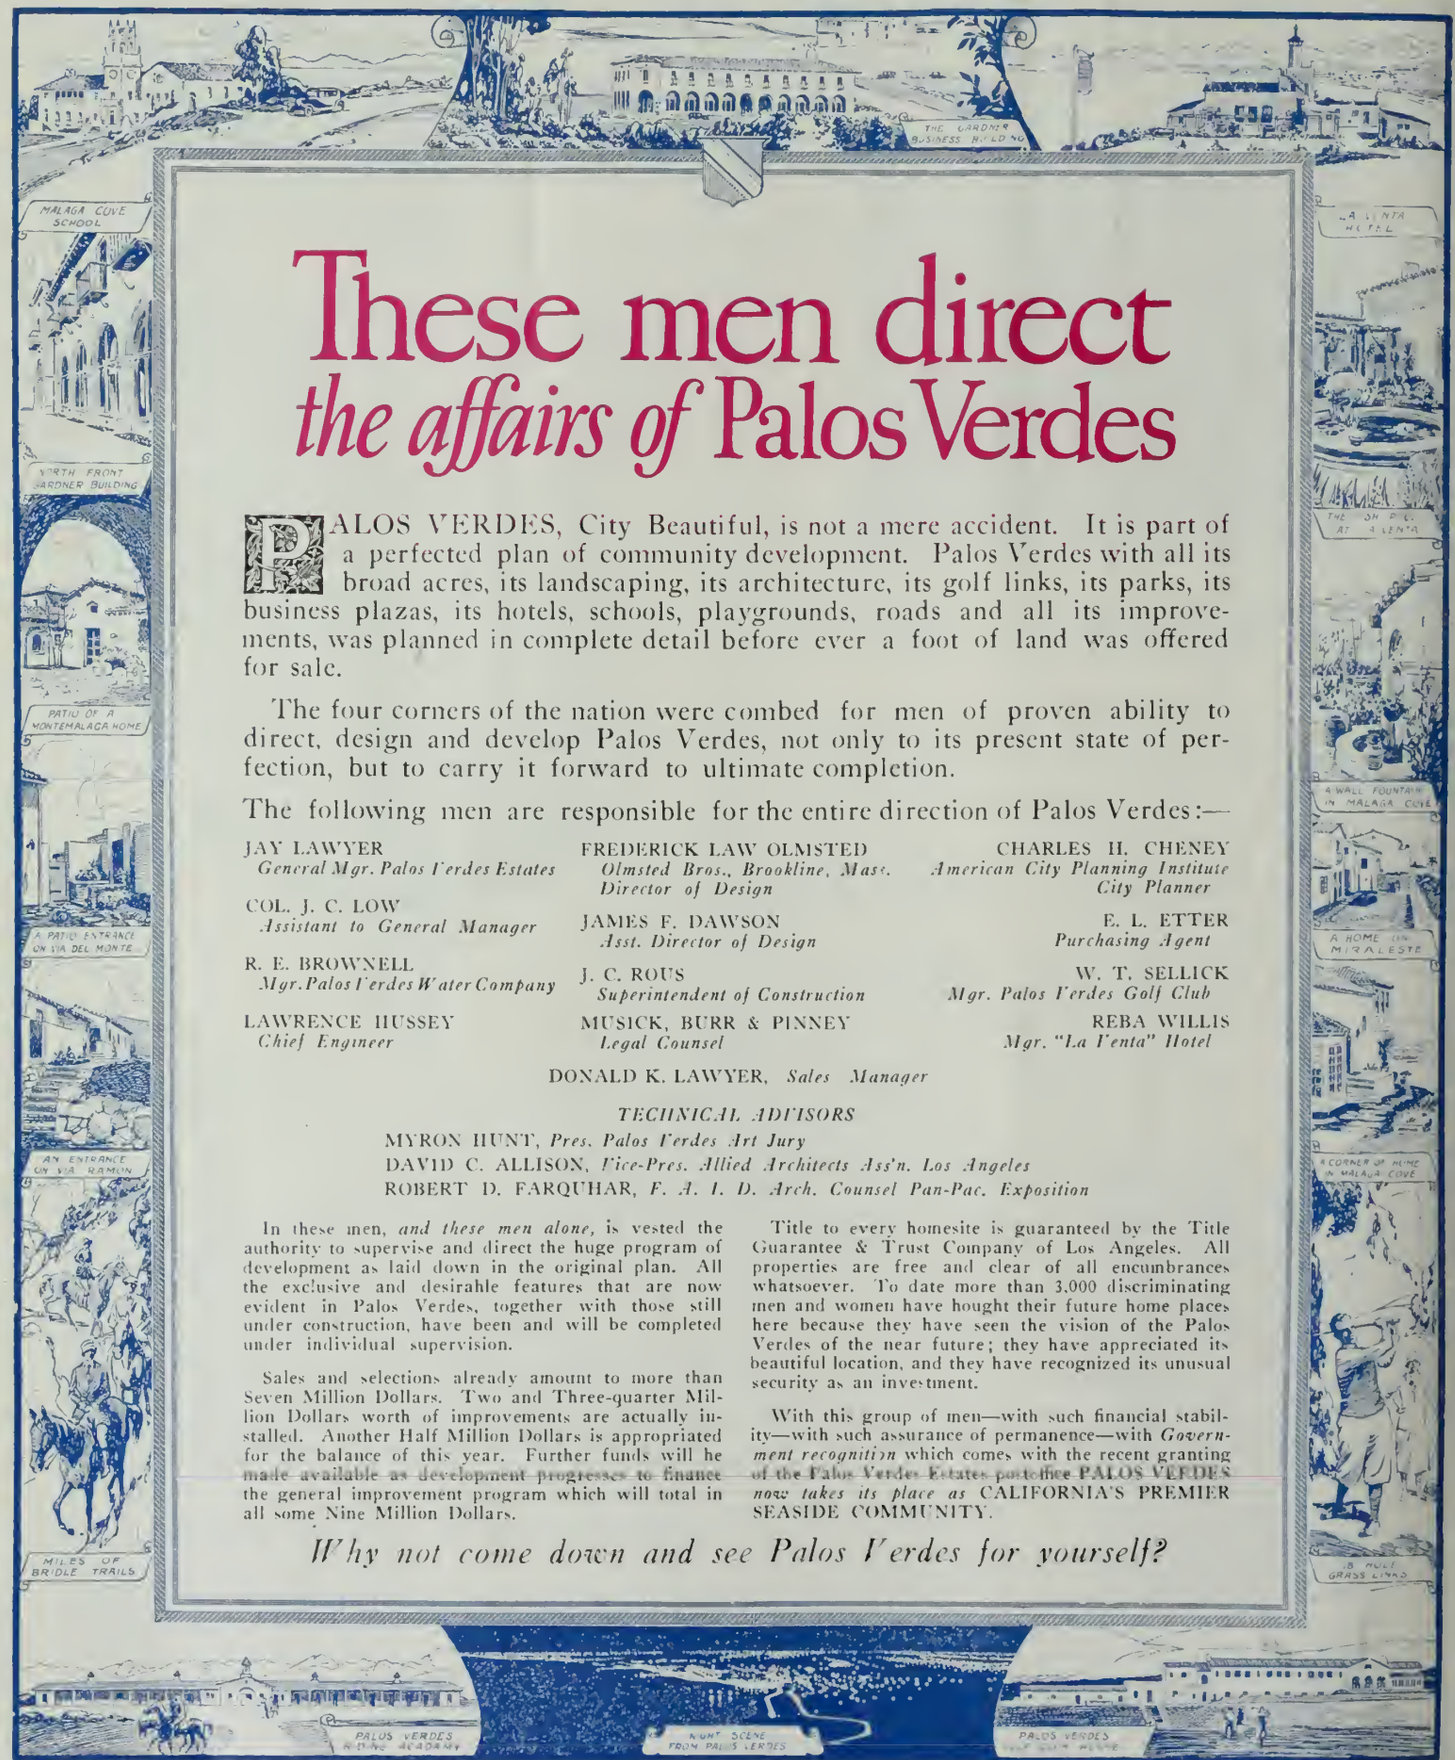
The Ambassador Hotel—Los Angeles Hotel del Coronado—San Diego

LAKE ARROWHEAD LODGE

(Formerly Arlington Lodge)
E. K. Hoak, Managing Director
Mile High—American Plan—Open All Year

Reservations made at 319 Van Nuys Bldg. Tel. VA-0959 or direct to Lodge. Call Lake Arrowhead Main 1. Rates $7.00 a day and up, including meals and room.

$30.00 SUPER SHOW BRIDLES



When anything new is out you can look for us to have it. This Bridle is the Best England can produce, hand sewn with silk, never-rust buckles, ROUND patent leather front and ROUND patent leather spike ring caveson to match with set of KANGAROO bits, including curb, brandoon, chain, hooks and lip strap. Parcel Post prepaid. Money back if you want it, but you won't.

$17.50

Wholesale and Retail
Write for Catalog.

"little joe"
Wisenfeld Co.
BALTIMORE, MD.

These men direct the affairs of Palos Verdes

PALOS VERDES, City Beautiful, is not a mere accident. It is part of a perfected plan of community development. Palos Verdes with all its broad acres, its landscaping, its architecture, its golf links, its parks, its business plazas, its hotels, schools, playgrounds, roads and all its improvements, was planned in complete detail before ever a foot of land was offered for sale.

The four corners of the nation were combed for men of proven ability to direct, design and develop Palos Verdes, not only to its present state of perfection, but to carry it forward to ultimate completion.

The following men are responsible for the entire direction of Palos Verdes:—

JAY LAWYER
General Mgr. Palos Verdes Estates

COL. J. C. LOW
Assistant to General Manager

R. E. BROWNELL
Mgr. Palos Verdes Water Company

LAWRENCE HUSSEY
Chief Engineer

FREDERICK LAW OLMSTED
Olmsted Bros., Brookline, Mass.
Director of Design

JAMES F. DAWSON
Asst. Director of Design

J. C. ROUS
Superintendent of Construction

MUSICK, BURR & PINNEY
Legal Counsel

CHARLES H. CHENEY
American City Planning Institute
City Planner

E. L. ETTER
Purchasing Agent

W. T. SELLICK
Mgr. Palos Verdes Golf Club

REBA WILLIS
Mgr. "La Venta" Hotel

DONALD K. LAWYER, Sales Manager

TECHNICAL ADVISORS

MYRON HUNT, Pres. Palos Verdes Art Jury
DAVID C. ALLISON, Vice-Pres. Allied Architects Ass'n. Los Angeles
ROBERT D. FARQUHAR, F. A. I. D. Arch. Counsel Pan-Pac. Exposition

In these men, and these men alone, is vested the authority to supervise and direct the huge program of development as laid down in the original plan. All the exclusive and desirable features that are now evident in Palos Verdes, together with those still under construction, have been and will be completed under individual supervision.

Sales and selections already amount to more than Seven Million Dollars. Two and Three-quarter Million Dollars worth of improvements are actually installed. Another Half Million Dollars is appropriated for the balance of this year. Further funds will he made available as development progresses to finance the general improvement program which will total in all some Nine Million Dollars.

Title to every homesite is guaranteed by the Title Guarantee & Trust Company of Los Angeles. All properties are free and clear of all encumbrances whatsoever. To date more than 3,000 discriminating men and women have bought their future home places here because they have seen the vision of the Palos Verdes of the near future; they have appreciated its beautiful location, and they have recognized its unusual security as an investment.

With this group of men—with such financial stability—with such assurance of permanence—with Government recognition which comes with the recent granting of the Palos Verdes Estates post office PALOS VERDES now takes its place as CALIFORNIA'S PREMIER SEASIDE COMMUNITY.

Why not come down and see Palos Verdes for yourself?

PALOS VERDES ESTATES

Four and a half miles of California's finest shore line

GENERAL SALES OFFICE: LANE MORTGAGE BUILDING, EIGHTH AND SPRING STREETS, LOS ANGELES, CAL.

CALIFORNIA STATE LIBRARY

CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND

AN ANCIENT CHURCH IN MESSINA ∴ FROM A MODERN PAINTING BY GENNARO FAVAI—PART OF A SPECIAL EXHIBITION AT THE GALLERIES OF JULES KIEVITS, VISTA DEL ARROYO, PASADENA

No. 71 NOVEMBER, 1925 25 Cents

CALIFORNIA'S HOME AND GARDEN MAGAZINE

A Favorite Investment

Southern California Edison securities are recommended for women investors because they are safe.

Of the 80,000 Edison Partners, 32,848 are women.

WRITE FOR PARTICULARS

Southern California Edison Company

Los Angeles

PAINTINGS OF THE WEST
STENDAHL GALLERIES
OF THE PACIFIC COAST
The Ambassador Hotel—Los Angeles Hotel del Coronado—San Diego

LAKE ARROWHEAD LODGE
(Formerly Arlington Lodge)
E. K. Hoak, Managing Director
Mile High—American Plan—Open All Year

Reservations made at 319 Van Nuys Bldg., Tel. VA-0959 or direct to Lodge. Call Lake Arrowhead Main 1. Rates $7.00 a day and up, including meals and room.

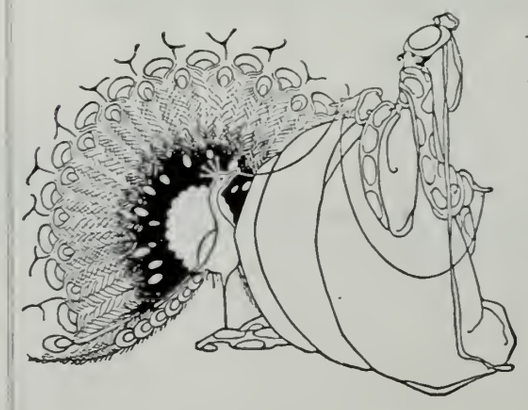
WE offer for investment of Personal or Trust Funds sound Securities returning highest rates consistent with safety.

WILLIAM R. STAATS COMPANY
Established 1887
Government, Municipal and Corporation Bonds
311 East Colorado St.
PASADENA, CALIF.
Los Angeles San Diego San Francisco

The Assembly Tea Room
The In and Out-of-Town House of Los Angeles serves
LUNCHEON, TEA AND DINNER
INCIDENTALLY
The Very Choicest Food
Special Sunday Dinner 5 to 8
644 South Flower St., Los Angeles
Phone VAndike 7177

Scott Auto Rental Company
Successor to
Meagers Auto Rental Service

Buick, Chrysler, Dodge and Ford
Open and Closed Cars



For Hire Without Drivers

Your visit in California can be made much more enjoyable with a car that is yours to come and go as you please.

161 W. Colorado St., Pasadena. Wakefield 8181

MARTHA

WATSON-KERBY
Exclusive Fashions for Women
GOWNS WRAPS SPORTS CLOTHING
2224 WEST SEVENTH STREET
LOS ANGELES
WESTLAKE SQUARE PHONE FITZROY 0823

Lenz HAT Studio
643-645 East Colorado St.
Pasadena, Cal.
Near the New Community Playhouse
Phone Fair Oaks 573

"UP THE VALLEY AND DOWN THE COAST"

The CALIFORNIAN HOTEL

MANAGEMENT H. WINGATE LAKE

FRESNO, CALIFORNIA

A modern, model Hotel devoted to sincere hospitality and dedicated to California's Guests.

THE LOGICAL STOPPING PLACE IN THE SAN JOAQUIN VALLEY FOR ALL POINTS OF INTEREST IN THE HIGH SIERRAS.

EUROPEAN PLAN
258 ROOMS - 258 BATHS
$2.50 PER DAY AND UP
ALL OUTSIDE ROOMS

★ ★ ★

THOMAS FRANKLIN POWER
ARCHITECT
AND
ARCHITECTURAL ENGINEER

DUNKIRK 1442

2615 W. SEVENTH ST.
LOS ANGELES

Santa Fe

the CALIFORNIA LIMITED

Transportation's foremost cross continent carrier Santa Fe service standards plus Fred Harvey Dining car cuisine an unequalled travel combination :: :: The New all-drawing room cars are an exclusive Santa Fe feature ::

Santa Fe Ticket Offices & Travel Bureaux

Santa Fe Station
Telephone
Wakefield 5678
Pasadena, Cal.

915 State St.,
Telephone 1066
Santa Barbara, Cal.

221 South Broadway
Telephone
BRoadway 8500
Los Angeles

REAL ESTATE

For Sale: In Montecito, a charming, newly-built, Norman-French cottage (Pierpont & Walter S. Davis, architects). Three master bedrooms, two baths, two maids' roms and bath. Unit-system heating. Double garage. Brick terrace. Lot 100 ft x 150 ft., attractively planted. Convenient to private school, bathing beach and Miramar Hotel. Price $32,000, one-half cash. For further information, apply to owner, Miss C. M. Taber, 1519 Bath St., Santa Barbara. Phone 2452J.

FLOWERS, TREES SHRUBS

We carry some of the best stock in Southern California in all nursery lines. Call and see our extensive greenhouses, growing grounds and three ranches. You will surely find here what you want.

Landscape Designing and Planting

We have a full staff of trained landscape designers and will be very glad to give you an estimate on your job without cost or obligation to you.

"Everything for the Home Grounds"

EDWARD H. RUST
NURSERYMAN
1625 Bank St. South Pasadena
—Telephones—
ELliot 2639 Colorado 997

REAL ESTATE

THE ARCHES
26 La Vereda Road, Montecito

3 Master Bedrooms; 2 Baths. 1 Maid's Room with Bath; Double Garage; Unit Heating; Half Acre. Price $21,500. Near Miramar hotel and beach. There has been no planting, but there are a few trees around. This house is in an attractive tract. Practically all other houses are larger.

OWNER, IRVING A. BROWN
San Leandro Lane,
Montecito

SOUTHLAND CALENDAR

Announcements of exhibitions, fetes, concerts, club entertainments, etc., for the calendar pages are free of charge and should be received in the office of CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND, Pasadena, at least two weeks previous to date of issue, the 10th. No correction can be guaranteed if they are received later than that date. California Southland is published monthly at Pasadena, California. One dollar and twenty-five cents for six issues, two fifty per year. Addresses will be changed as many times as desired if notice is given before the first of the month for which the change is made.

Entered as second class matter, July 28, 1919, at the Post office at Pasadena, California, under act of March 3, 1879.

Clubs

VALLEY HUNT CLUB, PASADENA:
The announcements for November are Monday, 2nd, one o'clock, First Bridge Luncheon.
Monday, 9th, 16th, 23rd, and 30th, 2:30 o'clock, Bridge and Mah Jongg Tea.
Monday, Dec. 7th, one o'clock, Bridge Luncheon.
Sunday evening suppers served during the month.

ANNANDALE GOLF CLUB, PASADENA:
The afternoon bridge, Mah Jongg and tea parties have been discontinued for the season, but tea will be served as requested and tables for cards are always available.
Every Friday is Ladies' Day.
The usual Wednesday and Saturday sweepstakes each month through the summer.

FLINTRIDGE COUNTRY CLUB:
Tuesday is Ladies' Day and a special luncheon is served. In the afternoons informal bridge parties may be arranged, followed by tea.

LOS ANGELES COUNTRY CLUB:
Ladies' Days, second Monday of each month.
Music during dinner, followed by dancing, every Saturday evening during the month.
Luncheon served from 11:30 to 2 .p m. on Saturdays.
Sunday night concerts during month.
Tea served as requested and tables for cards always available.

WILSHIRE COUNTRY CLUB:
Ladies' Days, third Monday of each month.
Dancing every second and fourth Saturday during the month.
A musical is arranged for each Sunday night in the month.

MIDWICK COUNTRY CLUB:
Ladies' Days, fourth Monday in each month.
Tea and informal bridge every afternoon.
Polo, Wednesday and Saturday of each week.
Dancing every Saturday night.
Buffet luncheon served every Sunday.
Match polo games every Sunday, preceded by luncheon parties, followed by teas, during season.

LOS ANGELES ATHLETIC CLUB:
Dinner dances, Tuesday and Friday nights of every week, Tuesday night informal; Friday night semi-formal.
Plunge open to the ladies Tuesday and Friday of every week.

SAN GABRIEL COUNTRY CLUB:
A dinner dance is arranged for the third Thursday of each month.
On Friday of each week a special luncheon is served, with bridge in the afternoons.
Ladies play every day starting after ten a. m., and not before two p. m.

MONTECITO COUNTRY CLUB:
Provides an 18 hole golf course, two concrete and two dirt courts for tennis, bowls and croquet.
Tea is served and informal bridge parties arranged as desired.
A buffet supper is served every Sunday night.

LA CUMBRE GOLF AND COUNTRY CLUB, SANTA BARBARA:
Offers a course of eighteen holes, rivaling any in hazard and beauty. A recent purchase of additional acreage will provide an extended and even more interesting course.
Luncheon is served every day, and tea may be arranged as desired.

REDLANDS COUNTRY CLUB:
Golf tournament for men is held every Saturday. Monday the course is reserved for the women and a special luncheon served. Those who do not play golf or who have had a round in the morning, devote the afternoon to bridge or mah jongg. Every Saturday afternoon tea is served.

A. Schmidt & Son

For Fifty-six Years

IMPORTERS OF ANTIQUE AND MODERN SILVER AND Sheffield Plate, Fine China and Glass

2320 W. Seventh St., Los Angeles

391 E. Colorado St., Pasadena

Boston New York Washington

Character - for Men — at Bullock's

PALOS VERDES GOLF CLUB:
Offers an eighteen hole, all grass, seaside course, delightful for summer play.
Tea and informal bridge every afternoon.
Lunch and dinner served every day.

PASADENA GOLF CLUB:
Wednesday is Ladies' Day, with cards and mah jongg from two to four-thirty, when tea is served.
Dinner will be served on Sunday from five-thirty to seven-thirty. The usual luncheon and dinner service will prevail through the week.

FLINTRIDGE RIDING CLUB:
The club does not follow a program of events during the summer, hut each rider or group of friends follow their own devices and trails. Tea is served on the lawn, under the oaks, and many members remain for dinner.

Art

LOS ANGELES MUSEUM OF HISTORY, SCIENCE AND ART, Exposition Park: Pan-American Exhibition of Oil Paintings, November 3 to January 1. This includes the work of the prominent artists of the two Americas exclusively and is the first time such an exhibition has been held in this country. Approximately five hundred paintings, two hundred and fifty from each main division, are assembled.

SOUTHWEST MUSEUM, Marmion Way and Avenue 46, Los Angeles: Educational courses, including the usual lecture course, with the Sunday afternoon lecture at three, throughout the month. The Museum announces the acquisition of "Casa Adobe," located opposite the Museum on Pasadena Avenue, and which will be operated as a part of the Museum as a permanent home for early California relics and Spanish heirlooms, and for which it is peculiarly adapted, as the Casa Adobe was built several years ago by the Hispanic Society and is an identical replica of a Spanish gentleman's home during the period of 1795 to 1805.

JULES KIEVITS announces an exhibition of newly arrived works by the famous Italian artist, Gennaro Favai, in the ballroom of the Vista del Arroyo Hotel, Pasadena. The exhibition opened with a reception, October 26th, to continue for two weeks.

THE CANNELL AND CHAFFIN GALLERIES, 720 West Seventh Street, Los Angeles, announce interesting exhibitions for November: Portraits in oil by Neil Ordayne will continue to the 12th; Hovsep Pushman will show from the 2nd to the 14th recent canvases, and Marion Kavanagh Wachtel will exhibit new water colors from the 2nd to the 14th. In the Print room new things by Elizabeth Keith will be shown the first half of the month.

THE BILTMORE SALON will show the work of the Irish painter, Power O'Malley, during the month.

SOUTHBY'S ART SALON, 112 N. Larchmont, Los Angeles, will show new and interesting things by Orrin White during the first two weeks of the month, and during the last half the work of Franz Bishoff will be hung.

THE WENZELL STUDIO at 3002 Wilshire Blvd. is open from three until six daily, and at other times by appointment, for the exhibition of the paintings and drawings by A. B. Wenzell.

THE HATFIELD GALLERIES, 3142 Wilshire Blvd., Los Angeles, are showing rare and attractive etchings by Zorn, Whistler, Seymour Haden, Alphonse Legros, Sidney Tushingham, Lee Tankey, and Joseph Pennell.

MACDOWELL CLUB OF ALLIED ARTS is showing work of the members at the MacDowell Clubhouse, 462 North Western Avenue, Los Angeles. Landscapes, still life and figures are shown.

CALIFORNIA SOCIETY OF MINIATURE PAINTERS will hold exhibitions at the Friday Morning Club throughout the season. In March the ninth annual exhibit will be held there. Ella Shepard Bush, the president of the Society, exhibited eight miniatures in October.

THE EBELL CLUB held the opening show of the season early last month, continuing the same pictures throughout the month, consisting of canvases by William Wendt, Norman Chamberlain, Carl Oscar Borg, Clyde Forsythe, Hanson Puthuf, Roscoe Shrader, Anna Hills, and Jack Wilkinson Smith.

THE FRIDAY MORNING CLUB opened the art year with a showing of landscapes and figures by painters of Southern California, among the exhibitors were Guy Rose, Alson Clark, Edgar Payne, Paul Lauritz, F. Carl Smith, Joseph Kleitsch, and Gardner Symons.

RALPH HOLMES, formerly of the Art Institute, Chicago, now with the Otis Art Institute, held an exhibition of landscapes and figures through October at La Venta, Palos Verdes Estates.

ALSON SKINNER CLARK held an exhibition of recent paintings, during the last half of October, at the Grand Central Art Galleries, New York, opening with a private view, Saturday, the 17th.

THREE MEDALS and five Honorable Mentions were given by the California Art Club in the Sixteenth Annual Exhibition at the Los Angeles Museum. They were awarded as follows: The Medal for the best landscape in the show went to Edgar Payne for "Peaks and Shadows." Honorable Mentions in landscapes were given to Ruth M. Bennett for "One Autumn Day" and to J. McDuffie Thurston for "Puente Hills." For the best figure picture in the Exhibition, the Medal was given to Clarence K. Hinkle for "Thoughts Adventuring." An Honorable Mention to Val Costello for "Figure." In sculpture, the Medal was given to Katherine Beecker Stetson for "Dancer with Scarf," an Honorable Mention to Julia Bracken Wendt for "Modoc" (Indian head). The Jury of Awards for painting was composed of Mabel Alvarez, Hanson Puthuff, and Arthur Millier. For sculpture, Marguerite Tew and Henry Lion.

KATHERINE LEIGHTON is back from her extended stay in Montana, where the family occupied a cabin above Lake McDonald, and where she achieved some exceedingly fine snow pictures, and Indian portraits A portrait of one of the Indian Chiefs has been chosen as her contribution to the Pan-American exhibition at the Los Angeles Museum.

JOHN FROST sketched at Pebble Beach during September, where he obtained the base for several paintings, and last month he brought back from Palm Springs several particularly fine sketches from which to develop desert paintings, which he does so truly and so convincingly.

THE TAOS GROUP are planning an exhibition of the latest work of the members to be held at the Biltmore Salon during December.

ARTHUR HILL GILBERT spent several months in the Painted Desert recently and his impressions of that country on canvas are now on the walls of the Biltmore Salon.

WILLIAM RITSCHELL intends to exhibit a collection of his latest Carmel studies in Los Angeles during December.

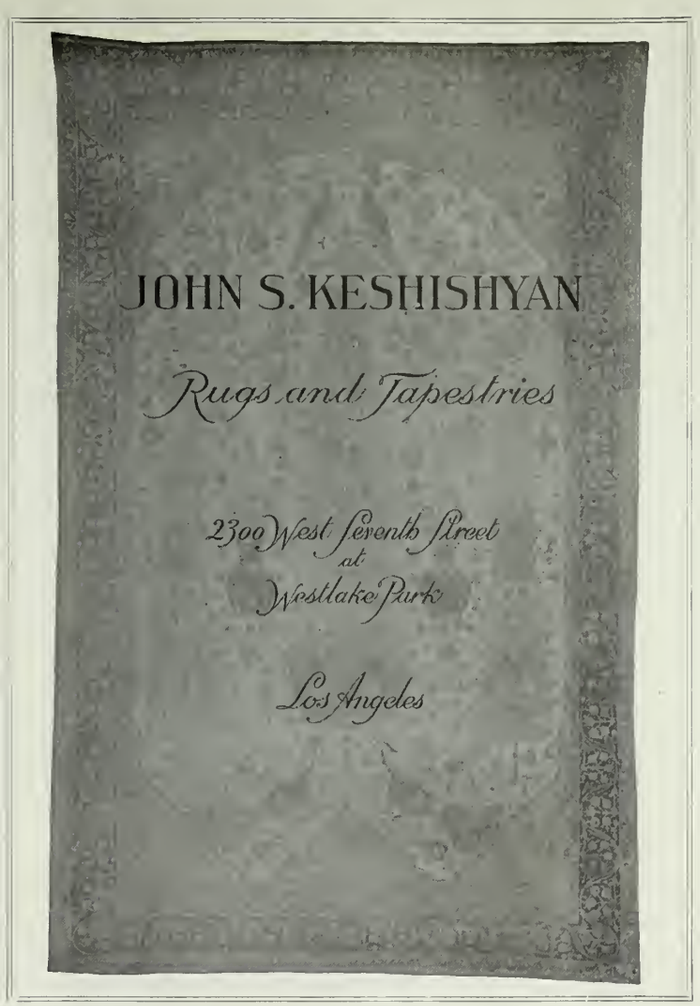
AARON KILPATRICK is still sketching in the neighborhood of Vancouver.

PRINTMAKERS SOCIETY OF CALIFORNIA held their Fall meeting at the Gearhart Studio, 611 S. Fairoaks Avenue, Pasadena, October 11. New prints were shown and May Gearhart entertainingly recounted pleasant meetings with some of the London members of the Society during her visit to England this summer.

WEST COAST ART ASSOCIATION, composed of women painters and sculptors, opened its fall season with a meeting in September. An interesting and important series of exhibitions has been planned for the winter months, beginning with the Club's Annual Exhibition at the Southwest Museum in November. This will be followed by one at Carmelita House, Pasadena, in December, and the Hollywood Library in January.

EVYLENA NUNN MILLER of the West Coast Arts, Inc., was awarded a landscape prize at the State Fair in Sacramento for her painting of Mount Rainier, "The Timber Line," representing snow-capped Rainier in the evening light with dark pine trees in the foreground.

NELL WALKER WARNER of the Glendale Art Association was awarded first prize of a group of six paintings that were on exhibition at the fair at Riverside recently. She exhibited at the Ebell Club in Santa Ana early in October and will open an exhibit at the Mission Inn, Riverside, for the last two weeks of December. She is curator of Art for the Tuesday Afternoon Club and member of the California Art Club.



JOHN W. COTTON, who spent most of the summer in the mountains, has just completed a new painting from the High Sierras to be entered in the coming Pan-American exhibit. Mr. Cotton is conducting weekly classes at the Pacific Palisades and in Glendale.

LOUISE EVERETT, former secretary of the West Coast Art Association, is having a wonderful period of study at Fontainbleu, France, sculpturing, painting, and bicycling through all of the neighboring quaint villages, and spending weekends with Helena Dunlap in Paris.

DONNA SCHUSTER, vice-president of West Coast Art Association, captured first prize for figure painting at the Sixth Annual Exhibition at Laguna Beach with her fine and vigorous study of a girl among sunlit trees.

Music

THE PHILHARMONIC ORCHESTRA of Los Angeles, W. A. Clark, Jr., founder, Walter Henry Rothwell, conductor, during its seventh season (1925-1926) will give fifty concerts in Los Angeles and thirty in other Southern California cities. The Symphony Series will consist of fourteen pairs of concerts rendered on Friday afternoons at 2:30 o'clock and on Saturday evenings at 8:30, fortnightly. Saturday night concerts will be repetitions of the program given on the preceding Friday. Fourteen Popular Concerts will also be presented on alternate Sunday afternoons at 2:30 o'clock, November 1, 15 and 29. The Friday afternoon and Saturday evening Symphony Concerts for November will be given the 6th and 7th, 20th and 21st. Felix Salmond, English 'cellist, will be the soloist at these concerts. The Los Angeles concerts are given in the Philharmonic Auditorium, Fifth and Olive streets.

MEXICAN Fabric GLASS

Sold in America's most exclusive shops, from the importations of the

Talavera Importing Company

Incorporated

322 E. Colorado Street Pasadena

BEHYMER PHILHARMONIC ARTIST COURSES include for November, Elena Gerhardt, lieder singer, Tuesday evening, the 3rd; Anna Case, lyric soprano, Tuesday evening, the 17th, and Josef Lhevinne, pianist, Thursday evening, the 19th. These concerts are given, as usual, in the Philharmonic Auditorium, Los Angeles.

ZOELLNER QUARTET has chosen the Music Room of the Biltmore Hotel for its annual series of chamber music concerts, opening Monday evening, Nov. 2.

PASADENA MUSIC AND ART ASSOCIATION will present an artists' series of six brilliant musical events during the season, opening December 16 with Toscha Seidel, violinist, at Pasadena High School Auditorium.

AUDITORIUM ARTISTS' SERIES, made up of twelve events, under the management of George Leslie Smith, opens the season with Vincente Ballester, baritone, November 2, followed by Maria Kurenko, the 9th, with an additional concert the 30th. These concerts are also given in the Philharmonis Auditorium, Los Angeles.

LOS ANGELES ORATORIO SOCIETY, John A. Wilferth, president, John Smallman, director, is now in its thirteenth season and ranks among the notable choral organizations in the country. The Society has secured the Olympic Auditorium, Grand Avenue and 18th Street, Los Angeles, for the season, 1925-1926. Owing to the increased stage accommodations the Society hopes to increase the chorus from two hundred to four hundred members, and the voice committee are now meeting applicants for membership. The organization annually presents Handel's "Messiah" during the holiday season and two other concerts. The date for the presentation of "The Messiah" is Sunday afternoon, December 20th, this year.

PASADENA'S concerts by the Los Angeles Philharmonic Orchestra, 1925-1926 season, will be held at the Raymond theater and will open November 16th. On each occasion the entire Los Angeles Philharmonic Orchestra will appear under the leadership of Walter Henry Rothwell.

WOMAN'S CHORAL CLUB, the oldest musical organization in Pasadena, will hold their meetings this year in the recital hall of the Community Playhouse. William Tyroler will again be the director, and Clarence V. Mader the accompanist.

POMONA EBELL CLUB is sponsoring a series of musical events this winter in the Community House of Pomona, the high school auditorium. Elena Gerhardt is the first artist, appearing November 6.

SEVEN ARTS SOCIETY of Long Beach, founded by Katheryn Coffield, will offer an interesting artists' series this season, including Grace Wood-Jess, mezzo-soprano, Dec. 1, Cecil Arden, contralto, Jan. 19, Ethel Leginska, pianist, conductor, composer, Feb. 16, Thelma Given, violinist, March 2, Gay MacLaren, dramatic reader, April 20. Also six morning lectures by Aline Barrett Greenwood.

THE NEW MUSIC SOCIETY OF CALIFORNIA gave its first concert in Los Angeles, last month in the Biltmore ballroom. The Society is affiliated with the International Composers' Guild of New York and was organized by Henry Cowell. The resident co-operating committee is composed of Arthur Bliss, Henry Eichheim and D. Rudhyar.

CONTEST selections for the various departments of music in the California Eisteddfod for 1926 are now published in circular form and can be obtained through the office of the Association, 1044 South Hope Street, Los Angeles.

LYNWOOD FARNAM, master organist, will give a recital in the First Methodist Church, Pasadena, Friday evening, November 27. Mr. Farnam is organist of the Church of the Holy Trinity, New York, and has played to audiences that filled the leading English and French cathedrals.

PASADENA LIGHT OPERA ASSOCIATION, Arthur K. Wyatt, president, are rehearsing "Robin Hood," which will be presented next month. Applications for the chorus are being accepted.

TUESDAY MUSCIALE, Pasadena, held the first meeting early last month in the concert hall of the Community Playhouse, where all the sessions of the year will be held. Miss Junia Wolff, the new president, presided.

COMMUNITY MUSIC ASSOCIATION of Redlands, decided at a meeting of the directors to have a free concert and sing each week during the winter, on Friday evenings at the Contemporary clubhouse. Mrs. G. E. Mullen is president, with Halsey W. Allen, vice-president.

MAX DONNER will direct the Pasadena Symphony Players this winter, and has recently organized a new trio with the following artists: Joseph Gilbert, flutist, Max Donner, violinist, and Miss Maria Metter, harpist.

THE LOS ANGELES TRIO, May MacDonald Hope, pianist and founder, Sylvain Noack, violin, Ilya Bronson, 'cello, will give the second of the series of six evening concerts in the Music Room of the Hotel Biltmore, Los Angeles.

PACIFIC COAST MUSICIAN issued the first annual special edition, October 3. This edition of 76 pages contains musical information of the southern portion of the State, announcements of teachers and artists, with mention of available dates. The edition also carries the new front cover "masthead," designed by Orpha Klinker.

Announcements

PASADENA COMMUNITY PLAYHOUSE: Oct. 29-Nov. 7, "The Main Thing," a Russian comedy by N. N. Yevreynov; Nov. 12 to 21, "The Devil in the Cheese," a fantastic comedy by Tom Cushing; Nov. 26 to Dec. 5, Alternate performances of "Hamlet" in modern clothes and "Two Gentlemen of Verona" in the Elizabethan manner. Each play will begin on a Thursday and end on the second Saturday; eleven performances, matinees on Saturday only.

ALHAMBRA-SAN GABRIEL COMMUNITY PLAYERS will offer "We Girls," as the second attraction of the season, Nov. 9-10-11, in the old theater building, Stoneman and Main streets, Alhambra. Richard Sterling is again the director and is planning to present fourteen plays.

THE COMMUNITY PLAYERS of Whittier opened the 1925-1926 season, October 12 with "On the Hiring Line."

PASADENA CENTER of the Drama League of America will hold all meetings at the Community Playhouse this winter: the play readings in Recital Hall, the French Drama section and the Poetry Group in the Directors' room. No separate bulletins will be issued, but a section of the Community Playhouse News, issued fortnightly, will carry all announcements. The prize play contest opens November 1. For the purpose of stimulating and encouraging the writing of plays a prize of $300.00 will be awarded for the best full evening play and a prize of $100.00 for the best one-act play. Mrs. George R. McMinn, chairman, urges all contestants to send to the corresponding secretary, Mrs. Gertrude M. Fuller, 499 Ellis street, for a copy of the rules before submitting their manuscripts.

"TAHQUITZ," THE EVIL ONE, the fifth annual desert play, will be given at Palm Springs at sunset, November 7-8, under the direction of Garnet Holme. The stage setting is Tahquitz Canyon, the performance will begin at 3 p. m. as the sun sinks behind Mt. San Jacinto.

GILMOR BROWN of the Community Playhouse will direct the annual classic play presented at the California Institute of Technology by Pi Kappa Delta, national forensic fraternity. The play this year is a Roman comedy, "The Captives," written by Plautus. Presentation this year will be earlier than last, for it is planned to be given on November 20 and 21 at Culbertson Hall on the campus. This will be the third annual revival of the classic drama by Pi Kappa Delta. The success that has greeted the efforts of the past two years indicates that there is a place in the community for this variety of play.

DR. ROBERT A. MILLIKAN, executive head of the California Institute of Technology, has been appointed the fifth member of the Board of Trustees of the Huntington Foundation, which will administer the trust established several years ago by which the Huntington Library, Art Gallery and Botanical Gardens are made gift to the country.

THE BROWNING CLUB, of Pasadena, at the opening meeting last month decided to change the name from the Browning Club to the Browning Society. All meetings of the year will be held in the Recital Hall of the Community Playhouse. Dr. Bertha Lovewell Dickinson is, as in the past, the class leader.

THE BUSINESS AND PROFESSIONAL WOMEN'S CLUB of Pasadena held the first meeting of the winter season, October 13, at the Shakespeare Clubhouse. The dinner was followed by an interesting program.

GILMOR BROWN, director of the Pasadena Community Playhouse productions, has been appointed to the faculty of the California Institute of Technology, where he will have charge of dramatics and public speaking.

SOROPTIMIST CLUB weekly luncheon meetings at the Biltmore Hotel, Los Angeles, during October included interesting programs, particularly that of the 20th in charge of Winifred M. Hausam, vocational director. Mrs. Willoughby Rodman, recently returned from a trip around the world, addressed the club on "Women as a Factor in the Scheme of Things." The History and Landmark Section of the Soroptimist Club are working with the Committee for the Rehabilitation of the Casa Adobe, recently acquired by the Southwest Museum, as a permanent home for Spanish-Colonial heirlooms and relics.

ALINE BARRETT GREENWOOD began her Current Review talks last month. The series at the Ambassador theater will be given the third Thursday of each month at 11 o'clock; the Biltmore series will take place the third Saturday of each month, in the music room, at 11 o'clock.

WE WISH TO ANNOUNCE

the opening Monday, November 2, of our Pasadena Shop where you will find a complete stock of the latest English, French, Italian, Spanish and American brocades, block linens, chintzes—glazed and unglazed—cretonnes, etc., with the services of experienced decorators always at your command. Showrooms filled with the finest examples of European and English furniture, both modern and antique; Porcelains, glass, paintings and prints,—In fact, a veritable treasure house.

In conjunction with the Los Angeles Shop our stock is the largest in America and our prices most reasonable. A visit will be greatly appreciated by us and will be a pleasure to yourself.

CANNELL AND CHAFFIN, INC.

Interior Decorators Fine Arts

397 E. COLORADO STREET
MARYLAND HOTEL
PASADENA

Pomona College, Claremont

POMONA COLLEGE, Claremont. Announcement has been made of the adoption of the group-college plan by Pomona College and the incorporation under the laws of the State of California of the "Claremont Colleges," as the educational institution will henceforth be known. Pomona College offers the nucleus for the group of institutions which brings into America for the first time the plan which constitutes the basis of Cambridge and Oxford, and to which will be added features from the universities of Geneva and London. Several hundred thousand dollars are available in land and other assets for the purposes of these affiliated institutions. Miss Ellen Scripps of La Jolla has given approximately eight hundred thousand dollars to be used toward the foundation of an institution of the group to be known as Scripps college for women. Dr. James A. Blaisdell, President of Pomona College, who conceived the plan, will go to Europe in December to investigate educational organizations in connection with this development.

OCCIDENTAL COLLEGE sponsored the first of a series of artists' programs in the Greek Theater by the presentation of the Los Angeles Philharmonic Orchestra, October 28. Marjorie Dodge, soprano, was the soloist. The Greek Theater, built by Myron Hunt, was intended as a community center, and to foster this idea it is planned to make the programs regular events.

Santa Barbara

GREENROOM entertainment Saturday, Nov. 7—afternoon and evening—"What Price Morning Glories?" After the brilliant take-off on "What Price Glory," which was one of the hits of the Grand Street Follies, Neighborhood Theatre. Put on by members of the Greenroom Club. With an original prologue by C. C. Clements. Also vaudeville sketches and a short one-act skit.

COMMUNITY ARTS PLAYERS will present "Wappin' Wharf," November 19, 20, 21, under the direction of Colin Campbell Clements. The play has a high literary quality, and is bristling with situations of the richest melodrama. The production will be enlivened by special music, consisting of songs by Mary Burns and Gorden Hatfield. The set upon which Wilbert Hodgson is already at work, will be the picturesque interior of a pirate's cottage on the coast of England. Mary S. Wesselhoeft, well-known artist, is in charge of the entire costuming, which will be of a brilliant and colorful character. Charles S. Brooks, the talented author of the play, has won distinction as a mellow and humorous essayist as well as a playwright. During the winter he is expected to pay a visit to Santa Barbara, as a guest of Frank Mulhauser, and it is Mr. Clements' hope that his sojourn will coincide with the production of his comedy, "Wappin' Wharf."

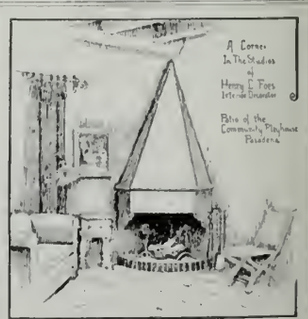
COMING TO THE LOBERO, Monday, Nov. 30; Tuesday, Dec. 1, "Little Nelly Kelly," delightful musical comedy, played from Coast to Coast; straight from the Los Angeles Playhouse; management of Louis Macloon.

SANTA BARBARA ART CLUB held an exhibition of the work of Lelia Tuckerman during October. About twenty-five canvases, with a number of sketches, made up this, the second, show held by Mrs Tuckerman within the year.

The Mansfield Shops

Interiors designed and executed—Embroideries—Textiles

Pasadena WAshington 2473



Altadena Office Under Direction of Mrs. Samuel Lee Biermane Colo. 2015

Eleanor and . . . . Hollingsworth Beach

French and Italian Arts

630 East Colorado Street

Pasadena, California

HENRY C. FOES
INTERIOR DECORATOR
Studio, in Patio of the Community Playhouse
33 So. El Molino Ave. Pasadena
Phone Terrace 0883

El Paseo Patio

Lunch Out of Doors or Dine

at

"EL PASEO"

23 E. de la Guerra St.

Santa Barbara

School Calendar

Elliott School for Girls—Thanksgiving Program preceding School Holidays. Monthly Birthday Dinner November 15, honoring House Students Whose Birthdays are in November.

Norma Gould Studios—Norma Gould and assisting Dancers at Woman's Club of Orange, November 2. Studio Tea (Invitational), November 11. Norma Gould, solo dancer, with Los Angeles Flute Club, November 10.

Westlake School for Girls—Classes in Golf and Tennis Organized under Roy Tufts, well known Instructor.

Extended Service

A UNIQUE new Los Angeles cafe at Sixth and New Hampshire streets, opened recently. The decorating of the new cafe was done by Miss Henrietta Shore, who, with her sister, Miss Annette Shore, and Miss Helen F. Shock, is the proprietor. A gift shop is maintained on the ground floor of the Studio Inn, while on the second floor an art exhibit of Miss Shore's work is open to the public. A huge India print, which took a prize in the recent Wembly Exposition in London, is exhibited in the gift shop.

LAKE ARROWHEAD LODGE, (formerly Arlington Lodge), on Lake Arrowhead, California, E. K. Hoak, owner and manager, announces that every preparation is being made for sports throughout the season. Snow carnivals and winter sports, skiing, snowshoeing, skating, tobogganing, and sleighing add new pleasures to a winter in California. The Lodge is well heated throughout, with a huge fireplace in the great lounge to insure winter comfort.

THE GREEN TEA POT, the charming cafe in the Green Hotel, Pasadena, reopens October 12, under the management of Maurice Perrin, formerly of Hotel Oakland, who brings with him a famous chef.

THE ASSEMBLY TEA ROOM, 644 South Flower street, Los Angeles, continues to serve a delicious Blue Plate luncheon, with also a la carte service, and the choice of three dinners. The perfect service in these quiet surroundings is deeply appreciated by all discriminating diners.

EL PATIO, in the Community Theater building in Pasadena, offers a delightfully unusual place for luncheon, tea or dinner, as one may be served in the pleasant depths of the dining room, or in the shadowed corridor around the patio of the playhouse.

THE Elite, 641 South Flower street, Los Angeles, has recognized the necessity for specialized co-operation in arranging social functions and offers to prospective hostesses the services of Marion R. Boyd, social director, in consultation regarding menus, decorations, favors and details in connection with any form of social entertainment.

THE La Fayette, overlooking Westlake Park, Los Angeles, to perfect appointment and cuisine adds an unmistakably exclusive atmosphere. Every suggestion of New York at its best prevails, with the exception that each table bears a discreetly worded card, requesting that guests refrain from adding liquor to the service. Guests may dance every evening except Sunday, when a very good concert is given.

Community Arts Association

SANTA BARBARA SCHOOL OF THE ARTS

FRANK MORLEY FLETCHER, DIRECTOR

GRAPHIC, DECORATIVE AND PLASTIC ARTS — DRAMA, MUSIC, DANCING

Semester October-May. Summer School six weeks July-August

Address 916 Santa Barbara Street, Santa Barbara, Calif.

F. W. Riedell

Interior Decorations

Technical knowledge and wide experience gained in connections with best decorators for many years. Shops equipped for service to those of most exacting demands.

Fine Draperies

Upholstering

ANTIQUES
REPAIRED AND RESTORED

Parchment Lamp Shades

Awnings of Venetian Sail Cloth

Wall Fabrics Slip Covers

Mihran Studio Bldg.

Santa Barbara, Calif.

25 E. Carrillo St. Phone 1735

TECOLOTE · · BOOKSHOP & LENDING LIBRARY

25 Paseo de la Guerra · Santa Barbara · California

Phone 1521

A new, popular edition of

SMALL HOUSE DESIGNS

Published by the Community Arts Association of Santa Barbara, California, will be available about November 15, 1925

The Association is already taking orders.

Price $1.50 Postpaid

"Visitors Are Welcome"

A delightful shop in an old Spanish mansion; specializing in

Indian and Mexican Handicrafts

Also

Hand Loomed Wool Druggets (Rugs) from India

ROBERT L. LEWIS

No. 5 de la Guerra Studios

THE GUILD

Inc.

Book Publishers

Studio 28 de la Guerra Studios

A Choice Riveira Home

Santa Barbara

Beautiful large living room, 5 master bedrooms, sleeping porch, 3 baths, and a large billiard or entertainment room. Large corner lot, terraced and parked. with blossoming flowers, flowering shrubs and fruit. Both streets paved. Absent owner has reduced price to $35,000, away below cost of production. A charming home, rightly priced.

Clarence C. Knight
"Worth While Homes'
112 East Figueroa St.
Santa Barbara, Cal.

SANTA BARBARA, CALIF.

H. G. CHASE

(Established 1903)

Real Estate and Rentals

1012 State St. Phone 125

THE Montmart in Hollywood is frequehtly selected for luncheon or dinner, not only because of the service offered, but due to the possibility of securing close-up views of movie celebrities, and where members of the music and art world are often found.

MARCELL INN, out Lincoln avenue, Pasadena, serves luncheon, tea and dinner every day, with dancing in the evening. On Sunday dinner is served at noon, and also in the evening.

HOTEL STOWELL of Los Angeles has recently been purchased by Charles B. Hervey and Harry J. Tremain, who announce a new policy and adjustment of rates, including room and restaurant prices. Mr. Hervey is the owner of Hotel Green in Pasadena, the Hotel Maryland in San Diego, and until about a year ago operated the Samarkand in Santa Barbara.

THE Mary Louise, West Seventh street, Los Angeles, forms the center for a large part of the luncheons, teas and dinners in Los Angeles, and has recently opened a most attractive branch "Mary Louise" in Fullerton, California, which is growing equally popular with that neighborhood. It is located at the corner Chapman and Spadra Road, in the Chapman Theater building. A special dinner is served from one to eight on Sunday.

Mt. LOWE
"Earth has no finer view to show."

Mt. LOWE TAVERN and Cottages
Enlarged and Improved

at the terminus of this World-Famous Trip afford a most delightful retreat for a long or short sojourn at reasonable rates

5 Trains Daily at convenient hours - from Main St. Station Los Angeles

$2.50 Round Trip Rate

For information and Reservations apply

Pacific Electric Ry.
Information Bureau Phone MEtropolitan 7400-TRinity 3661

HOTEL GREEN

A well ordered Residential and Tourist Hotel of peculiar excellence. Open all year. Moderate rates. Apartments by the month.

The Green Tea Pot
Opened October 15
CHARLES B. HERVEY, Proprietor

Antiques
JOHN W. CONDIT

Dealer in rare old pieces selected from private homes. Specialist in the proper restoration of heirlooms.

199 S. Fair Oaks Ave., Pasadena
Telephone Terrace 0315-W

California Southland

M. URMY SEARES - - - - - Editor and Publisher
ELLEN LEECH - - - - - - - Associate Editor

NO. 71, VOL. VII NOVEMBER, 1925

CONTENTS

	PAGE
A CHURCH IN MESSINA, A PAINTING BY FAVIA.....Cover Design (Courtesy of Kievits Galleries, Pasadena)
SOUTHLAND CALENDAR	4, 5, 6
ROMANCE IN CALIFORNIA'S PAINTING.....Richard Walgrave	9
SAMARKAND AND EL EN CANTO	11
RECENT BOOKS—REVIEWS.....Louise Morgrage	12
HANNAH HUNTINGTON PECK.....M. U. Seares	13
THE COMMUNITY ARTS ASSOCIATION OF SANTA BARBARA	14
CALLE DEL ESTADO.....Ralph Brainerd Urmy, Jr.	14
COMMUNITY DANCING AMONG CHILDREN	15
SOUTHLAND OPINION	16, 17
THE PASADENA PLAYHOUSE.....J. W. Morin	17
THE COMMITTEE ON COSTUME.....Ellen Leech	18
THE ASSISTANCE LEAGUE BULLETIN	20
UP THE VALLEY AND DOWN THE COAST	22
A CHURCH BY ROLAND COATE, ARCHITECT	23
THE CLUB COURSE IN APPRECIATION OF ARCHITECTURE	26
PLAN AND ELEVATION.....David Witmer, A. I. A.	27
SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA CHAPTER A. I. A.....H. O. Sexsmith	29
NOTES ON INTERIORS AND FURNISHINGS, SOUTHLAND SERVICE	30

CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND is published monthly at Pasadena, Cal.
Copyrighted, 1925, by M. Urmy Seares
Subscription price $2.50 per year, $1.25 one half year
RALPH B. URMY, JR., ADVERTISING MANAGER
CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND, PASADENA, CALIFORNIA
Mrs. D. B. Sebastian, 2410 W. 7th St., L. A., National Representative
Advertisers unaccustomed to furnishing national advertising copy to quality magazines may call Fair Oaks 7034 for assistance
During Press Week, 24th to 30th, call TRinity 1501

The Los Angeles
Elizabeth Arden Salon
with
J. W. Robinson Co.
Los Angeles

UNDER the direct management of Miss Arden and her New York staff, and offering the same specialized treatments which have made Miss Arden's other salons internationally known.

Seventh Floor

Round the World Cruises
$1250 and up

Mediterranean Cruises
$600 and up

Agency for all tours and cruises. Let us arrange your reservations.

C. J. JONES STEAMSHIP AGENCY
372 East Colorado St., Pasadena
Phone Fair Oaks 8026

MARGARET CRAIG
ARCHITECTURAL PHOTOGRAPHY
Portraits by Appointment
Official Photographer for California Southland
3223 W. Sixth Street
Telephone WAsh. 1653 Los Angeles

La Solana

A quiet, well-appointed small hotel on the West Side near Orange Grove Avenue.
Each menu is carefully planned and prepared every day.

Grand Ave. and Lockhaven St.
Pasadena

JAMES CINI & COMPANY
of Italy
Antique and Foreign Jewelry
Italian and French Novelties
390 E. Walnut St. Pasadena, Calif.
Fair Oaks 5583

J. R. BRAGDON & CO.
Real Estate and Insurance
15 So. Raymond Ave., Pasadena

CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND
AN ILLUSTRATED MAGAZINE OF NATIONAL INTEREST

ROMANCE AND THE BACKGROUND OF PAINTING

By RICHARD WALGRAVE

THE GREAT MURAL IN THE SANTA BARBARA COUNTY BANK, SANTA BARBARA, CALIFORNIA
A PAINTING BY DAN SAYRE GROSBECK

AT Exposition Park, Los Angeles, there is rising a new building for the housing of Art. Like the new green of the winter's wild grass pushing up through the dry mat of brown which covers our summer hills in California, this new building springs from the seed of past endeavor and finally will enclose the old museum and cover it with a new beauty.

Entering the unfinished rooms now being constructed in close affiliation with the Art Gallery we have haunted for years in search of sustenance for growth in Art, the youth of Los Angeles may now experience the sensation one receives from the rooms of the Metropolitan in New York, or one of the stately palaces of Europe inherited by the people from their fallen rulers and now devoted to Art. There is a dignity undisguised by their present cluttered condition, and a stateliness that foreshadows their use as shrines for the best in all the arts. Those who know what the whole world has to offer in architecture: those who have through years of study acquired a knowledge which fits them to be trusted with our civic and semi-public buildings, have designed this new structure and the wealth of the ages of art gone by is embodied in the new art building.

What shall we place in these handsome rooms that will prove worthy of the new surroundings? Greek after Greek studied generation after generation to perfect the simple mouldings of Greek Art. The ancient orders, in fluted columns, foliate capital or stately architrave are ours today and their proportions form the key to good design. But who shall set the standard in the art of painting on this western shore where all the beauty and romance of California are waiting quietly for a master's brush?

THE WINDJAMMER, BY HENRY BAILEY SNELL, PART OF THE HARRISON COLLECTION, GIVEN TO THE LOS ANGELES MUSEUM OF ART BY MR. AND MRS. WILLIAM PRESTON HARRISON

The Harrison collection, which has been growing steadily, is now hung in the old rotunda, and will be seen to better advantage in its new room. Half seen in the poor light, it has set the pace as one entered the other galleries, and has helped to confirm the judgment as one left.

Selection has been made in these illustrations of enough examples to show the quality of this American collection. Thousands of eager visitors throng this museum of history, science and art weekly and this part of the west is becoming familiar with the best this country has produced.

In the art gallery to the north has been exhibited this last month paintings and sketches by artists and students which show the trend toward figure work and serious study of something more than atmosphere with sunlit Sierras bathing in its flood.

Life is the crowning grace of any landscape, and the great paintings of California will be the work of the men and women who can put their own deep feelings and imagination into the landscape or can resurrect the romance of the past and make it live again on canvas or in some other concrete form. There is hardly any landscape background on this coast which cannot be legitimately peopled with romantic story if our painters but knew the traditions of the state and had mastered the representation of the human form divine. White plumed conquistadores riding up El Camino Real unpaved, and leading to unknown rivers, undiscovered bays! All the traffic of the seven seas, all the nations of the unpictured Orient, and all the life of intermingling races swarm upon this western edge of the world and call aloud for masters who will strive to do for painting in America what the Greeks did for architecture long ago in Greece. We have but begun to feel for art in southern California. The Harrison Galleries of American paintings form the touchstone not only for our own painters to test our progress, but for the layman as a safe environment from which to judge of local work.

FANTASY. BLUE AND YELLOW

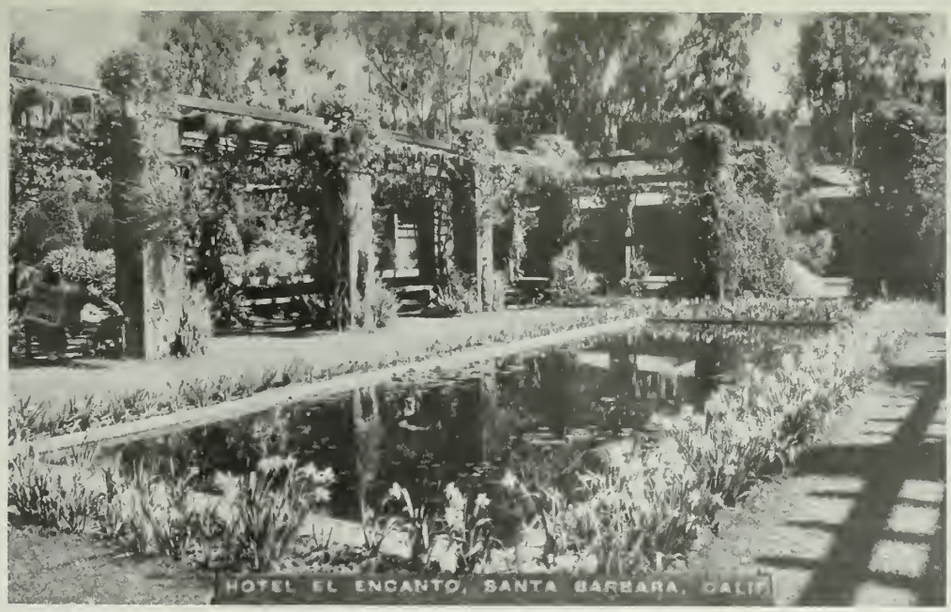
Mr. and Mrs. William Preston Harrison of Los Angeles are the donors of the Harrison Gallery of American Art, which is their gift in perpetuity to the Los Angeles Museum of History, Science and Art. This collection of paintings is to be installed this month (November) in the new gallery which has been built in the first unit of the new Los Angeles Museum. The room has been planned to accommodate forty paintings, and will be in every way a suitable gallery for the exhibition of this excellent collection of paintings.

Mr. and Mrs. Harrison have thus far limited themselves to contemporary American artists, —those artists who are outstanding in the field of American art. The list of paintings which have been given to the Museum for the Harrison Gallery will be changed somewhat when the new gallery opens, since one of the stipulations governing this gallery is that in certain groups of paintings, as provided by Mr. Harrison, a given canvas may be withdrawn and replaced by a better example of the same artist's work; in another group, a canvas may be withdrawn and replaced by a canvas by a more important artist. This latter group has, at the present time, received its last replacement. From now on the paintings will be replaced only by others of the same artists. The formal installation in the new Harrison Gallery is to take place in November, 1925.

PAPITA OF SANTA FE, BY ROBERT HENRI

DANIEL IN THE LION'S DEN, BY H. O. TANNER

BLUE POOL BY GIFFORD BEAL



AUTUMN IN CORNWALL, BY W. ELMER SCOFIELD

FERRY BOATS AT ST. IVES, BY HALEY LEVER

SAMARKAND AND EL ENCANTO FORM A PART OF THE

PURPLE CITIES AND THE FAR BLUE HILLS OF TOURIST LAND

ALFRED NOYES has put romance and joy into the streets of London through the music of his "Barrel Organ," and has sounded the call to park-land and pleasance in a crowded district where Nature is no longer primitive or unadorned.

"Come down to Kew in lilac-time (it isn't far from London!) And you shall wander hand in hand with love in summer's wonderland; Come down to Kew in lilac-time (it isn't far from London!)"

In our modern Tourist-land, spread as it is over all the world and made up of picturesque bits from every country, there is a glamour that knows no limits of geography. It grips different people in different places; it finds its purple cities in new lands or in the old. Peasants living on the Isle of Markam knew not that they were picturesque until the tourists told them so, and the southland of California, which now contains over a million and a half inhabitants who can no longer be called "tourists," is as loath to let go of its character as a part of Tourist-land as is an adult to acknowledge himself no longer young. Glamour and romance, found here, or brought in the hearts of tourists and homeseekers journeying to the "land of heart's desire," have impregnated the place with an Aladdin-like atmosphere and great caravansaries, hotels and little inns along the railroads are keeping the illusions alive. Grateful indeed are all who love this lovable country for the sheer beauty of Samarkand when a full moon rides the sky of California, and for the mystery and the restfulness of El Encanto set high above the seagirt, hill city of gray, old Santa Barbara. These things have become world-famous, and they are a part of the romance of tourist-land.

THE COVER PLATES

THE Art of Painting carries the beauty of the world from country to country. It is the best messenger and guide to Tourist-land. Artists who have mastered technique and have at their command the art knowledge of all nations for a background arrive in their maturity at a point where they can represent on canvas that glamour which lures but eludes the untrained. At Vista del Arroyo Signor Kievits has introduced to us Signor Favai of Venice who as a painter has arrived at that enviable place in his career. With imagination he has absorbed the beauty of Italy, with love and skill he has placed it on canvas for us in California. With generous wisdom Mr. Jules Kievits, who is an authority on European art of today, has multiplied the pleasure of California many thousand fold by loaning a Favia for our cover.

When this teeming tourist-land of ours has settled down to live in the beauty we have just begun to add to by beautiful building such as is being done in Santa Barbara and in Palos Verdes, our painters will have arrived at a skill that can show the world the beauty and the glamour of romance and life in California.

Our vistas of the Arroyo with blue hills of our Sierras in the distance and the sycamores, the oaks and eucalyptus for setting, form a background for our model that is not surpassed in any other land. To Hollywood has come a host of handsome typical Americans who can enact as do our Pasadena Players an historic scene or modern pageant for our inspiration. The stage is set for beauty, let us make our own fairyland.

PURPLE AND OLD-ROSE PETUNIAS GROW IN GREAT JARS OF BLUE-GREEN TERRA COTTA AND THE WATER LILIES ANSWER IN SOFT TONES OF ROSE AND BLUE. THE GARDENS OF SAMARKAND, SANTA BARBARA, OPEN FOR THE SEASON IN JANUARY, 1926

RECENT BOOKS,--- REVIEWS--- BY LOUISE MORGRAGE

STELLA BENSON
Courtesy of Macmillian Company

ONE OF THE QUAINT ILLUSTRATIONS MADE BY MISS BENSON FOR HER BOOK "THE LITTLE WORLD."

LUTHER E. WYMAN

THE LITTLE WORLD

By STELLA BENSON, The Macmillan Company

Men are forever setting forth on tours to all parts of the world, depending on their wits to pay their way. Frequently the extremities to which they find themselves temporarily reduced, while serious enough for the moment, afterward furnish entertaining material for the books they write on how they did it. But it is a rather risky means of courting adventure and seeing the world, so the average female traveler does not attempt to go that way. We note an exception however, in the case of Stella Benson, the witty and vivacious authoress of "The Little World." Such was her eagerness to wander, that when the opportunity offered to visit foreign countries, off she gaily went with nothing extra in her pocket, but untold riches in her mind, later to serve as alchemy for transmuting her varied experiences into sparkling matter certain to win the delighted approval of many readers.

Once begun, this young woman's tour of world inspection appeared to have no ceasing. In China she acquired a husband, after which two went instead of one. Her adventures singly at first, and later connubially, lightly and deftly sketched make up the entertaining contents of "The Little World." These sketches, relating to the strange sights and scenes she witnessed are continually enlivened with a flow of facetious comment and yet disclose acute preceptions able to dig underneath the surface of these strange modes of living in foreign lands. And sprightly though her style may be, it is never superficial, but has that finish and solidity so characteristic of the best English writers, both men and women.

Amid so much amusing matter, it is difficult to speak of any portion in the superlative degree. There is a mirthful account of a tour across the states in a Ford that was as temperamental as an operatic prima donna. Even if it did go by the aristocratic name of Stephanie, it displayed all the shifting whims of any common Lizzie. Another motoring tour, related in an equally diverting manner, was taken in a Panhard with a native chauffeur through French Indo-China, and this time the chauffeur was the focus for Miss Benson's rays of wit. This lady keeps her literary tools in the best of order, sharpened and highly polished, hence there will be no moments of boredom for the readers of her book.

WHAT'S O'CLOCK

By AMY LOWELL, Houghton Mifflin Company

Power, prestige and preeminence are fleeting attributes in the procession of human affairs. Empires rise and fall; dynasties come and go; for a brief space the spot light of fame rests now on one portion of the earth and now on another, supreme for the moment in artistic or intellectual achievement. Such was the literary eminence that existing for a short but glorious period in New England, waxed and waned and in the waning produced an heir in Amy Lowell to sing its swan song. Her predecessors would surely have been amazed at the manner of her singing, blending as it did, the qualities which she inherited from them, with the spirit of her own iconoclastic age, and a decidedly pagan flavor. We have to account for the paganism by assuming that some of the roots which came to the flowering of her genius extended back through the centuries, to the slopes of Mount Parnassus, where they absorbed the same atmosphere that gave life to Apollo and the Muses.

The little volume entitled "What's O'Clock," contains the poems written during the last four years of Miss Lowell's life, and we are told that in them she gave her noblest conception of her art. We have to confess to an ardent and lingering affection for melody in our poetry; for tripping metrical divisions; for rhyming syllables, and harmonious connection between sound and sense. Therefore our involuntary submission to the compelling charm, and artistic craftsmanship of Miss Lowell's free verse, must be taken as a valid tribute to its power. Its technique, we are in no position to discuss, but its effect must be clear to the most superficial reader, who has any love for poetry at all. In these verses there is revealed the brilliant mind of one, who, deeply comprehending, yet undismayed, has looked the universe squarely in the face and deliberately chosen an attitude with which to meet it. A valiant gaiety was this choice, employed like a gleaming shield to protect her from what she saw. Equipped with this she could make her poems valuable as an interpretation of art and life, constantly appealing to her reader's feeling for truth and beauty, while keeping her own emotions under strict control. Her heart in functioning as it should for accomplishing her purpose was guided by a mind calmly and sanely balanced. Poetry as well as prose, thus discreetly wrought contains the magic password to a realm whose existence is denied by the sober senses, and the human soul knows the sober senses lie.

SOAMES GREEN

By MARGARET RIVERS LARMINIE, Houghton Mifflin Company

From the many excellent qualities in this most admirable novel it is impossible to select just the particular one most worthy of being emphasized. Miss Larminie has a style of pleasing suavity, enriched with a felicity of expression, rarely encountered in current fiction, by means of which she delivers matter of considerable significance. The narrative instinctively reposeful, deals with life as it is lived in an average English family. There are young people of course, and consequently, the life-force, that Shaw once discussed so vigorously, is busy attending to its affairs ever important to the world in and out of fiction. Its procedure is never twice alike, and in this particular case it arranges very serenely matters between several pairs of lovers satisfactorily and respectably, so naturally, that we feel we are watching the absorbing affairs of a family among our acquaintances. The dialogue is brief but invariably piquant and expressive and the book abounding in illuminating flashes of sly and penetrating humor, produces a pleasantly psychological effect.

The author otherwise extremely discerning, is surely mistaken in allowing one of her interesting characters at the end, a moment's self revelation. No young woman, after hugging to her bosom for thirty years the trait of inscrutability, would so easily fling this to the winds, leaving the spot hitherto so successfully concealed, bare to the gaze of even her dearest and nearest associates. This appears to us a weak place in this otherwise successful work of fiction.

FIELD BOOK OF BIRDS OF THE SOUTHWESTERN UNITED STATES

By LUTHER E. WYMAN, M. S. AND ELIZABETH F. BURNELL, M. A.
Houghton Mifflin Company

Many easterners fairly well acquainted with bird life on their native heath, on moving to this section, fail to find any trace of their favorite songsters, and end by concluding that the mockers and linnets have this field to themselves. Later they may learn their mistake, but often, the enthusiasm so keen at first has then completely vanished. These people will welcome this convenient guide to the study of birds in the southwestern section of our country, because it is designed for just the purpose of helping strangers and amateurs who are interested in so engrossing a subject. In addition it contains enough scientific informatio to enable any student to delve more deeply into ornithology, if so inclined. In the introduction, which excels in the qualities of clarity and brevity, stress is laid on methods of identification, other than the usual ones of form and color, both equally misleading to the casual observer. The introductory matter also includes an instructive article on Life Zones, using Mt. San Jacinto as a splendid illustration of the topic, as this sharply defined and towering peak owing to its contrasted slopes, has an unusual number of these zones.

The authors of this book are well equipped for dealing with the subject, since one is connected with the city schools as assistant Supervisor of Nature Study, and the other is the Ornithologist at the Los Angeles Museum. The latter even as a child was an ardent naturalist, and so despite his scientific knowledge, appreciates the needs of those who wish merely to add a resource to their list of pleasant interests.

JOHN MACNAB

By JOHN BUCHAN, Houghton Mifflin Company

Practical jokers usually end operations, feeling decidedly foolish. Such would appear to be the attitude of everybody concerned in this story, with its scenes laid on the great hunting estates of Scotland. We suspect the reason therefore, is the consciousness on the part of the author that he has selected a theme not wholly in accord with his dignity. The entire matter might very well look to many Americans like a tempest in a tea pot, merely because they would not realize the supreme importance to a Britisher, of his hunting preserves, nor the heinousness in his estimation of the crime of poaching.

John Macnab is the name assumed jointly by three eminent British statesmen, who bored by their successful careers, suddenly succumb to the impulse to be wicked, a strain so powerful in the human race, that even St. Anthony was terrihly tempted in his wilderness abode. So these gentlemen, with many misgivings, it must be admitted, concocted crime, and how they severally got away with it makes an acceptable narrative that limps occasionally and goes somewhat lame in the end. But Mr. Buchan, being an alert and vigorous writer of high standing, more than repays for any structural weakness, by a bracing description of this hide and seek affair through the rugged grandeur of the wild highlands of Scotland, a land famous in song and story for its

(Continued on Page 22)

A FRIEND OF CHILDREN

By MABEL URMY SEARES

SHE has lived; and the world is better for having had her cheerful outlook upon life, her kindly comment on life's foibles and her sense of humor which could see the funny side of everything and turn its little joke to cheer us on our way.

Behind the brave front which carried on in a new land the gracious manners and the courtesy of old New York and Boston, there lay a broad foundation of integrity which gave and demanded justice in all business dealings and in the lighter traffic of our social intercourse as well.

Where, in the stream of health- or fortune-hunters, pleasure-seekers, or adventurers upon life's river, set so steadily in westward course toward California, has there stood a firmer rock of sterling character than hers? Or when has old New England made a finer contribution to the wavering, fluctuating social status of our newer civilization on this Coast?

Unlike so many who have come to California as an escapade, a temporary respite from the social customs of the staid Atlantic Coast, she brought her manners with her and unconsciously she stood before the untrained multitude in street or public building with a natural grace that comes only from generations of good breeding and which marks one instantly as to the manor born.

That devotion to the life of her family, which in many cases has made our Californian population selfish and self-centered or morose, in her had blossomed out to lend its sweetness to the town in which she lived. The children of the neighborhood collected on her lawn to play beneath the great pepper tree and the glorious acacia grandiflora which stood symbolic at the entrance to her little home and gladdened all the neighbors with its wealth of golden bloom.

Down in the harder business district, where the talent of the town had struggled long for recognition in the arts of journalism, painting, music and the stage, Miss Peck has always lent a helping hand. Her very presence there has been a benediction and a monitor. Not that she ever spoke reprovingly of careless conduct on the part of youth or uncouth elders; but her sparkling, joyous attitude, under controlled and dignified exterior, was convincing to the most rebellious, showing that good fun and good manners are compatible.

Her first public contribution to this magazine appeared in February, 1921, and its accompanying illustration was taken, as is the new one below, from the Pasadena Children Players in "The Tailor Prince."

Nothing which we could write will show better the quality of standard which this friend of our children set in public work; nor can we tell all that that high and sturdy standard did for this magazine in the constant strain and struggle which a fine conception of the profession of journalism demands of its founders in the first lean, uncertain years.

But deep in the memory of all who have aided in its founding will lie forever the image of the sparkling little lady who worked so loyally to uphold those ideals which she had sought and found there, and who fought as faithfully as any major for them, for those standards were her own.

Reprinted from the issue of February, 1921.

THE CHILDREN PLAYERS

By HANNAH HUNTINGTON PECK

The people of Pasadena have been gradually awakening to the realization of what the Community Players are doing for Pasadena. Not the least important branch of this activity is the children's department, started last March, under the direction of Miss Sybil E. Jones.

Every parent and teacher knows that it is the natural instinct of the normal child to express his thoughts—the pictures of his mind—in play—in song or rythmic action, and that it is essential to his all-round development that he should have this opportunity—the opportunity that this new movement will afford to cultivate self-expression, one of the most important and most neglected means of education.

The object of this organization is not to prepare the child for the stage any more than the object of manual training is to make carpenters, blacksmiths or machinists, but to develop constructively by directed work with other children the aesthetic and artistic impulses.

The children are not taught plays. A story is read to them and they play it out according to their own conception, being directed only along the lines of certain principles, but left to carry out those principles themselves. In this way they are given the opportunity to apply what they are doing in their school work, in music, art and dancing, but not given added school work outside of school hours.

In the way in which this idea is being carried out, there is no chance of exploiting any particular child or group of children. If in one play a certain child should have an important part because fitted for that part, in the next play that same child might be relegated to the work of keeping the dressing-room in order, which is understood to be quite as important to the success of the whole as any other part. And so they learn to be partners and to share their best efforts, to forget self in their co-operation, to give pleasure to others. What better cure could there be for selfishness, self-consciousness and vanity.

Many mothers are always with the children—often even when the story is read; as they seem to enjoy it as much as the children. When the play is going on they are behind the scenes. But the children do the work, sometimes personating the parts, or helping to arrange the stage, keeping the dressing rooms in order, or, as "Hospitality Committee," receiving the people and giving out programs, so that each child feels himself or herself a necessary part of the whole.

The entire work is built on family life, the mothers making the costumes of materials furnished them. The costuming and stage setting are under the direction of the art director, Mr. Egbert Petty, who, for each play, according to the history and period of the play, designs the stage sets and costumes and sketches them in water colors. Every child in Pasadena is invited to belong to this organization, free of charge, to take part in the music, pantomimes, plays or dances, to paint or draw or help with the costumes.

The "Children Players" is under the "Governing Board of the Community Playhouse Association," with a small executive committee to regulate the internal affairs.

The children are the foundation of every community. The Pasadena of the next generation will be governed by the children of today, therefore, the moral, intellectual, musical and artistic status of the Pasadena of the next generation will be what the children of this generation are trained to be.

RESULTS OF THE WORK OF THE COMMUNITY

By RALPH B. URMY, JR.

Romance - Architecture

Below (1) Johnston Cafe, William A. Edwards Architect—Santa Barbara

Below (2) Cornwall Store, Taylor and Taylor Architects—Los Angeles

On Calle del Estado

Left—Blake Motors, Lional A. Pries Architect—San Francisco

Below—Granada Market, Soule Murphy and Hasting Architects—Santa Barbara

"MEN may rise on stepping stones of their dead selves to higher things." Not only may the lives of men so rise, but the habitations of men as well. As the soul of man, leaving the old behind, strives ever for the finer and the new, so may a city, stepping from the wreckage of the past, gird itself with strength to accomplish a finer and a better self.

Santa Barbara has risen from its overthrow not only undefeated, but like Antaeus, with strength redoubled, because of a mighty purpose. "The recreated Santa Barbara will be even more beautiful than the old." So she promised, and she is making good that promise. Homes in Santa Barbara have long followed architectural lines congenial with the Mission and the old adobes. Where else can one find such lists of charming small homes and equally charming large ones? But why should the charm of Santa Barbara be restricted to the residential districts? Can business houses be built from a beautiful as well as from a utilitarian point of view?

Santa Barbara says, "yes!" She does more than merely claim the truth of a questionable theory. She is proving that theory to be a fact.

State Street, with its so many mis-matched, un-beautiful buildings, belongs to the past. Calle del Estado rises in its place with fine new buildings, no more expensive than the old, but infinitely more beautiful, and just as practical. The new buildings with their tile roofs, tinted walls, and wrought-iron decorations are all examples of the Santa Barbara adaptation of the Spanish Colonial style. The Franciscan builders struck the keynote in the eighteenth century, and the builders of today are following through.

What will happen to these beautiful buildings in the event of another earthquake? They will stand as monuments to a farsighted community. The appearance of their city is not the only consideration in the planning of Santa Barbara citizens. The building code is strict, and it is being rigidly enforced. New buildings must be so constructed that sudden and unusual stresses due to earth tremors cannot break them. Each series of girders and supports must be tied together by a girdle of concrete. Concrete must fulfill certain requirements laid down by the building code. Plaster must contain a certain percentage of cement as determined jointly by the architects, builders, and brick manfacturers. All construction work must pass the inspection of the City Building Department. Santa Barbara realizes the necessity of strict municipal inspection of all building operations, and thereby insures against the future. Buildings wrecked or damaged by the earthquake showed faulty construction, for the well-constructed buildings stood the test. Many of the old adobes came through unscathed, while many supposedly scientifically constructed buildings were wrecked. Honest, sensible construction will last, and Santa Barbara is building for the ages.

There are three organizations which have been working faithfully and efficiently toward "A Better and More Beautiful Santa Barbara." These are The Architectural Board of Review, The Architectural Advisory Committee, and The Plans and Planting Committee of The Community Arts Association.

The Architectural Board of Review consists of three architects and two laymen interested in public affairs. These men were appointed by the City Council from a list of names submitted by the Community Arts Association, the Architects of Santa Barbara and the City Planning Commission. The Board was then established as a sub-division of the City Building Department and began to exercise its function on July 10th. It acts in an advisory capacity as all requests of building permits are submitted to the Board of Review for consideration as to elevation. In other words, it has the opportunity of suggesting to the owners the fittingness, the appropriateness of the proposed building both as to itself and as to its harmonious relationship to its neighbors. If the owner does not concur in the suggestions made by the Board the owner may appeal to the Council and demand the issuance of his permit. This gives assurance that the suggestions made by the Board and the reasons for them will be carefully considered by a Court of Appeal.

It is significant that while the Board has so far considered some 300 building permits there has been yet no case where the owner has refused to consider suggestions and where the Board has failed to come to agreement with the owner and thus bring about an enhancement of the appearance of the building as regards its relationship to the community where the ideals of fittingness and beauty are already very high.

The Architectural Advisory Committee is composed of prominent business and professional men of Santa Barbara. To this committee chiefly, is due the credit for planning and engineering The Architectural Board of Review. It is in the Community Drafting Rooms of The Architectural Advisory Committee that the suggestions of the Board of Review are worked out.

The Plans and Planting Committee of The Community Arts Association was organized for the purpose of helping small home builders in planning and landscaping their homes. Evidences of the work of this committee may be seen throughout the residential districts of the city, making those parts even more beautiful than before. This committee is the oldest of the three and was the pioneer in rehabilitation work.

Upon these three has fallen the burden, and they have responded with an enthusiasm and a vigor which does not admit the possibility of failure. And bound together by a great purpose and kindred ideals, each doing its particular duties, and all striving toward one end, they shall not fail.

Santa Barbara has issued a challenge. What she is doing, other towns may do, if the citizens will but demand that their artistic tastes be pleased rather than insulted as they go through their business sections. Go and see the business sections of Santa Barbara. Walk the length of Calle del Estado and see the beauty and the individuality of the new buildings, and you will realize how well Santa Barbara is rising above her dead self to higher things.

ARTS ASSOCIATION OF SANTA BARBARA

A CHILDREN'S spring Festival, combining the most picturesque elements of the old English dancing, was held in Alameda Plaza on Saturday afternoon, June thirteenth. Under the fronds of the palm trees, under the soft fringes of the peppers flitted the bright figures of the children, and in the afternoon light the young people's orchestra played and children's voices were lifted in the folk songs of the old world. A charming feature of the afternoon was the Scandinavian wedding feast given by children from the McKinley School in Santa Barbara. In a quaint series of three groups of dances, the children in brilliant Scandinavian costume carried out in pantomime the merry customs of the wedding. The Clerbois Preparatory Orchestra which is composed of many young players in the city performed delightfully the "March from Athalia" by Mendelssohn, "Hindu March" by Sellenick and "Symphony in D—Third Movement" by Hayden, and the children's chorus led by Miss Mary Overman, and trained by teachers from the public schools sang "Now is the Month of Maying," "It was a Lover and His Lass," and "The Blue Bird's Message."

AT THE CHILDREN'S FESTIVAL IN ALAMEDA PARK, SANTA BARBARA, CALIFORNIA

THE MAYPOLE DANCE WAS THE FEATURE OF THE FESTIVAL. OVER ONE HUNDRED GIRLS PARTICIPATED AND THE WHOLE TOWN ENJOYED IT AS A TRUE CALIFORNIA FIESTA, FOR EVERY DAY MAY BE MAY DAY IN CALIFORNIA

Several sprightly dances were given by pupils of Edith McCabe of the School of the Arts but the principal feature of the afternoon was the Maypole dance in which over one hundred girls participated. The many colored streamers winding in and out, the light tripping movements of the children and the spontaneous delight of the audience gave the afternoon a blithe simple air of gayety. Robert Morrison as herald in the brilliant orange costume of a buglar was typically old English, and the brightly dressed flower girls among the trees struck a picturesque sylvan note.

Four troops of boy scouts acted as marshals and kept the crowds in order and stragglers from the dancing fields. After the entertainment, visiting children joined hands with the dancers and informal frolics were enjoyed on the lawns.

It seems to some of us that this simple kind of out-door enjoyment in which all sorts of people may join is one of the most worth while things to preserve in modern life. It is picturesque, it is spontaneous, it fills the soul with a fresh and pleasant kind of happiness.

THE SCANDINAVIAN WEDDING FEAST WAS GIVEN BY CHILDREN FROM THE McKINLEY SCHOOL IN SANTA BARBARA AS A PART OF THEIR CALIFORNIA FESTIVAL

THE PUPILS OF THE SCHOOL OF THE ARTS GAVE SEVERAL DANCES UNDER THE DIRECTION OF EDITH McCABE AT THE SPRING FESTIVAL, ALAMEDA PARK, SANTA BARBARA, CALIFORNIA

The School of The Arts

THE relation of the children to the Community Arts Association of Santa Barbara is one that has never been fully set forth in the record this magazine has made of its activities during the past year. Perhaps it is better to let pictures speak as they do on this page, and let the thought of the care and environment which Santa Barbara is now giving to its children be conveyed to understanding people by this means.

But the School of the Arts which the Community Arts Association supports and broods over for the benefit of its younger generation deserves a wider publicity.

The supervision of experts is obtained in this school by a careful selection of committees and directors and teachers, as may be taken for granted; but more important and more subtle in its influence is the general atmosphere of interest in fine art which the very presence of the Association in Santa Barbara emphasizes.

California Southland And the Community Arts Association

THE year which closes with this issue of CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND has been one of sincere and delightful effort to set forth in twelve numbers the work of the Community Arts Association of Santa Barbara. Two pages a month have been given to this matter, but the interest of our readers has been so great and this first organized effort to train a whole town in the appreciation of art has attracted such wide recognition from other communities that the editors plan to continue devotion of this same space to Santa Barbara.

Other towns are asking for the same consideration and when organized community work of the same high effort is found in other towns, as it is in drama in Pasadena, it will be featured in an enlarged magazine next year.

SOUTHLAND

Pacific Policies

CHESTER ROWELL has returned from Honolulu, where the nations of the Pacific met last month to talk on vital questions of our race.

This was no official party of ambassadors from ruling monarchs sent to divide and spoil, and thus preserve the "balance of power." Power was not mentioned at all, as far as we can hear: but leading men and women in every nation, every science, every profession, gave of their best knowledge and methods in an effort to study the causes of misunderstanding among Pacific peoples.

Enough scientific knowledge has accumulated in the world to throw some light on ethnological questions and to be applied to human relations in a useful way. The delegates were therefore instructed to come to no definite conclusions, to pass no resolutions, but to discuss freely every question that arose.

Here in the Hawaiian Islands where every nation of the Pacific is represented in the population, or in the stream of travelers which follows the ocean currents or is helped along by the trade winds, there is an atmosphere conducive to free discussion of race characteristics or the possibilities of becoming one united race.

Mr. Rowell, in his talk before the Woman's Civic League of Pasadena, the first Monday in October, showed a desire to linger long on the attractive and interesting features of the Islands but his duty to report to California certain information brought out by the conference drove him on to speak of other things.

Knowledge, in the form of statistics, traditions, examples, and the results of careful research, was presented on the subject of race characteristics, integrity and strength; and a frank and impartial study was made of all facts obtained by experts and laid on the table before these students of human affairs, the bugaboo of superiority or inferiority of the races was fairly met and dissipated forever as a thing to fight about. "What of it," said the American audience in Pasadena when they found that the Jew was granted over all others superiority as a race which has kept its integrity, its racial characteristics and its ability to adapt itself to modern progress in whatever form. But there is much to it, for Jesus Christ was a Jew and the whole of our Christian civilization is founded on Judaic law and Christ's interpretation of human evolution from the foundation of Hebrew history in the old Testament.

Second in race superiority came the Chinaman; and Mr. Rowell gave us such a picture of the modern, cultivated Chinese gentleman, that we could not but acknowledge the truth of the award. Admiration of our own highest ideals gives the second place to that race for industry, obedience, and self control in the working millions, up to the self-possession and calm but keen outlook on life shown by the Christian Chinese, educated at Oxford and Cambridge, men of the world and leaders of their race.

Cold shivers posessed his audience as Mr. Rowell drew a quick, sharp contrast in the story of one of these men on his way across the United States to attend the conference in Honolulu. Intending to stop at a small town in the middle west he told the conductor and was greeted with the gratuitous question, "What wash-house are you going to work in?" Our guest did not resent the rudeness, but told it jokingly at the conference; and we shuddered as we realized the American—still uncultured as a race—upon whom the joke was turned.

And yet, we are not without hope for our race as a race. If the great Chinese nation widespread and with many dialects can unify and simplify its alphabet and educate every citizen in the reading and writing of its new, simplified forms, as it proposes to do at once, surely the American, keen to become educated in everything can mend his manners and cultivate his mind in a few decades, and out of a superb physical foundation evolve as beautiful a soul.

What of Japan?

CLEAR-CUT and informative indeed was the work of the International Conference of Pacific Relations for us Californians on the subject of the Japanese.

It is seen that while a calm estimate of what is valuable in a race can be given in regard to the Chinese so long as he cultivates himself as a Chinese, no such calm estimate can be made by Californians of the Japanese while the subject is so "close up" and is demanding a favorable decision with slightly tightened fist in the face.

The Chinese is proud of his race, proud of his assured position, proud of himself, but he really is a modern gentleman and so does not look for rudeness, nor does he recognize a threat or a snub.

Japan, on the contrary, has deliberately forsworn her past as inferior, and does not expect us to weigh her in the beautifully carved old-fashioned balances of the Orient, which we admire as Californians and love. She wishes us to recognize the tremendous advance she has made in converting herself into a modern nation, and insists upon being judged only on that basis.

In her past, as an artist, she copied China and does not claim leadership in that: in her present she has copied Germany in militarism, America in manufacturing, and the rest of the world in modern dress and customs. Japan can, therefore, like Spain in architecture, claim supremacy only in ability to imitate others, and that is not one of the attributes of a race upon which supremacy of a race is based.

If we are asked to rate Japan in relation to America, and compare her accomplishment of the last fifty years with the progress of the other nations in that time we may easily award Japan the palm. But we are not enthusiastic about it, for Japan has copied those things in ourselves of which we are not especially proud, and has copied the militarism of Germany which we detest. It is, therefore, not the inherent characteristics of the Japanese race which we use to form our opinion of them, but rather their subservient presence as students of our institutions and their imitation and mastery of our own worst traits.

At the World's Fair in San Francisco, an American woman admired some of the beautiful ceramics set by the Japanese Commission of Art in glass cases. The commissioner himself corrected her impression that they were old. "Do you mean to say that Japan can now make beautiful vases like that for herself and yet is sending to commercial trade in this country the awful dishes in imitation of American designs, seen in the Japanese booths on The Pike at Long Beach?" The commissioner acknowledged the truth of the charge, and the American, anxious for art in this country, admiring and loving from her youth up the exquisite ceramics and pottery of the Orient as found in San Francisco's Chinatown, challenged him there.

"You are helping in the debasement of the taste of my countrymen," she exploded, you are killing the goose which laid your own golden eggs! The commissioner, not quite understanding the outburst, but ever desirous of doing the right thing, answered promptly, "Madame, it shall be changed."

Fundamentals

WHO shall be the one to choose, out of the Book, those things which are fundamental in the Christian religion? Shall self appointed dogmatists make a new creed and force upon our young people confused ideas of God as one who gave the law to ancient Jewry but gave not His Son to save us from blind following of the law? Shall one small sect, started in this home of dogma and fanaticism but ten or fifteen years ago, betray the church and lead its people off into the broad paths of speculation?

"I know that my Redeemer liveth," said the Prophet. That alone is worth the searching of the Scriptures which the Fundamentalists have stimulated. It is the "pearl of great price" for which all else is sold.

OPINION

What said He when others asked "What are the fundamentals of religion?" "Thou shalt love the Lord, thy God with all thy heart and with all thy soul and with all thy mind. This is the first and great commandment. And the second is like unto it. Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself. On these two laws hang all the other laws.

To love one's neighbors as one's self implies loving one's self enough to keep one's mind and body fit, and then to give one's neighbor every chance to do the same. It sums itself up in the definition of a gentleman,—which, by the way, also originated in California—"A gentleman is one who always thinks of others, and never forgets himself."

Problems of the Community Playhouse Achieving Dominance in the Community

A Correction: Through a most unfortunate error the last line was omitted from the editorial by Mr. Morin in the October number. The last sentence should read, "The playhouse has developed a constituency of its own"

THE Community Playhouse in Pasadena was in its beginning merely an idea and not a plan; even the idea was merely a general notion of stimulating community and individual self-expression through the use of a community self-owned play organization, without anything as to its detail but a nebulous program. There was little literature to guide in framing the plan of such a new organization, and still less experience from which to draw in building a "simon-pure" community play group.

If there is any one thing we are sure of, however, about a community movement, as long as it is of community character, it is that, though it be guided by individuals, it shall not exist for the individual's development or aggrandizement, but distinctly and consistently for the advancement of the imaginary entity known as the collective whole in the community. Its eye is single to that one dominant purpose and the success of any community institution, either literary or promotional, can best be measured, therefore, by the degree to which it adheres to this idea. It follows that a lack of unity in the adherence of the community to one such institution raises at once an impossible condition, inconsistent with its inherent nature and fatal to its community success.

It naturally developed, early in the history of the movement in Pasadena, that individuals possessing or assuming ability along lines followed by the struggling young Community Players group, sought to organize rival or parallel organizations, doing the same work, usually, however, with merely superficial resemblance in fact, in that such rival groups were merely organized around an individual and for the aggrandizement of the individual's personal account and reputation. These efforts were promptly met and opposed by the Playhouse group, on two grounds: first, that they were not sincere community efforts, but inherently individualistic (or merely artistic,),and, secondly, because unity in any one community development is indispensable.

Fate was kind to the young Community Playhouse group, and in these more or less abortive efforts to "steal the party machinery" of the Playhouse idea in Pasadena, victory rested on the banners of the original crowd. The community evidently thought we stood for the community, and we have at all times since felt to the fullest extent the high honor and responsibility of having been chosen for the succession to the community idea control in Pasadena, and striven at all times to merit the supreme confidence that this support in the community has shown.

Someone has said, "Blessed is he who has found his work," and institutions, like people, not merely must find a congenial occupation to achieve success, but a Jack-of-all-trades cannot well make any contribution to society.

Starting without experience or tradition, it has been frequently a temptation to expand at the least opportunity and to add side-lines to the Community Playhouse product. There are two main ideas underlying a Community Playhouse Movement: the Department Store idea or the Specialty Shop idea. The Playhouse has tried more than one objective or line of activity in the course of its business as a communty institution, but has so far never gained and held any new ground, outside of the well defined occupation of producing spoken drama.

As already said, it is a temptation, based upon what seems good logic in the abstract, that the evident manifest destiny of a successful Community Playhouse institution is to gather gradually to itself, or at least under its region of influence, all the genuine community amusement and community artistic activities of the vicinity, and merge as a super-community institution.

There are practical difficulties, however,in this direction. The budget of the Community Playhouse receipts and disbursements is already in excess of $100,000.00 annually. In the first place, therefore, such a super-community institution requires the services of a group of super-directors on its directorate. Anything so huge and intricate as that proposed community machine would be, requires the counsel of a group of men and women who combine the vision and wisdom of Solomon, together with the faith of Crusaders and the business ability of the best banking traditions. There is a belief, more or less current, however, that the tendency is in general the development of the super-community organization, and a suggestion of some of the advantages of this final achievement may be touched upon later.

J. W. Morin

The Passing of Sydney Piexotto

"El amor y la fe en las obras se vee."

BY the death of Sydney Piexotto at Ukiah August 8th the Boys of California, the United States, and those in the world outside, lost an ardent, enthusiastic and valued friend.

Piexotto's life was devoted to the welfare of youth—he had a high ambition to see all well started along the highway to success—to show them the manliness of a clean, useful life.

A short time ago he stood in the auditorium of the San Jose High School, addressing a large audience composed mostly of young people, giving for their information and benefit a deeply interesting resume of the organizing and conduct of the Columbia Park Boys Club of San Francisco. At the rear, and the sides of the platform sat over fifty young instrumentalists, forming a splendid Boys' Band, trained to a wonderful pitch of efficiency, disciplined and alert, a sight to bring joy to any one's heart, and when they played it was an inspiration to old and young.

Now sorrow has heavily struck the Columbia Park Boys, for they have lost their dear comrade, and faithful guide.

It will be a great consolation to know he was out with them in God's free and beautiful country, his earnest thoughts centered on his young flock up to the moment when he closed his watchful eyes for the last time of his earthly career.

The call came to him while he slept, before the revielle was sounded; he could not stay any longer with his dear boys—his loving soul floated out from his beloved California into the ethereal blue above and beyond to its eternal Creator. He was a kind father to his boys, yet a boy like themselves.

He leaves a high and honorable record—his life's work stands, a great incentive to those who follow on his trail.

To his host of friends on the Australian section of the globe, his demise will be a severe shock, and as he planned to leave San Francisco for there next September, the sad event will add to the sorrow, for they loved him over there for his honesty of purpose, his bright, genial spirits—they appreciated his high capacity for the Leadership of Youth, and were ready to give him a warm welcome.

The Young Australia League, to which he gave so much sympathy and support, will undoubtedly place on record a sincere and high tribute, to their distinguished friend, for his noble life's work for the welfare, spiritually and physically of the boys he loved so well.

Claud H. Simson.

SELECTED STAGE SECRETS

PASADENA COMMUNITY PLAYHOUSE

By ELLEN LEECH

PHOTOGRAPHS BY ALBERT HILLER

JOSEPH HAM AS PRINCE MEREN-RE, LEFT; BELLE MITCHELL, PRIESTESS OF ISIS, AND TEMPLE ATTENDANTS; CENTER, FRANK McALLISTER, AS PRINCE KETA. RIGHT, IN THE PRODUCTION OF THE BIBLICAL DRAMA, "PHARAOH'S DAUGHTER."

THE premiere production of the interesting and compelling Biblical drama, "Pharaoh's Daughter," by Dr. Allison Gaw and Ethelean Tyson Gaw, at the Community Playhouse, Pasadena, in October, established a new order of playwrights among us, and proved anew the power of blank verse.

This dramatic, historical romance, contrasting vividly the Court of the Pharaohs and the life of the Hebrew slaves, gives an unusual opportunity for reference to the Costume Department of the playhouse. The production was so brilliant, with such meticulous care shown not only in the interpretation of character but in the detail of the historic costumes, and in the provision of a back ground and settings to stimulate the imagination, that even the most unobserving must have realized that such results are not obtained without effort and untiring energy, pluck and perseverance on the part of someone.

Walter Cohick Plunkett, a young but well known costume designer, gave hours of time to making sketches, exact in detail, and coloring them accurately that the important item of color might be satisfactorily worked out in the perfect whole. The exquisite changing lights that we enjoy; the mazes of color that form the picture, all are the results of deep study. A group may be worked out satisfactorily, accounted for in relation to one another, but when the group breaks because the movement of the play requires a different formation, then this again must be perfect in color, although the second grouping may be across the stage from the first and with a totally different background. Yes indeed, the costumes, the stage settings and the lighting all make a tremendous difference.

While history records the type of dress, the materials, and something of the gorgeous colors, each individual designer of modern times has a slight margin in which to vary his productions. The materials in use, however, are definitely decided, as the Egyptians used primarily a heavy handwoven linen, a fabric intermingling goats' hair, and a sheer, fibrous material, the latter used largely in the swathing processes, covered with a cloak or cape. For the heavier materials various weights of cotton cloth were substituted in the reproduction and for the gauze tarleton was used, dyed in the workrooms to the required shades, and often colored several times.

The detail work was most interesting and intricate: The severe Egyptian wigs, made of heavy black cord sewed with interminable stitches to the tightfitting base, and decorated occasionally with beads and ornaments for the feminine wear, to produce the peculiarly straight hair always associated with those fair but dusky maids of the ever-flowing Nile. The head dresses were all elaborate and all carried a meaning, the triple crown of the Queen for instance proving her a Pharaoh of Upper Egypt and the Third Pharaoah of Lower Egypt. The power of this ruling house is exemplified by the fan used in the costumes of both the Queen and Moses. The Queen's cloak proclaims her a ruler through its symbols, and the decorations of the costume of Moses with the symbols Osyces and of the Sun

NILE DANCERS, INTERPRETING THE SONG OF THE EVER-FLOWING NILE: JESSIE HERRON, LEADER; ROSA BURNEL, VIRGINIA MARSDEN, ELIZABETH FLINT, JOSEPHINE SPATES, AND ELIZABETH MARSDEN—A LOVELY BIT OF THE ROMANTIC DRAMA, "PHARAOH'S DAUGHTER."

EDWARD ATLEE, PRIEST OF KARNAK, WITH ASSISTANT PRIESTS, EVERETT McCAMMAN AND RAYMOND MARTIN, LEFT; FREDERICK WRIGHT, PRINCE ATORE, CENTER; MAYFAIR MURPHEY AND LURENE TUTTLE, NOVICES IN THE TEMPLE OF ISIS, RIGHT.

are signs of the heir apparent and of the ruling Pharaoh if a male.

To enumerate further details which should not be overlooked: the sandals, with their elongated toes, the toes turning almost back to the ankle, were made of heavy cloth, with inner soles, then painted and gilded and held in place by carefully sewed elastic. Those intriguing beard protectors, designed and cut from buckram, were painted and fitted by a ingenious member of the staff. History may tell why they were used but I will venture the assumption that they were primarily put in vogue by a kingly soul who saw this opportunity to hide what he didn't have by originatng a style,—a keen mind, and very feminine in its working. The cats' heads proved too expensive to buy outright, so another artist modeled them in plastic, gilded them, and in turn they shone like solid gold in the priestly processional.

HELEN JEROME EDDY AS QUEEN MERRHIS, PHAROAH'S DAUGHTER AND REIGNING SOVEREIGN OF EGYPT

Working out these artistic details, attempting and producing unusual effects with plastic, buckram, glue and gilt, carries with it the uplift of original production but after all please remember it is tiring, and not quite so interesting to sit and sew a straight seam, putting things together that must stay put through eleven performances. Think of the needle pricks encountered in sewing miles of black cord into a wig, and yards of lotus flowers onto the Queen's gown. Just think of all the colors and designs which were cut out and appliqued, as well as the other designs painted on each costume whether for royalty or slave, and all this a labor of friendly service.

The production committee for the performance was composed of Mr. and Mrs. Donald H. Fry, Mrs. C. B. Scoville, Jr., and Roma Penfield. Miss Genevieve Graydon was chairman of the costume committee with the following heads of departments: Dyeing, Everett McCamman; pattern-cutting, Mrs. Elizabeth Cole; painting, Frederick Wright; headdress, Richard Russell; wigs, Dorothy Ware; sandals, Raymond Martin; accessories, Donald H. Fry; sewing, Lucy Howard and Ramona Henderson.

ARTHUR LUBIN AS PRINCE RAMESES-MOESIS, REPUTED SON OF PHAROAH'S DAUGHTER AND HEIR APPARENT TO THE THRONE, HEARING THE PETITION OF MYRA (MARY RADLOVA), AND HER GRANDFATHER, BEN-ISRAEL (CHARLES HANCOCK)

ASSISTANCE LEAGUE OF SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

MONTHLY BULLETIN

"All for Service—And Service for All"

OFFICERS:

MRS. HANCOCK BANNING, President
MRS. EDWARDS LAUGHLIN, First Vice President
MRS. WILLIAM GIBBS MCADOO, Sec. Vice-Pres.
MRS. ERWIN P. WERNER, Third Vice-President
MRS. E. AVERY MCCARTHY, Fourth Vice-Pres.
MRS. JAMES REED, Secretary
MRS. J. WARREN TATUM, Treasurer.
MR. D. C. MACWATTERS, Auditor

5604 De Longpre Avenue
Hollywood, Los Angeles
Telephone HE 5133

CALENDAR

Nov. 3, 10:30 a. m.—Meeting of the Board of Directors.

Nov. 3, 12:15 a. m.—Round Table Luncheon. Miss Elspeth MacNeill, speaker. Subject: "Review of Plays of the Present Season in New York."

Nov. 9, 10:30 a. m.—Meeting of the Day Nursery Committee.

Nov. 10, 10:30 a. m.—Meeting of the Executive Committee.

Nov. 12, 10:30 a. m.—Meeting of the Good Samaritan Committee.

Nov. 17, 10:30 a. m.—Meeting of the Executive Committee.

Nov. 24, 10:30 a. m.—Meeting of the Executive Committee.

Nov. 26, 10:30 a. m.—Meeting of the Good Samaritan Committee.

THE CHRISTMAS SALE COMMITTEE

THIS Committee, under the direction of Mrs. John E. Maurer and Mrs. Isaac-Hampshur Jones, is working very hard to assure the success of the sale on December 7th, 8th and 9th and asks for suggestions and assistance from League members and friends. Success will mean two things—that Christmas will be made a happy reality for those women who have worked hard to make the fads and fancies and that the scope of the Woman's Exchange can he broadened by the addition of equipment and material.

Dozens of the things you will want for Christmas you will find now in either one of our shops; other things may be ordered from the lists to be delivered to you when you specify.

It is your League and the Committee is counting on you to interest your friends and to lend a hand!

HAVE YOU ORDERED YOUR CHRISTMAS CAKES AND CANDIES?

Delicious homemade fruit cake, attractively packed, for $1.50 a pound.

Homemade candies of all kinds. Place orders early to insure timely delivery.

CHRISTMAS CARDS

A very attractive selection of Christmas cards may be seen at the down town shop, 829 South Flower Street. Place your order for engraving here also.

THRIFT SHOP

Mrs. G. Alexander Bobrick, Chairman of the Thrift Shop, is making an urgent appeal for clothes. The stock is so low now that disappointed customers go away daily. It is a liberal education to study the patronage of the Thrift Shop—the mother who turns over every article in the children's boxes, coming day after day until some article of the right size is found; men who run in after work for a heavy shirt, a pair of shoes, a necktie or a much needed suit or overcoat, and then the "Extras" who revel in the evening suits and dresses, the picture hats or top hats. It is true that we make money in the Thrift Shop with which to "carry on," but few who have watched the stream of people daily, but would realize that we do something vastly more important than make money for various projects. We make it possible for so many others to earn money to retain their self respect.

GOOD SAMARITAN

It is but a step from the Thrift Shop to the Good Samaritan Department and how many times a week does a Thrift Shop patron find his way back there to talk over his present problems, to go away with the assurance of work or the arrangements made for the necessary medical attention for himself or family and often times with the dollar or so in his pocket that tides him over the crisis. If we were at liberty to tell you of some of the people we are able to start anew in this department you would much better understand the real humanitarian work we are doing. Names, addresses, stories must be confidential lest we jeopardize our chances of doing good in this way. Numbers mean very little in case work, but you will realize something of the work entailed when you know that the least number of cases carried in any one month since January 1st has been 76; the average around 100. The time and effort required are more than made up for by the joy of service.

DAY NURSERY

It will not be long until the Day Nursery will celebrate its first anniversary. The Day Nursery Committee will invite you all to share in this celebration and to hear of the results of this year's work, which has raised the Nursery from an experimental to a well established institution. The Board of Directors has authorized the establishment of an Admission Cottage in connection with the Nursery, where the newly admitted children may be examined before entering the Nursery proper. Announcement of the dedication of this addition will be made later.

BABY SHOP

Space in our Woman's Exchange at the Community House is being set aside for a Baby Shop. Crisp, dainty, hand embroidered, knitted and crochetted articles for the most fastidious baby will be on display, as well as dolls, doll furniture and nursery nicknacks. This shop should be ready in time to help you solve the problem of the kiddies' Christmas.

STUDIO TEA ROOM

An old-fashioned picture in the making at the Fox Studio has turned our Tea Room into a colorful busy place. Your out-of-town guests will enjoy lunching with some of the movie stars in this attractive setting.

FILM LOCATION BUREAU

The demand for locations has been increasing rapidly and to supply it we must secure more listings. If your home is listed with the Location Bureau, will you secure your friends' homes for us, explaining to them that their own pet charities may be designated as beneficiaries?

SPICED APPLE HONEY

Crahapple Jelly, Spiced Figs, delicious homemade marmalade, in dainty gift jars, for sale at the Community House.

APRONS!!

Maids' aprons, kitchen aprons—any pattern made to order by one of our Shut-Ins.

SOLDIERS COMMITTEE

From the chairman, Mrs. Edward Elliott, comes an urgent appeal for men's clothes for the World War veterans at Sawtelle who are not receiving government compensation. Suits, shoes, shirts, underwear, socks, neckties. Clothes often make it possible for these chaps to get a job and begin the slow task of making their way back into the community.

COMMUNITY CHEST

Remembering the League slogan, "All for Service—and Service for All," have you done your part in volunteering to work in the coming campaign? This call comes but once a year; it should have the response and support of every person in the community.

For the benefit of those who cannot arrange to devote the entire week of the campaign to this work, Mrs. Edwards Laughlin, chairman of the Residential Divisions, is organizing a "Flying Squadron" made up of those who can give one or two days. If you have not already signed up, volunteer to serve on this squadron by calling Mrs. Laughlin at TRinity 8971 or HEmpstead 5133.

THE NEW SHOP OF THE ASSISTANCE LEAGUE OF SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA WITH THE CHRISTMAS SALES COMMITTEE IN CHARGE, SITUATED IN THE STREET FLOOR OF THE WOMAN'S ATHLETIC CLUB, SOUTH FLOWER STREET, THIS SHOP OFFERS NEW OPPORTUNITY TO BUY YOUR CHRISTMAS PRESENTS FROM THE SHOPS OF YOUR LEAGUE

Dance!

at the

Ambassador

Cocoanut Grove

to the Entrancing Music of

COCOANUT GROVE
ORCHESTRA

Under the Leadership of Ray West

SPECIAL NIGHTS Every Tuesday

COLLEGE NIGHTS

With Dancing Contest every Friday.

Tea Dances

every Saturday at 4:00 in the
Fiesta Room, Tea Service $1.00

So Goes Milady
With luxury attending

Golden State Limited East

Full half a train devoted to woman—greater recognition of her just dues in travel than ever before planned. Perfect in every appointment—of course.

All-Pullman—women's lounge, shower bath, maid, manicure, expert hair bobbing in the barber shop—comfort for the men, too—club car, bath, valet and barber.

Leave Los Angeles 12:01 p. m. [via Southern Pacific]; San Diego 10:45 a.m. [via S. D. & A.]; arrive Chicago 10:00 a. m. third day [via Rock Island].

Thru Pullman daily from Santa Barbara 8:00 a. m. [via Southern Pacific].

For tickets, reservations, personal service, call on

Southern Pacific City Ticket Office
937 State St., Santa Barbara, Calif.
Phone 243
or address B. F. Coons, General Agent
Rock Island Lines
809 Van Nuys Bldg., Los Angeles, Calif.

Rock Island
SOUTHERN PACIFIC LINES

Meals? "The best on wheels"

893

Because it's Comfortable

—another important reason for your travel over

Southern Pacific Lines

Get extra value for your travel funds—go by train.

Ride in long, easy-riding coaches—a comfortable, roomy seat in which you can relax in entire ease, read or converse or plan your activities at journey's end.

Speedy trains leave at convenient hours. No matter where, Southern Pacific Lines and connections can take you. Ask Agent

Southern Pacific Lines

Los Angeles Ticket Offices: 1147 South Broadway.
212 West Seventh Street and Main floor Pacific Electric Bldg.
Sixth and Main Streets. Central Station, Fifth and Central.
Telephone MEtropolitan 2000.

Hollywood Ticket Office:
6768 Hollywood Blvd. Telephone Granite 1801-1802.

Bon Voyage

Gift Baskets Packed with Good Things from "THE ELITE" Sent to Train or Steamer at Your Order.

The Elite
CATERERS AND CONFECTIONERS
629-641 S. FLOWER ST. LOS ANGELES, CALIF.
In Pasadena 634 East Colorado

TRinity 9252

RECENT BOOKS—REVIEWS

(Continued from Page 12)

natural beauties. It loses none of its reputation under this author's skillful management It is a story which will appeal to the spirit of eternal youth, lurking just beneath the surface of every man, and particularly to the lover of Scotland. whose feeling has been fostered by the romances of Scott and Stevenson. We do not claim equality with these authors for Mr. Buchan,, but he undoubtedly invites favorable comparison.

GREENERY STREET

By DENIS MACKAIL, Houghton Mifflin Company

Mr. Mackail twitters through the first year in the life of a young married couple, covering pretty completely every detail of the billing and cooing stage. These two happen to live in London, but they assuredly belong to that region, supposed to be inhabited by the "babes in the woods." This is the sort of writing, superficially clever, with now and then an actual flick at some of the lesser raw spots on life's surface, that women often do better than men. The story in "Greenery Street" goes on forever about nothing at all, until being a book, it has to end, and does so with the inevitable announcement. These two imbeciles are going to have another.

The heroine of this novel, who, if possible, leads in the condition of guileless simplicity, is a modern version of David Copperfield's child wife Dora. Evidently Mr. Mackail has not read his Shaw carefully enough to learn that this type of femininity is no longer popular, and in fact probably never existed. But no doubt it will secure approval from a certain class of readers, and to such we particularly recommend it, at bed time, for its soporific influence can not possibly be resisted.

THE STROLLING SAINT

By RAFAEL SABATINI,
Houghton Mifflin Company

In this day and age, deeds, such as those committed by various men, and women too in by-gone days, would fill the pages of yellow journals. Viewed however through the softening mist which separates past events from our longing eyes, these same deeds take on an enchanting glamour and often furnish very dramatic material to the purveyors of romantic fiction. Of this, Italy of all nations surely has the most to offer, being a crowded storehouse of matters appealing perpetually to human interest, and herein Mr. Sabatini has gone delving and pulled forth for our inspection in his latest novel, "The Strolling Saint", some highly colored stuff. Generally speaking he allows no sober facts of history to dent his conscience, but in selecting so villainous a character as Pier Luigi Farnese, he is really justified in throwing aside all scruples, since even history asserts that this gentleman's career, contained all the essentials for a perfect specimen of a wicked knave. The hero, likewise a historical personage, took some side trips from the path of virtue, but being a hero has his conduct neatly whitewashed, with extra rose color spread on to boot. And of course the villain got what was coming to him in the end which happens to be historically true. Still we object decidedly to the details of the assassination as rendered by Mr. Sabatini and advise all readers to skip the chapter entitled "Blood". For the rest, this novel is somewhat superior to the general run of Mr. Sabatini's romantic fiction.

KINDRED

By ALICE PRESCOTT SMITH
Houghton Mifflin Company

The second "one hundred years war" between England and France dragged out its interminable length, punctuated by periods of warfare in Europe, each with its echo in America. One of these was called "The Seven Years War" over there, and here "The Old French and Indian War," and it was waged with remarkable ferocity, in Canada, which Miss Smith has used as the scene of this historical romance woven around events and characters concerned in that terrific struggle for supremacy in America. Now historical fiction usually spells adventure, a fictitious field wherein men find the way more easily than women as a rule. A venture therupon, needs for successful effect, force and a certain robust viewpoint, both of which are lacking in "Kindred." Aside from this failure, Miss Smith has done her work very acceptably, since she conveys more than a touch of the forest atmosphere in her graphic descriptions of the small settlement wrested from the reluctant clutch of the surrounding wilderness. The action is smooth and the situations well conceived, but the leading character, who tells the story in the first person, persists in appearing to be a woman masquerading in a man's garments, although he is really a strong and valiant hero.

WHAT EVOLUTION IS

By GEORGE HOWARD PARKER,
Harvard University Press

PROFESSOR PARKER is Director of the Zoological Laboratory at Harvard University. He is, therefore, qualified to define Organic Evolution. This he does when in beginning his remarkablely clear exposition of this much discussed question he says:

"Organic Evolution, though a well-unified field in biology, can be profitably treated under two heads. The first of these has to do with the doctrine of descent with modification—the belief that plants and animals of particular kinds, have descended by gradual modification from preexisting plants and animals of very different kinds. This belief which is often spoken of as if it were the whole of evolution, is supplemented by what may be treated under a second heading, a group of doctrines that have to do with the way in which descent with modifications has been accomplished."

It is quick reading. One hundred and seventy-odd pages of concise, authoritive survey of the evidence concerning the evolution of plant and animal life on this earth makes plain to the intelligent layman the progress of comparative anatomy, of embryology, of geology, of zoogeography and of the study of rudimentary organs since the days when we studied fourteen weeks in physiology.

And yet, after all his clearing of the fogs which have obscured this popular discussion, the author leaves us with the statement—his very last sentence, "There is after all only one kind of life in the universe,"—and thus opens the field for a new discussion. For, is not this statement from a prominent man of science exactly like that theoretic objection to the inheritance of acquired characteristics which he himself states—"is based on ignorance and may at any time be set aside by a new discovery"—say that of a spiritual life in man which is what the Bible students are dimly grouping for when they quote from the second chapter of Genesis? Granting that the Lord God did form man (by evolution) out of the dust of the earth, did He not breathe into man at some period of his evolution that mysterious thing upon which Science has never yet put its finger, a living soul. M. U. S.

PHONE TERrace 0127
Lunch, Tea or Dine at
El Patio Tea Room
COMMUNITY PLAYHOUSE BUILDING
37 SOUTH EL MOLINO PASADENA, CALIF.

CORONA
TYPEWRITERS
With Standard Keyboard
$60 Complete With Case
Also All Makes Sold, Rented, Repaired, Exchanged
Anderson Typewriter Co.
84 E. Colorado St. Pasadena

HILLER'S STUDIO
OFFICIAL PHOTOGRAPHER FOR CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND
49 EAST COLORADO STREET
PASADENA, CALIFORNIA
ALBERT HILLER Phone, Fair Oaks 155

O'HARA, LIVERMORE and ARTHUR BAKEN
INTERIOR DECORATIONS
ANTIQUE AND MODERN FURNITURE
DRAPERIES
644 E. Colorado St. Pasadena, California
522 Sutter St. San Francisco

QUALITY SERVICE
THE ELITE
DRY CLEANERS AND DYERS
Plant: 797 So. Fair Oaks Ave.
Colo. 1349 Pasadena, California

Welcome to call and Browse
Rare & Art Books
First Editions
Early Printing
Autographs
Americana
Books Notable for Printing Illustrations and Binding.
Dawson's Book Shop
627 So. Grand Ave.
Catalogues sent on request:—
LOS ANGELES

Dawson's
"The Birds of California"
Complete in four volumes.
De luxe format
$225.00 to $500.00
Smaller formats
$45.00 to $110.00
Published and Sold by
SOUTH MOULTON COMPANY
301 Bank of Italy Bldg.
VAndike 4078 Los Angeles, Cal.

A LITTLE CHURCH IN BEVERLY HILLS, CALIFORNIA

THE INTERIOR IS SIMPLE BUT BEAUTIFUL IN ITS PROPORTIONS, AND THE DECORATION IS CONCENTRATED ON THE ALTAR WHICH IS ADORNED WITH GIFTS FROM MEMBERS OF THE ALL SAINTS' PARISH, BEVERLY HILLS

READERS of CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND may be interested to know that Mr. Hubert Frohman, formerly of Pasadena and now the Architect of the National Cathedral, Washington, D. C., describes All Saints Church, Beverly Hills, as being in his judgment the most perfect small church in the Southland.

Built of reinforced concrete with beamed ceilings, thick walls, and high windows filled with cathedral glass, this church has been planned with the first consideration that of use. It is an interesting example of the value to be derived from emphasis upon good craftsmanship in the various accessories and furnishings. Such details as the wrought iron hardware and lighting fixtures, and the chancel and sanctuary furniture have been thought out with extreme care, and the altar which is the focal point of the church commands attention not only because of its design but because of the fact that it is executed entirely in rich gold and is furnished with beautiful ornaments, all of which are old and represent the gift of different members of the parish.

An interesting feature regarding the design of the interior is the way in which the difficult question of acoustics was handled. The entire west wall of the church is covered with one beautiful gold colored velvet hanging. This curtain is very effective in producing acoustics which have been pronounced ideal.

The whole church represents an attempt to carry out a scheme simple and dignified, embodying those architectural features of old-world churches which can be appropriately used in a modern building such as this one.

A GOLD COLORED VELVET HANGING COVERS THE ENTIRE WEST WALL AND SOLVES AT THE SAME TIME THE PROBLEM OF ACOUSTICS. ALL SAINTS AT BEVERLY HILLS. ROLAND E. COATE, ARCHITECT

LIKE THE LITTLE CHURCHES OF THE OLD WORLD, THIS SMALL CHURCH IN BEVERLY HILLS IS A THING OF BEAUTY AND WILL BE A JOY FOREVER TO THE PASSERBY. ALL SAINTS' EPISCOPAL CHURCH. ROLAND E. COATE, ARCHITECT

UP THE VALLEY AND DOWN THE COAST

THERE IS NOTHING ELSE AS INTERESTING AS YOSEMITE

(Continued from October)

By EDITH RICHMOND THOMAS

AFTER a two and a half hours ride about the valley we returned to Camp Curry and set out to locate our tent on Boulder Avenue. This was no easy matter for there were hundreds of tents and cottages scattered over the grove and the many turns we had to make among rambling paths were somewhat confusing. These hotel-camps, like Camp Curry accommodate the majority of visitors, but there are also hotels and camping grounds for those who prefer them.

Evening had fallen early, as it does in this deep valley and the air was filled with the song of birds, the noise of waterfalls, the buzz of voices and automobiles. The fragrance of incense cedar and pines was strong on the air and all nature seemed in contented mood. Returning hikers could be heard on all sides in various degrees of enthusiasm, and all seemed bent on the task on hand, a hasty preparation for a much deserved dinner.

And when the evening meal was over we joined the rest under the trees where they had gathered to hear the open air concert. Chairs were grouped together facing the stage, which was the veranda for the Service Building in which office and lobby are to be found. And directly back of us loomed the 3,250 foot Glacier Point Rock that acted as a natural sounding board for the concert. For a couple of hours we enjoyed the monologues, singing and orchestral music and at nine were treated to the sight de luxe of the camp. The audience was requested to turn and face the giant cliff in the rear and listen carefully for the answer to the call to be sent up to a watcher stationed on its summit. Then with all the power at his command the speaker sent forth his stentorian shout "Hello up there——are you ready——let her go!" And after what seemed several minutes a reply was heard issuing from somewhere in the heavens two-thirds of a mile above us. It was so dim and far away that it was heard only with an effort. In olden days the stentor call was always given by Mr. Curry.the like of whose far reaching powerful tones old timers say has never been equaled.

Then all eyes were turned upward to the black cliff barely outlined against the starry sky, a red tongue of flame shot out from its summit and a stream of live coals tumbled down, down for several minutes in a fiery cascade that could be seen from all over the valley. The lower end of the fire-fall became lost on a half way ledge, although it appeared to vanish in the blackness of the night.

Imagine some old Yosemites witnessing this! In memory they would be wafted back to the days when with their own well organized signal system, they used these lofty pinnacles as points of observation, sending glad or solemn tidings as the case might be, with fire by night and smoke by day.

As for these first dwellers in the valley according to a statement made by Teneiya, their chief, at the time of the white man's advent, to Doctor L. H. Bunnell, the valley was originally called "Ah-wah-nee" or "Deep Grass Valley" and the people who lived there were called Ah-wah-nee-chees, or dwellers in Deep Grass Valley. At one time they were a large and powerful tribe, but by means of wars and disease many were destroyed and the survivors fled the valley and joined other tribes. For a long time afterward the valley was deserted, but finally Teneiya who was decended from the Ahwahneechee chieftain left the Monos, a tribe on the east side of the Sierras with whom he had been reared, and gathering the remnant of his people about him returned to the valley and claimed it as a birthright of his people. Later they made themselves famous as hunters of the grizzily bear and were given the name Yosemite,—meaning a full grown grizzly bear—which they afterwards adopted.

But this distinguished name was lost by them at the advent of the white settlers in '49, being superseded by the ignominous one of "Diggers." This name was given to them in derision on account of their practice of digging the roots of certain plants for food and showing no great inclination to fight. It also included other tribes in the vicinity who were affiliated with the Yosemites.

In the uprising of 1851 however, the white settlers had a chance to see how these aborigines among whom they had intruded themselves could fight and a campaign had to be instituted by the State authorities against them. It was while in pursuit of the Yosemites under old Chief Teneiya for whom a lake and canyon have been appropriately named, that the white man first saw the Yosemite Valley. When the various tribes were finally captured, they were put on the Fresno reservation where Major Savage, who had been sent to capture them, was killed in a personal quarrel defending them. After a few months Teneiya begged for his liberty and under promise not to molest the white settlers again, he departed for his old home. Many of his people stole away and joined him, but when settled once more, the Monos, among whom the chief had been reared, set upon them, killing Teneiya and many of his warriors. As for the remainder at the reservation, permission was given them in 1885 to return to the valley as the hot climate of the lower plains did not agree with them.

Many of these Indians have gradually become absorbed into the press of modern life and the changed conditions for them have not been entirely unsatisfactory. Nevertheless they still retain a connecting link with the past, a link bridging the stirring days of captivity and extending back to the halcyon times of one hundred and forty years ago. This link is a woman who sits for the most part lost in revery, yet tenaciously hangs on to life as though under promise to her chief not to leave her post until she can conscientiously bring him the message that his people have been restored to their birth-right of content.

UHRICH

Ladies' and Gentlemen's Riding Coats and Breeches

Absolutely Correct in Model and Details

188 EAST COLORADO STREET
PASADENA

Schaffer Gown Shop
Specializing in
Gowns for Larger Women
New models for the Autumn, in Wool, Crepe Satin, Flat Crepe, Cut Velvet, and Crepe Roma.
Mourning gowns featured.
Gowns Made to Order
566 E. COLORADO STREET
Near Madison
Pasadena

T. W. Mather Co. Inc.
PASADENA, CAL.
Dry Goods
Women's & Children's Wearing Apparel
Colorado Street at Marengo

Permutit Soft Water Saves Clothes
TROY LAUNDRY
In Business for Twenty Years
Pasadena, Cal. Phone C. 146 Alhambra 243-J

LAUNDERERS DRY CLEANERS
ROYAL LAUNDRY CO.
461 South Raymond Colorado 67
Pasadena, California

FLORNINA
Gowns · Negligees · Accessories and Bathing Suits
Ready to Wear or Made to Order
Unusually Attractive Frocks in Tub Silks and Dotted Swiss
95 South Los Robles Ave., Pasadena
Phone Fair Oaks 113

"The Gate to Healthful Beauty"
CORLANE
Marinello System
F. O. 1648 570 East Colorado St.
Pasadena
Opposite the Presbyterian Church

HEWSON HAND CRAFT STUDIOS
Handwoven One Piece Dresses, Coats and Scarfs, Canadian and Candlewick Bedspreads
Dutch and East Indian Brass, Beads, Fine Pendants and Objects of Art in Great Variety
F. O. 6555 DUnkirk 4909
602 E. Colorado St. 2508½ W. 7th St.
Pasadena Los Angeles

ECHO PARK CLUB HOUSE

Municipal Playgrounds are in themselves a scientific study in which the health and moral integrity of the youth of a city are deeply involved.

The Playground and Recreation Commission of the City of Los Angeles, in search for the best that can be secured, has entrusted to the Allied Architects Association of Los Angeles the solution of the various Park problems in the City. The first of these, the Club House for Echo Park, has been solved and is already under construction. The second, the contract for the planning and designing of Griffith Park and its buildings, has been signed and soon the largest Playground in Los Angeles, with its swimming pools and clubhouses will take its place among the accomplishments of the City.

Allied Architects Association of Los Angeles

Paul H. Vauchelet
Lighting Fixtures.
Andirons Console Tables
Metal Work
1530 North Western Ave ~ Holly 2669
Los Angeles ~ California

Clarence P. Day
Corporation
Engineers — Contractors
Builders
205 Boston Bldg.
Pasadena, Calif.
Phone
WAkefield 6841

AN INTERIOR DECORATING DEPARTMENT NOW OFFERS TO ARCHITECTS AN UNRIVALLED SERVICE IN THE SELECTION OF CHOICE PIECES, DRAPERIES AND COVERINGS

Silk Lamp Shades made in our own workrooms by specialists

The
Serendipity Antique Shop
Antiques Lamps Decorations
22, 26 and 30 SOUTH LOS ROBLES AVENUE
PASADENA, CALIFORNIA
BRADFORD PERIN, Proprietor Telephone F. O. 7111

The Girls' Collegiate School 34th Year
NEWLY LOCATED IN THE COUNTRY
Boarding and Day School. Accredited East and West. Out-Door Life a Reality. 50-acre estate. All sports. Saddle Horses. New Buildings. Italian type. L. A. Office, 1008 W. Adams St.
Glendora, Calif. Miss Parsons and Miss Dennen, Principals

An Ideal School for Young Women
Cumnock School
COLLEGE WORK IN THE FOLLOWING COURSES:
Vocal Interpretation of Literature
Literary Appreciation — Voice and Diction — Short-Story
Public Speaking — French — Dancing
Dramatics — Story Telling — Psychology
Journalism
Art and Art Appreciation
An accredited High School and Junior School under same management
HELEN A. BROOKS, Director
5353 West Third Street — Los Angeles
WIlitley 3427 —TELEPHONES— WHitley 7311

The Elliott School for Girls
Residence and Day School.
Ideal Home Life — Character Building
Superior Educational Advantages. Sub-Primary through Eleventh Grade.
Martha Collins Weaver, M. A., Principal. Pico Blvd. at Grammercy Place.
EMpire 5347

GREENWOOD SCHOOL FOR GIRLS
5928 Franklin Avenue, Hollywood
Select Resident and Day School
Lawns, Tennis Courts, Outdoor Swimming Pool. Special advantages in music, under Mrs. Elsa Spencer.
Principals:
Mrs. M. Greenwood, Newnham College, Cambridge
H. F. Greenwood, A. B., Corpus Christi College, Cambridge
Telephone HOlly 2886

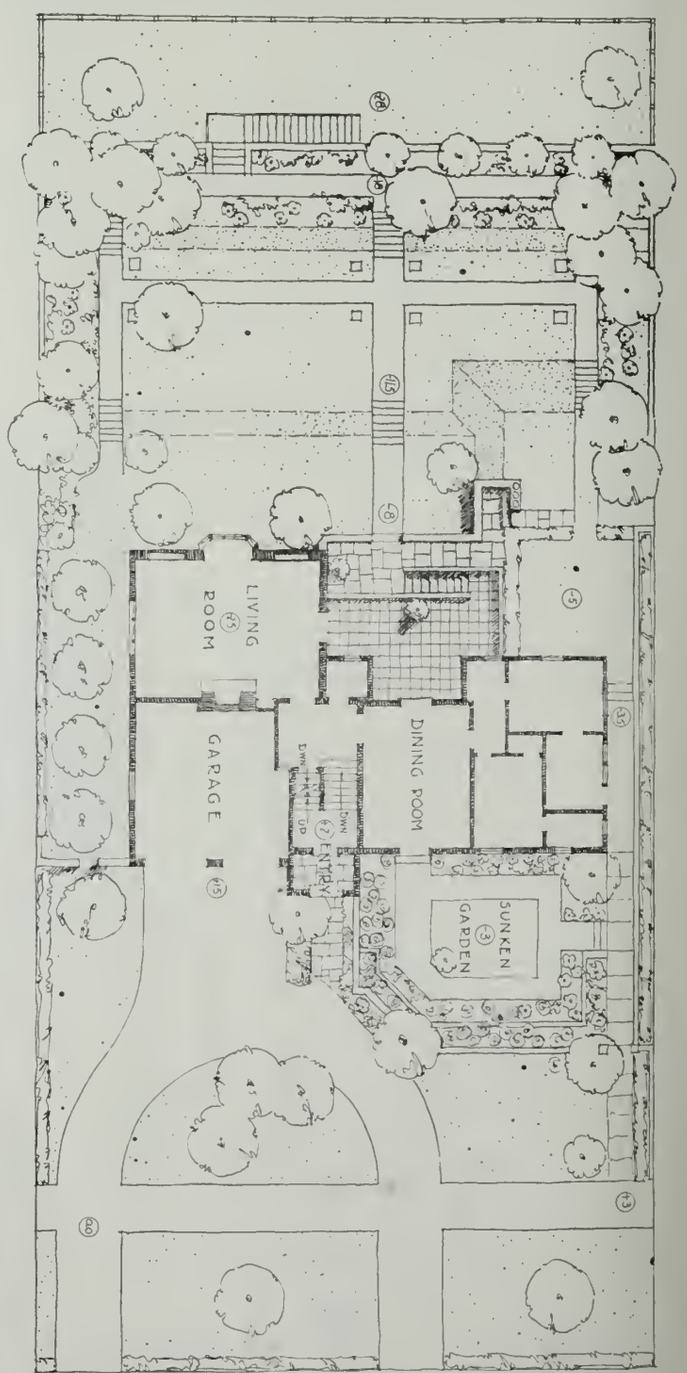
MISS HARKER'S SCHOOL
FOR GIRLS
Palo Alto -:- -:- -:- California
"The Home of Stanford University"
Outdoor life all the year round. One hour from San Francisco. College Preparatory and Special Courses. Separate residence for girls from 5 to 14 years. Catalog on request.

The Katharine Branson School
Ross, Marin County, California
A Country School for Girls — College Preparation
One Hour From San Francisco — Outdoor Athletics

KENWOOD HALL
Resident and Day School for Girls. Sub-Primary through High School.
Open throughout the year.
Directors: Ruby Mildred King, Grace Baylor Bobbitt.
Tel. WAshington 1612 — 675 So. Vermont Ave., Los Angeles

The Art of
Norma Gould
Authentic Dances—Pantomime
Eurythmics
Ballroom Department—Louise Kramer
Special Course for Professional Dancers
Phone or write for information
460 N. Western Ave. HEmpstead 3530

A COURSE IN THE APPRECIATION OF ARCHITECTURE



II

THE RELATION OF BUILDING TO SITE

By DAVID WITMER, A. I. A.

IT IS the rare individual who first, having selected his architect and acquainted him with his needs and desires, consults him concerning the choice of site. The site is therefore usually fixed. If the site is fixed, then so is the lay of the land, length and breadth with respect to the points of the compass, the slope or inclination, the relation of this to the street, to the sun, to the prevailing breezes and, last but not least, the angles of available views. The needs of an individual, particularly when governed by an expenditure limit, are well defined. Thus generally from the outset of a building enterprise it must appear that the relation of building to site is a problem, the satisfactory solution of which is beset by boundaries of limited flexibility. This fact becomes more clear when there is full consideration of the elements of both factors.

The wise individual stipulates not what he has determined he should possess in the way of plan of building, but the rooms; approximately the size, if need be—the general relation of these rooms; even the type of construction if the appropriation is not too limited; the general desired atmosphere within and without of his house; general desires as to use of site; gardens; conservation of views and sunshine. When these conditions only are named the problem is sufficiently determined and the opportunity for the architect to produce the most satisfying solution is not lost.

ILLUSTRATING HILLSIDE SITE WITH HOUSE PLAN AN ESSENTIAL PART THEREOF BUT QUITE UNADAPTABLE TO LEVEL LOT. FIGURES IN CIRCLES INDICATE DIFFERENT LEVELS

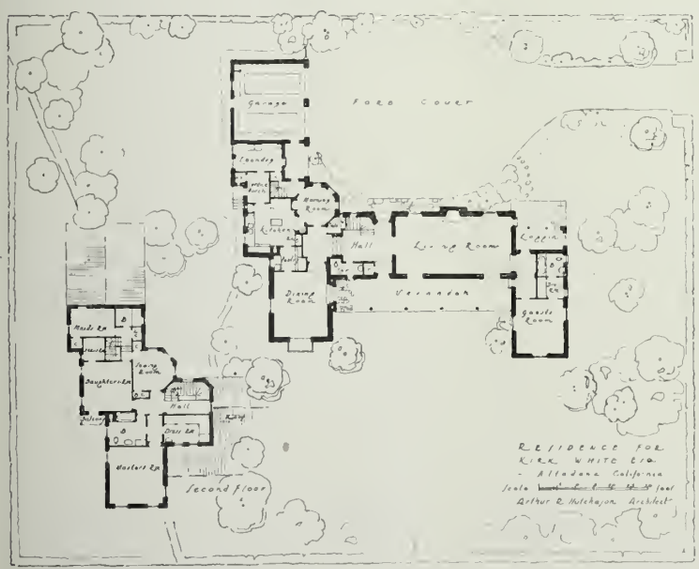
The needs of the individual, studied with respect to the opportunities or advantages of the site and the natural beauties of the site, will determine the plan of the building. In California most sites have natural beauties. Even the level lot, no matter how small, does not lack the possibility of a delightful garden—a garden accessible from the house and at least in part to be seen from the house—not open to the passer-by but enjoying that seclusion which permits of outdoor living and the element of surprise which never fails to charm. The hillside site always produces a problem more difficult to solve and yet gives opportunity for a solution of great individuality and unusual interest. While the command of sunshine may be easier on the level lot, the command of favorable breezes and the wealth of views are greater on the hillside site.

Certain features belong to the hillside site which are out of place on the level lot. Indeed, the hillside site demands the observance of its peculiar conditions and the acknowledgement of these in good planning, such as different levels of floor or different levels of garden, or both. The level lot, however, will receive most kindly a "U" shaped plan of one floor level which could never be made to belong to a site of determind slope.



That word "belong" expresses succinctly the satisfying relation of building to site. If the natural beauty has been conserved, the most made of the important view or views, and the possibilities peculiar to the lot taken advantage of, the building will belong.

It is an untenable thought that a house may belong or fit the site and still be crowded. Forcing too large a building on a lot is a common tendency in these days of city lots in the country. Yet a house stretching almost entirely across a lot may not be crowded if it is shallow, has been served with plenty of light, air, garden space, and commands the views.

Earlier I have mentioned that the plan is determined by the needs of the owner and the proper satisfaction of the site. In just such a manner the building design is determined by the plan and the site, plus the art of the architect, influenced for better or worse by the owner.

Walks and drives are governed by the building, the site and use of the site or disposition of grounds. Occasionally peculiar individual needs influence the walks and drives tremendously. Often, and desirably, the effect of distance and seclusion is obtained by curving lines. Generally walks and drives are most satisfying when of simple line and of reasonable directness. They are details in the Relation of Building to Site.

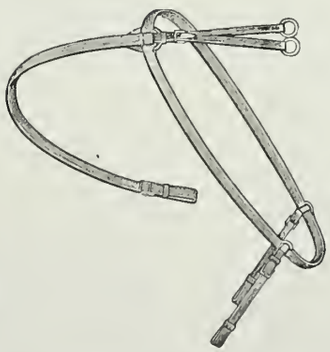
The fine relation of building to site denotes good architecture which connotes that the essential needs and the important desires of the owner have been met with a plan solution as simple, and a design expression as beautiful as possible on that site.

A DESIGN BY MR. HUTCHASON, ILLUSTRATING THE PLAN OF A HOUSE ON A LEVEL LOT

BETTER HOMES
ARE HEATED WITH
OHRMUND BROTHERS
Unit System of Heating
ELECTRICALLY CONTROLLED
Thousands in Use in Southern California. Let us show you why Ohrmund Brothers Units are superior.
HEATING AND SHEET METAL CONTRACTORS
PASADENA GAS APPLIANCE CO., INC.
901 E. Colorado Street
Pasadena Fair Oaks 9393

The Westlake
School for Girls
333 South Westmoreland Avenue
Residence and Day School
Lower School, College Preparatory, Junior College
Fully Accredited
Departments of Art, Music, Home Economics
JESSICA SMITH VANCE FREDERICA DE LAGUNA
Telephone DRexel 0052

Urban Military Academy
The Great Outdoor School for the Building of Body and Brain and Character Under Matchless Conditions
Open All Year. Address MISS SALEY, Registrar
637 Wilcox Ave., Los Angeles. HEmpstead 7602



NEW HOME
OF PACIFIC
MILITARY ACADEMY
Culver City, California

Boarding and Day School. Fireproof Buildings. Completely Equipped Laboratories. Grammar and High School. Enrollment limited.
For Catalogue Write Mrs. Loughan or telephone Culver City 3294

SECRETARIAL COACHING
For cultured people desiring personal attention. Refined, harmonious surroundings. All Secretarial subjects. Parliamentary Law. Bride's Budget.
Management, Mrs. Frank Rutherford. 711 South Vermont Ave. FItzroy 1763.

$22.00 Show Bridle $16.00

My own design Super Grade (none better) made with my own design sliding caveson nose band, four rows silk stitched. Caveson can be placed in any position and will not sag front or back. Complete with Round lip strap and set of KANGAROO NEVER RUST bits with curb, brandoon, chain and hooks.
Write for catalog.
Special discounts to Riding Academies and Saddlery Stores.
"little joe" Wiesenfeld Company
Baltimore, Md.

STATEMENT OF THE OWNERSHIP, MANAGEMENT, CIRCULATION, ETC., REQUIRED BY THE ACT OF CONGRESS OF AUGUST 24, 1912, OF CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND, PUBLISHED BY M. URMY SEARES, AT PASADENA, CALIFORNIA, FOR OCTOBER, 1925.

State of California, County of Los Angeles.

Before me, a Notary Public in and for the State and County aforesaid, personally appeared M. Urmy Seares, who, having been duly sworn according to law, deposes and says that she is the editor and manager of California Southland, and that the following is a true statement of the ownership, management, circulation, etc., of the aforesaid publication, for the date shown in the above caption; that the name and address of the publisher, editor and manager is M. Urmy Seares, Pasadena; that the owner of said publication is M. Urmy Seares; that there are no mortgages, bondholders, or other security holders, owning or holding one per cent of the bonds, mortgages or other securities of California Southland. Sworn to and Subscribed before me this first day of October, 1925.

JOHN R. BRAGDON, Notary Public.

My commission expires November 7, 1925.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA CHAPTER A. I. A. MONTHLY BULLETIN

H. O. Sexsmith, Editor

ADDRESS OF HON. JOHN H. FINLEY

to the Convention of the A.I.A. New York, 1925

THE story of Bertram Goodhue, as an artist (and I use that generic word deliberately), is the story that has been told in allegory of the hunter who set out in the face of the high mountains of Dry Facts and Actualities to snare the white bird of truth beyond, having seen its reflection one day in a lake by which he stood in his own valley, and who, after years of climbing, at times digging out the stones with the bare shuttle of his imagination, mounting one cliff after another, at last lay down in death at a great, bare height—the eternal mountains still rising with walls to the white clouds—but holding in his dying hands a silver feather that had fluttered down from the pinions of that great white bird of truth, and knowing that when enough of these feathers had been gathered by the hands of men to make a cord and that cord woven into a net, in that net, Truth would be taken, since "nothing but the truth can hold truth."

Not that Bertram Goodhue was a lone hunter out in a mountain solitude. He was the most companionable and lovable of men. He did his struggling to reach the truth (which was to him the perfect expression of the beautiful) in the midst of the city and its borders, and wished to share with them his vision. The stones which he digged with his daring imagination for his own feet were built into substantial structures by which the imagination of others could also mount.

I do not suppose that he consciously said, as did the hunter of the allegory, "By the steps I have cut (that is, the buildings I have dreamed, the fonts of type I have designed, the figures I have moulded) they will climb; by the stairs I have built they will mount." He was so attent upon his own purpose that he thought only of the going on. His feet were still "on the quest" as they used to say of those in the Middle Ages who went to the Holy City and never came back. He was as truly "on the quest" in making every city he entered a holy city by the redeeming beauty of his art, as ever the crusader was, who sought to redeem Jerusalem from the infidel by scaling or razing its walls.

A bookplate of his own design, bearing no "ex libris," but evidently intended for his own use, shows a mediaeval architect at his drafting board, an hour glass near at hand, the hand of death upon his arm, as in Holbein's "Dance of Death," while in the distance, through the window, a cathedral is seen against a radiant sky. Beneath is the omnious legend: "Ecce appropinquat hora."

It was as one, out of the Middle Ages, that he came forth into the heart of this most modern of cities to design churches and cathedrals "throughly of our own day," as an authority has said, but truly Gothic in inspiration and spirit. It is not, Mr. President, for me, a layman, to make any appraisement of his architectural work, ranging from St. Thomas' in Fifth Avenue, close to the mediaeval type, to the little Spanish Church in Guantanamo, Cuba, and from the village hall in a suburban town to the startling architectural creation, the prairie sky-scraper, designed for the Lincoln (Nebraska) Capitol. He has been judged by his peers and awarded the palm. Palmam, qui meruit, ferat.

But his Croix de Guerre should bear another palm, because of what he has contributed as a Master Craftsman to another art, the one in which I am, myself, directly and actively interested, and so I venture to speak of it—the art of printing, "the conserver of all arts." The "divine art," as a French poet has named it and the one most needed in a democracy. It is allied to the art of architecture which has just been called "the printing press of the ages." Bertram Gooodhue has won distinction in this other field of art, and eyes that find more of truth in the printed word will be in debt to him through generations because of the types he has designed for them, as Garamond did for his sovereign, King Francis the First.

The custom was in Latin times to say of one who had died after a life of special achievement, not "he has died," but "he has lived"—

ARCADE OF A NEW BUSINESS BLOCK IN PALOS VERDES. WEBBER, STAUNTON AND SPAULDING, ARCHITECTS, LOS ANGELES

"Vixit." Bertram Grosvenor Goodhue has both lived and conquered, he will live on for he has not lived to himself. He has given his life to art and art is longer than any mortal life. Noble "cairns of remembrance" which he has built for others will stand for generations in his memory.

Tonight we lay a Medal of precious metal at the side of the silver feather of the bird of truth that has fluttered down from the skies upon the breast of this Master of two great arts, a man beloved of the city and of the country which he has made the more beautiful, from his New England birthplace to San Diego, by his passing through it. (Prolonged applause)

OCTOBER CHAPTER MEETING

THE meeting held on October thirteen was devoted largely to a discussion of the activities of the Better Building Business Relations Committee of the Los Angeles building industry. The long name given to the committee might be sufficient to scare some of us off with the fear of being bored by a dry discussion of what ought to be done to make the industry pure and spotless—but not so. The evening was full of interest and many enlightening bits of information were presented during the discussion upon which we will attempt herewith some elaboration.

The work of the Committee, which has been carried on by weekly meetings, for almost a year, a labor of love and the results already attained are of vital interest especially to the public at large, for those who pay the construction bill eventually are the ones who will most certainly benefit by any raise in standards of practice in the building industry.

The great building activity in the Los Angeles area during the past three or four years has brought to this section vast numbers of irresponsible and dishonest building tradesmen. The unethical practices of this group and the attempts on the part of honest craftsmen to meet their unfair competition have brought about almost unbelievable conditions which must be changed. Close bidding with the hope of short cutting on the job to make a profit has been common throughout the trades. Poor workmanship and poorer materials have found their way into jobs where the owner thought he was getting only the best. (At least he was paying for the best). Contractors have in countless instances attempted to run on such close margins that in Los Angeles last year $9,000,000 in building liens were filed. One firm alone filed almost one third of these liens. In other words the system had degenerated to the point where it was possible for unscrupulous, fly-by-night builders to buy on credit, building material to the amount of $3,000,000, the majority of which they never intended to pay for. The cost of the law suits and the mountain of trouble and grief to small home owners behind this unbelievable figure, is appalling to think upon. The situation had come to the point where it was almost impossible for the honest and reliable contractor to compete on a fair basis. One plastering contractor of the highest reputation for excellent workmanship has not been able to obtain a contract for eight or nine months. His high ideals would not allow him to lower his standards even at this great loss.

The bankers discovered that it was possible for a dishonest contractor to go to several banks and borrow an amount from each which in the aggregate would be far in excess of what his credit should stand. The Credit Mens' Association has cured this evil and their participation in the Better Business Relations Committee meetings has taught them that they have a responsibility to the home builder in the elimination of the incompetent or dishonest contractor. The refusal of credit soon puts a stop to his operations.

There was a time not so long ago when the surety bond corporation felt that its only obligation was to its stock holders: that if one of its bonded contractors had finished his work properly and had paid his bills, they were the winners in a fifty-fifty gamble. The question of a contractor's integrity was not too carefully investigated, except in-so-far as his operations might cause a loss to their stock holders. The home builder who was paying the bond fee, was given little consideration. The thought that there was an obligation on the part of the bond corporation to protect him, was not too popular.

The frank, open discussions in the Committee have shown all these interests that they do have an obligation to the other fellow and that not the least is the protection of the home builder against dishonesty within the ranks of their own industry. The dependable contractors have learned that they too have this cleaning house duty to perform and that their very existence depends upon the elimination of the dishonest men in their ranks.

To the outsider the work of this group, whose sympathies were at first so divergent, is a fascinating study in social psychology. At first they all felt that the other fellow was to blame for the troubles they were all experiencing. All parties to the discussion were induced to "lay all their cards on the table" as one of them expressed it. When frankness and honesty came in, along with a willingness to co-operate and compromise, the troubles went out. An understanding of the other fellow's point of view and of his problems has turned misgiving and enmity into sympathy and friendship. The desire to "get" the other fellow has evolved into a wish to help him.

The origin of the Committee was a spontaneous and natural outgrowth of a situation which needed a sloution. In the summary of the Committee report on its purposes, it is stated that their mutual desire is, (a) To clear the industry of unethical practices from within, through joint action of the members themselves, by means of open and frank discussion of the problem. (b) To set forth in written form desirable codes of procedure for the guidance of the various elements of the industry. (c) To make available to the public the principles of good practice for their guidance in their contact with the various elements of the building industry. (d) To create an organization representing all factors of the industry, by means of which desirable practices could be encouraged and undesirable one discouraged or perhaps prohibited.

To C. E. Noerenberg must go much of the credit, so far as the architects are concerned, for the splendid progress this group has made to date. The architect is in a strategic position in his relation to the building trades and can do more than any other, if he will, to untangle the knot of industrial discord which hinders him on every side. We are not so blind but that we can see that it was economic necessity which has driven these men to help each other. But having joined hands in open forum they have found something beyond the solution of the immediate problem. They have found new friendships and have discovered sympathy and forbearance. H. O. S.

THE ARCHITECTURAL CLUB OF LOS ANGELES

OFFICERS

J. E. Garnsey, President
Roy H. Kelley, Vice-President
H. O. Sexsmith, Secretary
Paul W. Penland, Treasurer

DIRECTORS

Walter S. Davis, Director
J. E. Stanton, Director
H. C. Chambers, Director

NEWS FROM THE TRAVELERS

THERE still seem to be a few who have the time and money to gad around this old globe having all the fun while the rest of us are pushing the old HB to keep the wolf from the door. Here is a postal from one of our members: "Dear Mr. President—Just a postal to inform the club of my European trip through the following countries, England, France, Belgium, Holland, Germany, Switzerland, Italy, and Spain. It will take approximately one year. Been at it five months to date. With regards to my fellow members.—Chas. F. Brunkhorst."

News has also been received from our former president, Clifford Truesdell, that he will be back in Los Angeles about the twentieth of October. Cliff has been away on an around-the-world jaunt, too. We understand that he has been peppering the club membership with post cards pretty freely, so perhaps this little item will be no news.

HAS A CALLER

The following is an extract from a letter to the secretary of the club sent by Mr. Koetzli, director of the plan service: "No one is making a good thing out of the plan service except the builders and the community. We hear on all sides that our designs are being copied very freely. One little woman came in and spent quite a time in working out her problem and finally left with a free sample copy of The Small House (the Minneapolis Bureau Magazine). She kindly came in the other day to tell us frankly that she had found in it just the design she wanted; that her husband had made up the "working drawings" for it in one evening and "so saved $25.00," and that they built the house! But unfortunately her little boy had included the magazine in some waste paper he had sold, so would we kindly give her another booklet (also free, we suppose although Mr. Koetzli didn't say so) showing the picture of her house. "How do they do it?" We are reminded of the old chestnut about the man who was so penurious that he made his wife pare the potatoes with a safety razor.

AT PALOS VERDES, OFFICE OF THE PALOS VERDES PROJECT AND SHOPPING CENTER. WEBBER, STAUNTON AND SPAULDING, ARCHITECTS.

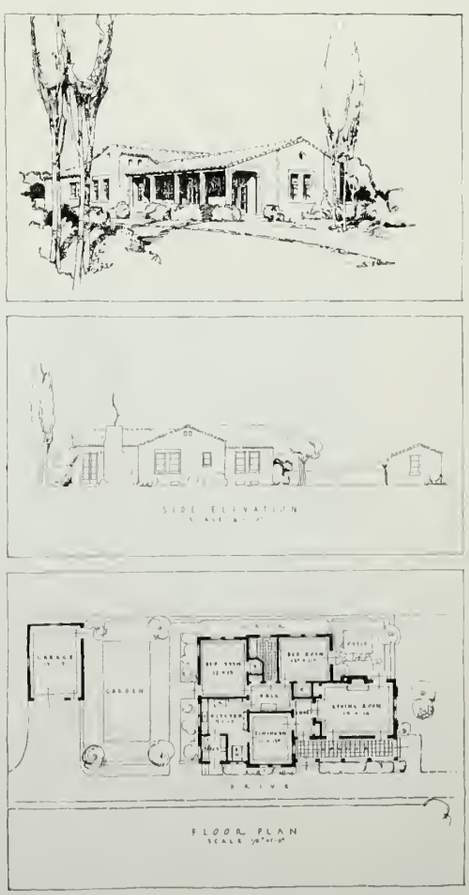
"CURRENT ARCHITECTURE"

It was Saturday afternoon. We were digging in the garden. A car stopped at the curb and out stepped a prosperous looking bloke with a red face, an elks tooth dangling from a heavy gold chain on his expansive vest. He said he was a contractor and was sent up from the hardware store at the corner where we buy our fertilizer and our porch paint each year. He wanted a set of plans drawn and would we be interested? Well, we might—at least we don't believe in turning people down until we hear what they have to offer. He pulled out a bunch of kodak pictures of a perfectly outlandish house in the early General Grant or Late Confectionery style and said he wanted to copy it. We wanted to ask him if he thought it good policy to make the same mistake twice but we restrained ourselves as above noted. He was taking measurements of the floor plan in the greatest detail. This took a long time, for the measurements must of course, be made when the contractor who was building the house was not on the job. We decided just for fun to see it through like Mr. Britling; so we quoted him a rate per hour payable at delivery of the plans. We threw in a little patter about how good we were at this particular style of "archie techer." He promised to come back early in the week as soon as the measurements were finished and we parted most affably. That was two weeks ago and although we have scanned the papers for any report of what has become of him we haven't heard from him since. Perhaps he went to one of the "two dollar per room" gentlemen whose advertisements we see in the papers so often. What an ignominious ending for a promising "commission." We feel almost as ashamed as if we had been run over by a Ford truck.



Thomas E. Talmadge, A. I. A. of Chicago, has writen an excellent article in the August number of the Atlantic Monthly on The Advance of Architecture. Mr. Talmadge is a lecturer on the history of architecture and writes in a pleasing and entertaining style.

Design by Paul McAlister.

Design by Floyd Ray.

Design by Floyd Ray.

THESE THREE PLANS FOR SMALL HOUSES ARE SUBMITTED AT THE REQUEST OF THE SANTA BARBARA RELIEF COMMITTEE

NOTES FOR CONNOISSEURS

While in Spain, Mr. Bradford Perin of The Serendipity Antique Shop found a beautiful collection of Cuenca tile of the late sixteenth or early seventeenth century, and resolved to try it out as a ceiling decoration. He had these tile set into the ceiling of a room in which the Spanish influence predominates, and achieved a wonderfully attractive effect. The patterns and the colors of the tile enhance the beauty of an already beautiful room a hundred fold. If you would appreciate a clever and delightful divergence in the treatment of ceilings, ask Mr. Perin to show you his Cuenca tile.

A lovely old Venetian refectory table of the sixteenth or seventeenth century is to be admired at the studio of O'Hara, Livermore, and Arthur Baken. It is in wonderfully fine condition, and shows a beauty of construction which perhaps partially accounts for its having stood the tests of years so well. The wood has a beautiful depth of tone and color, and the detail of the carving is particularly fine.

A new word with a strange Eastern tang to it has come into our vocabulary. It is the word "souk," meaning in Arabic, "market" or "street of bazaars." The "Souks of Tunis" is a new shop in the patio of the Pasadena Community Playhouse. They have imported a variety of hand-woven rugs and blankets from Tunisia—Djerbas, Gafsas, Tuaregs, O'Saadas, and the famous Kairouans. Although their Moorish flavor makes them particularly suitable for use in our neo-Spanish houses, they are comparatively unknown in California. The sight of things strikingly novel as well as beautiful will reward you for a visit to this unique and picturesque shop.

In the Cheesewright Studios there is one of the finest cabinets which discerning people will ever see. In truth, a genuine museum piece. It is seventeenth century Spanish and is made of beautifully matched ebony inlaid with tortoise shell and ivory. Mounted on a Spanish stand, also of ebony, it makes a wall piece unexcelled in workmanship, refinement and artistic appeal.

Mr. Ernest Batchelder, of Batchelder Tiles, has established a branch office in New York, in order to handle the Eastern orders which have been flooding in since the 1925 Exhibition of the American Institute of Architects. Eastern architects were very much taken with the charm and exquisite design of Mr. Batchelder's tiles and are demanding that they be allowed to share, with California, in the results of Mr. Batchelder's art.

Mr. Norman Kennedy, mural painter, has recently painted some charming murals for the dining room of Mr. and Mrs. Isaac Hampshur Jones of Los Angeles. Suggested by Mrs. Jones, these murals are representative of the four seasons and are placed one on each of the four walls. In soft tones which lend themselves to the subject they virtually bring out-of-doors into the room. Fitting into the architectural features of the room in a unique way, the design is subtly adapted to its purpose. In the house Mr. Kennedy worked sympathetically with the architect, Mr. Kaufmann.

Mrs. George M. Millard has just returned from Venice bringing with her many fine and unusual pieces of Venetian furniture. There is one set of six sixteenth century Venetian chairs with the original velvet upholstery still in splendid condition. Oval tables, refectory tables, wall pieces, chairs, and beds, to say nothing of beautiful old embroideries, are among the treasures that Mrs. Millard has gathered.

The Cheesewright Studios, Inc.

Decorators and Furnishers

322 EAST COLORADO STREET
TELEPHONE FAIR OAKS 8820

PASADENA CALIFORNIA

Arts and Crafts

THE Council of the Arts and Crafts Society of Southern California calls attention to the beautiful hand-hammered silverware on display at the Shop of The Craftsmen, 2871 West Seventh Street, Los Angeles; and asks that we use it for wedding presents:

"The bride will bless you, for it is beautiful, enduring, exclusive, and costs no more than the machine made article."

THE ARTS AND CRAFTS SOCIETY announce a competition in designs for a stamp or seal to be used on all announcements, and on stationery or cards used by the Society. The competition is open to all artists.

AN EXHIBIT of Miss Emma Waldvogel's embroideries was held in the rooms of the Arts and Crafts Society of Southern California, 2871 West Seventh Street, Los Angeles, the last week in October. Another exhibit in beautiful weaving done by Miss Natalie White will take place before Christmas.
members of the Portland Arts and Crafts society.

MR. DOUGLAS DONALDSON is giving a course in design and color to bers of the Portland Arts and Crafts Society.

Choose your own architect from the representative styles shown in "California Homes" by California Architects. Price $1.00.
Address: ELLEN LEECH,
544 So. El Molino Avenue Pasadena, Calif.

The Souks of Tunis
in the patio of the Community Playhouse, Pasadena
Tunisian Rugs, Blankets, Bags, Slippers, Embroidery, and Candles

THE BATCHELDER TILES
BATCHELDER-WILSON COMPANY

We produce Tile for Fireplaces, Fountains, Pavements, Garden Pots---anything that is appropriately made from clay. :: :: :: :: ::

2633 Artesian Street

LOS ANGELES, CALIFORNIA

Decorating and Finishing Exclusive Furniture

W. G. Pesenecker

Interior and Exterior Painting
34 North Broadway
Phone Col. 5656 Pasadena, Calif.

Beautiful Garden Pieces
in
Sculptured Terra Cotta

Italian Terra Cotta Co.
W. H. Robison
1149 MISSION ROAD
Opposite County Hospital
Phone Lincoln 1057 Los Angeles

NO. 121 TALMAGE VASE

PASADENA

--a city of homes and flowers

Detailed information may be had at the

Pasadena Chamber of Commerce and Civic Association

The Argonauts WILLIAM KEITH

¶ Our galleries hold continuous exhibitions of paintings by California, Eastern and European artists, including such as Keith and McComas, Wyant, Diaz and Cachoud.

No Catalog. Correspondence invited

Gump's

S. & G. Gump Co. 246-268 Post St. | San Francisco California

Large Pottery Vase with Relief Decoration

Persia, 13th to 14th Century

Of surpassing beauty is this vase, burned in translucent cobalt blue, with gold, deep-sea green, and orange. The height, 39 inches. Only fifty exemplars were made.

PRICE UPON REQUEST

Gladding, McBean & Co.

Los Angeles Office: Los Feliz Blvd. and S. P. Tracks

Tropico Plant: Glendale, Los Angeles County, California

"La Venta"—Spanish roadside inn at Palos Verdes, overlooking the Pacific.

Night scene from "La Venta"—the twinkling lights of the valley cities below.

Rising like a monument from Pacific's opal shore
In Palisades and terraces, the ocean looking o'er,
The work of the Creator, who with deft and mighty hand
Each lovely hillslope modeled for the home of man to stand . . . . . .
He, the Master Craftsman of sky and land and sea,
His work, an Inspiration, through all Eternity.
. . . . . Palos Verdes!

FOR the safeguarding of your own and your family's health, as well as for the safety of your money, buy a Homesite in Palos Verdes and enjoy a year-round vacation for the rest of your life.

This doesn't mean that Palos Verdes is only for people of means—people who have no business occupation. It means rather that your every-day life in this lovely seaside city will have the proper share of outdoor sport and recreation. At the doorway of every Palos Verdes home there lies everything which is desirable to "outdoor people" of all ages.

> Here you can golf every day, swim every day, ride, fish, hike, motor—or just laze away the golden hours on your own veranda. Every modern city convenience will be yours, and you will be living in a community of rising values, where healthy environment lends added attraction to an already proven sound investment.

Buy in Palos Verdes. Your happiness is guaranteed. Your health is assured. Your investment is one of the soundest in all California. Wealth always flows toward the Ocean. Palos Verdes is in the direct pathway of progress.

PALOS VERDES

GENERAL SALES OFFICE, LANE MORTGAGE BUILDING, 8TH AND SPRING STREETS, LOS ANGELES

JAY LAWYER, Gen. Mgr. BANK OF AMERICA, Trustee

C.S. 11-25

CALIFORNIA STATE

CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND

THE LAND WE LIVE IN

HOME-MAKING AND CIVIC PLANNING

THE HOLLYWOOD BOWL

PRECEDENT AND THE ARCHITECT

COLOR PLATES AN INTERIOR OF THE WOMEN'S ATHLETIC CLUB

BY TIERNEY AND LAWFORD

DECORATORS AND FURNISHERS

No. 72 DECEMBER, 1925 25 Cents

CALIFORNIA'S HOME AND GARDEN MAGAZINE

The Perfect Christmas Gift

There is one gift which can be made at Christmas time which the recipient, whoever he may be, will thoroughly enjoy.

Down the trail of years, and four times each year, he will think of you and your gift with pleasure and gratitude.

EDISON 6% CUMULATIVE PREFERRED STOCK

Price: $ 99.00 per share, cash
$100.00 at $5 per share per month

Over 80,000 Stockholders

Southern California Edison Company

Just Arrived

Our Recent Purchases from Spain, Italy, France, England

Antique and Modern Furniture
Iron Gates and Grills
Old Pewter—Silver Lustre
Fabrics—Garden Figures
Fountains, Mantels, etc.
Venetian, Lalique and Belgian Glass
French and Italian Porcelains
Italian Terracottas

Also Paintings and Etchings by best American and Foreign Masters

Exclusive Articles for Holiday Gifts

CANNELL AND CHAFFIN, INC.

397 East Colorado St.
Hotel Maryland, Pasadena

720 W. Seventh St.
Los Angeles, Calif.

Scott Auto Rental Company

Successor to

Meagers Auto Rental Service

Buick, Chrysler, Dodge and Ford Open and Closed Cars

For Hire Without Drivers

In out-of-doors California an automobile is essential. We are here to furnish the car and serve you in every possible way. You will find our rates are very reasonable, and the equipment the best.

161 W. Colorado St., Pasadena. Wakefield 8181

Christmas Cravings

is a special booklet of gifts for horsemen and horsewomen. Write for it, it's full of interesting items interestingly priced.

One of the interesting items. English hunting crop. Large horn handle plaited thred, steel lined silver plated ferrule for engraving, beaufort thong and silk lash. Complete $6.75.

"little joe" Wiesenfeld Co.
Baltimore, Maryland

Riding Boots---Custom Made

We are glad to announce that a custom bootmaker has established himself in Los Angeles.

All his boots are made to measure, as only an expert can make them. Nothing but the finest grade of selected leather imported from England is used.

English Model Riding Boots

Leshin
CUSTOM
BOOT MAKER

Hunting Boots
Polo Boots

688 SOUTH VERMONT
LOS ANGELES

PHONE WASHINGTON 7171

Dance!

at the

Ambassador

Cocoanut Grove

to the Entrancing Music of

COCOANUT GROVE
ORCHESTRA

Under the Leadership of Ray West

SPECIAL NIGHTS Every Tuesday

COLLEGE NIGHTS

With Dancing Contest every Friday.

Tea Dances

every Saturday at 4:00 in the
Fiesta Room, Tea Service $1.00

SOUTHERN PACIFIC LINES

East-bound

the popular

GOLDEN STATE LIMITED

Enjoy travel luxury aboard this finest train to Chicago and the East, via El Paso and Kansas City.

For it's strictly first-class—Standard Pullmans, club car and observation car, Golden State dining car service. Many extra comforts, too—maid, barber, valet; shower baths, and a private lounge for women travelers.

Convenient leaving and arrival times. Connects at Chicago with fast trains to all eastern points. Through sleepers to St. Louis.

The quick, interesting route East, over the line of low altitude.

Buy Roundtrip Tickets
—and save money.

Ask any agent for complete information. Or write to

Southern Pacific Lines

C. L. McFAUL, A.P.T.M.,
Los Angeles, Calif.

So Goes Milady
With luxury attending

Golden State Limited East

Full half a train devoted to woman—greater recognition of her just dues in travel than ever before planned. Perfect in every appointment—of course.

All-Pullman—women's lounge, shower bath, maid, manicure, expert hair bobbing in the barber shop—comfort for the men, too—club car, bath, valet and barber.

Leave Los Angeles 12:01 p. m. [via Southern Pacific]; San Diego 10:45 a.m. [via S. D. & A.]; arrive Chicago 10:00 a. m. third day [via Rock Island].

Thru Pullman daily from Santa Barbara 8:00 a. m. [via Southern Pacific].

For tickets, reservations, personal service, call on

Southern Pacific City Ticket Office
937 State St., Santa Barbara, Calif.
Phone 243

or address B. F. Coons, General Agent
Rock Island Lines
809 Van Nuys Bldg., Los Angeles, Calif.

Rock Island

SOUTHERN PACIFIC LINES

Meals? "The best on wheels"

893

"UP THE VALLEY AND DOWN THE COAST"

The CALIFORNIAN HOTEL

MANAGEMENT H. WINGATE LAKE

FRESNO, CALIFORNIA

A modern, model Hotel devoted to sincere hospitality and dedicated to California's Guests.

THE LOGICAL STOPPING PLACE IN THE SAN JOAQUIN VALLEY FOR ALL POINTS, WHETHER YOU TRAVEL FOR BUSINESS OR PLEASURE.

EUROPEAN PLAN
258 ROOMS - 258 BATHS
$2.50 PER DAY AND UP
ALL OUTSIDE ROOMS

★ ★ ★

SOUTHLAND CALENDAR

Announcements of exhibitions, fetes, concerts, club entertainments, etc., for the calendar pages are free of charge and should be received in the office of CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND, Pasadena, at least two weeks previous to date of issue, the 10th. No correction can be guaranteed if they are received later than that date. California Southland is published monthly at Pasadena, California. One dollar and twenty-five cents for six issues, two fifty per year. Addresses will be changed as many times as desired if notice is given before the first of the month for which the change is made.

Entered as second class matter, July 28, 1919, at the Post office at Pasadena, California, under act of March 3, 1879.

Clubs

VALLEY HUNT CLUB, PASADENA:
The announcements for December include: One o'clock Bridge Luncheon, Monday, the 7th. Bridge and Mah Jong Tea, 14th, 21st, 28th, two-thirty. Sunday evening suppers served during the month.

ANNANDALE GOLF CLUB, PASADENA:
Dinner Dance on New Year's Eve.
The afternoon bridge, Mah Jongg and tea parties have been discontinued for the season, but tea will be served as requested and tables for cards are always available.
Every Friday is Ladies' Day.
The usual Wednesday and Saturday sweepstakes each month through the summer.

FLINTRIDGE COUNTRY CLUB:
Tuesday is Ladies' Day and a special luncheon is served. In the afternoons informal bridge parties may be arranged, followed by tea.
Table d'hote dinner served in dining room every Sunday from 12 to 3 p. m.
The December Bridge Day, with prizes and afternoon tea will be held on Friday, December 11. Hostess, Mrs. Carl F. Johnson.
Dinner Dance, New Year's Eve, favors and varied entertainment. Gay's orchestra.
A Christmas luncheon will be served in the dining room, 12 to 3 p. m.

LOS ANGELES COUNTRY CLUB:
Ladies' Days, second Monday of each month.
Music during dinner, followed by dancing, every Saturday evening during the month.
Luncheon served from 11:30 to 2 .p m. on Saturdays.
Sunday night concerts during month.
Tea served as requested and tables for cards always available.

WILSHIRE COUNTRY CLUB:
Ladies' Days, third Monday of each month.
Dancing every second and fourth Saturday during the month.
A musical is arranged for each Sunday night in the month.

MIDWICK COUNTRY CLUB:
Ladies' Days, fourth Monday in each month.
Tea and informal bridge every afternoon.
Polo, Wednesday and Saturday of each week.
Dancing every Saturday night.
Buffet luncheon served every Sunday.
Match polo games every Sunday, preceded by luncheon parties, followed by teas, during season.

LOS ANGELES ATHLETIC CLUB:
Dinner dances, Tuesday and Friday nights of every week, Tuesday night informal; Friday night semi-formal. Plunge open to the ladies Tuesday and Friday of every week.

SAN GABRIEL COUNTRY CLUB:
A dinner dance is arranged for the third Thursday of each month.
On Friday of each week a special luncheon is served, with bridge in the afternoons.
Ladies play every day starting after ten a. m., and not before two p. m.

MONTECITO COUNTRY CLUB:
Provides an 18 hole golf course, two concrete and two dirt courts for tennis, bowls and croquet.
Tea is served and informal bridge parties arranged as desired.
A buffet supper is served every Sunday night.

LA CUMBRE GOLF AND COUNTRY CLUB, SANTA BARBARA:
Offers a course of eighteen holes, rivaling any in hazard and beauty. A recent purchase of additional acreage will provide an extended and even more interesting course.
Luncheon is served every day, and tea may be arranged as desired.

Where the Treasures of a Collector May Be Purchased as Gifts

A. Schmidt & Son

For Fifty-six Years

IMPORTERS OF ANTIQUE AND MODERN SILVER AND Sheffield Plate, Fine China and Glass

2320 W. Seventh St., Los Angeles
391 E. Colorado St., Pasadena

Boston New York Washington

A Distinctive Collection of Smart Jewelry Particularly Timely for Gift Selection

Bullock's
Broadway—Hill and—Seventh
"One o'Clock Saturdays"

REDLANDS COUNTRY CLUB:
Golf tournament for men is held every Saturday. Monday the course is reserved for the women and a special luncheon served. Those who do not play golf or who have had a round in the morning, devote the afternoon to bridge or mah jongg. Every Saturday afternoon tea is served.

PALOS VERDES GOLF CLUB:
Offers an eighteen hole, all grass, seaside course, delightful for summer play.
Tea and informal bridge every afternoon.
Lunch and dinner served every day.

PASADENA GOLF CLUB:
Wednesday is Ladies' Day, with cards and mah jongg from two to four-thirty, when tea is served.
Dinner will be served on Sunday from five-thirty to seven-thirty. The usual luncheon and dinner service will prevail through the week.

NEWPORT HARBOR YACHT CLUB:
The annual club election will be held December 5. Joseph A. Beek, Balboa Island, at present vice-commodore has been nominatd for commodore. Other nominations are as follows: Vice-commodore, B. H. Cass of Los Angeles; rear-commodore, William C. Evans and George E. Vibert, one to be elected; secretary-treasurer, L. S. Heeman; directors, J. L. Bascomb, S. H. Burton, W. N. Cummings, E. H. Day, John E. Jardine, L. S. Jones, A. P. Pratt, Charles R. Ramsey, James M. Webster, four to be chosen. William Warmington is the present commodore.

Art

LOS ANGELES MUSEUM OF HISTORY, SCIENCE AND ART, Exposition Park: Pan-American Exhibition of Oil Paintings to January 1, includes the work of prominent artists of North, South and Central America, and marks the opening of the first of the new units to be added to the Museum. The exhibition is limited to oil paintings, is installed in the new unit and the main gallery of the first unit, and comprises about 500 canvases. Examples of the older school will be shown with studies of the younger artists and the modernists, affording the opportunity to trace the trend of art within the last half century. The exhibition is wholly contemporaneous.

SOUTHWEST MUSEUM, Marmion Way and Avenue 46, Los Angeles: Educational courses, including the usual lecture course, with the Sunday afternoon lecture at three, throughout the month. The Museum announces the acquisition of "Casa Adobe," located opposite the Museum on Pasadena Avenue, and which will be operated as a part of the Museum as a permanent home for early California relics and Spanish heirlooms, and for which it is peculiarly adapted, as the Casa Adobe was built several years ago by the Hispanic Society and is an identical replica of a Spanish gentleman's home during the period of 1795 to 1805.

THE BILTMORE SALON announces two exhibitions for the month: Victor Higgins, of the Taos Group, opening December 6, and running for three weeks; Arthur Hill Gilbert, who worked to such advantage in the Painted Desert last summer, will have an unusually interesting exhibition during the same period.

THE CANNELL AND CHAFFIN GALLERIES, 720 West Seventh street, Los Angeles, will show selected small and medium sized paintings from both Eastern and California artists during the month. In the print rooms a varied collection of etchings and wood block prints will be shown, including the exquisite designs of Bertha Lum.

THE WENZELL STUDIO at 3002 Wilshire Blvd. is open from three until six daily, and at other times by appointment, for the exhibition of the paintings and drawings by A. B. Wenzell.

GRACE NICHOLSON ART GALLERIES, Pasadena, in November held an exhibition of Tibetan Banner Paintings from Lama Temples and Monasteries. Also latest examples of hand wrought silver by George Jensen. The galleries are open week days from 10 a. m. to 5 p. m.

KIEVITS GALLERY, Hotel Vista del Arroyo, Pasadena, will show to December 3, flower paintings by Miss Edith White, and portraits by Alfred James Dewey, also a few of his cowboy subjects.

F. TOLLES CHAMBERLAIN, painter and sculptor, is now in charge of the color and life drawing classes of the school of architecture of the University of Southern California, and has sponsored the movement to group design, painting and modeling in the architectural department.

GUY ROSE, known to us and to the world as a painter, is dead. Mr. Rose was born in the San Gabriel Valley on the old Sunnyslope ranch and studied art first at the San Francisco Art School. In Paris later he studied at the Julien Academy, and received honorable mention at the Paris Salon of 1894. He won many honors in this country.

WEST COAST ARTS closed the successful fifth annual show at the Southwest Museum last month. Their December show will be held at Carmelita House, Pasadena.

BENJAMIN BROWN gave one of his beautiful landscapes to Pasadena Post No. 13 for their new American Legion War Memorial building, and the painting is to be hung in the new rooms in memory of James A. McBride.

STENDAHL ART GALLERIES, Ambassador Hotel, Los Angeles, opened an exhibition of recent paintings by Gordon Coutts on November 17th. These painting are the result of visits to Spain, Morocco, and Mexico, and will be shown to December 7th.

DANA BARTLETT is reprsented in the thirty-eighth annual exhibition of American artists at the Chicago Art Institute by his oil painting, "Capistrano Mission."

PASADENA ART INSTITUTE, Carmelita Gardens House, is open daily from 10 to 5 o'clock. One room is always given over to the work of local artists, and interesting displays arranged for the other galleries.

NELL BROOKER MAYHEW announces an exhibition of recent paintings and color etchings at the MacDowell Club of Allied Arts, 462 North Western Avenue, Los Angeles, to continue to January 1st.

THE MACDOWELL CLUB will be the setting for a series of Sunday afternoons throughout the winter devoted to painters, to include informal talks hy a group of artists.

THE STENDAHL GALLERIES, Ambassador Hotel, Los Angeles, announce the following exhibitions for the month: December 8 to 14, Lon Megarge of the Taos Group, who will show his recent Indian pictures. December 14 to 31, Dorothy Visju Anderson.

THE Painters of the West are all busy in their various studios, each with some especial picture in view for their coming exhibition at the Biltmore Salon in January.

J. BOND FRANCISCO, for the first time in several years, held an exhibition at the Biltmore Salon last month, continuing through December 5th.

POWER O'MALLEY, who held an exhibition of oils at the Biltmore Salon last month, also displayed a collection of techings during the last half of the month.

CLYDE FORSYTHE recently sold one of his pictures to a Pittsburgh resident to be presented to the Carnegie Institute.

KATHERINE LEIGHTON held a small exhibition at the Culver City Women's Club last month, addressing the club one afternoon.

HANSON PUTHUFF is building a new home and studio in La Crescenta.

AARON KILPATRICK has returned from his stay in and around Bishop, bringing back a collection of lovely pictures.

THE HATFIELD GALLERIES, 3142 Wilshire Blvd., Los Angeles, is showing a collection of Thumb Box sketches, and also a varied selection of the work of Eastern and Western men.

SOUTHBY'S ART SALON, 112 North Larchmont, Los Angeles, is showing the work of Franz Bischof, with a miscellaneous collection of paintings by well known artists.

ARTHUR HAZARD has taken a house with a studio in Los Angeles and is busy executing commissions.

THE CALIFORNIA ART CLUB gave a dinner and reception late last month at the Women's Athletic Club, Los Angeles, in honor of Mr. and Mrs. William Preston Harrison, Mr. and Mrs. William Alanson Bryan, and the guest-artists who are in Los Angeles for the Pan-American Exhibition.

EDGAR ALWYN PAYNE, with Mrs. Payne and their young daughter, after two years of foreign travel has returned and the family will now make their home in Los Angeles, 550 South New Hampshire street.

"AT MORRO BAY" by Jean Mannheim, was the beautiful gift presented by the Parent-Teacher's Association and Student Body to the John Marshall Junior High School, Pasadena, last month.

THE new Fine Arts Gallery, San Diego, will probably open early in January. This beautiful building has been presented to San Diego by Mr. and Mrs. Appleton S. Bridges at a cost of $400,000. It stands at the north end of Plaza de Panama in Balboa Park. The architect, William Templeton Johnson, has created a building of individual beauty, which conforms with the Spanish Colonial charm of the other park building bordering the Plaza. A Fine Arts Association of San Diego has been formed to operate the new gallery. This organization has for a nucleus the Friends of Art, which has arranged for a legal change of name and incorporation. The membership now includes over 600 names. The Fine Arts Gallery will open with a loan exhibition of works of art of all classifications belonging to San Diego people. The officers of the new organization are: Appleton S. Bridges, Hon. Pres.; Lyman J. Gage, Hon. Vice Pres.; Miss Ellen Scripps, Hon. Vice Pres.; Miss Dorland, President; G. Aubrey Davidson, First Vice Pres.; William Templeton Johnson, Second Vice Pres.; William R. Wheeler, Treasurer; William E. Harper, Secretary.

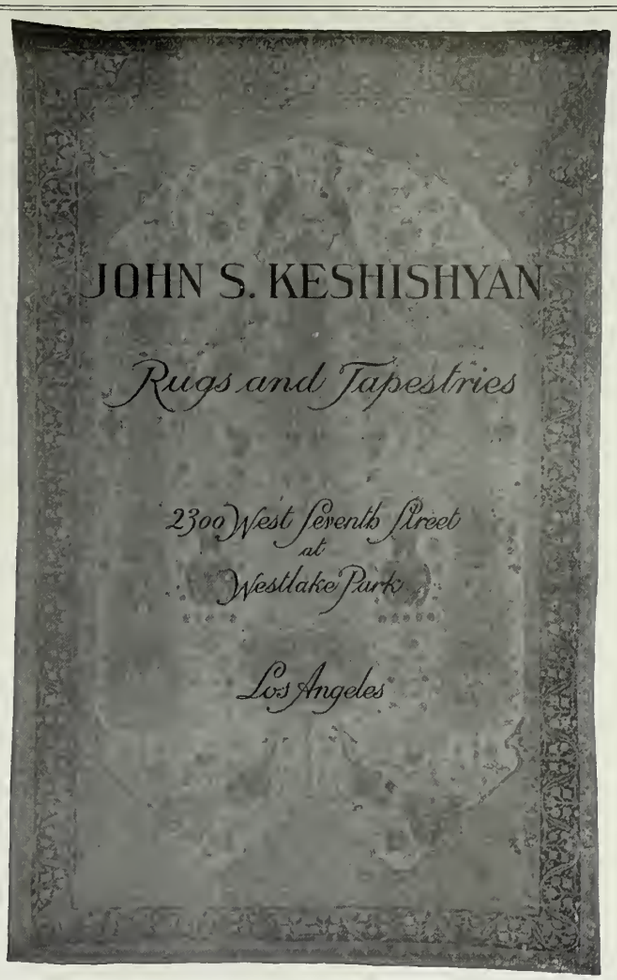

Table Service, Pieces and Sets, $1.00 to $20.00

MEXICAN Fabrile GLASS

May be purchased in the following California Studios:

Los Angeles—A. E. Little Co., 7th St. Store, Hewson Studios, Arts & Crafts Society, Ye Treasure Chest, Margaret Craig's Studio.
Pasadena—Cheesewright Studio, Inc., Sam Farrington.
Berkeley — Reginald Markham Jno. McKeown, Old World Shop.
Carmel—Tilly Polak.
Hollywood—Mary Helen Tea Room.
Monrovia—The Ivy Gift Shop.
Oakland—The Copper Shop.
Riverside—Mission Inn.
San Diego—Jack-O-Lantern.
Ventura—La Floreria.
San Francisco—Vickery, Atkins & Torrey, O'Hara, Livermore & Baken, Jones & George.
Alhambra—The Gift Shop.
Beverly Hills—The Fanfare.
Coronado—Harold A. Taylor.
La Jolla—The Jack-O-Lantern.
Monterey—Mission Art Store.
Palm Springs—Desert Inn Studios.
Santa Barbara—Robert L. Lewis.
Santa Monica—The Attic.

If your dealer cannot supply, write for illustrated catalogue.

Talavera Importing Company, Inc.
322 East Colorado St. Pasadena

Music

THE PHILHARMONIC ORCHESTRA OF LOS ANGELES, W. A. Clark, Jr., founder, Walter Henry Rothwell, conductor, announces for the symphony concerts of Dec. 4 and 5, John Powell, pianist-composer, as soloist, and Howard Hanson as guest conductor. The former will play his own "Negro Rhapsody" and Dr. Hanson will conduct his "Nordic Symphony." The dates for the Friday afternoon and Saturday evening symphony concerts for December are the 4-5 and 18-19. The afternoon concerts are held at 2:30, the evening concerts at 8:30. Sunday afternoon popular concerts are given in the Philharmonic Auditorium, Fifth and Olive streets.

PASADENA MUSIC AND ART ASSOCIATION in the 1925-26 Artists Series will present Toscha Seidel, violinist, Wednesday evening, December 16, at the Pasadena High School Auditorium.

BEHYMER PHILHARMONIC ARTIST COURSES include for December, Efrem Zimbalist, violinist, Tuesday evening, December 1, and Paul Althouse and Arthur Middleton, tenor and baritone in joint recital, Thursday evening, December 17. The concerts are given, as in the past, at the Philharmonic Auditorium, Los Angeles.

AUDITORIUM ARTISTS' SERIES in this the third season will present twelve events, under the management of George Leslie Smith, which will include the San Carlo Grand Opera Company, Jan. 18 to Feh. 6.

PASADENA'S concerts by the Los Angeles Philharmonic Orchestra will be given at the Raymond theatre, the December date being the 14th. The entire Philharmonic Orchestra will appear under the leadership of Walter Henry Rothwell.

LOS ANGELES ORATORIO SOCIETY, John A. Wilferth, president, John Smallman, director, will present Handel's "Messiah" Sunday afternoon, Dec. 20th. This choral organization ranks among the best in the country and is now in its thirteenth season. The Society has secured the Olympic Auditorium, Grand Avenue and 18th street, Los Angeles, for the concerts of this season.

SEVEN ARTS SOCIETY OF LONG BEACH, founded by Katheryn Coffield, will present Grace Wood-Jess, mezzo-soprano, December 1, in the first concert of the artists' series. The Society is also sponsoring six morning lectures by Aline Barrett Greenwood.

THE LOS ANGELES TRIO, May MacDonald Hope, pianist and founder, Sylvain Noack, violin, Ilya Bronson, 'cello, will give the third of the series of six evening concerts in the Music Room of the Biltmore, Los Angeles, December 3.

THE CAULDRON SINGERS, eighty male voices, Roy V. Rhodes, director, Eleanor Remick Warren, accompanist, Raymond McFeeters, accompanist, will give the first concert of this the fifteenth season, Tuesday, Dec. 15, at 8:20 p. m., Shakespeare Club Auditorium, Pasadena. The assisting artist is Mrs. Norman Hassler, soprano.

THE ZOELLNER QUARTET will give in the Music Room of the Biltmore Hotel, Los Angeles, the second concert of the annual series of chamber music concerts, December 14.

LYRIC CLUB CONCERT is scheduled for December 2.

THE LITTLE SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, Adolf Tandler, conductor, will present two concerts during the month at th Biltmore Hotel, Los Angeles, the dates are the 6th and the 20th.

THE ORPHEUS CLUB CONCERT will be given December 4.

WESLEY KUHNLE will give the first of a series of three piano recitals in the Ebell Club Auditorium, December 11.

HOLLYWOOD CHILDREN'S CHORUS, Hugo Kirchhofer, director, Mrs. Inez Jacobson, accompanist, resumed rehearsals early last month. The chorus will present a Christmas Cantata in Memorial Auditorium, Hollywood, during Christmas week in connection with the appearance there of the Woman's Club Chorus of Hollywood.

COMMUNITY MUSIC ASSOCIATION OF REDLANDS sponsors concerts without an admission charge, a collection heing taken to defray expenses. The concert series is given in the Contemporary Clubhouse. Hugo Kirchhofer leads the community singing.

LONG BEACH SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, Leonord J. Walker, director, a comparatively new organization, gave the first concert early last month. Dan Gridley was assisting soloist.

"SIEGFREID," the music photodrama with Wagner's immortal music interpreted by Adolph Tandler's Symphony Orchestra was given at the Philharmonic Auditorium, Los Angeles, last month.

ADOLF TANDLER'S Little Symphony Orchestra will give the first Sunday afternoon concert of the series at the Community Playhouse, Pasadena, December 6; and the second concert, Dec. 20, at 3 p. m. sharp. Ten concerts will make up the series, to be presented the first and third Sunday afternoons of December, January, February, March and April. There will be seven programs by an orchestra of at least sixteen pieces, two programs by a string orchestra, and one by a quartette.

Announcements

EXHIBITION and sale of hand painted textiles by Orro is announced at the Arts and Crafts Society shop, 2871 W. 7th St., to December 5. A professional model will display wraps, gowns, and shawls the evening of the second.

ANTOINETTE DE FOREST MERWIN, Armada Studio, offers as a holiday attraction, the display and sale of Pewter Ware, made in Connecticut, copying old Colonial designs.

HEWSON HANDCRAFT STUDIOS, 2508 West Seventh Street, Los Angeles, are showing examples of the artistry of those working in arts and crafts throughout southern California. Among the artists represented during the month are: Porter Blanchard, hand-wrought silver and pewter, Walter Winthrop Gores, sketches, drawings, embroidered panels; Miss A. Salathe, Victor Evans, and Milton Monro, batiks; Mrs. Reba Stetson Anderson, prints and batiks; Miss Lucia Cady, unusual lamp shades.

Antiques

JOHN W. CONDIT

Dealer in rare old pieces selected from private homes. Specialist in the proper restoration of heirlooms.

199 S. Fair Oaks Ave., Pasadena
Telephone Terrace 0315-W

PASADENA COMMUNITY PLAYHOUSE: Nov. 26-Dec. 5, "You and I" by Philip Barry. This play from the Harvard 47 Workshop was awarded the prize in the Belmont Theatre competition for being the finest American play of the season; Dec. 10-19, "Treasure Island" by Robert Louis Stevenson, dramatization by Jules Eckart Goodman; Dec. 24-Jan. 2, "Merry Wives of Windsor" by William Shakespeare. Each play will begin on a Thursday and end on the second Saturday, matinees on Saturday only.

HISTORY OF COSTUME is the subject of a series of lectures to be given by Mrs. Fairfax Proudfit Walkup, under the auspices of the Pasadena Center of the Drama League and Westridge School for Girls, at the Community Playhouse, Pasadena. The course consists of twelve lectures, to be given Monday afternoons at 2:30, Dec. 7-14-21-28, and will trace the development of every phase of apparel, illustrated by mannikins in color.

THE TOURNAMENT OF ROSES ASSOCIATION announces the list of entries on New Year's day will include floats from San Francisco and Santa Barbara in the north, as well as Los Angeles, San Diego, Long Beach, San Bernardino, Alhambra, Glendale, Ontario, Upland, Monrovia, Burbank, Sierra Madre and Azusa. The Tournament is under the direction of Malcolm Fraser, who held the same important position last year, and so successfully directed the Jubilee Year pageant in San Francisco. The Parade will follow the same route as that of past seasons, assembling on Orange Grove avenue.

ALINE BARRETT GREENWOOD Monthly Reviews are held in the Shakespeare Clubhouse, Pasadena, third Wednesday in the month, 11 a. m.; Ambassador Hotel, Los Angeles, the third Thursday in the month at 11 a. m.; and at the Biltmore Hotel, Los Angeles, the third Saturday of each month in the Music Room, at 11 a. m.

SOROPTIMIST CLUB weekly luncheon meetings at the Biltmore Hotel, Los Angeles, were of special interest during November: The first program of the month was given by the employees of the Southern California Telephone Company, consisting of piano, violin and vocal selections; Children's Book Week was celebrated on November 10th; and Agnes Woodward had charge of the program the 17th.

Important Louis XV Cabinet of inlaid Rosewood and Mahogany, mounted in Cuivre Doré, copied from the one designed by Schlodtz in 1739 and now in the Bibliothêque Nationale. Rococo at its height.

One of the recent importations of

The Meyer and di Segni Gallery

Antique Furniture, Paintings, Fabrics, Marbles, and Bronzes

640 South Figueroa Street Los Angeles
VAndike 2936

YOU WILL ENJOY A VISIT TO OUR GALLERY

Every Woman Wishes

A Haori Coat, Kimona, Pajama Suit, Pullman Robe, Embroidered Shawl, Scarf or enough of the Beautiful Chinese Brocaded Silk or Crepe for a Gown. Choice selection at

GRACE NICHOLSON'S
FAMOUS ORIENTAL SHOP
46 North Los Robles Avenue Pasadena

Eleanor and . . . . Hollingsworth Beach

French and Italian Arts

630 East Colorado Street

Pasadena, California

OPPORTUNITY CLUB, Pasadena, will hold the annual benefit bazaar December 12, at the Shakespeare Clubhouse, all day, and in the evening there will be a dinner and dance, also cards for those who wish to play.

THE PASADENA LECTURE COURSE on Current Topics, 1925-26, will be held, as in past seasons, at the California Institute of Technology in Culbertson Hall, Wilson Avenue and California street, on Tuesdays at 4:15 p. m. The December speakers and dates are: Dec. 1, Chester Rowell, Editor and Traveler, "The World Court"; Dec. 4, Friday evening at 8:15, Albert E. Wiggam, Author of "The New Decalogue of Science", "Heredity and Human Progress"; Dec. 8, Maurice G. Hindus, "Russia, America and the World".

Santa Barbara

DECEMBER PROGRAMS at the Lobero theater are as follows: Dec. 2 and 3, Ruth Helen Davis and all-star east in "Everyman"; Dec. 5, matinee and evening, Greenroom Frolic, play by William Felts, "A Bit of Old California"; Dec. 7, 8, "Little Nelly Kelly", George M. Cohan Musical Comedy, management Louis McCloon; Dec. 11 and 12, Community Arts Chorus in "The Messiah", directed by Harold Gregson; Dec. 17, 18, 19, Community Arts Play, "A Kiss for Cinderella", direction of Colin Campbell Clements. Coming during December, Robert Mantell in Shakespearean and Classic Plays, "Richelieu" and "Hamlet" in modern dress.

ETCHINGS of Edward Borein to be on view at Santa Barbara Art Cluh, last two weeks in December.

ARTHUR CAHILL, who, with Mrs. Cahill, has made his home in Santa Barbara since returning from abroad, has gone to Washington to paint the portrait of Secretary Hoover.

JAMES CINI & COMPANY
of Italy
Antique and Foreign Jewelry
Italian and French Novelties
390 E. Walnut St. Pasadena, Calif.
Fair Oaks 5583

THE DAVID GRAY loan exhibition at the Santa Barbara Art Cluh, Casa de la Guerra, proved unusually attractive and drew many visitors.

THE STROLLERS, the dramatic, musical and literary organization in Santa Barbara, are going to have a cluh house and theater. The Riviera school house on Loma Road will be remodeled for this purpose.

Pomona College, Claremont

ORGANIZATION of the Board of Fellows for the recently incorporated Claremont Colleges has been perfected. Colonel Seeley W. Mudd, nationally known mining engineer, has been chosen president of the Claremont Colleges corporation; Dr. James Arnold Blaisdell, president of Pomona College, was appointed academic head or Head Fellow; Dr. George Sumner of Claremont, comptroller; Ernest E. Jones of Claremont, treasurer; and Robert J. Bernard, executive secretary of Pomona College, secretary. By-laws for the Claremont Colleges have been adopted and consideration has been given to the incorporation of the Scripps College for Women, the first institution to be announced under the group-college plan.

ANNOUNCEMENT has been made on the Pomona College campus that the 1925 Metate, the college year book, has been awarded honorable mention hy the Arts Crafts Guild as one of the outstanding year hooks published in the United States.

CALIFORNIA EISTODDFOD ASSOCIATION will hold its January 23rd meeting on the Pomona College campus. Important plans for California community contests will be made at that time.

THE THREE NEW MEMORIALS under construction consist of a wall fountain, decorative gate and an iron grill and bench all to be located adjoining the Marston quadrangle forming a new patio between Sumner and Bridges halls. The iron grill and bench is erected in memory of Jessie Hays Williams hy Dr. R. D. Williams. The wall fount is the gift of Dean Edwin C. Norton as a memorial to his son, Theodore Edwin Norton, while the new wall and gate is the graduating gift of the class of 1920. Sumner Maurice Spaulding, Los Angeles architect, drew the plans for the memorials, co-operating with the firm of Cook and Hall and Ralph Cornell, '14, landscape gardener.

El Paseo Patio

Lunch Out of Doors or Dine

at

"EL PASEO"

23 E. de la Guerra St.

Santa Barbara

THE GUILD

Inc.

Book Publishers

Studio 28 de la Guerra Studios

PORTRAITS BY PHOTOGRAPHY

Charles S. Seabolt

26 No. Los Robles Avenue, Pasadena, California

Opposite Maryland Hotel Terrace 6712

The Mansfield Studios

Interiors designed and executed—Embroideries—Textiles

Pasadena WAshington 3473

Altadena Office Under Direction of Mrs. Samuel Lee Bierbauer Colo. 2015

Community Arts Association

SANTA BARBARA SCHOOL OF THE ARTS

FRANK MORLEY FLETCHER, DIRECTOR

GRAPHIC, DECORATIVE AND PLASTIC ARTS — DRAMA. MUSIC. DANCING

Semester October-May. Summer School six weeks July-August

Address 916 Santa Barbara Street, Santa Barbara, Calif.

O'HARA, LIVERMORE AND ARTHUR BAKEN

ANTIQUE AND MODERN FURNITURE AND TEXTILES—

Christmas Gifts

522 Sutter St. San Francisco, Calif.

644 East Colorado St. Pasadena, Calif.

Interior Decoration

fabriano shop

"By the Tall Sycamore"

Sixty South Catalina, at Green, Pasadena

Fine Imported Hand Loom Papers

For correspondence, etching, engraving, printing, poster work and fancy wrapping.

Designing, Printing, Engraving

Imported and Domestic Handmade Gifts

Open Evenings Wakefield 4082

THE SOUKS OF TUNIS

bring to you Writing Cases of soft leather dyed and worked in the Old Town of Tunis.

(In the Patio of the Pasadena Community Playhouse)

"Visitors Are Welcome"

A delightful shop in an old Spanish mansion; specializing in

Indian and Mexican Handicrafts

Also

Hand Loomed Wool Druggets (Rugs) from India

ROBERT L. LEWIS

No. 5 de la Guerra Studios

SANTA BARBARA, CALIF.

H. G. CHASE

(Established 1903)

Real Estate and Rentals

1012 State St. Phone 125

Margaret Craig

PICTORIAL PHOTOGRAPHER

Portraits

Architecture

Gardens

Studio 3223 W. 6th St.

Telephone WAshington 1653

Los Angeles

La Solana

A quiet, well-appointed small hotel on the West Side near Orange Grove Avenue.

Each menu is carefully planned and prepared every day.

Grand Ave. and Lockhaven St. Pasadena

Mt. LOWE

"Earth has no finer view to show."

Mt. LOWE TAVERN and Cottages
Enlarged and Improved

at the terminus of this World-Famous Trip afford a most delightful retreat for a long or short sojourn at reasonable rates

5 Trains Daily at convenient hours - from Main St. Station Los Angeles

$2.50 Round Trip Rate

For information and Reservations apply

Pacific Electric Ry.

Information Bureau Phone MEtropolitan 1100-TRinity 3661

HOTEL GREEN

A well ordered Residential and Tourist Hotel of peculiar excellence. Open all year. Moderate rates. Apartments by the month.

The Green Tea Pot
Opened October 15

CHARLES B. HERVEY, Proprietor

Phone TERrace 0127

Lunch, Tea or Dine at

El Patio Tea Room

COMMUNITY PLAYHOUSE BUILDING

37 SOUTH EL MOLINO

PASADENA, CALIF.

KIEVITS GALLERIES

Vista del Arroyo Hotel, Pasadena
European and American Paintings

California Southland

M. URMY SEARES - - - - - Editor and Publisher
ELLEN LEECH - - - - - - - Associate Editor

NO. 72, VOL. VII. DECEMBER, 1925

CONTENTS

		PAGE
THE WOMAN'S ATHLETIC CLUB (Tierney and Lawford, Decorators)	Cover Design
SOUTHLAND CALENDAR	Ellen Leech	4, 5, 6, 7
THE LAND WE LIVE IN	Felix Woodland	9
MENTONE AND THE RIVIERA	Eleanor Hoffmann	10
HOPE RANCH PARK	M. Urmy Sears	11
THE SCHOOLS OF ARTS	Jeanne Auge	12
COMMUNITY DRAMA	Christine Curtis	13
SOUTHLAND HOMES	By Cheesewright Studios	14
RECENT BOOKS—REVIEWS	Louise Morgrage	15
SOUTHLAND OPINION		16-17
THE PAGEANT OF SHAWLS—GLENDALE		18
THE ART OF FREDERICK GRAY	E. TAYLOR HOUGHTON	18
DANCING AS AN ART		19
ASSISTANCE LEAGUE BULLETIN		20
THE ENGLISH SPEAKING UNION		21
TWO ENGLISH BOOKS	Mary Nordhoff	22
A BANK BY BENNETT AND HASKELL		23
THE CENTER OF PASADENA		24
A COURSE IN ARCHITECTURE		25
RESIDENCE ARCHITECTURE	Maurice Spaulding	27
BULLETIN OF THE CHAPTER A. I. A.	H. D. Sexsmith	28
ARCHITECTURAL CLUB NOTES		29
NOTES FOR CONNOISSEURS		30

CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND is published monthly at Pasadena, Cal.

Copyrighted, 1925, by M. Urmy Seares

Subscription price $2.50 per year, $1.25 one half year

RALPH B. URMY, JR., ADVERTISING MANAGER

CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND, PASADENA, CALIFORNIA

Mrs. D. B. Sebastian, 2410 W. 7th St., L. A., National Representative

Advertisers unaccustomed to furnishing national advertising copy to quality magazines may call Fair Oaks 7034 for assistance During Press Week, 24th to 30th, call TRinity 1501

J. W. Robinson Co.

The Robinson Collection of Rare Books

COLLECTED personally by the Robinson Book Buyer from obscure old Book Shops of England hundreds of veritable treasures of literature were brought to London where they were bound, in leather, by hand, each according to its character and traditions.

Many of the bindings are richly inlaid; some have miniature paintings for medallions: a few have original old foredge paintings.

The result is a collection of beautiful bindings, truly works of art in many cases; admirable pieces of craftsmanship in every case.

FIRST FLOOR

Fred Harvey—Grand Canyon National Park

—Santa Fe's super-service and scenic features

Santa Fe Ticket Offices and Travel Bureaux

SANTA FE STATION
Telephone WAkefield 5678
PASADENA

915 State Street
Telephone 1066
SANTA BARBARA

221 South Broadway
Telephone BRoadway 8500
LOS ANGELES

A Charming Home on The Upper East Side

Beautiful living room artistically finished into the roof. Three nice bedrooms with sun room or sleeping porch. Two baths. Unit gas furnace and fireplace. Enticing vistas from large picture windows. Large lot with flowering shrubs and blossoming flowers. Might trade for smaller property.

Clarence C. Knight
"Worth While Homes"
Phone 1053
112 East Figueroa St.
Santa Barbara, Calif.

A FEW COMPLETE FILES OF THE CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND May now be secured by those who wish to bind them for libraries. 72 numbers for $7.50 postpaid. A discount of $2.00 will be given for any set not requiring No. 3.

CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND

AN ILLUSTRATED MAGAZINE OF NATIONAL INTEREST

THE LAND WE LIVE IN

THE CALIFORNIAN'S BIRTHRIGHT

THE FIRST BREATH THAT I EVER DREW WAS DRUGGED WITH GOLDEN POPPY DEW;
AND SINCE THAT DAY MY GARDENS TEEM
WITH VISION, FANTASY, AND DREAM—
UNFADING FANCIES, GREEN AND GOLD,
THAT CALIFORNIA FIELDS INFOLD.

THE FIRST SONG THAT I EVER HEARD
WAS WARBLED BY THAT BONNY BIRD
THE MEADOW-LARK; AND SINCE THAT DAY
IN PASTORAL AND ROUNDELAY
I STRIVE TO WEAVE THE SUBTLE SPELL OF CALIFORNIA'S PHILOMEL.

A LITTLE STREET IN SANTA BARBARA

CALIFORNIA BELOVED

THE FIRST SKY THAT I EVER SAW
WAS BLUE WITHOUT A FLECK OR FLAW;
AND SINCE THAT DAY THIS TURQUOISE TENT
HAS BEEN MY BLISSFUL CANTONMENT,
WHILE LIP AND LUTE IN RAPTURE VIE
TO PRAISE A CALIFORNIA SKY.

GOLD FLOWER, SWEET SONG, FAIR SKY—WHAT MORE COULD EARTHLY TONGUE PETITION FOR,
WHEN BEAUTY, LOVE, AND FORTUNE FIND
ENTHRONEMENT IN CONTENTED MIND,
AND MUSIC FILLS WITH HEAVENLY ART
A CALIFORNIA MINSTREL'S HEART?

— Clarence Urmy

A PLEASANT CALIFORNIA ROAD THROUGH UNTOUCHED WOODLAND AND AMONG THE LIVE OAKS OF HOPE RANCH PARK, SANTA BARBARA

MENTONE—THE SANTA BARBARA OF THE RIVIERA

ILLUSTRATED BY PHOTOGRAPHS of MEDITERRANEAN TOWNS

NAPLES, AMALFI, ALGIERS

By
ELEANOR HOFFMANN

EARLY last June there were lurid headliners in the European papers, "Santa Barbara, the Mentone of America, destroyed by earthquake." The Mentone of America! Thus could the European visualize the resort in terms of what he already knew. He remembered perhaps his first flight from cold, rain drenched Paris, in search of sunshine, the sudden blue of the Mediterranean at Marseilles; the disappointingly vulgar size of Nice, the tense strain in faces at Monte Carlo and then at last the beauty which he had sought—in the shape of a very white city tumbling down a steep mountain side whose jagged grey crags wore heavy clouds, a very white city flanked by blue bays,—that Mediterranean blue which few brushes and no pen can convey to those who have not seen it, a blue that turns purple at night reflecting the silver path of a Southern moon and the golden lights of the town. He remembered narrow alleys flanked by tall buildings from whose shutters blue green paint was forever peeling, a scent of garlic, swarthy skins, bright costumes, the queer musical native dialect, half Provencal, half Italian, and at the end of the alleys distant narrow views of grey green olive orchards and perhaps a tiny white chapel perched in the niche of the highest, greyest Alpine crag. Again he saw the welcome shade of date palm and pepper tree, white walls with deep blue shadows, and hanging gardens of plumbago and geranium, flame flower and heliotrope, a henna sail far out in the bay, the deep ravine of St. Louis, and beyond—Italy.

Nor was that all that he remembered of Mentone, for there was the atmosphere that one brought as well as the atmosphere that one found. There was the music of the Casino that rivaled the O Sole Mio of the itinerant street singer; there were the green gaming tables, where merciless croupiers raked in far too many of one's Louis, there were moonlight drives along the Corniche, in fact all the gaiety of Paris and more without her cold grey rain—and in America there had been such a white city tumbling down to as blue a sea and now it was no more! "Quel dommage!"

BUT Santa Barbara has arisen! It, too, is becoming a white city whose red roofs make, below El Encanto, a picture as lovely as that of Mentone or any other Mediterranean town. Intelligent mankind has mastered the earthquake as it has in the past mastered the snow-storm and the cloud-burst, by building for protection against nature's unavoidable outburst of force. Earthquakes occur all over the world. There is no use trying to avoid them. The wise ones know that the earth's crust is constantly changing and that as it moves the rocks are sure to crack and send the shock of their movement through adjoining territory. Whenever man builds he must consider this stress and strain on his structures, and remember that his sins of ignorance will surely find him out, be he architect, builder or owner willing to take a chance that an earthquake will not come to his house until he is too dead to care.

Santa Barbara is, therefore, the safest place to visit or to live in in all the world at present. No other city of the Pacific Coast has such fine building ordinances as has Santa Barbara. Nowhere else in the world are more intelligent and gifted people interested in the actual government of the town and its best interests.

Set in the loveliest of landscapes where the mesa and the hillslopes meet the sheltered ocean, Santa Barbara has been known for more than a hundred years to that large and discriminating world in which one does not need to advertise, because one is. To exploit this lovely land would be so sordid that it could but stultify the sycophant who did it, as though he advertised his wife. The interest which the world at large now has in this beloved city by the western sea will prove, if left alone, more precious to its reputation than could be a chorus of ten thousand boosters singing the stereotyped concoctions of our fifty-seven new varieties of self-appointed publicists. Soft and gentle is the landscape that environs grey, old Santa Barbara rising white and loveable above her opalescent sea. Blue her waters, blue her skies, and blue as any Puvis de Chavanne her mountain background when the mists have softened every rugged crag.

NAPLES, TUMBLING DOWN ITS HILLS TO THE BLUE MEDITERRANEAN SEA.

THE HARBOR FRONT OF THE CITY OF ALGIERS, THE NORTHERN EDGE OF AFRICA. NOTE THE USE OF ARCADES.

Building a modern city — nobly modern in its new ideal of building beautifully — dwellers in this favored part of the United States have planned with such high purpose that their very concentration on the task in hand has long absorbed them; and they are, perhaps, unconscious of the thing which they have done—inaugurating new ideals for all the cities of America which now will add united comeliness of feature to their laws insuring safe construction, and which has exalted Santa Barbara upon a pedestal before the eyes of all the world. Let this suffice for Santa Barbara's fame: nothing more worthy can be said of any town.—M. U. S.

HOPE RANCH PARK
CALIFORNIA

AN OPEN HOME-LAND
By M. URMY SEARES

ON California's noblest highway leading up the Coast through Santa Barbara to San Francisco, there is an open gateway to one of those fine, old ranchos that have made California famous since plumed knights rode up El Camino Real.

Taking possession of the country in the name of Spain's ambitious king, these daring adventurers chose commanding sites for cities, helped the people colonize and then moved out into some choice hill-set, oak-embroidered homeland and there, in hospitable hacienda ruled the countryside.

As in Virginia and Kentucky English men and women set American standards of a perfect, aristocratic home life in mansions of contemporary southern states, so the Spanisn senors and senoras lived a life so perfectly adapted to the country and the climate of our California Coast that to this day we emulate their fine ideals.

LAGUNA BLANCA, A WELL STOCKED LAKE ON HOPE RANCH ESTATES.

From the earliest times this great Hope Rancho, commencing three miles west of Santa Barbara, seems to have been known and valued for its fertility and its wealth of water as well as for its beauty. Cabrillo in 1543 found there three old Indian rancherias situated on knolls about the springs. The Santa Barbara Mission owned it and raised grain there for its people, then "old man Hope" whose name still clings to it, developed its rich acres, while a lime kiln still exists on the property which was used by the Mission Brothers in the construction of the Mission of Santa Barbara.

Later, held intact by an appreciative group, this queen among the ranchos was preserved as nature made it and endowed its oaks with the beauty of the Druidic oaks of England whose lovely hanging gardens of moss preserve them for all time. All that has been said of California in high praise of climate or conditions can be concentrated on this one lovely stretch of homeland between the mountains and the sea. The curving beach shares with the homesites the protection of our famous channel islands which stand like mysterious sentinels reflecting beauty on the south. Not one tree has been removed that could be left to add its hoary moss draped limbs and dark green masses to the picture. Every feature of our comfort-loving, modern life, that now demands the telephone, electric power and motor service, has been added to this ideal group of modern country estates without destroying any of the natural loveliness of rolling fields, of upland meadows, deep oak groves or palisaded shore. Untouched it seems to be; for here all of the essence of our best, scientific land development has leisurely applied the modern needs of country life in California to Californians' own beloved landscape and not a conspicuous pole, not a deep cut, not an unnecessary curb has brought the commonplaces of the town or city to this virgin land.

Hundreds of acres, transversed by miles of winding roads and carefully divided into large estates and smaller homesites are protected by a homes association of owners (a member of which each purchaser automatically becomes) whose purpose is to establish and enforce adequate protective restrictions, to maintain the parkways, lake, picnic grounds, beach, polo field and other necessary maintenance. It controls, through an art jury, the location, construction and exterior design of homes. This arrangement has made it possible to perpetuate the park as a community of assured beauty.

To La Cumbre Golf and Country Club, which has for years adjoined Hope Ranch Park, the Homes Association has lately deeded twenty-seven acres around a charming lake which lies peacefully reflecting the hillsides in the western end of the tract. Long ago Laguna Blanca was stocked with fish and today this preserve is the property of the Homes Association. Golfers bring their rods and vary golfing with fishing, although the new La Cumbre Golf and Country Club course is one of the finest in the country and does not need this extra inducement. Every purchaser in Hope Ranch Park may be an associate member in the La Cumbre Golf and Country Club without initiation fee.

Planners of the Homes Association have reserved for park purposes the lake, a park adjoining, polo field and recreation ground, over five acres of oak grove and picnic land which through a lovely canyon opens out on the beach frontage reserved for the exclusive use of the owners of Hope Ranch Park.

Bridle paths, of course, are to be found here, for what Californian does not ride for recreation or for rest! With a beach to ride on for fresh views and sea breeze and twenty miles of bridle paths to wander over within their own property, these fortunate people own the choicest stretch of land in all the sunny south.

Water, several millions of gallons a day, and all the pipe lines and reservoirs necessary are there to keep Laguna Blanca full to the brim in any weather, and supply fountains, pools and running streams to beautify the formal gardens close around our modern, sunny homes. The cost of water in Hope Ranch Park, which is produced by a mutual water company, is exceedingly low. Down on the gently sloping stretches above the sea, where avocados flourish and the citrus fruit trees grow, landholders inclined to orcharding may try their hand so close at home that on beach picnics they could pick their fruit and eat it out of hand.

The southland of California has had long experience and close study of land development so that students of the subject and of the profession congregate there.

Out of the thousand things that could be done with Hope Ranch Park the firm of H. G. Chase and Associates, which has done the planning, has selected the most simple, sensible and worthy, and have made no attempt to improve on nature, which has been so bountiful in its gifts of livableness and beauty to Hope Ranch Park.

THE RECONSTRUCTION OF SANTA BARBARA AND

A LITTLE TOWN IN ITALY. COURTESY OF MR. FITCH HASKELL, A. I. A.

ON the morning of June 29, while the people of Santa Barbara were pinching themselves, so to speak, to see whether they actually had survived the earthquake, members of the School of the Arts staff were already inspecting the shaken buildings, and planning for rehabilitation. The ancient Dominguez adobe, whose friendly walls had sheltered the School headquarters and many of the music and drama classes since the School was founded five years ago, was strewn with bricks, heavy beams and other debris, and was unsafe to enter. The studios on Ortega Street were in even worse condition, with great masses of roof sagging into the Life and Design class rooms.

With the summer term about to begin, and students eager to make a start despite the upheaval, the School was distinctly in a quandary. After a few days a generous offer from the Board of Education of the use of a public school building filled the summer need. But the question of where to go in the fall began before long to loom as a problem. Reconditioning the adobe was impossible from the standpoint of both time and expense, and nothing adequate could be found for rent. All sorts of arrangements were proposed, and the discussion was of "many inventions." Finally the right plan came, and it is not astonishing that it involved a few humble, inconspicuous little houses close at hand. The blue bird was waiting at home.

On the site purchased for the proposed new School of the Arts, described in these pages some months ago, stood three small cottages in various states of disrepair. The Community Arts Association, of which the School is a branch, decided that these houses could be so altered and improved as to form the nucleus of a group of temporary buildings where all departments of the School would function. Work began at once.

By a judicious removal of partitions, repairing floors and walls, laying pipes, making walks, painting, plastering, and doing the thousand other things incident upon turning old buildings into new, the plan began to assume visible shape toward the end of August. Three dilapidated, dirty, indefinite little houses were transformed into an attractive group of buildings with a single color scheme, further related and drawn together by a graceful pergola along the Santa Barbara Street boundary. The administrative offices were placed in the central building, where a spacious entrance hall may be used for meetings and dances, at least for the time being. Music, French and drama lessons were assigned to the second house; and the third, less adaptable in construction, was used for storage. From the grounds of the original adobe half a block away was brought a little two-room frame building, which remained intact after the shock. This building, insignificant and humble as its exterior may be, serves the double purpose of violin studio on one side and School supply store on the other.

While these changes were being made in the houses already existing, two new temporary frame buildings were in the course of construction on another part of the property, on foundations designed eventually to hold the permanent buildings. One of these, composed of three spacious studios, was open for the graphic, decorative and plastic arts classes by the middle of October. The other, which will contain a small practice theatre convertible into a dance floor or a concert hall, together with accommodations for drama and other classes, will be ready early in November.

Preparing a new home for the School has been made possible only

THE COUNTRY ABOUT SANTA BARBARA IS VERY BEAUTIFUL. A BIT OF FAIRY WOODLAND IN HOPE RANCH NEAR THE BEACH.

THE WORK OF ITS COMMUNITY ARTS

by the faithful and continuous attention of those who appreciate its value to Santa Barbara and believe in its future usefulness. Time and thought have been lavished upon it. From one source came an inspired suggestion for the pergola; from others, help with furnishings and draperies; from others, constructive ideas about color and arrangement. Assistance was given with necessary legal points, with laying out and planting the garden, with treatment of floors and walls. Friends of the School displayed unflagging interest, and were indefatigable when it came to standing by the undertaking and seeing it through.

When all is finished, the School of the Arts will for the first time have all its branches united under one administration on its own property. It will be more adequately and comfortably housed than ever before, and will offer courses of universal interest, capable of the broadest application. This all goes to show that earthquakes are not unmixed calamities.

Jeanne Augé.

October 21, 1925.

THE NEW QUARTERS OF THE SCHOOL OF THE ARTS. SANTA BARBARA

CASTING FOR A COMMUNITY PLAY

An Interview with Colin Campbell Clements, Director of the Community Arts Players of Santa Barbara

By CHRISTINE T. CURTIS

"ONE of my pet theories is that everybody can act," said Colin Campbell Clements, in a recent discussion of community drama, "given, of course, the correct psychological handling to bring out his ability. With this premise as a starting point, the community theatre becomes a school where everyone may discover his histrionic bent and develop it. The community theatre, however, should always be judged from the standpoint of a high grade amateur organization rather than that of a low grade professional one. It is conceded, of course, that amateurs often bring to their work a peculiar freshness and sparkle which is sometimes absent from strict professionalism. With them the play is the thing. On the other hand, a group of amateurs are like young colts—if you don't rein them in, they'll tear away with their lines and soon get out of bounds. But for enthusiasm and keenness I would far rather have beginners than half-hearted players of experience. I much prefer to have a person come to me and say, 'I've had no experience but I'm dying to act' than one who offers in a blase manner, 'Oh, yes, I've been in lots of play.'

"The real amateur with fire and enthusiasm is a peculiarly stimulating subject, for I can always find ways to project his zeal into his acting. I do this by suggestion, by a hint here and there as to the shape the role should take, or sometimes by pictures of people who have preceded him in the interpretation. One of the essentials for amateurs is the early memorizing of their lines. Only after the technical matter of the lines is out of the way, can they probe down into the real character. To give them full confidence, and to allow time to penetrate the role, a minimum of two weeks' mastery of the lines is necessary. Of all the requisites for acting, confidence, perhaps, is the most desirable, and I try never to destroy it by being too exacting as to interpretation. If my actor has any imagination at all, the interpretation will come naturally.

"In community work," continued Mr. Clements, "and especially in our present field, where the drama study at the School of the Arts will ally itself so closely with the work at the Lobero theatre, I feel that the real good comes by having people play all sorts of parts. That has been our principle with the School of the Little Theatre in Gloucester, and I think it is the foundation of all study which prepares for professional work.

"Many present day dramatists are coming to feel that our American stage is at fault in that we stress personality to the extent of undervaluing real artistry. Modern actresses and actors very often depend on their presonal magnetism to get them across, and once established make no more effort to maintain their supremacy. In the older theatre this was not true. Mansfield, Beatrice Cameron, M. de Max and others of that splendid old school were able to reveal their art by means of many characterizations. This is an ideal to which the modern theatre must sooner or later return.

"The work of the Community Arts Players this year will offer as wide a range as possible, and we shall use the students of the School of the Arts as often as we can. Experience in the Lobero theatre will afford exceptionally fine training for them, and give them an excellent, all round grasp of the theatrical field. Every year more preparation, and a firmer grounding is necessary for professional work. This is true of all branches—directors, actors, scenic men, artists, lighting experts, and costumers. The level is continually rising, and performers of higher calibre are continually demanded. The English stage ranks higher than ours because a better class of person has gone into acting. Heretofore in America a certain disgrace has been connected with the stage, so that only the less educated took up theatrical work. Happily this viewpoint is changing, and the new demand calls for more background and a more intensified study of the dramatic field and its outlying provinces.

"My hope for Santa Barbara," said Mr. Clements "is that she may eventually become a dramatic center of the West, such as Thomas Wood Stevens has organized in Chicago, and Professor Baker is establishing in New Haven. We have the location, the equipment, and the enthusiasm which should make this hope plausible. Our School of the Arts will provide the adequate dramatic laboratory, and the Lobero theatre the actual theatrical center of production."

Questioned regarding the casting of his first Santa Barbara play, "Merton of the Movies," Mr. Clements said, "The cast for 'Merton' was almost a matter of 'first come, first served.' I arrived in Santa Barbara six weeks ago, not knowing a soul. I have simply gone up and down the town for the cast, picking as quickly and as judiciously as I could. My hero, 'Merton' I found in a clothing store on the main street of the city. What particularly impressed me was that when I gave an appointment for 8 o'clock, he was sitting on my doorstep at 7:10. That's the spirit we want to find and use in community work.

"The rest of the 'Merton' cast has been assembled from every corner and from every profession in Santa Barbara. Some people came to register with me, and I simply snapped them up. Others I saw on the street and accosted, others were snared by their friends. I have a violinist, a doctor, a painter, a teacher, an artist, a mother of four children, half a dozen society girls, a bunch of students and high school boys, and eight or nine real electricians and stage hands for the movie scene. The cast as a whole gives an impression of youth and zest, and their spirit is superb. All the costumes and properties and scenic work are being managed right on the spot by volunteers, with the exception of the stage technician and the electrician.

"I think the cast for 'Merton of the Movies' is fairly representative of the work I hope to do in Santa Barbara, the assembling of various sorts of talent, giving everyone who wants to act a fighting chance, and paying especial attention to the young talent which is looking resolutely ahead to the exacting field of the professional theatre.

COLIN CAMPBELL CLEMENTS, DIRECTOR OF THE COMMUNITY ARTS PLAYERS OF SANTA BARBARA WITH HIS CAST FOR "MERTON OF THE MOVIES"

RECENT BOOKS—REVIEWS

By LOUISE MORGRAGE

CORRA HARRIS, AUTHOR OF "AS A WOMAN THINKS." COURTESY OF HOUGHTON MIFFLIN COMPANY.

COLLECTED POEMS

By VACHEL LINDSAY, The Macmillan Company

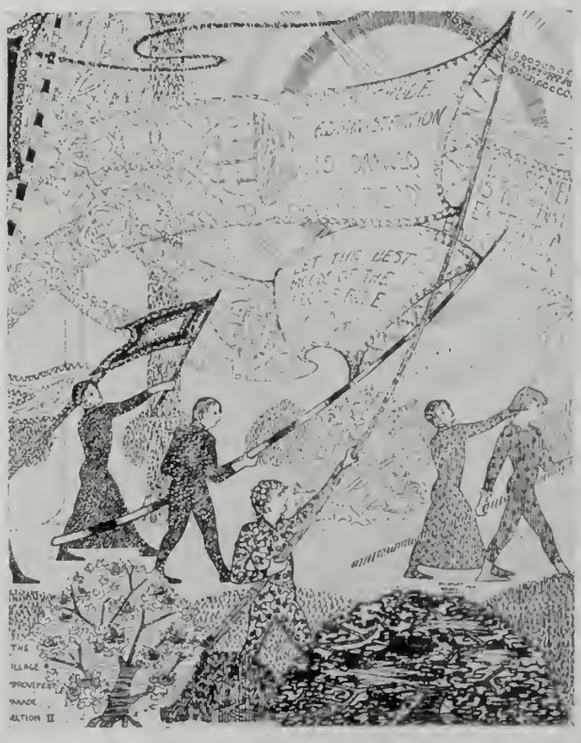
It has long been an Anglo-Saxon custom to name its literary periods after the British sovereign, reigning at the time. The much ridiculed age just gone into the discard, laid the responsibility for its peculiarities upon that prosaic lady Queen Victoria, and the present extraordinary movement in poetry, might take its name from the monarch who judging from the way his countenance looks in pictures, knows as little as the rest of us what it is all about. In spite of our bewilderment, reason tells us that this George-Fifthian current is going somewhere, and after reading poems here and there, in this ponderous tome of Mr. Lindsay's, which we have under consideration, we are further convinced that the flowing stream is carrying this poet's winged bark, so curiously constructed, straight toward the golden strand, which is called the Millennium.

This volume of collected poems by Vachel Lindsay is a new edition, containing the former one entire, with two groups of poems added, a preface, and a number of strange fantastic drawings made by himself, to illustrate certain poems old and new. A study of the contents as a whole reveals some remarkable and striking qualities in Mr. Lindsay's talent for making poetry. Amazingly versatile, he is uneven, as well, at times displaying a noble sincerity, and immediately afterward, taking a pose of absurd artificiality. Some of these poems ring as true as bells harmoniously sounding, now rich and deeply toned, now silvery and clear; others stately and sonorous, delight the reader's sensibility, by reason of their expression of a keen perception of the splendor and the grandeur of the universe. In certain poems superb characterizations of men and events, take the instantaneous shape of reality in the reader's mind, due to Mr. Lindsay's adroit use of great splashes of impressionistic diction. In still others, he simply jingles, becoming as it were a poetic acrobat, doing stunts with words and rhythm, which revel in sound and fury, but have no significance for the reader's mind.

But there is more than poetry in this volume to be considered, for it contains two prefaces. After reading that written for this edition, three times, to make sure we were not mistaken in its drift, we had no strength left for dealing with the other. A reader may come fairly near to feeling reverence for the man who could write these poems, but he experiences merely amusement and amazement for one who could reveal his idiosyncrasies in the swashbuckling and most arrogant of attitudes, displayed in this astounding preface. There are moments in it of course, where Mr. Lindsay shows signs of sense and vision, but for the most part, this effort is a chaotic mass of eccentricities, causing us to wonder at its publication.



MODERN THEATRES

By IRVING PICHEL, Harcourt Brace & Company

This entertaining discussion of matters relating to the stage will very likely reach a larger circle of readers than Mr. Pichel anticipated, when he wrote the book. His experience in the theatrical field has been long and varied, and his connection with the Little Theatre movement, has given him broader vision, than is often found in the man who is professional and nothing else. Therefore, while much of the text is undoubtedly technical, appealing directly to the theatrical architect, its scope is wide enough to include also, information, which is decidedly interesting when viewed from a cultural standpoint.

Mr. Pichel is convinced that the Community Theatre is here to stay, and irrespective of how it may develop, its operation has already created a bond, hitherto non-existent, between the public and the stage. This is the very reason, why remedies are now being offered for mistakes in stage construction, perpetuated professionally for so many years, that they had become almost traditional. The same situation arose not so long ago, when women began to take an interest in domestic architecture, and at once devised all sorts of comfortable and convenient methods for making life pleasanter in the home. Thus the practical details and suggestions in this treatise of Mr. Pichel's should prove of the greatest assistance to the projectors and builders of community theatres, and convention halls with stage facilities which are bound to be erected in ever increasing numbers in the near future.

We found the many illustrations as delightfully informing and as varied in their scope, as the subject matter in the book. There are pictures of theatres, outside and in, ancient and modern, with views of the stage in all kinds of playhouses, amateur and professional; there are cross sections, floor plans, and mechanical devices, all of which illustrated material represents theatrical construction in different sections of this country and abroad. Altogether it is a pleasure to commend a book, wherein a subject so vitally important to the artistic growth of the community is so sanely and clearly presented.

ONE OF THE DRAWINGS MADE BY VACHEL LINDSAY TO ILLUSTRATE HIS NEW EDITION OF POETRY. COURTESY OF THE MACMILLAN COMPANY.

AS A WOMAN THINKS

By CORRA HARRIS, Houghton Mifflin Company

Corra Harris, as everybody knows, has written two books at least that have appealed to a large and delighted circle of readers. We glean from reviews, and past literary comment, that "My Book and Heart," and "The Circuit Rider's Wife," were mainly autobiographical, containing a faithful account of the author's experiences down south in Georgia, during her girlhood days and later as a wife and mother. Now the life of many an individual might be called a seed, which when subjected to a certain kind of coaxing can be made to sprout and germinate matter of considerable interest to the public mind. The hand that can turn this trick however, must have an apt and cunning touch, and from the success already won by Mrs. Harris, we know well enough before starting in on "As a Woman Thinks," that this proficiency is hers. In other words she has the ability to dramatize her actual facts, and a facility for blending sober realism with fancy.

IRVING PICHEL, AUTHOR OF MODERN THEATRES. COURTESY OF GILMOR BROWN.

All the books written by Corra Harris, have some value for the sociologist, who happens to be interested in different phases of life in our variegated country, since she has given a slant to existence in the south that is scarcely traditional. And this latest book, "As a Woman Thinks," is of interest to the psychologist, since it is really a mirror, reflecting the inner consciousness of one who in childhood was subjected to the rigorous discipline of stern Puritanical influences, which if anything were intensified, when she was married at the early age of seventeen. Naturally this reflection will not take the same aspect to all observers, since each will imbue it with his own sensibility, but most will find therein indications of prudence, a shrewd practicality, humor, sanity and righteousness, while others may search in vain for signs of vision, or broad mindedness, or any abiding conception of art or intellectual beauty.

THE GREAT PACIFIC WAR

By HECTOR C. BYWATER

Houghton Mifflin Company

While we are still shuddering at the thought of the last great war, and many of us utterly refusing to read anything upon the subject, here comes a volume, wherein we are asked to consider a war

(Continued on Page 21)

TWO PANELED ROOMS BY THE CHEESEWRIGHT STUDIOS

The illustration above shows the sitting-room comfortable and livable for host and hostess and for intimate guests. The enriched plaster ceiling, in its reserve and quiet simplicity of ornament, does not intrude upon the room; and the Grinling Gibbons carved over-mantel, the panels of hardwood rubbed down to the quality of satin wood, and the verte antique marble make a delightful setting for a cheerful wood fire in the real fireplace. Something in the correspondence of curves in garland, fixtures, frieze and carpet design, complete the room with a handsome and satisfying unity—the basis of all true art.

A charming breakfast room kept brilliant and high-keyed and cheerful by light colors in paneled wall and draperies and exquisitely decorated furniture! The carpet is especially beautiful and adapted to this happy scheme of flowery decoration, especially designed and carried out by The Cheese-wright Studios of Pasadena.

SOUTHLAND

The Home and The Club

TIMES change and we change with them. In the time of our great, great grandparents, everything centered in the home and everything was made there. Take the farm home of New England or the plantation home of the old South and study its activities in the light of woman's work therein.

The home was the cannery, the place of the loom, the meat market and the bakery; the home-mother presided over these things and they were found nearby, right under her hand.

But as the years went by and machinery took the place of hand labor in the outside world, men took from the home its multiple activities and placed the interest and the labor in the towns where bakeries and markets, manufactories and canneries arose to give work to the men that they might support their families in unison. Shorn of its interests, its absorbing work, its family life of co-operation and loving assistance, the home, still presided over by woman, enlarged its boundaries to take in the town—and woman's work expanded with it.

The "home town" became the town-home, a new variety of home but still to be presided over by home-loving womankind which follows with love and care its children wherever they go.

As the town-home became more and more a permanent institution the mind of the American woman rosé to the situation and permeating the town, rearranged it, made it more homelike, and settled down to enjoy it in the midst of her family.

Co-operation is more and more the keynote of our age. To each family is reserved the right to retain in the home what work and pleasure and comfort it wishes to retain; out of the few occupations still performed as individuals. They may eat at home if they like to cook, they may entertain at home if they can afford it. They may make their own clothes if they are endowed with the talents necessary for designers, tailors, embroiders and pressers. Some men and women are very talented and prefer to do these things for themselves.

But the standard of living has been set so high for everybody in America that to be an expert in anything demands concentration on that one thing. A woman who was once expected to be "jack of all trades" now finds herself "good at none" and left sitting at home with nothing to do but dust the merchandise which has been "sold" to her. The modern American man has been the first to encourage womankind in this idleness. By every means his brains can cudgel he lures her out into the town where his wares are spread. He manufactures her clothes and decries her home-made attire; he takes upon himself the entertainment of her children and dares her to compete with him in her home; he has given her the vote and bade her pass on all his foolish laws; he has invited her to the Club and put her on the "House Committee" to take the blame when anything goes wrong. He has taught her to buy and to drive a car and has fitted it up like a boudoir on wheels in which, if she isn't ready on the instant to leave her home, she may make herself ready enroute and roll way from her workless home without a pang. He has taught her high finance and helped her build woman's club houses.

And modern American womankind has responded with all that comradeship for which American women are noted, and has taken the home spirit with her into the town, into the club and into the city hall. Perfecting this broad ideal, she has created a perfect woman's clubhouse such as the Woman's Athletic Club of Los Angeles, to be a model to all makers of modern homes. Studying architecture enough to know why certain designs are good and others bad, the women of America are becoming critics of their home towns and main streets; and when they have made a thorough investigation of the advantages of a central city plan over a shoestring, there will arise some real town-homes in California.

The Golden Age in the Golden Land

DWELLERS of this beautiful summer land, as you walk in your scented, colorful gardens, as you travel over your perfect roads through miles upon miles of citrus groves, orchards and vineyards, ponder a moment on how it came about that this desert land has blossomed like the rose. Nature has given her store of riches and Man's vision and toil has brought it to its fullness of beauty.

Think of the hardy pioneers who first blazed the trails in this land of eternal summer; realize the vision which saw this as a golden land of wondrous beauty; remember the toil, the time, the wealth which has been poured forth to bring this land to its present fruitfulness.

Then turn your eyes upon the dwellers of this land of plenty, look upon the children who are the great treasures of any people, the bearers of our civilization, nay perhaps our very immortality. Have they received the same care, the same expenditure of time and money and thought which has been given to the blossoming of your trees and grass and flowers and plants? Nature has poured out for them the same riches, but like plants they need care, thought, tending to make them grow big and strong and beautiful. Has Man done his part to make them grow and blossom?

As you pass one of your school buildings you may well glance at it with pride, for the school buildings of California are some of the best in the world. But look more closely at the inhabitants of this building, the children for whom this edifice was built. Have they received the same strong foundation, the same carefully selected materials, the same thought and care in their building as the school itself? Look closely, scan their faces. Some are strong and straight and rosey, but many, many are pale, thin, weary. In spite of the gifts of nature, the fresh air, the sunshine, the bountiful fruits and vegetables, the rich milk,—the children of this golden land are not all strong and well and happy. Nature has done her part, but Man has not.

Children do not simply grow healthy. They need your care, your thought, your time, your money. They must be taught the laws of health, just as they must be taught the other lessons of life. Men and women all over the country, indeed in the world, have come to realize that their serious attention and effort must be turned towards the acquisition of health for their children. The statistics of war and peace, which show a fourth of our young people who should be in the prime of strength and vigor, unfit for war service or peacetime work, served to awaken us all to the dire necessity of giving our children health knowledge and health practices.

Great pioneers have given us our knowledge, have broken the trails of the land of Health. Pasteur, Reed, Lister, Trudeau, Osler are but a few of the great physicians and educators who have blazed the way. The knowledge is with us, and like all great principles and truths the principles of health are simple. Our problem is to make this knowledge a vital part of every child's life.

Organizations have been formed to fight the great scourges of humanity and to teach all the peoples of the world to be well. In the United States our government departments are making splendid progress in preserving public health and in spreading education. Such national organizations as the Tuberculosis Association, the American Child Health, the nursing and medical groups are bending their efforts to the spreading of Health Knowledge. At the International Educational Conference at Edinburgh the following signficant resoluton was passed: "The health of all school children is a primary obligation in education, and arrangements for the promotion of the health of the school child should be regarded as a public duty. A new Health Society in England, backed by such men as Asquith, Balfour, Ramsay MacDonald, hope to bring about a golden age of health in England. A wonderful piece of Health Education work is being carried on in China. The world is awakened to this great movement.

OPINION

California is awakening to the necessity for this educational and preventive work in childhood. The Tuberculosis Association is a pioneer in this field. Its preventoria, open air camps, are well known. Open air classes have been established in many cities, nutrition classes and a broader program of health education is in some of your schools. Vision and industry has made this possible. But more, much more must be done. Every child must be well and strong and happy.

Each one of you at this Christmas time has a great opportunity and a great duty. It is within your power to give to children this great gift of Health. The Christmas Seals, messengers of Hope and Health, make possible some of this preventive and educational work. There is not a man or woman or child who cannot take part by buying these Seals.

Dwellers of this beutiful golden land, take your place in this great world movement. Make your children as beautiful and strong as your lovely land. Give your state a Golden Age of Health for little children. Hold out to others at this Christmas time the greatest of all gifts the priceless Gift of Health.

JULIA B. TAPPAN.

California's Troubadour

AS THE first chorus of thanksgiving, and praise of the land we live in subsides and the thousands of newcomers, homeseekers and tourists are absorbed into California's native population the need of trained minnesingers, troubadours and poets to voice this sentiment in perfect verse is poignantly realized.

To forward this good work and set a high standard in California's art of song, a foundation is being established at Stanford University in the name of Clarence Thomas Urmy, California's first native Troubadour, who perfected his verse and attained fame for his native state throughout the literary world. The following letter from Mr. De Lancey Lewis, San Francisco, shows the feeling of Mr. Urmy's intimates in regard to this fund which originated with Miss Emma Thomas of San Jose. Dean Gresham at the Cathedral in San Francisco is custodian of the fund.

My dear Mrs. Seares:

During the past week we have had a meeting at which were present Dean Gresham, Mr. Sperry, Mr. Barry, Mr. Keyston and myself. After a discussion as to the most suitable memorial for your brother the unanimous opinion was that perhaps as appropriate a plan as could be devised would be to collect a fund from which each year an award for poetry from Stanford University should be made, to be known as the Clarence Urmy Award. This has the merit of being an absolutely permanent memorial coupled with a relationship to his life work, and from an institution where a majority of his intimates lived during their college work.

If the funds were sufficent, or if the income from the funds warranted an accumulation over and above a reasonable amount to be given each year as mentioned, a similar prize is to be given through the University of California.

It was suggested that the establishment of this fund need not necessarily preclude the possibility of establishing a physical memorial in South Park or elsewhere, in case any individual or individuals wished to furnsh funds for this purpose.

The Committee felt that the award would more closely coincide with his own wishes and, therefore, should be most satisfactory to us. The Committee felt, however, that your own wishes in the matter were of the greatest importance and wished to be certain that any plan suggested met with your hearty approval. If you have any ideas which are at variance, we would be most happy to have any suggestions from you.

With kind personal regards, I am

Yours sincerely,

DE LANCEY LEWIS.

That a sincere appreciation of California's first Troubadour is growing up in the southern part of the state appears in a series of letters from Mary Hester McCoy of which the following is an extract:

"It was very lovely of you to send me the two copies of Southland with so much of interest concerning your brother within their covers. I have cut out the Peace poem, will have it framed and send it to President Coolidge with a letter. I feel that the poem will fit in exactly with his own ideals, and I am hoping he may give it greater publicity. We need educative propaganda of that kind."

As a San Franciscan active in the organization of the San Francisco Opera Association, Clarence Urmy's name has been placed on the list of founders by his brothers.

Memorials to this singer are already placed in Trinity Church, San Jose, where as choirmaster for over thirty years Mr. Urmy taught many boys to revere sacred things; and in St. James at South Pasadena where he once worshipped there is a memorial flag carried every Sunday by the boys of the choir.

At Woodlawn, south of San Francisco a simple bronze plate bears the epitaph selected from his own verses, The Poet's Orison,—"He sang his songs in time, in tune, and kept his garment white."

The Alumni Bulletin of the State Teachers' College at San Jose published, with the list of its honored dead—the names of President E. R. Snyder, Professor Louis Wilson and others, this line, "Clarence Urmy, dramatic critic, musician and beloved teacher, stricken while on duty, June 2, 1923."

From New York, the home state of his parents, comes this latest request from Mrs. Thomas J. Williams:

My dear Mrs. Seares:

Though I have not met you, I am writing you as the sister of Clarence Urmy, whom I knew very well in San Jose.

In gratitude for all that he taught me of the Catholic faith, I have given a sanctuary lamp to St. Luke's Chapel, Trinity Parish, New York. Will you give me the dates of Mr. Urmy's birth and death to be engraved with his name on the lamp and to be entered in the records of memorials in the church? This will insure his being remembered at the Altar."

Problems of The Playhouse—(Continued)

An Experiment With the Children's Theatre

EARLY in the history of the Pasadena Community Playhouse, there was discussion of the possibility of establishing a theatre, of a community character, for children.

It was realized that children have an increasing appetite for amusement, are usually full of imagination and have an almost universal aptitude for drama of a certain elementary type. It was also observed in the community, that children, as a class, are often not wise in choosing their amusements, and yet this is hardly to be wondered at, when often they have neither a worthy example among many of their elders nor the opportunity of freely choosing where they will seek their entertainment.

The problem of securing a constituency for the attendance at a children's theatre, therefore, is singularly difficult. One must not only make the program sufficiently attractive to interest the child, but the children's theatre must also convert the parent to bring the child. Obvious as the social or literary uplift of the Community Theatre or its works (including chldren's plays) may be to many discriminating citizens, it is a profound truth that a great many elders will continue to look upon a play as an entertainment, nothing more nor less, regardless of the auspices under which it is given.

It therefore proved to be a difficult matter to interest the parents as well as the child in the children's play as a community project, when there have always been many competitive entertainments of a nature more or less alluring to the young mind, in a representative modern city. In general, the foregoing discussion will suggest how difficult it is to establish and maintain a constant contact between the same individuals of players and audience on frequent and recurring occasions, which is the earmark of a Community Theatre enterprise.

The Community Palyhouse work is on the proximate frontier of a modern educational program and related to the school work, and will eventually become a recognized branch of education, at public expense. The work in the schools, however, and the exacting activities demanded of children in modern communities, make it difficult to find time for them to take assignments of parts and to rehearse. After all, it has seemed to the majority of the Directing Board of the Pasadena Community Playhouse Association, through several years of experiment, that, in essence, the children's theatre is merely children's directed play, and that the great opportunity for this function lies in some little advance in the official school program of children along dramatic lines, especially in vacation times, and in this direction Pasadena, as a community, is definitely progressing.

In summarizing, it may be said that the resemblance between the adult and the children's community theatre is but superficial. The one being capable of maintainence by the actors as adult thinkers; the other cannot be maintained by the children and is therefore, in substance, a phase of informal school work, regarded as a benefit conferred by an older generation to one much younger, for the latter's good.

J. W. MORIN.

MRS. A. H. MONTGOMERY, PRESIDENT, TUESDAY AFTERNOON CLUB OF GLENDALE, AND INTERESTED IN THE SUCCESS OF THEIR JUBILEE FIESTA A LA SPANISH

TUESDAY AFTERNOON CLUB OF GLENDALE, PRESENTED A JUBILEE FIESTA, WITH STYLE REVUE AND PAGEANT OF SHAWLS

PAGEANT OF SHAWLS BY WILLIAM J. BARRY

MRS. CLAUDE G. PUTNAM, VICE-PRESIDENT, TUESDAY AFTERNOON CLUB OF GLENDALE, CHAIRMAN OF FASHIONS, JUBILEE FIESTA OF THE CLUB

SELF PORTRAIT FRED G. GRAY

EASTERN CRITICISM

By ELEANOR TAYLOR HOUGHTON

EASTERN artists passing through California are quite naturally ever ready to voice an opinion about art on the Pacific coast. Occasionally we agree with them, more regularly we do not, which is quite natural, too. At any rate what they say is always salutary and sure to modify any stereotype views that we may have had crystallized for us.

One eastern painter of note who was in California a few months ago harped on the old strain of our insularity. This insularity although unavoidable because of our geographic situations seemed to him none the less deplorable. Because of it we have not the easy access to cosmopolitan galleries available in eastern cities. Study of superior work collected in galleries affords the best of criticism. An eastern painter frequents European galleries as well as his own. His work takes something from the masters—without confusion, without imitativeness because each and every old master was of necessity an individualist. He has the chance to study work that is of the most beneficial antithesis to his own approach.

Another artist, prize winner at all the noteworthy eastern galleries feels that a painter here on the coast has no opportunity for thorough academic grounding — at any school. The instruction to be had seems to him superficial. He maintains that only when the technical phases of painting have become part of a man, second nature to him, vieux jeu, that he can have full swing with his metier, only then that self-expression and mood may be wholly unhampered, only then that originality may be hoped for. When an artist has learned painstakingly all the mechanics of painting he can then begin to eliminate, because he knows, and succeed in becoming something other than a mere technician. It is a question of control. When a painter is forced to proceed without sufficient technical training the result is often a weak use of brush strokes not warranted because of insecure academic training.

Still another easterner, a New York painter of distinction points out what for him differentiates northern from southern California painting. This man finds the north decidedly intolerant, inclined to an abuse of the best of Cezanne. After all, as he claims, there is a difference between violence and vigor. Breadth is not the only requsite of substantial original work.

